Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS ON THE GOSPEL, ACCORDING TO St. MATTHEW.

The ARGUMENT.

The Goſpel according to St. Matthew has of late undergone the common fate of moſt other books in the volume of the Scriptures; and the preachers of the word of God from thence have been called upon by a ſort of people, who jeſt at religion, and deify their ſenſualities, to prove its Divine Authority and genuineneſs. Therefore it will be proper to obſerve, before we enter upon the matter in the text of this Goſpel, That

The word Goſpel is a derivative from the word Euangelion, which is interpreted good news, or joyful tidings. And in reality, the book which contains the recital of our Saviour's birth, life, miracles, preaching, paſſion, death, reſurrection and aſcenſion, records the beſt news that could be publiſhed in favour of all mankind, who by the ſin of their firſt parents were become the children of wrath.

We acknowledge but four canonical Goſpels, viz. This of St. Matthew, and thoſe of St. Mark, Luke and John, of whom in their proper places; for now I ſhall confine my account to St. Matthew only.

St. Matthew the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt, was the ſon of Alpheus, a Galilean by birth, a Jew by religion, and a publican by profeſſion. The other Evangeliſts call him only by his Hebrew name Levi: But ſpeaking of himſelf, he always uſes the name of Matthew, which probably was the name by which he was known as a publican, or officer for gathering the taxes; and he is very free in declaring his former profeſſion, as it was of great contempt among thoſe of his nation, he might thereby the more exalt the free grace of Jeſus Chriſt, who called him from thence and raiſed him to the dignity of an Apoſtle and Evangeliſt. His ordinary abode was at Capernaum, though his office was at a little diſtance on the ſhore of the ſea of Tiberias, from whence Jeſus called him, and without troubling himſelf to put his affairs in order, he immediately obeyed and followed Chriſt our bleſſed Saviour. Which ſudden action is not, as Porphyry and Julian the Emperor maliciouſly argue, to be aſcribed to Matthew's inconſiderateneſs or raſhneſs; but as St. Jerome obſerves (on Matth. ix.) it was the real conſequence or good effect, which the miracles and preaching of the Lord Jeſus had wrought in him. Thus

St. Matthew having acquitted his profeſſion with all his goods and all his pretenſions, invited our Saviour to eat at his houſe: And Jeſus came with his diſciples, and ſat down at table with ſeveral publicans and other acquaintance of St. Matthew, which gave the Phariſees an opportunity to upbraid Jeſus to his diſciples in this manner; "Why does your maſter eat with publicans and ſinners?" To which, our Saviour, over-hearing them, made this reply: "'Tis not the whole or ſound, but the ſick that need a phyſician: Therefore, go and learn the meaning of theſe words, I love mercy rather than ſacrifice, for I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance." And here ends the Goſpel-account of this Evangeliſt, to which I ſhall add what may be fairly deduced from Scripture. And nothing more than what can be proved from ancient and good authority. As,

He was admitted an Apoſtle in the very year of his converſion: And conſequently, he was called to the Apoſtleſhip in the firſt year of the preaching thereof by Jeſus Chriſt. And it is to be obſerved that he is, as the other Apoſtles are; ſometimes differently placed, for at one time we read him in the ſeventh place, and again removed to the eighth place, which ſhews that none was greater or leſſer than another, neither that any could claim a right of pre-eminence among the Apoſtles.

He abſtained entirely from fleſh meat; and, as Clement of Alexandria vouches, lived ſolely upon fruits, roots and herbs; Pædag. l. ii. c. 1. According to the moſt general opinion of both ancients and moderns, he preached the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, for which he ſuffered martyrdom in Perſia, or in Carmania, a country then ſubject to the Parthians. And it is as well atteſted that

He writ his Goſpel at the requeſt of the believers in Paleſtine, whom he had inſtructed in the way of Chriſt, or as Irenæus and Euſebius tell us, by the deſire of his fellow-Apoſtles, in the Hebrew or Syriac language, which was then common in Judea, before he departed from Jeruſalem to preach in the province, which was fallen to his particular lot or charge.

'Tis thought that he undertook this work about the year 41 of the Vulgar Æra, which was the eighth year after our Saviour's reſurrection: And therefore we find this account at the end of his Goſpel in almoſt all the Old Greek MSS. Some pretend it was written ſooner, amongſt whom are the famous hiſtorian Baronius, and the Commentator Cornelius e Lapide, who, following the ſame authority of the author of the unfiniſhed Commentary on St. Matthew, ſay, that he wrote it on the firſt diſperſion of the Apoſtles, after the ſtoning of St. Stephen, which fell in the third or the beginning of the fourth year of the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt. And again, Irenæus thinks that he compoſed it while St. Peter and St. Paul preached the Goſpel at Rome about the year 61 of the Vulgar Æra. But if it is true, as is commonly granted, that St. Matthew is the firſt who committed the Goſpel to writing, and that the ſame was abridged by St. Mark about the 43d year of Jeſus Chriſt, it follows plainly, that it muſt be placed before the year 61 of the Vulgar Æra, and that it will be enough to place it towards the year 41.

The Hebrew, or rather, Syriack Goſpel of St. Matthew, was in uſe a long time among the Jews converted to Chriſtianity, who retiring to Pella ſome time before the Romans laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, carried it along with them: and from thence this Goſpel was diffuſed as far as Decapolis, and into all the countries beyond Jordan, where the Judaizing Chriſtians kept it till the days of Epiphanius and Euſebius of Cæſarea. But theſe Chriſtians did not preſerve this Sacred Truſt with the fidelity they ought, clogging it with ſeveral Traditions and their own inventions; till it fell at laſt into the wicked hands of the Ebionites, who endeavoured by additions and omiſſions to bring it in defence of their own corrupt doctrines: ſo that in Origen's time the Hebrew-Goſpel of the Judaizing Chriſtians paſſed no longer for authentick. Tho' it muſt be obſerved, this ſame Goſpel continued a long time in its primitive purity in the hands of the Nazarenes, or firſt believers in Paleſtine, ſome of whoſe faithful poſterity were known to St. Jerome, whom he no where reproaches with any errors like that of the Ebionites; but proclaims their integrity, becauſe, tho' they were otherwiſe very zealous for the obſervation of the law, they in no wiſe diſguiſed or changed the Goſpel, and with contempt rejected the Traditions of the Phariſees. Yet it muſt be granted, that the true Hebrew text of St. Matthew's Goſpel, is no where to be found as Dr. Mills has judiciouſly obſerved in his Prolegomena to the New Teſtament. But to make up for this loſs we are bold to add, That Our Greek Verſion of St. Matthew's Goſpel, and which at this length of time has obtained the reſpect of an original, is as ancient as the Apoſtolick age, tho' the author is not certainly known: For ſome aſcribe it to St. Matthew himſelf; others yield the honour to St. James the leſs Biſhop of Jeruſalem; and again, others to St. John the Evangeliſt, or to St. Paul, or to St. Luke, or to St. Barnabas. But Papias, who immediately ſucceeded the Apoſtles, ſays, that every one joined to tranſlate it into Greek as they could; Euſeb. hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 39. So that, tho' they differ as to the certainty of the author, yet they all agree in the aſſertion of its antiquity as high as the Apoſtolick age.

The chief view of the Evangeliſt in this Goſpel was to ſhew us the royal deſcent of Jeſus Chriſt, and to repreſent unto us the life of his humanity, in the manner of his converſation among men; and therefore it is obſervable, that no one of the Evangeliſts enters ſo far into the particulars of the actions of Jeſus Chriſt, or has given us ſo many rules for the conduct of life, ſo many leſſons of morality ſuitable to our neceſſities, and to the deſign of Chriſt, as we may learn from this Goſpel of St. Matthew. And as the great queſtion among the Jews, when he began to write, was, whether Jeſus Chriſt was the Meſſiah, or no? St. Matthew undertakes to prove the affirmative, ſhewing by his miracles that he was the Chriſt; that Mary his mother was a virgin; that Jeſus was not come to deſtroy the law, but to accompliſh it; that his miracles were no magical operations, nor the effects of any human power, but inconteſtable proofs of the Almighty Power of God, and of the Divine Miſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. And here I would have you obſerve, that where you find any difference in the order and ſucceſſion of the actions of our Saviour's life, as from ch. iv. 22. to ch. xiv. 13. compared with the other Evangeliſts, be not ſolicitous about this variation, which can be no prejudice to the truth of the facts, the eſſential part of the Goſpel; for it is certain, that the Sacred Penmen have not always tied themſelves to chronology, but have produced the facts, when they thought beſt to confirm or ſettle ſome point of doctrine.

CHAP. I.

1 The genealogy of Chriſt from Abraham to Joſeph. 18 He was conceived by the holy Ghoſt, and born of the Virgin Mary, when ſhe was eſpouſed to Joſeph. 19 The Angel ſatisfieth the miſdeeming thoughts of Joſeph, and interpreteth the Name of Chriſt.

THE book of the generation of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſon of David, the ſon of Abraham.

2 Abraham begat Iſaac, and Iſaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat Judas and his brethren.

3 And Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar, and Phares begat Eſrom, and Eſrom begat Aram.

4 And Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Naaſſon, and Naaſſon begat Salmon.

5 And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab, and Booz begat Obed of Ruth, and Obed begat Jeſſe.

6 And Jeſſe begat David the king, and David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias.

7 And Solomon begat Roboam, and Roboam begat Abia, and Abia begat Aſa.

8 And Aſa begat Joſaphat, and Joſaphat begat Joram, and Joram begat Ozias.

9 And Ozias begat Joatham, and Joatham begat Achaz, and Achaz begat Ezekias.

10 And Ezekias begat Manaſſes, and Manaſſes begat Amon, and Amon begat Joſias.

11 And Joſias begat Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon.

12 And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, and Salathiel begat Zorobabel.

13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud, and Abiud begat Eliakim, and Eliakim begat Azor.

14 And Azor begat Sadoc, and Sadoc begat Achim, and Achim begat Eliud.

15 And Eliud begat Eleazar, and Eleazar begat Matthan, and Matthan begat Jacob.

16 And Jacob begat Joſeph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jeſus, who is called Chriſt.

17 So all the generations from Abraham to David, are fourteen generations: and from David until the carrying away into Babylon, are fourteen generations: and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Chriſt, are fourteen generations.

18 ¶ Now the birth of Jeſus Chriſt was on this wiſe: When as his mother Mary was eſpouſed to Joſeph, before they came together, ſhe was found with child of the holy Ghoſt.

19 Then Joſeph her huſband, being a juſt man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on theſe things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, ſaying, Joſeph thou ſon of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her, is of the holy Ghoſt.

21 And ſhe ſhall bring forth a ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins.

22 (Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lord by the prophet, ſaying, 23 Behold, a virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a ſon, and they ſhall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted, is, God with us)

24 Then Joſeph being raiſed from ſleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

25 And knew her not, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born ſon; and he called his name Jeſus.

Ver. 1. The book of the generation of Jeſus Chriſt.] The word generation is of various acceptation; but in this place, as in ſome other parts of Scripture it is uſed for the hiſtory and genealogy of any man: ſo as we read in Gen. v. 1. 'This is the book of the generations of Adam.' i. e. This is the hiſtory of Adam's creation and poſterity, or of thoſe principal perſons, by whom in a right line, his ſucceſſion was continued down to Noah, &c. In like manner the text before us imports, That this book of St. Matthew's Goſpel is the royal genealogy of Jeſus Chriſt, ſetting forth the principal perſons by whom in a right line he was deſcended from king David, the ſon of Abraham; and alſo the hiſtory of his life.—— Nor is it to be wondered, that our Evangeliſt was able to trace this genealogy; for no nation was ever more circumſpect in the preſervation of their genealogies, than the Jews, which monuments of their extraction they renewed from time to time; and particularly ſecured in all their wars, perſecutions, and calamities, till the days of the emperor Adrian: when, being entirely diſperſed by the rebellion of Barchochebas, they loſt all their ancient genealogical tables, except thoſe recorded in Scripture, in which, as St. Jerom reports of the Jews in his time, they were ſo well verſed, that they could repeat all the names from Abraham to Zerubbabel, as eaſy as they could tell their own.

— Jeſus Chriſt.] This is called the nomination of our bleſſed Saviour; and yet, tho' in the Scriptures you may find him promiſcuouſly and indifferently ſometimes called Jeſus, ſometimes Chriſt, you are not to make each of them equally and in like propriety his name, "his name was called Jeſus, which was ſo named of the Angel before he was conceived in the womb," Luke 2. 21. "who is alſo called Chriſt," Matt. i. 16. not by name, but by office and title.—— This, how trivial ſoever it may appear to ſome, is a neceſſary obſervation for the full explication of that part of our belief where we declare that we believe in Jeſus Chriſt; for by this diſtinction we are led into a double notion, and ſo reſolve our faith into theſe two propoſitions. I believe there was and is a man, whoſe name was actually, and is truly in the moſt high importance Jeſus, the Saviour of the world; and I believe the man, who bare that name to be the Chriſt, or the Meſſias promiſed of old by God, and was the expectation of the Jews.

——— Jeſus, is the ſame name as a Saviour or Joſhuah, who by God's appointment and power was made a Saviour to the Iſraelites, and a type or deſignation of that eminent Jeſus, whom we worſhip, the Saviour of all mankind; of whom the Angel of the Lord ſaid to the amazed ſhepherds: "unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Chriſt the Lord." So St. Paul declared at Antioch to his Jew and Gentile proſelytes; "of this man's ſeed hath God according to his promiſe, raiſed unto Iſrael a Saviour Jeſus." Which explication of this ſacred Name was not more new or ſtrange unto the world, than the name itſelf, which was of frequent uſe among the ancients, as well heathens as Jews.

The Grecians uſually gave it at firſt as a title to their gods, whom after any remarkable preſervations they ſtiled Saviours, and as Biſhop Pearſon learnedly proves in his expoſition of the ſecond article of Chriſtian Belief, under that notion built temples and conſecrated altars to them. Nor did they reſt with their miſtaken piety, but made it ſtoop unto their baſer flattery, calling thoſe men their Saviours, by whom their country had received ſome particular deliverance, and it ſeemed on all theſe occaſions, as if they had as great reſpect and honour for thoſe men as they had for their gods. Again,

The Jews thought it no harm to give the title of Saviour to the judges of Iſrael, as may be learned from Judges iii. 9, and 15. where though the Engliſh reads it deliverer, the original Hebrew and the Septuagint have it poſitively Saviour. From whence it appears that Jeſus or Saviour was the higheſt title that the ancients could beſtow on their favourite gods or men. But whatſoever reaſons they pretended or might have for ſtiling their gods or men Saviours, is foreign to enquire in this place; this we are ſure of, that this name belongeth unto the Meſſias in a more ſublime and particular manner: of whom its ſaid, "neither is there ſalvation in any other; for there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved," Acts iv. 12. For, he hath not only opened and declared unto us the only true way for the obtaining eternal ſalvation; "he has not only come and preached peace to them which were afar off, and to them that were nigh," Eph. ii. 17. which preaching, "is the power of God unto ſalvation to every one that believeth," Rom. i. 16. Becauſe "it brought life and immortality to light," 2 Tim. i. 10. But this our Jeſus has procured us the way of ſalvation, and wrought it out for us; for ſo it is written, "God ſent his Son into the world, that the world through him might be ſaved," John iii. 17. and ſo he conferred ſalvation on us, "ſhedding his blood for many for the remiſſion of ſins," Matt. xxvi. 28. And now being ſet down at the right hand of God, and received all power both in heaven and earth, the end whereof is to confer ſalvation upon thoſe which believe in him, John xvii. 2. he is actually our Saviour, and we muſt acknowledge, that the ultimate and concluſive reaſon for giving him this title, is his actual giving ſalvation unto us.

I have dwelt the longer upon this explication, becauſe there is no end of faith without a Saviour, and no other name but this, by which we can be ſaved, and no way to be ſaved by him neither, but by believing in him, 1 John iii. 23. 24. and 1 Tim. ii. 5. and Coloſſ. i. 20.

Chriſt is a derivative from the Greek word Chriſtos, which is the interpretation of the Hebrew Meſſias, and is properly rendred in our tongue anointed. That Chriſt and Meſſias are words of the ſame interpretation appears from the ſpeech of the woman of Samaria, who ſaid, "I know that Meſſias cometh, which is called Chriſt." John iv. 25. and more particularly from the ſaying of Andrew to his brother Simon, "we have found the Meſſias, which is, being interpreted, the Chriſt," John i. 41. The interpreter was St. John, who writ his Goſpel in Greek. So that

Chriſt is uſed from thence in the Engliſh tongue for the anointed one, who in a ſpecial manner was anointed to be a king, a prieſt and a Prophet; and when we uſe the word Chriſt, we underſtand thereby a perſon ſet apart by God, anointed with moſt ſacred oil, advanced to the higheſt office, of which all thoſe employments under the law, in the obtaining of which oil was uſed, were but types and ſhadows. For

It would be impoſſible he ſhould be our Jeſus or Saviour, was he not our Chriſt alſo. He could not reveal the way of ſalvation, except he were a Prophet, he could not work out that ſalvation revealed, except he were a prieſt, he could not confer that ſalvation upon us, except he were a king; nor could he be a Prophet, prieſt and king, except he were the Chriſt. Which was the fundamental doctrine taught by the Apoſtles, as appears from St. Paul's reaſonings at Theſſalonica, &c. Acts xvii. 2, 3. and xviii. 5. This was the touchſtone by which all men at firſt were tried, whether they were Chriſtian or no. "For whoſoever believeth, ſaith St. John, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God." Who alſo declareth, "that man to be a liar, and an antichriſt, as denying both Father and Son, who denieth that Jeſus is the Chriſt."

The ſon of David, the ſon of Abraham.] It has been a common and reaſonable queſtion, why the Evangeliſt deduces the pedigree of Jeſus Chriſt from ſuch ancient time? and, eſpecially, why David, who was of the poſterity of Abraham (as it follows at ver. 6.) is here named firſt before Abraham?

The anſwer to the firſt queſtion is: Becauſe God promiſed to Abraham, that the Meſſias ſhould be born of his offspring, Gen. xii. 13. and xxii. 18. And to David, who proceeded from Abraham, he alſo promiſed and ſaid, "I will ſet up thy ſeed after thee, which ſhall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will eſtabliſh his kingdom,—and the throne of his kingdom for ever," 2 Sam. vii. 12. 13. And therefore, tho' the children of David committed many abominations, and thereby provoked the Lord to withdraw his bleſſing from them, ſo that "Jeroboam was called unto the congregation and made king over all Iſrael, and there was none that followed the houſe of David, but the tribe of Judah only," 1 Kings vii. 20. Yet the whole kingdom could not be taken away till Chriſt were born, becauſe, the promiſe run thus, "the ſceptre ſhall not depart from the tribe of Judah, nor a leader from between his knees until he ſhall come, that was to be ſent."

Hence it is eaſy to collect, that David and Abraham, to whom the promiſes of a Meſſiah were made, are firſt named, becauſe St. Matthew thereby intended to convince the Jews, who expected their completion, that they were really and truly fulfilled in Chriſt. But as to the ſecond queſtion.

2. It is anſwered, that the Evangeliſt mentions David firſt, not becauſe he would thereby inſinuate, that David was older than Abraham, but to confront the received opinion or expectation of the Meſſiah. For, it was not enough to prove, that Chriſt was the ſon of Abraham, becauſe the whole nation claimed Abraham for their father, John viii. 39. But it was particularly incumbent upon him to ſhew from a genuine and approved genealogy, that Chriſt was the ſon of David, who had received the promiſe, that his kingdom ſhould be eſtabliſhed for ever, and therefore the whole expectation of the Jews was, that a ſon or deſcendant of king David ſhould come, and be their Meſſiah; "hath not the Scripture ſaid, that Chriſt cometh of the ſeed of David," John vii. 42. And therefore ſince it was promiſed, that the kingdom or ſceptre, ſhould not depart from the tribe of Judah, (not on the account of Abraham, but) purely on the account of David, aſſoon as the Evangeliſt had mentioned Jeſus Chriſt, he immediately calls him the ſon of David, to ſhew that he was not ſpeaking of any, but that Chriſt or anointed only, who was ſo much deſired and expected, and who for ever ſhould reign in the kingdom of David.

As for the further explication of this genealogy, which takes in all to ver. 18. I ſhall defer it till we come to another in the 3d chap. of Luke, ver. 23. where they ſhall be conſidered at large.

Ver. 18. Now the birth of Jeſus Chriſt was on this wiſe.] After the Evangeliſt has given, according to the cuſtom of his nation, a particular draught of the pedigree of Jeſus Chriſt, from David the ſon of Abraham, and thereby fortified his narration on that ſide from all genealogical objections; he proceeds now gradually to conſider the birth of the Meſſias in ſuch a manner, as to prove he preaches no other than Him whom the Prophets had publiſhed, ſhould in due time be born on this wiſe, or on this ſtupendous manner he is about to declare. That

When as his mother Mary was eſpouſed to Joſeph, before they came together, ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt.] This ſtupendous manner of the birth of Jeſus Chriſt was long before promiſed of the Meſſias to the houſe of David, for though God ſaid to Ahaz, "aſk thee a ſign of the Lord thy God, &c." Yet as Ahaz refuſed, and ſaid, "I will not aſk, neither will I tempt the Lord," the Lord made his promiſe not to Ahaz, but to the houſe of David, as it follows, "hear ye now O houſe of David, is it a ſmall thing for you to weary men? But will ye weary my God alſo? Therefore the Lord himſelf will give you a ſign, Behold, a virgin ſhall conceive and bear a Son, and ſhall call his name Immanuel," Iſa. vii. 11—14. By which words it is very evident, as one of the ancients (Origen contra celſum, l. s.) very well obſerves, that what is ſaid here is ſaid to the houſe of David, and according to this belief of the Jewiſh nation, St. Matthew here particularly deſcribes the virginity of Mary the mother of Jeſus, who, ſays he, though ſhe was indeed eſpouſed to Joſeph, before ſhe came together, or had any carnal knowledge of him, her huſband, according to the law, "was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt." For at the 22d verſe following, he tells us expreſly, that "all this was done that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet, ſaying, Behold, a virgin ſhall conceive, or be with child, &c.

—— She was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt.] i. e. It was perceived that ſhe had conceived a child by the power of the Holy Ghoſt overſhadowing her, according to the promiſe by the Angel, Luke i. 35. of which promiſe Joſeph was entirely ignorant.

Ver. 19. Then Joſeph her huſband, being a juſt man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privately.] At which time, when Mary's pregnancy was no longer a ſecret, Joſeph her huſband, who knew that ſhe had not conceived of him, they having not as yet come together, was ſore perplexed, for, as himſelf being a juſt man, one that ſtrictly obſerved the rites of his nation, which condemned an adultreſs to be ſtrangled. (Whitby.) An eſpouſed virgin for the ſame crime to be ſtoned, Deut. xxii. 22, 23, 24. He thought it infamous to retain one guilty of ſuch a crime, and yet not having thoſe proper evidences, which the Jewiſh canons demanded in ſuch caſes, he was too honeſt a man to ſeek her death by any illegal deed, and, therefore as the ſaid canons allowed of a huſband's writing a bill of divorcement at pleaſure, he reſolved, without any reflections on her character to put her away by a bill of divorce. But, the ſagacious Maldonate obſerves, as a bill of divorce muſt neceſſarily have effected the reputation of a wife, put away from her huſband in thoſe circumſtances of her being found with child, and with a child not acknowledged by the reputed father, it ſeems more probable, that Joſeph was minded, or was meditating, how he might remove himſelf from that part of the country, and ſo part with her under a pretence of a journey, that their ſeparation might be aſcribed not to any fault of hers, but to ſome abſolute neceſſity of life; for this is the genuine purport of the Greek λαθρᾳ ἀπολῦσαι.

Ver. 20. —Joſeph thou ſon of David.] See the pedigree of Joſeph in the former part of this chapter, where he is proved to be the ſon or offspring of David, becauſe the ſon of Jacob and grandſon of Matthan. He was the bleſſed Virgin's ſpouſe, and foſter father of Jeſus Chriſt. Many of the ancients thought, that, before his marriage with the Virgin Mary, he had another wife whoſe name was Eſcha, or Mary, by whom he had St. James the Leſs, and the reſt, who in Scripture are called the brethren of Jeſus Chriſt; but this opinion can ſcarce be reconciled with the text in Mark xv. 40. where it appears as if Mary the mother of James the Loſs, were alive at the time of our Saviour's paſſion.

Another opinion among the ancients maintains, that Joſeph was very old, Epiphanius ſays, above fourſcore, and had ſix children by a former wife, when he married the Virgin Mary; whom he married not out of choice, but by lot; not with any deſign of cohabiting with her, as with a wife, but only to be the guardian of her virginity. And again, it is recorded, that he being her neareſt relation, and next heir, was obliged to marry her; and that the blooming rod which the painters fix in Joſeph's hand, denotes the rod which he preſented to the high-prieſt, among others of the houſe of David, who pretended to marry Mary; becauſe his was the only one that bloſſomed, and thereby the will of God was declared that Joſeph ſhould be her ſpouſe. But be that as it will, we are aſſured that he was a juſt man, and the husband of Mary, with whom he ordinarily lived at Nazareth, and maintained her by the labour of his hands, in the occupation of a carpenter.

It may be very reaſonably gathered from Scripture, that the Virgin Mary's reſolution of keeping her virginity was very well known to Joſeph, and that he agreed thereto; but the myſtery of the incarnation of the ſon of God, was not at firſt diſcovered to him; and therefore you've read how he was diſcontented to find his wife with child, (ver. 19) and reſolved to put her away. But while he continued in this reſolution, and ſtudied in what manner he might do it moſt privately to ſave her honour, the Angel of the Lord, who had before appeared to Mary, and informed her of her being overſhadowed and conception by the Holy Ghoſt, appeared again to Joſeph in a dream or a viſion of the night, and ſaid to him, Joſeph, Thou ſon of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, &c. and he took her to his own houſe, and careſſed her as his wife. About ſix months after Joſeph was obliged to go to Jeruſalem, the ſeat of his family, there to be regiſtred with Mary his wife, in purſuance of an order iſſued from the emperor Auguſtus, who had ordered his whole empire to be numbered, at which time and place Mary was delivered of her ſon, our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. And it is believed with great probability that Joſeph died before Jeſus began to preach the Goſpel, becauſe he is never mentioned in any circumſtance of our Saviour's preaching, and Jeſus Chriſt ready to expire upon the croſs, recommends his mother to St. John, which could hardly be ſuppoſed, if her husband had been living.—— Travellers affirm, that his ſepulchre is to be ſeen in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, on the eaſt of Jeruſalem; but as the ancients ſay nothing of it, and there is no foundation from his circumſtances of life to ſuppoſe his family could erect ſuch a ſepulchre for him, I ſhall give as little credit to their account as to the vain-boaſting of thoſe at Perouze in Italy, who pretend to have his wedding-ring: For both theſe are fables to pick the pockets of the credulous and meek Chriſtian.

——That which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghoſt.] In which words we learn that the conception of our Saviour was wrought by the operation of the Holy Spirit: but for the better underſtanding thereof, it will be neceſſary to obſerve what is excluded by that attribution to the Spirit, and what is included in the operation of the ſame ſpirit. As to the firſt:

The Virgin Mary excludeth firſt all men, and then herſelf; all men, by that aſſertion, I knew not a man, herſelf by the queſtion, How ſhall this be? Luke i. 34. Firſt, our Melchizedeck had no father on earth, in general, not any man, in particular, not Joſeph. 'Tis true, his mother Mary was eſpouſed to Joſeph, but it is as true, that before they came together, ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt; Matth. i. 18. We read in St. Luke ii. 27. that the parents brought up the child Jeſus into the temple; but theſe parents were not the father and the mother, but, as it followeth, "Joſeph and his mother marvelled at thoſe things which were ſpoken of him;" Luke ii. 33. 'Tis true, Philip calleth him, "Jeſus of Nazareth the ſon of Joſeph," John i. 45. and what is more, his mother ſaid unto him, "Behold, thy father and I have ſought thee ſorrowing;" Luke ii. 48. But this imports no more than that Joſeph was the reputed father of Chriſt, he being only, "as was ſuppoſed, the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Eli," Luke iii. 23. Now

Secondly, the virgin, I ſay, excluded herſelf, for by the manner of her queſtion, how ſhall this be? ſhe declared that of herſelf ſhe could not cauſe any ſuch conception; and the Angel acknowledged this impoſſibility of a woman to conceive, in the very terms of his anſwer, "for, ſays he, with God nothing ſhall be impoſſible;" Luke i. 37. Therefore it was God, who immediately and miraculouſly enabled the virgin Mary to conceive our Saviour. But,

Now let us enquire what is included in the conception by the Holy Ghoſt. And to this generation we ſay, no more is left to be attributed to the ſpirit, than what is neceſſary to cauſe the virgin to perform the actions of a mother; for the Holy Ghoſt did not frame the human nature of Chriſt out of his own ſubſtance, but he was ſo made of the ſubſtance of the virgin as not to be made of the ſubſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe eſſence cannot at all be made. And becauſe the Holy Ghoſt did not beget him by any communication of his eſſence; therefore he is not the father of him, though he were conceived by him.

All which conſidered, we are inſtructed by this text in the certain faith, That the only begotten ſon of God, begotten of the father before all worlds, very God of very God, was conceived and born, and ſo made man, taking to himſelf the human nature, conſiſting of a ſoul and body, and conjoining it with the divine in the unity of his perſon; that he was made fleſh, and was really and truly conceived in the womb of a woman, but not after the manner of men; not by carnal copulation, not by the common way of human propagation, but by the ſingular, powerful, inviſible, immediate operation of the Holy Ghoſt, whereby a virgin was beyond the law of nature enabled to conceive, and that which was conceived in her was originally and completely ſanctified. Thus

Our Jeſus was like unto us in all things, as born of a woman, ſin only excepted, as conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. And this original and total ſanctification of the human nature was firſt neceſſary to fit it For the perſonal union with the Word, who out of the infinite love humbled himſelf to become fleſh, and at the ſame time, out of his infinite purity, could not defile himſelf by becoming ſinful fleſh. And ſecondly, it was neceſſary in reſpect of the end of his incarnation, the redemption of mankind: That as the firſt Adam was the fountain of our impurity, ſo the ſecond Adam ſhould alſo be the pure fountain of our righteouſneſs. "God ſending his own ſon in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, condemned ſin in the fleſh," Rom. viii. 3. which he could not have done, had he been ſent in ſinful fleſh: And ſo we cannot know that he was manifeſted to take away our ſins, John iii. 5. except we alſo know that in him is no ſin; which is not poſſible except we believe that he was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 23. A virgin ſhall be with child and ſhall bring forth a ſon.] See the notes preceding; and moreover it is here eſpecially to be obſerved againſt all oppoſers, That the Hebrew word alma, which we tranſlate a virgin, from the Greek parthenos, is genuine, and was ſo tranſlated by the Septuagint, who ſo rendred it above 300 years before St. Matthew wrote his Goſpel; and that tranſlation was received and uſed by the Jews themſelves. Again, the derivation of the word alma, from עלם, to hide, or cover, or keep in private, confirms this our Verſion: becauſe it alludes to the cuſtom of the eaſtern nations, who kept their virgins as recluſes in ſecret apartments, as much as poſſible, from the company of men; ſo that they are ſtiled by the ancient author of the Second Book of Maccabees αἱ κατάκλειστοι τῶν παρθένων "the virgins that were ſhut up:" and by Philo, θαλαμευομέναι παρθένοι "the virgins kept in chambers." Orat. in Flacc. And this promiſe was made as a ſign or miracle, to confirm the houſe of David in God's promiſe, made to him of the perpetuity of his kingdom; but had this conception been after the ordinary manner, there had been no need of the ſolemn introduction, "the Lord himſelf ſhall give you a ſign," ſign;" had there been nothing new or ſtrange, what need was there of that emphaſis, Behold! What? a woman conceiving and bearing a child in an ordinary way, common to all women? No. But, a woman, who ſhould conceive a child in her womb without the knowledge of a man, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, and after the birth of that Holy Thing ſo conceived, ſtill remaining a virgin unſpotted from any carnal communication; that is, the ſign they were to behold: that is, the miracle we are to adore. Therefore ſays an eminent Biſhop of our church.

We are aſſured by the infallible relations of the Evangeliſts that this Mary the mother of Jeſus, whom we believe to be Chriſt, was a virgin when ſhe bare him, when ſhe brought forth her firſt-born ſon. That ſhe was a virgin when, and after ſhe was eſpouſed unto Joſeph, appeareth by the narration of St. Luke, i. 27. "The Angel Gabriel was ſent from God to a virgin eſpouſed to a man whoſe name was Joſeph." And it appeareth by her queſtion, How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a man, that ſhe ſtill remained ſo a virgin after the ſalutation of that Angel.. And that ſhe continued ſo after ſhe conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, is evident from the relation of St. Matthew, as above, at the 18th verſe; for when ſhe "was eſpouſed unto Joſeph, before they came together, ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt." That ſhe was a virgin not only while ſhe was with child, but even when ſhe had brought forth, is alſo evident from the application of the Prophecy on this occaſion, "Behold, a virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a ſon:" for by the ſame prediction it is as manifeſt, that a virgin ſhould bring forth, as conceive a ſon; it being as contradictory for virginity to conceive, as to bring forth a child.

——And they ſhall call his name Emmanuel.] Or, "he ſhall be called Emmanuel" for the Greek and Hebrew alſo often put a verb perſonal for an imperſonal; and then in the Scripture phraſe, to be called, and to be, is the ſame thing. Thus the phraſe "my houſe ſhall be called an houſe of prayer," Iſa. lvi. 7. i. e. is or ſhall be ſo, Luke xix. 46. Iſa. ix. 6. "his name ſhall be called Wonderful," i. e. he ſhall be a wonderful perſon. And Jer. xxiii. 6. "He ſhall be called the Lord our righteouſneſs." or he ſhall be ſo. And Philo having ſaid (de Mut. Nom. p. 823. E.) that the word Jeſus ſignifies the ſalvation of God, Ἰησȣ̃ς ἡ Σωτηρία τȣ̃ Κυρίȣ, conſequently I aſſert, that he who is called Jeſus, muſt in effect be called Emmanuel. Since then, Chriſt came to be our Jeſus, to ſave us from our ſins, and give us life eternal, he may well be called Emmanuel, who is God with us, ſeeing God, by ſending him to us; for theſe great ends was in the moſt ſignal manner preſent with us; and therefore it is firſt ſaid, "His name ſhall be called Jeſus, for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins," and then it is added that, "this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophet, his name ſhall be called Emmanuel." And

In theſe words it is to be obſerved, That Chriſt is called God by way of excellency: of which, Biſhop Pearſon reaſons thus. He which is called Emmanuel, is called God by way of excellency; for that name, ſays St. Matthew, is God with us. But Chriſt is called Emmanuel, that it might be fulfilled, &c. Therefore he is that God with us, which is expreſſed by way of excellency, and diſtinguiſhed from all other, who are any way honoured with that name. For it is a vain imagination to think that Chriſt is called Emmanuel, and that he is not what he is called. He is Emmanu, that is, with us, for he hath dwelt among us; John i. 14. And when he parted from the earth, he ſaid to his diſciples, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world, Matth. xxviii. 20. And he is the El, as the Prophet teſtifieth, ſaying, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a ſon is given, and his name ſhall be called Wonderful, Counſellour, the mighty God," Iſa. ix. 8. He then who is properly called El or God, and is alſo really Emmanu, i. e. with us, muſt infallibly be the Emmanuel, or God with us, and this name being as properly and directly to be attributed to the Meſſias, as the name of Jeſus, it remaineth that Chriſt be acknowledged God with us, according to the Evangelical interpretation, with an expreſſion of that excellency which belongeth to the Supreme Deity. Yet

In this ſame text we are taught alſo to believe that this El or God when he became Emmanu preſent with us, that he was made really and truly a man, of the ſame human nature, common to all other men, who are conceived and born into the world by the ordinary way of generation; for, "the mediator between God and Man, is the Man Chriſt Jeſus;" 1 Tim. ii. 5. that as by man came Death by man alſo ſhould come the reſurrection of the dead, 1 Cor. xv. 21. As ſure then as the firſt Adam, and we, his poſterity are men, ſo certainly is the ſecond Adam and our Mediator a man; and is therefore frequently ſtiled the Son of man, in which nature he was always promiſed; firſt to Eve, as her ſeed, and conſequently her ſon, Gen. iii. 15. then to Abraham, "in thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed," Gen. xxii. 18. and that ſeed is Chriſt, Gal. iii. 6. who is the ſon of Abraham, Matt. i. 1. and laſtly, to David as his ſon to ſit upon his throne, and ſo he is made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, Rom. i. 3. the ſon of David the ſon of Abraham, Matt. i. 1. and conſequently of the ſame nature with David and with Abraham; all which could be largely enforced by ſtrong arguments founded upon the truth of his nativity, and the actions and paſſions of his life; but ſuch a retail would be needleſs ſince we are informed in a few words, "that every ſpirit which confeſſeth not Jeſus Chriſt come in the fleſh is not of God,' John iv. 3.

Thus we learn, as it is taught in the third article of our Chriſtian belief, that the whole perfect and complete nature of Man was aſſumed by the Son of God, who was conceived and born of a woman and ſo made man. Yet being the divine nature which he had before, could never ceaſe to be what it was, nor ever become what before it was not; therefore he who was God before by the divine nature which he had, was in this incarnation made man by that human nature which he then aſſumed, and ſo really and truly was both God and Man.

Being then he which is conceived was the only Son of God, and that only Son begotten of the ſubſtance of the Father, and ſo always ſubſiſted in the divine nature; being by the ſame conception he was made truly Man, and conſequently aſſumed the human nature; being theſe two natures cannot be made one either by commixtion or converſion, and yet there can be but one Chriſt ſubſiſting in them both; becauſe that only Son was he which was conceived and born; it followeth that the union, which was not made in the nature, was made in the perſon of the word; i. e. it was not ſo made, that out of both natures one only ſhould reſult; but only ſo, that to one perſon no other ſhould be added.—Nor is this union only a ſcholaſtic ſpeculation, as ſome pretend, but a certain and neceſſary truth, without which we cannot have, one Chriſt, but two Chriſts; one Mediator, but two Mediators; without which we cannot join the ſecond article of our creed (Jeſus Chriſt thy Son our Lord) with the third (who was conceived) making them, as they do, belong equally to the ſame perſon, and without which we cannot interpret the ſacred ſcriptures, nor underſtand the hiſtory of our Saviour, of whom we read, that "he was of the fathers according to the fleſh, who was God over all bleſſed for ever," Rom. ix. 5. who being put to death through the fleſh was quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. iii. 18.

Note, What more relates to the conception of Jeſus Chriſt by the Holy Ghoſt in the womb of the Virgin Mary, is referred to that account in the firſt chap. of St. Luke, as the moſt proper place, being as it is there more particularly deſcribed.

Ver. 25. And knew her not till ſhe had brought forth her firſt born Son.] The phraſe knew her not is an hebraiſm, intimating the lawful uſe of matrimony; for the ſame expreſſion is uſed by Moſes, where he ſays, "and Adam "knew Eve his wife;" Gen. iv. 1.

——Till ſhe had brought forth her firſt born ſon.] It has been argued with much vehemency from the words of this text, that Mary brought forth many more children by the common and natural means of procreation after ſhe had Jeſus her firſt born ſon; and therefore ſay they, ſhe did not always remain a virgin. But ſuch ſophiſters can reap no advantages, ſuppoſe the whole of their argument be granted, becauſe we are no further anxious than to prove her a virgin before, at, and after the birth of Jeſus; that is the full completion of the Prophecy, "Behold a virgin ſhall conceive and bare a ſon." Therefore their argument from hence, that ſhe was not a virgin before, at, or after the birth of Jeſus is a fallaciſm; for the very words, "till ſhe brought forth her firſt born ſon, prove that ſhe had never brought one forth before. And again,

It is a common phraſe in ſcripture to ſpeak of the only begotten ſon, by the name of the firſt born; for this reaſon, becauſe he that is the only begotten child, muſt of neceſſity be the firſt born. Thus God commanded Moſes to ſpeak unto Pharaoh ſaying: "Thus ſaith the Lord, Iſrael is my ſon, even my firſt born," becauſe he had no other. St. Paul alſo ſpeaking of the only begotten ſon of God, calls him expreſly the firſt born, Heb. xii. 23. and firſt begotten, Heb. i. 6. So that the Evangeliſt in this place uſes the word firſt born, to record her virginity, not only in her conception, but alſo in the act of bearing her Child Jeſus. But to come more cloſely to the argument.

We of the church of England believe the mother of our Lord to have been not only before, and after his nativity, but alſo for ever the moſt immaculate and bleſſed Virgin. For although, as I have obſerved before, it may be thought and allowed ſufficient as to the myſtery of the Incarnation, that when our Saviour was conceived and born, his mother was, and remained a Virgin, yet convinced from the unparallel'd eminency of ſuch a mother, the ſpecial honour due to her ſon, and in regard of that Holy Ghoſt who overſhadowed her with his Power, and of Joſeph's ſingular goodneſs and piety, to whom ſhe was eſpouſed, not only we, but the pureſt ages of Chriſtianity have always believed that ſhe ſtill continued in the ſame virginity, and therefore it is to be acknowledged the ever-Virgin Mary; Pearſon on the Creed Art. 3. As if the gate of the ſanctuary in the prophet Ezekiel were to be underſtood of her; "this gate ſhall be ſhut, it ſhall not be opened, and no man ſhall enter in by it; becauſe the Lord the God of Iſrael hath entered in by it, therefore it ſhall be ſhut," Ezek. xliv. 2.

Beſides theſe reflections we are engaged by ſufficient reaſon to hold faſt this Faith. For if the words before us ſhould be concluſive as ſome would have them, that ſhe was a Virgin no longer after her bearing of Jeſus; if 'till or until was an adverb limiting a certain time, then what would be the inference from what God ſaid to Jacob, "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have ſpoken to thee of," Gen. xxviii. 15. they muſt with as much weakneſs, aſſurance, and falſhood infer, that when that was done the God of Jacob left him. So in like manner he that would undertake to prove from the words, 'till ſhe had brought forth &c. that ſhe no longer remained a Virgin, muſt fooliſhly grant that the ſcripture, which records how Samuel when he had delivered a ſevere prediction unto Saul," came no more to ſee him 'till the day of his death," 1 Sam. xv. 35. informs us, that Samuel therefore viſited Saul after he was dead, And it would be equally as ridiculous and ſtupid to ſuppoſe Michal delivered of a child in the grave, becauſe it is written, "Michal the daughter of Saul had no child unto the day of her death," 2 Sam. vi. 23.

Again, the firſt-born in the Scripture notion excludeth any one before, but inferreth not a conſequent; i. e. does not intimate that a firſt-born is the firſt of many, it concludeth not any to follow after, but only ſuppoſeth that none has gone before; it inferreth, I ſay, no ſucceſſion, nor proveth the mother to have any future offſpring.

But to all this it is objected, that we read expreſly in the Goſpels of the brethren of our Lord; St. John ſays, "he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother and his brethren," ch. ii. 12. and while he talked unto the people, "his mother and his brethren ſtood without deſiring to ſpeak with him," Mat. xii. 46.

To this I anſwer, that allowing thoſe texts litterally to prove, that our Lord had brethren, yet I deny that they prove thoſe his brethren to be the ſons of Mary his mother; they are no where called the children of the mother of Jeſus. Neither is the queſtion whether Chriſt had any brethren? but whether Mary, his mother, ever brought forth any other children? ſo that theſe texts of John and Matthew prove nothing againſt the bleſſed Virgin's perpetual virginity. How then ſhall we account for theſe brethren of our Lord; whoſe children were they?

It is poſſible that they might be the children of Joſeph by a former wife, (ſee note, at ver. 20.) ſo, as he was the reputed father, they alſo might well be accounted and called his brethren, as it is well obſerved and taught by moſt of the ancient fathers, eſpecially of the Greek church, Epiphanius, St. Chryſ. Cyril, &c.

They urge again that it is recorded in Mat. xiii. 55. "Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren James and Joſes and Simon and Judas?" and therefore James and Joſes, &c. were undoubtedly the brethren of Chriſt, and the real ſons of Mary; for, continue they, among the women at the croſs we find, "Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joſes;" Matt. xxvii. 56. which Mary they ſay is the mother of our Lord. But,

This alſo will appear to be a bad argument; becauſe this Mary the mother of James and Joſes was different and diſtinguiſhed from Mary the virgin, and conſequently if that can be made out, as follows, James and Joſes the brethren of our Lord, were the ſons of another mother. Now to the proof.

We read in St. John (xix. 25.) that "there ſtood by the croſs of Jeſus, his mother, and his mother's ſiſter, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene;" which the other Evangeliſts word in this manner: "Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joſes;" Matt. xxvii. 56. Mark xv. 40. And again at the ſepulchre, St. Matthew ſays, "Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary;" chap. xxviii. 1. And who ſhould that other Mary be, but whom he had mentioned juſt before at (chap. xxvii. 56.) the croſs, Mary the wife of Cleophas, who was the mother of James and Joſes, and conſequently James and Joſes the brethren of our Lord were not the ſons of Mary his mother, but of the other Mary, and therefore called his brethren, according to the language of the Hebrews, becauſe that the other Mary was the ſiſter of his mother; St. Hierom. in Catalogo. Thus Abraham ſaid unto Lot, we be brethren, Gen. xiii. 8. Whereas Abraham was the ſon of Terah, Lot the ſon of Haran, and conſequently not his brother, but his nephew, or ſon of his brother, Gen. xii. 5. Thus alſo "Moſes called Miſhael, and Elzaphan the ſons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and ſaid unto them, come near, carry your brethren from before the ſanctuary," Lev. x. 4. But theſe brethren, Nadab and Abihu, were the ſons of Aaron and not of Uzziel. And again it is written, "Jacob told Rachel, that he was her father's brother, and that he was Rebecca's ſon," Gen. xxix. 12. whereas Rebecca was the ſiſter of Rachel's father. It is ſufficient therefore that the Evangeliſts, according to the conſtant language of the Jews, call the kindred of the bleſſed Virgin, the brethren and ſiſters of her only ſon; St. Hierome againſt Helvidius and Corn. in Matt. xii.

——— And he called his name Jeſus.] i. e. And Joſeph the reputed father of this firſt-born ſon of Mary, when the time came that he was to be circumciſed, gave him the name of Jeſus, as he had been commanded by the Angel, ver. 21. ſee alſo the interpretation of the name of Jeſus above at ver. 1.

CHAP. II.

1 The wiſe-men out of the eaſt, are directed to Chriſt by a ſtar. 11 They worſhip him, and offer their preſents. 14 Joſeph fleeth into Egypt with Jeſus and his mother. 16 Herod ſlayeth the children: 20 Himſelf dieth. 23 Chriſt is brought back again into Galilee to Nazareth.

NOW when Jeſus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wiſe-men from the eaſt to Jeruſalem,

2 Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have ſeen his ſtar in the eaſt, and are come to worſhip him.

3 When Herod the king had heard theſe things, he was troubled, and all Jeruſalem with him.

The Flight into Egypt

Matthew.11.14.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief prieſts and ſcribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Chriſt ſhould be born.

5 And they ſaid unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by the prophet.

6 And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, art not the leaſt among the princes of Juda: for out of thee ſhall come a Governor that ſhall rule my people Iſrael.

7 Then Herod when he had privily called the wiſe-men, enquired of them diligently what time the ſtar appeared,

8 And he ſent them to Bethlehem, and ſaid, Go, and ſearch diligently for the young child, and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worſhip him alſo.

9 When they had heard the king, they departed, and lo, the ſtar which they ſaw in the eaſt, went before them, till it came and ſtood over where the young child was.

10 When they ſaw the ſtar, they rejoyced with exceeding great joy.

11 ¶ And when they were come into the houſe they ſaw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worſhipped him: and when they had opened their treaſures, they preſented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincenſe, and myrrh.

12 And being warned of God in a dream that they ſhould not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

13 And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joſeph in a dream, ſaying, Ariſe, and take the young child, and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will ſeek the young child to deſtroy him.

14 When he aroſe, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt:

15 And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lord by the prophet, ſaying, Out of Egypt have I called my ſon.

16 ¶ Then Herod, when he ſaw that he was mocked of the wiſe-men, was exceeding wroth, and ſent forth, and ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſe-men.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet, ſaying,

18 In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they are not.

19 ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joſeph in Egypt, 20 Saying, Ariſe, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Iſrael: for they are dead which ſought the young childs life.

21 And he aroſe, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Iſrael.

22 But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithſtanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aſide into the parts of Galilee:

23 And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophets, He ſhall be called a Nazarene.

This chapter contains four parts. The firſt is a deſcription of the place where Chriſt was born, and takes up the twelve former verſes. The ſecond informs us of the place where he paſt his infancy, to ver. 16. In the third is related the hiſtory of the ſlaughter of the infants at Bethlehem, a ſtratagem of Herod, whereby he thought to cut off the Chriſt, the new-born king of the Jews; to ver. 19. and the remainder of this chapter ſheweth where Chriſt was brought up from a boy.

Ver. 1. Now when Jeſus was born in Bethlehem of Judea.] Bethlehem of Judea or Judah was a city in the tribe of Judah, generally ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another of the ſame name, in the tribe of Zebulun; Joſh. xvii. 7. compared with xix. 15. It is alſo known by the name of Ephratah, and its inhabitants Ephrateans, Gen. xlviii. 7. And tho' this city could no wiſe boaſt of its extent or riches; yet it exceed all others on the ſcore of the Meſſiah's birth, as much as the Meſſiah excelled in dignity all the monarchs of the earth, therefore Micah extolling this advantage peculiar to Bethlehem, ſays, "Thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thouſands of Judah, yet out of thee ſhall come forth unto me he that is to be ruler in Iſrael," or the Micah, Micah v. 2.

Bethlehem is ſituated upon the declivity of a hill, ſix miles or two leagues from Jeruſalem, tho' Joſephus ſeems to place it at the diſtance only of thirty furlongs, or three miles and ſeven hundred paces from thence, and Juſtin Martyr enlarges that computation to five and thirty furlongs, or four miles three hundred and ſeventy five paces. But as all the ancients and moderns agree in the former account, it is highly probable, that the cyphers which denote the ſhort diſtance are changed or miſtaken in theſe two authors.

The cave wherein our Saviour was born was not exactly in the city, but rather without Bethlehem. St. Hierome ſays, it was on the ſouth ſide, Juſtin Martyr and Epiphanius ſay no more than that it was without the city, in the fields. And the inn whither the Virgin Mary and Joſeph took up their quarters, was probably a caravanſeras, or publick houſe, where gueſts were received gratis, on ſuch publick occaſions, and where nothing more than ſhelter was allowed. But as the croud was great, when Joſeph and Mary arrived, they were obliged to ſeek for ſhelter in a cave, which ſerved as a ſtable to the ſaid inn, ſee Origen lib. 1. Contr. Celſ. Hier. Epiph. her. c. 1. of which cave travellers inform us, that it was about forty feet deep, and twelve wide, growing narrower towards the roof. And St. Hierome records, that the emperor Adrian, in order to eraze the memory of our Saviour's birth in this place, planted over it a grove of tall trees, in honour of Tammuz or Adonis: ſo that when the feſtivals of that infamous deity were celebrated, the Holy Grotto was heard to eccho with the lamentations, which were made in commemoration of venus's lover. Hieron. epiſt. ad Paulin. In ſpecie ubi quondam Chriſtus parvulus vagiit, veneris Amaſius plangitur.

Judea is a province of Aſia, called anciently the land of Canaan, or Paleſtine, the land of promiſe, the land of Iſrael, and laſtly, Judea, after the Jews were returned from the Babyloniſh captivity, becauſe the tribe of Judah was the moſt powerful and numerous; therefore this ſouthern province of Paleſtine obtained from them the name of Judea. This tribe was ſo numerous, that, at the departure out of Egypt, it alone, was compoſed of ſeventy four thouſand ſix hundred men capable of bearing arms, Numbers i. 26, 27. The crown paſſed from the tribe of Benjamin, out of which Saul aroſe king of the Jews, and Iſhboſheth, into that of Judah, which was the tribe of David, whoſe race ſat upon the throne of Judah till the Babyloniſh captivity. And even after the return of the Jews from the ſaid captivity, although this tribe did not reign; it always poſſeſſed the firſt place; it gave the ſceptre to thoſe that did reign, and in ſome ſort reunited in itſelf the whole nation of the Hebrews, who from that time were univerſally known only by the common name of Judæi, or Jews, which denotes the deſcendants of Judah, and not only the inhabitants of that corner of the earth Judea, here particularly recorded.

To this I ſhall add the note of Maldonate on this place. He obſerves that the Vulgate, or ancient Latin verſion reads this name Juda, or Judah, and that many Greek copies (which our tranſlators have followed) read it Judea, or τῆς Ἰεδαίας, which, ſays he, tho' ſupported by the authority of Chryſoſtome, Euthymius, and many more, I ſuppoſe to be written corruptly for Judah; becauſe, as St. Hierome obſerves, by Judea we are to comprehend the whole country of the ſettlement of the twelve tribes; whereas Juda or Judah, is that particular and ſmall part of the land of promiſe, which fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah. Whence he infers, that whereas it appears from Scripture, there were two Bethlehems, one in the tribe of Judah, where David and Chriſt were born; and another in the tribe of Zabulon, it is plain, that the Evangeliſt diſtinguiſhes theſe two cities, that in the tribe of Judah, from that in the tribe of Zabulon, by mentioning its particular tribe in which it was ſituated. But it would not be poſſible to judge of which Bethlehem it is recorded, ſhould it be written Bethlehem in the land of Judea, becauſe there were two Bethlehems in that land; therefore it ought to be in Bethlehem of Juda, becauſe there was only one city ſo called in that part or diviſion of the twelve tribes; ſee Maldonate in loc.

——— In the days of Herod.] Not of that Herod Antipas, Tetrach of Galilee, Luc. iii. 1. who put John the Baptiſt to death, Matt. xiv. mocked Chriſt, Luc. xxi. 11. nor he who put James to death, and caſt Peter into priſon alſo, Acts xii. 2. but this Herod was father to the former, and grandfather to the latter, and particularly diſtinguiſhed by the appellation of Herod the Great, the ſon of Antipater. Therefore he is alſo called ——— The king.] To diſtinguiſh him from the Tetrach mentioned hereafter in chap. xiv. 1. and it appears by this diſtinction, as if the Evangeliſt intended to ſhew, that the time was now come, in which the Chriſt ſhould be born. For whereas it had been foretold, "the ſceptre ſhould not depart out of the tribe of Judah, till Shilo, or he that muſt be ſent, was come," Gen. xlix. 20. in ſaying that Herod, the reigning king, was a foreigner, he ſheweth, that the ſceptre was departed from the tribe of Judah, and that the time was now come, in which that Prophecy of Jacob concerning the coming of Chriſt was to be accompliſhed.

——— Behold there came wiſe-men.] Here the word, Behold, alludes to the ſudden coming of the wiſe-men ſoon after the birth of Chriſt, and to the great conſternation into which their report threw the whole city of Jeruſalem, ver. 3. Now

Many queſtions have been ſtarted concerning theſe wiſe-men, or as others call them from the original magi. 'Tis asked who they were? whence they came? how many there were of them? at what time they arrived at Jeruſalem from the time of the birth of Jeſus? and what was the ſtar that appeared to and guided them to the place where Jeſus lay?

When it is asked who they were? it is conceived to be meant of what ſtation of life they were? to this it is anſwered by ſome, eſpecially by thoſe of the Romiſh church, that they were kings, herein following the authority of Tertullian, who ſeems zealous to maintain their loyalty; contra Judeos & lib. iii. contra Marcion. But his proofs being founded upon a falſe ſuppoſition, that the orientals were commonly governed by magi, are inſufficient to conclude againſt thoſe who maintain the oppoſition. And tho' St. Ambroſe, or rather Cæſarius of Arles, gives them the names of kings; yet, ſays Calmet, it is ſuſpected that this word has been foiſted into the text. Neither can their quotation from St. Cyprian's ſermon on baptiſm, be of greater advantage to their aſſertion, becauſe that ſermon is now found to belong to an Abbot of Bonnevalle, named Arnold, who lived long after St. Cyprian, even ſo late as in the time of Barnard; and as to the moderns, their authority can be of no moment in a matter of this nature. But what has moſt contributed to give the magi or wiſe-men, the title of kings, are theſe words of the Pſalmiſt; "the kings of Tarſhiſh and of the iſles ſhall bring preſents, the kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall offer gifts," Pſ. lxxii. 10.

The opinions of the learned are as much divided about ſettling the immediate and peculiar profeſſion of the magi. Ignatius, and ſome others of great antiquity and authority, as Juſtin Martyr, Origen, Ambroſe, Tertullian, &c. imagined that they in general exerciſed curious and diabolical arts of divination, judicial aſtrology and inchantments; and the ancient Goſpel of the infancy of our Saviour affirms, that they were the diſciples of Zoroaſter. But others of later date have had a more favourable opinion of them, or rather pretend that their magic was natural and lawful. Eraſm. Hammond, Epiphanius, thinks that they were deſcendants of Abraham and Kethura. Abbot Rupert calls them Prophets and inſpired perſons. Origen, Baſil, Ambroſe and Jerome, are pretty near of the ſame reaſoning; that the magi having perceived by their magical operations, that the power of the devil was weakened, they became inquiſitive to diſcover the cauſe thereof, and at the ſame time obſerving a new ſtar in the firmament of the heavens, which they ſuppoſed to be the ſame as ſpoken of by Balaam, and which was to mark out the place of the birth of a new king of Iſrael, reſolved to go in queſt of him, to pay him their due adoration. Conformable hereto, Tertullian aſſerts, that theſe wiſe-men found out the birth of the Meſſiah by aſtrology, "which ſcience, as he pretends (de idolatria,) was allowed of till the appearance of Chriſt, at whoſe coming it was forbidden, that no one thenceforward ſhould take upon him to calculate nativities by ſtars."

All this, I ſay, is uncertain; but we ſpeak what we know, when we ſay, that the Engliſh words wiſe-men is the tranſlation of the word magi or Μάγοι, who were ſuch as the old Greeks ſtile σοφοὶ, the ſages or wiſe-men of their time; for tho' the Greek word Μάγοι ſtrictly ſpeaking, ſignifies magicians. Yet ſeeing in the ancient times, that word was not appropriated to that evil ſenſe, which now it bears, but generally ſignified men of wiſdom and learning, skilled in the knowledge of things natural and Divine, and more eſpecially in that ſort of learning which relates to the ſun, moon and ſtars, as we learn from Porphyry, &c. therefore the magi or wiſe-men, are here ſo called, not as by a note of infamy, but as by an honourable title, importing them to be men of great wiſdom and learning. And hence, It may appear ridiculous for the church of Rome, to defend their royal dignity, for the matter does not require it, nor is it reaſonable to think the Evangeliſt would have omitted a circumſtance of ſo great moment, both for their honour and our Lord's. We alſo, ſays the learned and judicious Whitby, ſhould in all likelihood have had ſome mention of their royal train and equipage, and all Jeruſalem would have been moved as much to ſee them come, as they were at the hearing their queſtion. Herod would likely have received them with more reſpect, and not have let them go alone to Bethlehem; much leſs would he have laid upon them his commands to return back, and give him an account of the child found. This therefore is an inſtance of the uncertainty and vanity of the traditions of the Romiſh church, who not only teach that the wiſe men were kings, but pretend to give you their names, deſcribe their travels, and to have their bodies expoſed for to be worſhipped even in theſe our days.

— From the eaſt.] Hence the opinion of ſome, that the wiſe men came from Chaldea, a country famous for magicians and aſtrologers. But this is confuted by the ancient Prophets, who foretold the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, and ſay, that they lay not on the Eaſt but North of Jury, and came from thoſe upon them, ſee Jer. i. 14, 15. and vi. 22. Joel ii. 20. It is therefore more probable that they came from Arabia, which was, ſays Tacitus, "the bound of Judea Eaſtward," Hiſt. lib. v. edit. Lipſ. p. 617. And hence, in the Scripture, the Arabians are called ſometimes, the men in the Eaſt, ſee Judg. vi. 3. compared with Job i. 3. Moreover, the gifts which theſe men offered, were the native commodities of Arabia; and the gold of Sheba, ſays the Pſalmiſt, in Arabia, Pſ. lxxii. 15. And the Poet avouches the like of its producing frankincenſe and myrrh, when he ſays, Molles ſua thura Sabæi. Add to this that a great part of Arabia was in the land of Canaan; whence David and Solomon, to whom the promiſe of having the land of Canaan was made good in its full extent, extended their dominions over theſe countries, even to Euphrates, and they who lived there were of the ſeed of Abraham. Now, ſays Whitby, it is more likely theſe firſt fruits of the Gentiles ſhould be brought to do homage to the king of the Jews, from a country which did as much to David and Solomon, the types of Chriſt, than from a far more diſtant foreign nation; and to conceive that they were of the ſeed of Abraham, rather than of another race. Nor is it to be wondered that the Magi ſhould be ſaid to come from the Eaſt, ſince Porphyry informs us that Pythagoras went into Arabia to acquire wiſdom, and Grotius here cites Ptolomy ſaying, that Arabia was Magorum ſinus, the recepticle of wiſe men.

As to the number of thoſe wiſe men here mentioned, it has for a very long time been fixed to three by Leo, Cæſarius, Bede, Rupert, and a multitude of other commentators founding their opinion chiefly upon the three ſorts of preſents that are mentioned in the Goſpel. Their preſents were gold, myrrh and frankincenſe, and their common names are Gaſpar, Melchior, and Balthaſar; but theſe names, as well as all others, come down to our knowledge, I believe, were unknown to antiquity, and no ways to be accepted genuine. And here I ſhall take notice of that equally as ſpurious a tradition recorded by the author of the imperfect work upon Matthew (hom. ii.) who upon an apocryphal authority relates, that they were twelve in number, but this alſo wants ſufficient proof.

Next, the time which theſe wiſe men took up in their journey to Bethlehem of Juda is a point much diſcuſſed by Chronologers. For ſome ſuppoſing they came from the remoteſt parts of Perſia, allow them two years for their ſaid journey; ſuppoſing either that the ſtar appeared to them two years before, or at the birth of our Saviour; both theſe found their hypotheſis on the 16th verſe of this chapter. Others again make them ſet out at the moment of our Saviour's birth, and to arrive at Bethlehem thirteen days after on the backs of dromedaries, which travel the ſwifteſt of all creatures. But amongſt all the various opinions, I don't find any one venturing to fix the exact time of their departure from home, though moſt have agreed that the day of their arrival at Bethlehem was the thirteenth from our Lord's birth. Now, from this uncertainty, let us paſs to the ſtar that appeared to theſe wiſe men; for "when they were arrived at Jeruſalem, they asked where is he that is born king of the Jews?"

— For we have ſeen his ſtar.] Chryſoſtome, Baſil, Ambroſe, and other ancients aſſert, that this was a new ſtar purpoſely created to declare to men the birth of the Meſſiah. Origen, Maldonate and Grotius, take it for a kind of a comet which appeared preternaturally in the air. Our countryman Lightfoot thinks, that the ſame light which appeared to the ſhepherds near Bethlehem might alſo be ſeen afar off by theſe wiſe men, and guide them to find out our Saviour. Others, as Theophylact, Maldonate, &c. would ſubſcribe to a belief that it was an angel clothed in a body of light in the form of a ſtar, which taking his courſe towards Judea, drew the Magi after him. And the author of the treatiſe wrongly aſcribed to St. Auſtin, of the wonders of Holy Scripture, aſſures us, that ſome writers believed this ſtar was the Holy Ghoſt, appearing to the wiſe men under the form of a ſtar at the birth of Chriſt, even as he, under the form of a dove appeared at his Baptiſm. Ignatius in his epiſtle to the Epheſians ſays, this ſtar exceeded all the others in brightneſs, and that the whole world was in amazement at the appearance of its new and extraordinary light, which is agreeable to the undiſputable teſtimony of the heathen Chalcidius, a platonic philoſopher, who in his commentary upon Plato's Timæus ſpeaks of this Phænomenon in theſe ſtrong terms: "We muſt obſerve another hiſtory much more holy and more worthy of veneration; 'tis that which tells us of the appearance of a ſtar, which foretold neither diſeaſes nor mortality, but the deſcent of God upon earth, to live among men, and to heap his favours upon them. Wiſe men of Chaldea having perceived this ſtar in the night, as they were skilled in the ſcience of aſtronomy, they betook themſelves to find out the new-born God; and having found him they offered him preſents ſuitable to ſo high a majeſty." To this I ſhall add the moſt probable opinion, that,

This ſtar was an inflamed meteor, in the middle region of the air, which having been obſerved by the Magi with miraculous and extraordinary circumſtances, was apprehended by them to be the ſame ſtar foretold ſo long before by Balaam; therefore they reſolved to follow it and to ſeek that new-born king, whoſe coming they had learned Balaam's ſtar ſhould declare. Conſequently it was a light not unlike the pillar of fire in the deſart, which moved in the air before them; and they were moved to follow this phænomenon by inward inſpiration, the light of the Holy Ghoſt and the ſollicitation of grace operating in their ſouls.

— To worſhip him.] It has been the opinion of ſome, that the word we render worſhip, only intimates a courtly or courteous behaviour, ſee Le Clerc in Loc. But ſays Maldonate, ſuch commentators are very uncivil; therefore I ſhall defer my remarks thereon to the 11th verſe below.

Ver. 4. And when he had gathered all the chief prieſts.] Some by the word chief, have underſtood what is commonly called the high prieſts; but it is here to be carefully noted, that the Engliſh adjective chief, prefixed to a ſubſtantive plural, as the word prieſts imports, properly ſignifies principal, moſt renouned, &c. and then the text will be ſo plainly underſtood, that "he gathered all the principal prieſts or chief among the prieſts." For, it is evident from many texts of Scripture that there was no more than one chief or high Prieſt at a time, Matt. xxvi. 59—65. Mark i. 44. and ii. 26. Luke xxii. 50. — 54. Acts iv. 6, &c. But it is alſo true that there was a new high prieſt every Year, John xi. 49. and xviii. 13. from the time that Pompey took the city and ſubjected the ſacerdotal dignity to his own and the Roman power, Joſephus Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 6. Euſeb. hiſt. Eccl. lib. i. c. 6. and others, whoſe authority is very much leſſened by an obſervation of the learned Maldonate, this propoſition, ſays he, is not univerſally true, for, before the time we read of annual high prieſts, when that dignity was continued for life, we read of many chief prieſts co-exiſting, 2 Chron. vi. 14. But that dignity was upon the ancient eſtabliſhment at the time our Saviour was born: Therefore there were not many, but one high prieſt then living. I ſay, continues he, one ſupreme, who was abſolutely and by way of eminence called the high prieſt, and many chief prieſts, ſo ſtiled becauſe they were raſchei haaboth, the heads or chiefs of ſacerdotal families, 1 Chron. xv. 6.—12. and xxiv. 6. now

Herod called together the prieſts, becauſe it was their proper office to interpret the law, Malachi ii. 7. but as they were almoſt innumerable, he only ſummoned the principal who were the moſt learned, members of the great council or ſanhedrim, Judges of the nation, and as it were chief counſellors, 1 Chron. xxiii. 4. Matt. xxvi. 3. Mark xi. 18. Acts iv. 26. where it is recorded that the chief prieſts were preſent at all councils of their nation, as well on civil as religious affairs.

— And ſcribes of the people] The ſcribes are frequently mentioned in the Goſpels, and were publick writers, and profeſſed doctors of the law, which they read and explained to the people, whom the people of the Jews conſulted in their doubts concerning the ſenſe of the Scriptures, ſee 2 Sam. viii. 17. Eccluſ. xxxviii. 25. So that

Scribes and doctors of the law mean the ſame thing in the Scripture-phraſe; for, he, who in Matt. xxii. 35. is called a doctor of the law, in St. Mark xii. 28. is named a ſcribe or one of the ſcribes. And as the whole knowledge of the Jews at that time chiefly conſiſted in phariſaical traditions, and in the uſe that was made of them to explain the Scriptures; the greateſt number of the doctors of the law, or ſcribes of the people were Phariſees, for which reaſon thoſe two names are moſt commonly found joined together in Scripture. Each of them valued themſelves upon the knowledge of the law, and upon their ſtudying and teaching it. They had the key of knowledge and ſat in Moſes's chair, Matt. xxii. 42. and xxiii. 2. Therefore they were called by Herod to this council, together with the chief prieſts according to ancient cuſtom, to enquire of them what the law and Prophets declared concerning the place of the birth of the expected Meſſiah; for, he demanded of them where Chriſt ſhould be born.

Ver. 5. And they ſaid unto him, in Bethlehem of Judea.] See the note above on the firſt verſe of this chapter.

Ver. 6. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda art not the laſt among the princes of Juda; for out of thee ſhall come a Governour that ſhall rule my people Iſrael.] The chief prieſts and ſcribes having with one voice agreed and declared that Bethlehem in the land of Juda was the appointed place for the birth of the Lord Chriſt, backed their declaration with this remarkable prophecy of Micah chap. v. 2. from whence they quoted the words of this text, as foretelling that the Meſſiah ſhould be born in the City of David.

This was certainly the opinion of the Jewiſh nation, and eſpecially of this council called together by Herod, though ſince that time, that diſtreſſed people, abandoned to miſery have propoſed ſeveral difficulties, endeavouring to overthrow this interpretation. — Firſt, they ſay, that there is a contrariety between the text here in St. Matthew, and the words of the prophecy of Micah; for Matthew reads, "and thou Bethlehem of Juda, art not the leaſt of the cities of Juda;" whereas the prophecy of Micah runs thus, "and thou Bethlehem, though thou be little among the thouſands of Juda." And ſecondly Micah ſays, "out of Judah ſhall he come forth unto me, that is, to be ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting." So that, though Micah ſays that Bethlehem is too ſmall to be reckoned among the moſt conſiderable cities of Juda; Matthew quotes him to ſay the contrary, that it is not one of the ſmaller or leſſer cities of Juda. But

It is anſwered, That St. Matthew might have read the text of Micah with an interrogation, in this manner:" And thou Bethlehem, art thou too ſmall to be ranked with the great cities of Juda? for, thus he had very well explained the ſenſe of the Prophet, Thou art not one of the ſmall cities of Juda. But though this anſwer carries a great deal of good ſenſe with it, my opinion is, that they give the moſt ſatisfactory reply, who maintain that the Hebrew word Zehir, which is generally tranſlated ſmall, ſignifies alſo the quite contrary, and as a proof thereof, our learned orientaliſt Pocock, Mills, Hammond, &c. have cited Jeremiah xlviii. 4. xlix 20. Zecheriah xiii. 7. where, as the Jews agree, Zehir ſignifies heads, or principal of the people. But

There is a ſecond difficulty; for though the Jews be convinced that the Meſſiah ſhould come out of Bethlehem, yet they poſitively deny Jeſus to be that Meſſiah they expected, and that the prophecy of Micah here related had any regard either to Jeſus, or the Meſſiah they expected. For, it is ſaid, that he, whom Micah ſpeaks of ſhall "be Ruler in Iſrael;" and (at ver. 3.) "the remnant of his brethren ſhall be converted, and re-united with the children of Iſrael," which, ſay they, can in no wiſe be interpreted of Jeſus, who never reigned over Iſrael; and, if he is God, can have no brethren. Beſides it would be a too great limitation to confine the kingdom of the Meſſiah within the narrow compaſs of Iſrael.

The anſwer to this, grants, that Jeſus as God, or before he took upon him the form of a man, had no brethren; but conſidered as the ſon of Mary, he had, ſee chap. i. ver. 25. in the notes. And as to the kingdom of the Holy Jeſus, the Prophet in this place very well diſtinguiſhes his temporal birth at Bethlehem, and his eternal birth, when he adds that, "his goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting," nor is it more contrary to the greatneſs of the Meſſiah to ſay, that he will reign over Iſrael, than it is derogatory to the excellence of God, to ſtile himſelf the God of Iſrael; for, this does not exclude the dominion either of the Meſſiah, or of God, over the reſt of mankind, and all other creatures.

— Princes of Juda] The word we have tranſlated Princes in this place, is rendered thouſands of Juda, by the Prophet, Mal. v. 2. which is moſt agreeable to the ancient polity of the Hebrews, whoſe ſtate was principally divided into thouſands, (Exod. xviii. 25.) or as it is in the original Alephim, a Hebrew word that ſignifies either the diviſion of a thouſand, or the princes, captains or rulers of thouſands; Maldonate in Loc. or as our tranſlators have underſtood it, the principal cities of each thouſand, as we ſay in England, the chief ſeat in ſuch an hundred, riding, or diviſion.

Ver. 7. Then Herod when he had privily called the wiſe-men.] Herod the king having heard all that the prieſts and ſcribes had to ſay, and being informed that this new-born king, ver. 2. was to be ſo near himſelf, who had provoked the Jews with his innovations in their religion, and otherwiſe become hateful to them for his tyrannical government, called theſe wiſe-men aſide from the preſence of the council, and, leaſt the Jews ſhould ſuſpect his wicked deſign to murder the new-born babe, their Meſſiah, and ſo convey him out of his dominions and power, aſked them privately alone by themſelves, with a ſhew of religion, at what time they firſt had ſeen the ſtar, their guide.

Ver. 10. When they ſaw the ſtar, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.] Some have collected from theſe words, that the ſtar, which the wiſe-men followed from the eaſt, ver. 2. diſappeared from their ſight at Jeruſalem, and again ſhewed itſelf aſſoon as they moved from thence, to their very great joy. This was the opinion of Ambroſe, Chryſoſtome, Baſil and Auſtin; but certainly they never regarded the context, and make the Evangeliſt ſpeak what he never thought. For, there is not the leaſt word in the whole Goſpel intimating the diſappearance of the ſtar upon their arrival at Jeruſalem; and the preceding words, at ver. 9. "The ſtar, which they ſaw in the eaſt went before them till it came and ſtood over where the young child was," import and direct us to underſtand what follows thus, when the wiſe-men ſaw the ſtar arrived at, and ſtanding over the ſaid place, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy, that they were at length come to the place they ſought for, and which anſwered the deſcription thereof delivered to Herod by the chief prieſts and ſcribes out of the Prophets. Therefore they rejoiced not becauſe they ſaw the ſtar, but becauſe they now perceived from its ſtanding, that they had found the new-born king of the Jews, whom they were come from the eaſt to ſeek, ver. 2.

Ver. 11. And when they were come into the houſe.] Though it is the common opinion that the wiſe-men found and worſhipped Jeſus in the manger, yet ſome with much reaſon argue from theſe words, that Joſeph had found means after the child Jeſus was born, to get him and his mother removed out of that common hole or ſtable, where, the inns being taken up before, they were obliged to lodge, when ſhe was delivered of the child, (ch. i. ver. 25. in the notes) into ſome better lodging, in which houſe the wiſe-men found them.

——Fell down and worſhipped him.] At the firſt reading one may be apt to ſuppoſe theſe words ſignify, that the wiſe-men adored the child, as the ſon of God. God indeed, who had been ſo gracious as to illuminate them with a ſenſe to follow the ſtar, and to underſtand the meaning of that meteor, might alſo inſpire them with the knowledge, that this child they had found, was God incarnate; and therefore to be worſhipped with Divine Honour. But the original word proskunein, which is tranſlated to worſhip, or adore, frequently in Scripture, is underſtood, not only for that worſhip and adoration which is due to God alone; but likewiſe it is uſed for thoſe marks of outward reſpect, which are paid to kings, great men, and ſuperior ranks and degrees of perſons. And in worſhipping of both kinds, men bowed their bodies very low, and often threw themſelves proſtrate on the earth, as theſe wiſe-men did, to ſhew their reſpect. Thus Abraham proſtrated himſelf to the Angels, Gen. xviii. 2. He alſo made the ſame proſtration to the people of Hebron, Gen. xxiii. 7. And when the Iſraelites heard that the Lord would deliver them out of Egypt, they bowed their heads and worſhipped, Exod. iv. 31. This was the conſtant practice of the eaſtern people to their kings; and as the Evangeliſt has given no room for us to believe, that the wiſe-men acknowledged Jeſus to be any greater than a king of the Jews, ver. 2. So it is moſt reaſonable to conclude, they fell down and worſhipped him in the ſame manner, and with the ſame worſhip only, as they gave to earthly kings, according to the cuſtom of the eaſt.

Ver: 14. When he aroſe, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt.] When, or how long a time this night was after the departure of the wiſe-men, is uncertain: But it is moſt probable to be the night in which Herod's butchers were gone out to execute his bloody deſigns of killing the child Jeſus by murdering all children in Bethlehem, &c. under two years old, leaſt, finding himſelf baulked in that ſcheme, he would trace him as far as Nazareth, and kill him there, where Joſeph and Mary were returned with the child Jeſus, as appears from Luke ii. 39.

——Into Egypt.] Becauſe Herod having no juriſdiction nor power in that country, the child might be ſafely concealed, and delivered out of his cruel hands. I know that the Evangeliſt ſays, this was done that the prophecy of Hoſea, (xi. 1.) might be fulfilled, ver. 15. But as Maldonate obſerves, this is not to be conſidered as the cauſe, but the event; for it can't ſo properly be ſaid, that he fled into Egypt that the Prophecy might be fulfilled, but that the Prophecy of Hoſea appeared then to be completely fulfilled; when to avoid the tyranny of Herod he fled into Egypt. So that here, and in many other places of the New Teſtament, when we read, that a Prophecy is fulfilled, we are to collect no more than barely, that ſuch an event is come to paſs which was foretold by the Prophet.—

Ver. 16. Then Herod when he ſaw that he was mocked of the wiſe-men, &c.] Here the particle then, does not ſuppoſe the immediate time when the wiſe-men departed from Bethlehem; but it tacitly points at the time, when Herod had long expected the return of the wiſe-men; and and they came not: And had made diligent ſearch privately both for them and the new-born king; and found them not: Then, at leaſt ſeven and twenty days after their worſhipping him, Luke ii. 22. and longer, Luke ii. 39. He ſent forth and ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, &c.

—From two years old and under, according to the time, &c.] Which does not imply that he ſlew all the male children who had been born with the two years next after the appearance of the ſtar to the wiſe-men: But thoſe, who were born for two years before the time, in which the ſtar appeared, as he had diligently enquired of them.

Ver. 17. Fulfilled.] See the notes on ver. 15. above. And again, obſerve, that this prophecy of Jeremiah, xxxi. 16. means thoſe tears ſhed by thoſe Jews, whom Nebuzaradan ſent captives to Babylon, Jer. xli. but it was uſual for the Jews to ſay, ſuch and ſuch a paſſage of Scripture is now fulfilled; as often as the like circumſtances called it to their memory. Thus the Evangeliſt intends no more in this place, than to put us in mind of another occaſion wherein that ſaying of Jeremiah may be properly applied, Le Clerc in Loc. and Calmet's Dict. in Rama.

Ver. 18. In Rama.] This was a city of Benjamin, ſituate between Gaba and Bethel, towards the mountains of Ephraim, ſix miles diſtance towards the north. Joſephus calls it Ramathan.

——Rachel weeping for her children.] Rachel was the wife of Jacob, in whoſe march to Bethlehem, otherwiſe called Ephrath, ſhe was ſeized with the pains of child birth, which tho' ſhe brought forth a ſon, to whom ſhe gave the name of Ben-oni, or the ſon of my pain, were ſo violent, that they killed her, and Jacob buried her in the ſame place. The Prophet Jeremiah and after him, in this place St. Matthew have put Rachel for the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, born of Joſeph the ſon of Rachel, and through Jeremiah's prophecy, xxxi. 15. was fulfilled when thoſe two tribes were carried away captives beyond the Euphrates. Yet, St. Matthew, according to the cuſtom of his nation, applies it to the mournful time when Herod ſlew the infants at Bethlehem; as if Rachel, who was buried thereabouts, might in ſome manner be ſaid to cry and lament for the death of ſo many young innocents ſacrificed to the jealouſy and cruelty of a wicked prince.

Ver. 20. For they are dead which ſought the young child's life.] A little before it is ſaid, that Herod was dead, ver. 19. Of whom the Evangeliſt ſpeaks now in the plural number; becauſe he was the principal, upon whom, and by whom, all the other murderers, that ſought for Jeſus to kill him, depended, and were ſet to work: but he being dead, they were alſo become as dead men, without power to execute their wicked and cruel deſigns.

Ver. 21.——And came into the land of Iſrael.] As the words in the Greek text, may be properly rendred, he came into, or he was on the road towards the land of Iſrael, I think the latter the moſt agreeable to the context, that on his way to the land of Iſrael, he heard on the frontiers of Judea, that Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his father Herod.

Ver. 22.——Archelaus did reign in Judea.] This Archelaus was born to Herod the king, otherwiſe called the Great, of Maltace his fifth wife; and he obtained the kingdom of his father in this manner. Herod having put to death his ſons Alexander, Ariſtobulus, and Antipater, and ſtruck Herod Antipas out of his will, after he had declared him king, ſubſtituted Archelaus in his ſtead, and inveſted Antipas only with the inferior title of tetrarch. So Herod being dead, Archelaus ordered his will to be read, whereby he was declared king, provided that his nomination were ratified by Auguſtus. Upon which, though the people recognized the will, Antipas followed him to Rome, where both the brothers ſet forth by able orators, their pretenſions to the crown before the emperor, and when they had done ſpeaking, Archelaus threw himſelf at Auguſtus's feet, who, though at that time, nor for ſome time after, he gave no deciſive anſwer in that affair, at length ſent for Archelaus, and gave him the title of ethnarch, with one half of the territories which his father Herod had enjoyed. But upon his return to Judea, he governed with ſo much violence, that the chief Samaritans and Jews, about ſeven years after, accuſed him before Auguſtus, in which cauſe he defended himſelf ſo ill, that the emperor baniſhed him for life to Vienne in Gaul, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. c. ult. & de Bello lib. i. & ii. c. 6.

Ver. 23. ——Nazareth.] This was a little city in the tribe of Zabulon, in the lower Galilee, weſtward of Tabor, and eaſtward of Ptolemais; and is much celebrated in the New Teſtament, for having been the uſual place of the reſidence of Jeſus Chriſt, during the firſt 33 years of his life. It was there our Saviour became incarnate, Luke ii. 51. where he lived in obedience to Joſeph and Mary, and from whence he took the name of Nazarene.

————Fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophets, He ſhall be called a Nazarene.] Where note, That the name a Nazarene, may ſignify; Firſt, One that is of Nazareth, or a native of that city. And ſecondly, This name was given to Jeſus Chriſt and his diſciples; and commonly it is taken in a ſenſe of deriſion and contempt in ſuch authors as have written againſt Chriſtianity.

The name of Nazarene belongs to Jeſus Chriſt, not only becauſe of his having lived the greateſt part of his life at Nazareth, and becauſe this city has always been conſidered as his country, but alſo becauſe the Prophets had foretold that he ſhould be called a Nazarene; as St. Matthew here eſpecially declares, that we find no particular place in the Prophets, in which it is ſaid, that the Meſſiah ſhould be called a Nazarene. But as St. Matthew only quotes the Prophets in general, perhaps he would inſinuate that the conſecration of the Nazarites, and the great purity of which they made profeſſion, was a type and a ſort of Prophecy of our Saviour: Or elſe, that the name of Nazir or Nazarite, given to the patriarch Joſeph, which was to be fulfilled in the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, of whom Joſeph was a figure. But St. Hierome was of opinion, that St. Matthew here alludes to that paſſage of Iſaiah xi. 1. and lx. 21 where the Branch (in Hebrew Nezer) and the rod are certainly intended to denote Jeſus Chriſt by the general conſent of the Fathers and Interpreters.

CHAP. III.

1 John preacheth: his office, life, and baptiſm. 7 He reprehendeth the Phariſees, 13 and baptizeth Chriſt in Jordan.

IN thoſe days came John the Baptiſt, preaching in the wilderneſs of Judea,

2 And ſaying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

3 For this is he that was ſpoken of by the prophet Eſaias, ſaying, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight.

4 And the ſame John had his raiment of camels hair, and a leathern girdle about his loyns; and his meat was locuſts and wild honey.

5 Then went out to him Jeruſalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And were baptized of him in Jordan, confeſſing their ſins.

7 ¶ But when he ſaw many of the Phariſees and Sadducees come to his baptiſm, he ſaid unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance.

9 And think not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abraham to our father: for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham.

10 And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and caſt into the fire.

11 I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me, is mightier than I, whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to bear: he ſhall baptize you with the holy Ghoſt, and with fire.

12 Whoſe fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner: but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

13 ¶ Then cometh Jeſus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

14 But John forbad him, ſaying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comeſt thou to me?

15 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, Suffer it to be ſo now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs. Then he ſuffered him.

16 And Jeſus, when he was baptized, went up ſtraightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he ſaw the Spirit of God deſcending like a dove, and lighting upon him.

17 And lo, a voice from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

Ver. 1. In thoſe days came John the Baptiſt.] As this chapter may be miſunderſtood to begin exactly in courſe of time, when Jeſus "came and dwelt in the city of Nazareth," ch. ii. 23. it will be proper to obſerve that theſe words, "in thoſe days," regards not the time, at which he came to dwell, but from which time Jeſus, having been brought up at Nazareth, was about to return from thence, to ſhew himſelf, and to preach the Goſpel to the children of Iſrael. And,

This John the Baptiſt, was the fore-runner of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſon of Zechariah and Elizabeth in their old age, Luke i. 10, &c. Some authors have pretended to ſay, that this Baptiſt dwelt in a cave, in a place called Sapſas, about a mile beyond Jordan; ſo John Moſchus, c. 1. and Chryſoſtome and Hierome, hold a tradition that he was brought up from his infancy in the wilderneſs. But Paulinus with more reaſon affirms, that he ſpent the firſt years of his life in his fathers houſe, where he learned the law of Moſes; and that, aſſoon as his bodily ſtrength permitted, he retired into the wilderneſs, where he eat and drank ſo little, and things ſo improper to pleaſe the appetite and palate, that in ſome ſort it might be ſaid, as our Saviour ſpeaks of him, John came neither eating nor drinking, Mat. xi. 18. or that he neither eat nor drank at all, making uſe only of wild honey and locuſts, and being clothed only with camels hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins, ver. 4. So that

In thoſe days, refers to the time when John came out of his retirement and was manifeſted unto the world by his preaching, being then about thirty years old, in the fifteenth year of the emperor Tiberius, Luke i. 30. His ſubject was the coming of the Meſſiah, and repentance for ſins, which he obliged them to confeſs, and at the ſame time plunged them in the river Jordan; and therefore, from this baptiſm, or purifying by water, he obtained the ſirname of Baptiſt or the Baptizer. He preached with ſuch ſucceſs, that he not only brought many to repentance, and whom he baptized; but there were ſome perſons, who remained with him, and became his diſciples, exerciſing themſelves in acts of repentance, and preaching it to others; ſome of whom afterwards followed our Saviour, John i. 37, 4. Luke xi. 1. and v. 3.

The virtue of John ſpread ſo eminently through all the country, that the Jews took him for the very Meſſiah, to which he replied in the negative, Luke iii. 15. John i. 19, &c. And when Jeſus preſented himſelf, among the other Jews, to receive baptiſm from him, he, by the aſſiſtance of a ſupernatural light, diſcerning who he was, excuſed himſelf, as unworthy to be ſo highly honoured, ver. 13, &c. But Jeſus prevailed, alledging that in ſo doing, he would fulfil all righteouſneſs. This happened in the 30th year of the common Æra, John being then then about thirty-four, and Jeſus thirty-three years of age.

John having gotten ſuch reputation by his exemplary life and preaching, and inſpired with Divine reſolution, ſtuck not to reprove Herod Antipas to his face, for marrying his brother's wife, he being ſtill alive. But Herod, incenſed at his freedom, commanded him to be impriſoned in the caſtle of Macherus, Joſeph. antiq. l. 18. c. 2. where, at laſt, the adultreſs Herodias procured him to be beheaded, Mark vi. 19, 20, &c. about the end of the thirty-firſt year, or in the beginning of the thirty-ſecond year of the vulgar Æra.

Ver. 2. —— Repent.] i. e. Be ſincerely ſorrowful for your ſins, and firmly reſolved not to do the like again, but to walk more uprightly in the law of God, for the time to come.

—— The kingdom of heaven.] This is a frequent expreſſion in the New Teſtament, and ſignifies the kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt; the calling of the people to the faith; the preaching of the Goſpel. So the old Prophets in their deſcriptions of the Meſſiah, ſcarce ever failed to inſert the name of king and deliverer; nay, even in their accounts of his humiliation and ſufferings, they interſperſed ſome touches, which ſhewed his power, reign and Divinity. Thus Zachary ſaid, "Behold thy king cometh unto thee. He is juſt and having ſalvation, lowly and riding upon an aſs." So that the Jews collated from ſuch expreſſions, that the kingdom of the Meſſiah would be temporal, and be able to reſtore the monarchy of the Jews, and raiſe the throne of David once more to all its ſplendor, by ſubduing the nations to his dominion, and rewarding his friends and faithful ſervants in proportion to their fidelity and ſervices. Hence alſo it was, that the Apoſtles had ſo often conteſts about precedency in this kingdom; and that the ſons of Zebedee prevailed with their mother to deſire of our Saviour the two firſt places in it. Jeſus himſelf retained this mode of ſpeech to prove, that he was the true Meſſiah; and when he ſpoke of what was to happen in his Church after his reſurrection, he ſaid in like manner, that ſuch a thing would be ſeen in the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xviii. 11. and xx. 21. Mark ix. 13. 34. And laſtly, when he ſpake in parables, he frequently began with, The kingdom of heaven is like unto —— Therefore

Let us now once for all obſerve, that in the Goſpel there are ſeveral acceptations of theſe words, the kingdom of heaven.

Firſt, they are taken for the firſt coming of the Son of God, for his temporal birth; his preaching, and manifeſtation to the world. As for example, "If I with the finger of God caſt out devils, no doubt but the kingdom of God is come upon you," Luke xi. 20. St. Matthew in another place ſays, that "Jeſus Chriſt went about all the cities and villages preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom." Then again St. Luke ſays (xvii. 21.) "Behold the kingdom of God is within you," which is parallel to what St. John ſays, (i. 26.) "There ſtandeth one among you whom ye know not."

2dly, Theſe terms are made uſe of to ſhew the vengeance, which God was to exerciſe upon the incredulous Jews; and which accordingly he exerciſed, after the death of our Saviour, upon Jeruſalem, by the arms of the Romans, who deſtroyed this city, and its temple, in ſuch a cruel manner, that the laſt ſiege thereof is looked upon as one of the moſt lively images of the laſt judgment. And in this ſenſe we are to read the words of the text, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." As if John had ſaid, God is ready to let his hand fall heavy on the wicked; he will ſpeedily hew down thoſe trees, which are good for nothing.

3dly, The kingdom of heaven ſignifies eternal bliſs, the reward of God's faithful ſervants; Matt. vii. 21. and xix. 14. and v. 3.

Laſtly, the kingdom of heaven moſt frequently denotes the Church of Jeſus Chriſt; the preaching of the Goſpel; the manner of God's conduct in bringing men to faith and happineſs. So that when we read that the kingdom of heaven is like unto a treaſure, Matt. xiii. 44. or to goodly pearls, 45. we are to underſtand nothing more than faith in Jeſus Chriſt. And when the kingdom of heaven is compared to a field, where tares are found mixed with the good ſeed; or to a net in which good and bad fiſh are caught; it denotes the Church of Chriſt, which always contains good and bad Chriſtians in this world But

Note alſo, that the kingdom of God in the New Teſtament eſpecially, is often ſynonymous with the kingdom of heaven; as in Luke xi. 20.

Ver. 3. This is he that was ſpoken of by the prophet Eſaias.] See the notes hereafter on Luke iii. 4, 5, 6.

Ver. 6. Were baptized of him in Jordan, confeſſing their ſins.] Here it will not be amiſs to give you an account of baptiſm, as then practiſed, it being very inferior to that of the Chriſtian Church.

Baptiſm, in general, is derived from the Greek word baptizo, to waſh, dip or baptize. The Hebrews had many ſorts of baptiſms, or purifications. Sometimes they waſhed themſelves all over, and plunged their whole body in water; at other times they only waſhed their cloaths; and again, ſometimes they waſhed both body and cloaths. The moſt ſuperſtitious amongſt them waſhed their arms from their elbows, to the extremity of their hands; when they returned from market, or came out of the ſtreet, leaſt they had touched ſome unclean thing or perſon. They waſhed their hands alſo very exactly before and after meals; and they even waſhed the very furniture and utenſils of their table and kitchen, as often as they had the leaſt ſuſpicion of their having been polluted by any accident, Mark vii. 2. and 4. and 2 John xi. 6.

When they received a proſelyte to their religion, they both circumciſed and baptized him, pretending that this baptiſm was a kind of regeneration, whereby the proſelyte was made a new man; or, that of a ſlave he became free. And it is thought that our Saviour alluded to this opinion in his anſwer to Nicodemus, when he told him it was neceſſary he ſhould be born again, in order to become his diſciple, John iii. 10. And

I may add that the whole law and hiſtory of the Jews, abounded with luſtrations and baptiſms of different ſorts. Moſes enjoined the Iſraelites to waſh their garments and purify themſelves to prepare for the reception of the law, Exod. xix. 10. The prieſts and Levites before they entered upon the exerciſe of their miniſtry, waſhed themſelves with water. All legal pollutions were cleanſed by baptiſm, or by plunging or dipping into water. There are certain diſeaſes alſo and infirmities natural to men and women, which were through uncleanneſs, and were to be purified by bathing. To touch a dead body or to be preſent at funerals made people unclean, and to ſtand in need of purifications by water; as may be ſeen in Exod. xxix. 4. Levit. viii. 6. xi. 25, 26. xiii. 6, 34. xvi. 6, 7, &c. xxii. 6. Numb. viii. 6, 7, 8. But

Theſe purifications were not always uniform, or performed in one manner: People generally, as the word baptize moſt ſimply and naturally imports, dipped themſelves entirely under water. Though ſometimes they were ſatisfied with baptiſm by aſperſion, or ſuch a luſtration as included no more than ſcattering lightly ſome luſtral blood and water on the perſon to be baptized, as may be read more particularly in Exod. xxix. 21. Levit. viii. 11. xvi. 14, 15. Numb. xx. 11, &c. and Levit. iv. 32. xiv. 7. So

When John the Baptiſt began to preach repentance, he inſtituted a ſort of baptiſm, which he adminiſtred in the river of Jordan; not attributing to it the virtue of forgiving ſins, but making uſe of it as a preparation only for receiving baptiſm at the hands of Jeſus Chriſt, and the remiſſion of ſins by penetential acts, wherewith he required that ceremony to be attended, Mark i. 4. thereby not only exacting ſorrow for ſin committed, but a change of life, and ſuch practices as might attone for the commiſſion of ſin through the merits of a gracious Redeemer, who was immediately to appear and nail our ſins to his croſs, and cleanſe the penitent ſoul with his moſt precious blood; ſo that, the baptiſm of John was much more perfect than that of the Jews, but much leſs perfect than that inſtituted by Jeſus Chriſt. "It was, ſays Chryſoſtome, (Hom. xxiv.)

xxiv.) as it were a bridge, which from the baptiſm of the Jews, made a way to that of our Saviour, and was more exalted than the firſt, but inferior to the ſecond." For that of St. John promiſed, what that of Jeſus Chriſt executed. Whence ſay Auſtin, after the baptiſm of John, that of Jeſus Chriſt was ſtill neceſſary, to receive the forgiveneſs of ſins, and the grace of ſanctification. Now

There are three queſtions propoſed relating to this baptiſm of John. Firſt, Whether he had power to remit ſins? Secondly, Whether the repentance be preached, as a diſpoſition of his baptiſm, was barely ſorrow for ſin, without any neceſſity of its being accompanied with ſatisfactory works? Thirdly, Whether the confeſſion of ſins by thoſe to be baptized was a bare acknowledgment of their faults, without any particular detail of their private ſins?

1. As to the firſt difficulty it is anſwered, that the baptiſm of John did not remit ſins by any virtue peculiar to it, as I have affirmed above: But it only diſpoſed people to receive forgiveneſs by our Saviours baptiſm, i. e. it promiſed pardon, but did not grant it: Tertull. de Bapt. They who received the baptiſm of John were not ſpiritually born again, this was only affected by virtue of our Lord's baptiſm; Auguſt. de fide, ſpe. &c. c. 49. Origen in John c. 8. So that if any one be ſaid to have received remiſſion of his ſins in John's baptiſm, it was by virtue of his faith in the Meſſiah; for, the baptiſm of John had no more power in this reſpect, than the ſacrifices and oblations of the old law. And that which diſtinguiſhed it, and gave it the precedence, was, its pointing out the Meſſiah then preſent and already come; whereas the Sacraments of the Moſaic covenant, proclaimed him in a vale at a diſtance, and only promiſed his coming in the fulneſs of time."

2. The repentance which John preached to the Jews, required a ſincere return to God, a change of heart, and renovation of life; therefore ſays he below (ver. 8, &c.) to the Phariſees, Bring forth fruits meet for repentance, &c. for he ſhall burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. Where you ſee that he is not ſatisfied with fair appearances; he requires good fruits, and good works; of which his whole life and doctrine was a conſtant example and precept; for, the auſterity of his diet and the roughneſs of his dreſs, teach us to be neither dainty nor proud. And when the people asked him what they were to do? He ſaid to them, Let him that hath two coats give to him that wanteth it. To the publicans he ſaid, exact no more than that which is appointed you. To the ſoldiers, do violence to no man, and be content with your wages, Luke iii. 10, &c. And this is what he calls fruits meet for repentance and ſincere converſion of their manners.

3. The confeſſion which proceeded St. John's baptiſm, was without doubt of the ſame nature with the common confeſſions made in his nation, even as he imitated their luſtrations by his baptiſm. Now the confeſſions practiſed by the Iſraelites in the temple, were all made particularly by each perſon for himſelf, while he laid his hand upon the head of the victim on the day of the ſolemn expiation; when they were not ſatiſfied with declaring themſelves in general culpable and ſinners, but they confeſſed circumſtantially their ſeveral crimes and offences, excepting thoſe which might expoſe them to the puniſhment of Death, Maldonate, Eſtias, Janſenius and Grotius on this chapter.

Ver. 7.—Phariſees.] This was a ſect, and the moſt ancient as well as the moſt conſiderable among the Jews; though its original in reſpect of time, and its authors are not well known, ſo as for us to ſpeak with any certainty. So indeed have ventured to fix their beginning on, or before the year of the world 3830, or 180 years before Chriſt's incarnation. Calmet's Dict. But St. Hierome brings their riſe as late as the diviſion of the two ſchools of Hillel and Shammai, which Shammai or Samæas lived in the days of Herod the Great; Joſeph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. and conſequently not long before the birth of our Saviour. The Rabbins alſo acknowledge Hillel as founder of the ſect of the Phariſees, or at leaſt as the chief ornament thereof. And it is plain that

The Phariſees take their name from a Hebrew word which ſignifies diviſion or ſeparation, becauſe they diſtinguiſhed themſelves from the other Iſraelites, by a more ſtrict manner of life, of which they made their outward profeſſion; they alſo contributed much to deſtiny or fatality, and to the eternal decrees of God, which, ſay they, have appointed all things before the beginning of time; yet they did not hereby intend to deſtroy free-will; but rather fell into the ethical doctrine, which did not aſcribe every thing to deſtiny, but left to men a liberty of doing good actions, or not. Joſephus.

This ſect as it grew very numerous, it alſo diſperſed itſelf very wide through their nation, and, having preſently gained a ſuperior reputation among their people by their learning, and regularity of their lives, became very early formidable even to the kings themſelves. For Alexander Jannæus king of the Jews, having long conteſted his Power againſt the Phariſees, repented ſo much of the variance, that upon his death-bed he told his wife, if ſhe deſired to reign in peace after he was dead, ſhe muſt win the Phariſees to her intereſt. Joſeph. Antiq. l. vi. 13. c. 18. de bello lib. i. c. 4. in conſequence whereof they became maſters of the queen, who let them diſpoſe of every thing in the government at their pleaſure. So that

When our Saviour appeared in Judea, the Phariſees were then in great credit among the people, not only on the account of their power in the ſtate, but eſpecially becauſe of the opinion they had conceived of their learning, holineſs of Life, and ſtrict obſervance of the law. They faſted often; made long prayers, paid their tithes ſcrupulouſly, diſtributed much alms; but all this was vitiated and corrupted by the ſpirit of pride, oſtentation, hypocriſy and ſelf-love. So, as our Saviour ſaid, like to whitned ſepulchres, they appeared beautiful without; whilſt within was nothing but corruption and deformity, Matt. xxiii. 27.

They wore large rolls of parchment, called phylacteries, upon their foreheads and wriſts, in which were written certain words of the law; and affected to have fringes and borders of their garments broader than the other Jews wore, as a badge of diſtinction, that they might be accounted greater obſervers of the law than others. And, as St. Hierome records, there were ſome of them, who faſtned thorns at the bottoms of their robes, which, pricking their their legs as they walked, ſo as to draw blood, might inure them to mortification, and oblige them to be continually thinking upon God.

They often waſhed their hands, at entring their houſe, and ſitting down at table; and in returning from the market, they waſhed from the finger ends, even to their very elbows, leaſt they ſhould have touched any unclean thing, Mark. vii. 3, 4. They would not ſo much as touch a Publican or any man that they thought led an ill life, nor would they eat, drink, or pray with him, Matt. ix. 11. Luke vii. 39. Moreover, they often plunged the veſſels and other houſhold goods, their very beds alſo into water, and often bathed themſelves in cold water, by way of purification, as Joſephus in his own life teſtifies.

They kept many more faſts than the law appointed: So the Phariſee in the Goſpel boaſted of his faſting twice a week, Luke xviii. 2. on Monday and Thurſday; Epiphanius, hæreſ. 16. and they performed it with greater ſtrictneſs than the other Jews; for which cur Saviour condemned them, Matth. vi. 16.

They in matters of religion, took the traditions of their nation as their principal guide, adding thereto their own inventions, as they thought fit, which they alſo vented for ancient tradition. By which means the law being incumbered with a vaſt number of trifling obſervances, became a grievous burden, and almoſt an inſupportable yoke. Yea, moreover they in many important articles altered and corrupted it, as our Saviour tells them by their own perverſe interpretations. For, though the law commands the child expreſly to honour father and mother; the Phariſees taught, that if we ſay to our parents that are in neceſſity, "Father or mother, the thing which you ask of me, is corban, or dedicated to God, ſo it is no longer in my power; but you ſhall have a part in the merit of my offering:" They were then freed from the obligation of ſuccouring their neceſſitous parents, Mark vii. 10, &c. As to their refined doctrine concerning the keeping of the ſabbath, you'l find it in Luke vi. 7. John ix. 16. Mark ix. 11. John v. 8, 9. where they often blame Jeſus Chriſt for doing good on that day, and our Saviour never ſticks to upbraid them with their extravagances; ſee Matt. xxiii. 14, 15, 29. Luke xi. 47, 48.

The followers of this ſect condemned only the actual commiſſion of ſin, and thought themſelves allowed to entertain any evil deſires, thoughts or deſigns that were not attended with any outward acts of ſin, as may be gathered from Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 12. c. 13. And the author of the acts of the Apoſtles informs us, ch. xxiii. ver. 8. That the Phariſees believed the ſoul to be immortal, and acknowledged the exiſtence of Angels and ſpirits; and they alſo admitted a kind of tranſmigration of the ſouls of good men, which might paſs from one body to another; whereas thoſe that had lived wickedly were condemned to dwell for ever in priſons of darkneſs, as may be gathered from Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 2. de bello, lib. ii. c. 12. And from ſome of them, ſaying, that Jeſus Chriſt was John the Baptiſt, or Elias, of ſome one of the old Prophets, Mat. xvi. 14. ſuppoſing, that the ſoul of one of thoſe great men had paſſed into the body of our Saviour. They believed alſo the reſurrection of the dead, and admitted all the conſequences of it againſt the Sadducees, who rejected it, Matt. xxii. 23. Yet for all this diviſion,

It is to be obſerved, that this ſect was not ſeparated from the body of the Jews, as hereticks are ſeparated and rejected from the body of the Chriſtian Church. For whatever abuſes and corruptions might come in and prevail among the Jews, whether in manners or opinions, they were united in one communion with the other Iſraelites, who diſagreed with their doctrine. So that though the opinions of the Phariſees were as oppoſite to the Sadducees as light and darkneſs, they nevertheleſs were united in one body, and divided between them the chief offices of religion and ſtate.

The ſect of the Phariſees ſubſiſts to this day, for the greateſt part of the Jews profeſs themſelves ſuch, and are as much devoted to their traditions, which they call the oral law, as their anceſtors were; only that the modern Phariſees are more commonly known by the name of Rabbiniſts, who declare, that, he who rejects the oral law is an apoſtate, and ought to be put to death. They leave every thing, as the antients did, to the diſpoſal of deſtiny, except what depends upon human liberty. They ſay, that all things are in the hand of God, except the fear of God; or in other words, every man in the exerciſe of acts of piety has a free-will, and may voluntarily determine himſelf to good or evil. And they alſo hold a metempſychoſis or revolution of ſouls out of one body into another.

—— Sadducees.] Theſe made another principal ſect of the Jews. They were the diſciples of one Sadoc, who lived about the year of the world, 3740. The Sadoc was the diſciple of Antigonius Soccheus, who out of an exceſs of ſpirituality or devotion, taught that we muſt give unto the Lord a pure and diſintereſted worſhip. "Be not like ſlaves, ſaid his ſcholars; do not obey your God only on a proſpect of recompenſe, but obey him without any views of ſelf-intereſt, and without hoping for any recompenſe of your labours; let the fear of the Lord be upon you." His diſciple Sadoc, not able to conform himſelf to ſo diſintereſted a morality, and yet not being willing to abandon his maſter, gave this maxim of his a quite contrary turn to what he himſelf had intended, drawing this concluſion from it, "that there was no recompenſe to be hoped for, nor any puniſhment to be feared after this life; and that good was to be done, and evil to be avoided without any view either to hope or fear." Thus it is generally thought, began the ſect of Sadducees; but I ſhall obſerve another plauſible conjecture by Epiphanius, Hierome, &c. That the word Sadducees comes from the Hebrew ſedec, i. e. juſtice; and that they took this name to diſtinguiſh themſelves from others, being deſirous to be accounted great lovers of juſtice; and Joſephus obſerves, they were ſevere in puniſhing faults; de bello lib. ii. c. 12. Be this as it will,

They were chiefly diſtinguiſhed among the Iſraelites, by their opinion concerning the exiſtence of angels, and the ſouls immortality. They did not deny but that we had reaſonable ſouls; but they maintained that this ſoul was mortal, and conſequently not capable of reward or puniſhment in a future ſtate; Joſephus, ib. They pretended alſo, that what is ſaid of the exiſtence of Angels, and of a future reſurrection are mere illuſions, Acts xxiii. 8. Matt. xxii. 23. Mark xii. 18. Luke xx. 27. Yet they admitted the whole books of the law where frequent mention is made of Angels and their appearances. They obſerved the ſaid law themſelves, and cauſed it to be obſerved by others, with the utmoſt rigour. They admitted of none of the traditions, explications or modifications of the Phariſees; they kept only to the text of the law; and therefore maintained that nothing more was to be obſerved, than what was written therein, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 13. c. 18. They enjoyed equal power in Church and ſtate with the Phariſees; ſee the preceding note, And though this ſect was much reduced by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, it is not yet totally extinguiſhed; ſee Eſſais de Literature, an. 1704. p. 190. Ganz. Tzemath. David p. 125. They are now chiefly found in Africa, and among theſe, very few deny the immortality of the ſoul, and the reſurrection of the body.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. Bring forth therefore fruit meet for repentance.] See above the notes on ver. 1, 2.

Ver. 11——He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire.] Theſe words of St. John the Baptiſt, who ſaid that for his part, he only baptized with water, have given occaſion to much ſpeculation for aſcertaining their genuine interpretation. From hence many of the ancient fathers, as Origen, Lactantius, Hillary and Ambroſe collect, that all the faithful, before they entered Paradiſe, would paſs through a certain fire, which ſhould purify them from the pollutions that might ſtill remain with them to be expiated. And the generality of the ancients propoſe this opinion with ſome difference, founding it upon what is ſaid in Gen. iii. 24. concerning the cherubims being placed at the entrance into Paradiſe, with a flaming ſword, and upon 1 Cor. iii. 12, 13, 14, 15. But Baſil and Theophilus of Antioch explain this fire by that of hell, where the hypocrites and wicked ſhall be caſt, Matt. xiii. 41, 49. and the author of the Imperfect Work upon Matthew, calls it the fire of tribulations and temptations. Chryſoſtome explains it by an abundance of graces; others ſuppoſe it to mean the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles in the form of fiery tongues; and there are others who pretended, that the word fire is an addition in this text, and that we are to read no more than this in Matthew, viz. "I baptize you with water, but he that ſhall come after me will baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt."

Some old hereticks, ſuch as the Seleucians and Hermians, took this text litterally, and thereby maintain'd that material fire was neceſſary in the adminiſtration of baptiſm. Valentine re-baptized thoſe who had received baptiſm out of his communion and drew them through the fire, of whom Tertullian writes

Bis docuit tingi, traducto corpore flamma.

Heraclion cited by Clement Alexandrinus, ſays, that ſome applied a red hot iron to the ears of the baptized. And Eugenius Roger, a modern traveller, ſays, that the Ethiopians touch the noſe, eye-lids and temples of the newly-baptized, with a ſmall two-edged hot iron. But Mr. Renaudot declares, that this account of the Ethiopian practice in baptiſm, is entirely falſe; t. 4. Perpetuite 84. See alſo Ludolf Hiſt. Ethiop. lib. iii. c. 6. n. 41, 42. And

Now from what I have laid before you, it appears, that the Chriſtian Church never approved of thoſe, who taking the words of this Goſpel litterally, aſſerted fire to be neceſſarily uſed in the ceremony of Chriſtian Baptiſm: but has left people at liberty to explain this fire, as meaning either the abundance of graces poured forth into our ſouls by baptiſm, or the fire which accompanied the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt on the Apoſtles, or the fire of tribulations, grief, and repentance, which ought always to go along with baptiſm, where the ſubject is capable; or finally, I would chooſe to explain it in the next verſe, where the Baptiſt proceeding in his declaration ſays of Chriſt:

Ver. 12.——Whoſe fan is in his hand——he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.] i. e. He will not only thus purify by the inſpiration of his Holy Spirit, (ver. 11.) the ſouls of his faithful ſervants, from all contaminations of ſin, and thereby make them heirs of his ſalvation: but ſhall alſo cleanſe the body of his church from the mixture of all hypocrites and wicked men, caſting them into hell-fire; and gathering all his true and faithful ſervants into the kingdom of heaven; ſee Matt. xiii. 4. i. 49.

Ver. 15.——For thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs.] This is the declaration of Jeſus, and imports that he was come into the world to teach us by his example, that obedience is better than ſacrifice, and that we are particularly to worſhip God by his ſacraments.

For, as the word righteouſneſs teaches us to underſtand thereby ſomething, holy, good and praiſe-worthy; ſo when Chriſt, aſſoon as he was baptized or purified, according to the ceremony of the Jewiſh nation, declared, that this action was done to fulfil all righteouſneſs; he taught us not to neglect, much leſs deſpiſe; but to ſhew forth our obedience to God by a particular obſervance of his ordinances; which is holy, good and praiſe-worthy in his ſight.

Ver. 16.——Lo, the heavens were opened to him.] Unto whom? ſome refer theſe words to Jeſus; others with as much applauſe to John the Baptiſt; and I think with more reaſon, as well from the tenor of the following conjunction and clauſe of the ſentence, as from a collateral Scripture in John i. 32, 33. where the Baptiſt bares record, "ſaying, I ſaw the ſpirit deſcending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him," &c.

——And he ſaw the ſpirit of God deſcending like a dove, &c.] i. e. John the Baptiſt ſaw the ſpirit of God which is the Holy Ghoſt deſcending from heaven in the ſhape or appearance of a dove upon the lamb of God, Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous, John i. 29—35.

——Like a dove.] In token of a new degree of the Holy Ghoſt's operation in Chriſt at the time that he was about to enter upon his publick office, in innocency, purity, ſimplicity, grace and mildneſs; vertues which are emphatically repreſented in Scripture frequently by the nature of a dove; in oppoſition to the deceits and ſtratagems of the ſpirit of Satan, who ſeduced Eve under the form of a ſerpent, a cunning, impure and venemous creature. See more relating to the bodily ſhape of this appearance in the notes on Luke iii. 22.

CHAP. IV.

1 Chriſt faſteth, and is tempted. 11 The angels miniſter unto him. 13 He dwelleth in Capernaum, 17 beginneth to preach, 18 calleth Peter and Andrew, 21 James and John: 23 and healeth all the diſeaſed.

THen was Jeſus led up of the ſpirit into the wilderneſs, to be tempted of the devil.

2 And when he had faſted forty days and forty nights, he was afterwards an hungred.

3 And when the tempter came to him, he ſaid, If thou be the Son of God, command that theſe ſtones be made bread.

4 But he anſwered and ſaid, It is written, Man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

5 Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and ſetteth him on a pinnacle of the temple.

6 And ſaith unto him, if thou be the Son of God, caſt thy ſelf down: for it is written, He ſhall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone.

7 Jeſus ſaid unto him, It is written again, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

8 Again the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and ſheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them:

9 And ſaith unto him, All theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me.

10 Then ſaith Jeſus unto him, Get thee hence Satan: for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

11 Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and miniſtred unto him.

12 ¶ Now when Jeſus had heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed into Galilee.

13 And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the ſea-coaſts, in the borders of Zebulon and Nephthalim:

14 That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying,

15 The land of Zebulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the Sea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles:

16 The people which ſat in darkneſs, ſaw great light: and to them which ſat in the region and ſhadow of death, light is ſprung up.

17 ¶ From that time Jeſus began to preach, and to ſay, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

18 ¶ And Jeſus walking by the ſea of Galilee, ſaw two brethren, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the ſea: (for they were fiſhers)

19 And he ſaith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men.

20 And they ſtraightway left their nets, and followed him.

21 And going on from thence, he ſaw other two brethren, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ſhip with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them.

22 And they immediately left the ſhip and their father, and followed him.

23 ¶ And Jeſus went about all Galilee, teaching in their ſynagogues and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe among the people.

24 And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all ſick people that were taken with divers diſeaſes and torments, and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with devils, and thoſe which were lunatick, and thoſe that had the palſy; and he healed them.

25 And there followed him great multitudes of people, from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jeruſalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

Aſſoon as Jeſus had paſſed through John's baptiſmal miniſtration, and had the Holy Spirit remaining upon him, he was led, or acted by that ſame ſpirit, to go into the wilderneſs, to be there tempted of the Devil; which came to paſs after he had there faſted forty days and forty nights in a continual abſtinence from all nurture or natural refreſhment of meat or drink.—In which time ſome collect from Mark i. 13. and Luke iv. 2. that Satan not then knowing him to be the Son of God, did endeavour to fill his mind with temptations, as he is accuſtomed to do to other men; but with no ſucceſs; becauſe the prince of this world hath nothing in him, John xiv. 30. i. e. no place to enter by; nor any corrupt clay to ſow his temptations in. So that

When the tempter had learned who Jeſus was, he, according to his original pride and impudence, advanced boldly at the end of forty days continual faſt, and taking advantage of that his ſuppoſed great hunger, ſaid unto him, "If thou be the Son of God, command that this ſtone, Luke iv. 3. or theſe ſtones be made bread." To which the Lord anſwered in the words of the law, "man ſhall not, or doth not live by bread alone; but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," Deut. viii. 3. which ſhews that the tempter made uſe of the ſhape or appearance of ſuch a one as was capable of reading and underſtanding the Scriptures. But baulked of his end in this firſt attack, he took Jeſus up, or rather, Jeſus (to ſhew us how to repulſe the Devil, by a ſtrong holy reſolution, and perſeverance in well doing) did not fear, while God was on his ſide, to follow the tempter, not only into the holy city, but to the top of the temple, where he ſaid unto Jeſus again, "If thou be the Son of God caſt thy ſelf down; for, it is written in Pſalm xci. 11, 12. he ſhall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leaſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone," to which our Saviour replied from Scripture alſo, "It is written again, in Deut. vi. 16. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God," by doing needleſs and unreaſonable things upon an unwarrantable dependance of protection from him. The Devil thus baffled, takes him into an exceeding high mountain, from whence, ſhewing to Jeſus all the kingdoms of the world and their glories, told him with an air of truth that falſe aſſertion, that it was in his power to beſtow them on him, if ſo be he would fall down and worſhip him. To which impudent ſpeech Jeſus replied with ſome warmth and juſt diſdain; and bid him begone; "for, he added, it is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve." Where we are expreſly taught by word an example, that neither riches nor honours, ſhould ſo poſſeſs our hearts, as to draw them from the worſhip of the true God to the ſervice of our own ungovernable deſires, and the allurements of Satan, whoſe greateſt bait are the vain promiſes of earthly treaſure, which, however, is no further in his power to grant, than as God ſhall permit for the puniſhment of an abandoned and impenitent ſinner.

Ver. 1—11. Then was Jeſus led up of the ſpirit, &c.] i. e. By the impulſe of the Holy Ghoſt then remaining on him. See the notes on the temptation as it is deſcribed in Luke iv. 1—13.

Ver. 11.—And behold, angels came and miniſtred unto him.] Jeſus having confounded the devil and all his ſtratagems and temptations, by the word of God, ver. 4—7—10. was immediately attended with his Holy Angels, who came, and obeyed all his commands, and then was fulfilled alſo that of the Pſalmiſt, He ſhall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways, Pſal. xci. 11. And as every action of our Bleſſed Saviour's life carried in it ſome example for our good; ſo in this, he teaches us clearly and perſonally what the Apoſtle did afterwards write, Reſiſt the devil, and he will flee from you. Jeſus reſiſted, ver. 4—7—10. and then the devil leaveth him, ver. 11.

Ver. 12. Now when Jeſus had heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed into Galilee.] Though it may be apprehended from the word now, that this report was heard by Jeſus preſently after his temptations; yet it is certain, that it was not immediately; becauſe we read in other places, that before John was caſt into priſon, both Jeſus and his diſciples came into the land of Judea, and baptized. See John iii. 22, 23, 24.—iv. 1, 2.

Ver. 14. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken, &c.] Not that the prediction by Eſaias was the cauſe of the accompliſhment; which on the contrary, was the cauſe of the prediction: But this is ſaid to ſhew the neceſſity of the accompliſhment of ſuch a prophecy in its due time; or, plainly to ſhew the concurrence of the accompliſhment with the prediction; to which effect I have noted before, in ch. i. 22.

Ver. 17. From that time Jeſus began to preach, &c.] See the notes above, on ver. 12.

—The kingdom of heaven.] See the notes on ch. iii. 2.

Ver. 19.—I will make you fiſters of men.] i. e. Inſtruments of converting and drawing men to God out of the ſea of the world, and ſin, and out of the abyſs of death of perdition.

Ver. 22.—Teaching in their ſynagogues.] Theſe ſynagogues were houſes ſet apart for particular aſſemblies of the Jews, for the exerciſe of piety and devotion, erected in ſuch places from whence the people could not go up to the temple at the hours of prayer.

—Preaching.] Or bringing them the happy and joyful tidings of the coming and manifeſtation of the Meſſiah, and of his ſpiritual kingdom ſo long promiſed to the fathers, and ſo much expected and deſired.

Ver. 25.—Decapolis.] This is a Greek word, and imports a country or province, containing ten cities; and was ſituate on the confines of Paleſtine towards Syria, Mark vii. 13.

CHAP. V.

1 Chriſt beginneth his ſermon in the mount: 3 declaring who are bleſſed, 13 who are the ſalt of the earth, 14 the lighs of the world, the city on an hill, 15 the candle: 17 that he came to fulfill the law: 21 what it is to kill, 27 to commit adultery, 33 to ſwear: 38 Exhorteth to ſuffer wrong, 44 to love even our enemies, 48 and to labour after perfectneſs.

AND ſeeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was ſet, his diſciples came unto him.

2 And he opened his mouth, and taught them, ſaying,

3 Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

4 Bleſſed are they that mourn: for they ſhall be comforted.

5 Bleſſed are the meek: for they ſhall inherit the earth.

6 Bleſſed are they which do hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs: for they ſhall be filled.

7 Bleſſed are the merciful: for they ſhall obtain mercy.

8 Bleſſed are the pure in heart: for they ſhall ſee God.

9 Bleſſed are the peace makers: for they ſhall be called the children of God.

10 Bleſſed are they which are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

11 Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſly for my ſake.

12 Rejoyce, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for ſo perſecuted they the prophets which were before you.

13 ¶ Ye are the ſalt of the earth: but if the ſalt have loſt his ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſalted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be caſt out, and to be troden under foot of men.

14 Ye are the light of the world. A city that is ſet on an hill, cannot be hid.

15 Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a buſhel: but on a candleſtick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the houſe.

16 Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

17 ¶ Think not that I am come to deſtroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfil.

18 For verily I ſay unto you, Till heaven and earth paſs, one jot or one tittle, ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till all be fulfilled.

19 Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven: but whoſoever ſhall do, and teach them, the ſame ſhall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

20 For I ſay unto you, That except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.

21 ¶ Ye have heard, that it was ſaid by them of old time, Thou ſhalt not kill: and whoſoever ſhall kill, ſhall be in danger of the judgment.

22 But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment: and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother, Raca, ſhall be in danger of the council: but whoſoever ſhall ſay, Thou fool, ſhall be in danger of hell-fire.

23 Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee;

24 Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.

25 Agree with thine adverſary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him: leaſt at any time the adverſary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be caſt into priſon.

26 Verily I ſay unto you, thou ſhalt by no means come out thence, till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing.

27 ¶ Ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.

28 But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

29 And if thy right hand offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell.

30 And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and caſt it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell.

31 It hath been ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement.

32 But I ſay unto you, That whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery: and whoſoever ſhall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery.

33 ¶ Again, ye have heard that it hath been ſaid by them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſwear thy ſelf, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths.

34 But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is Gods throne:

35 Nor by the earth, for it is his footſtool; neither by Jeruſalem, for it is the city of the great king.

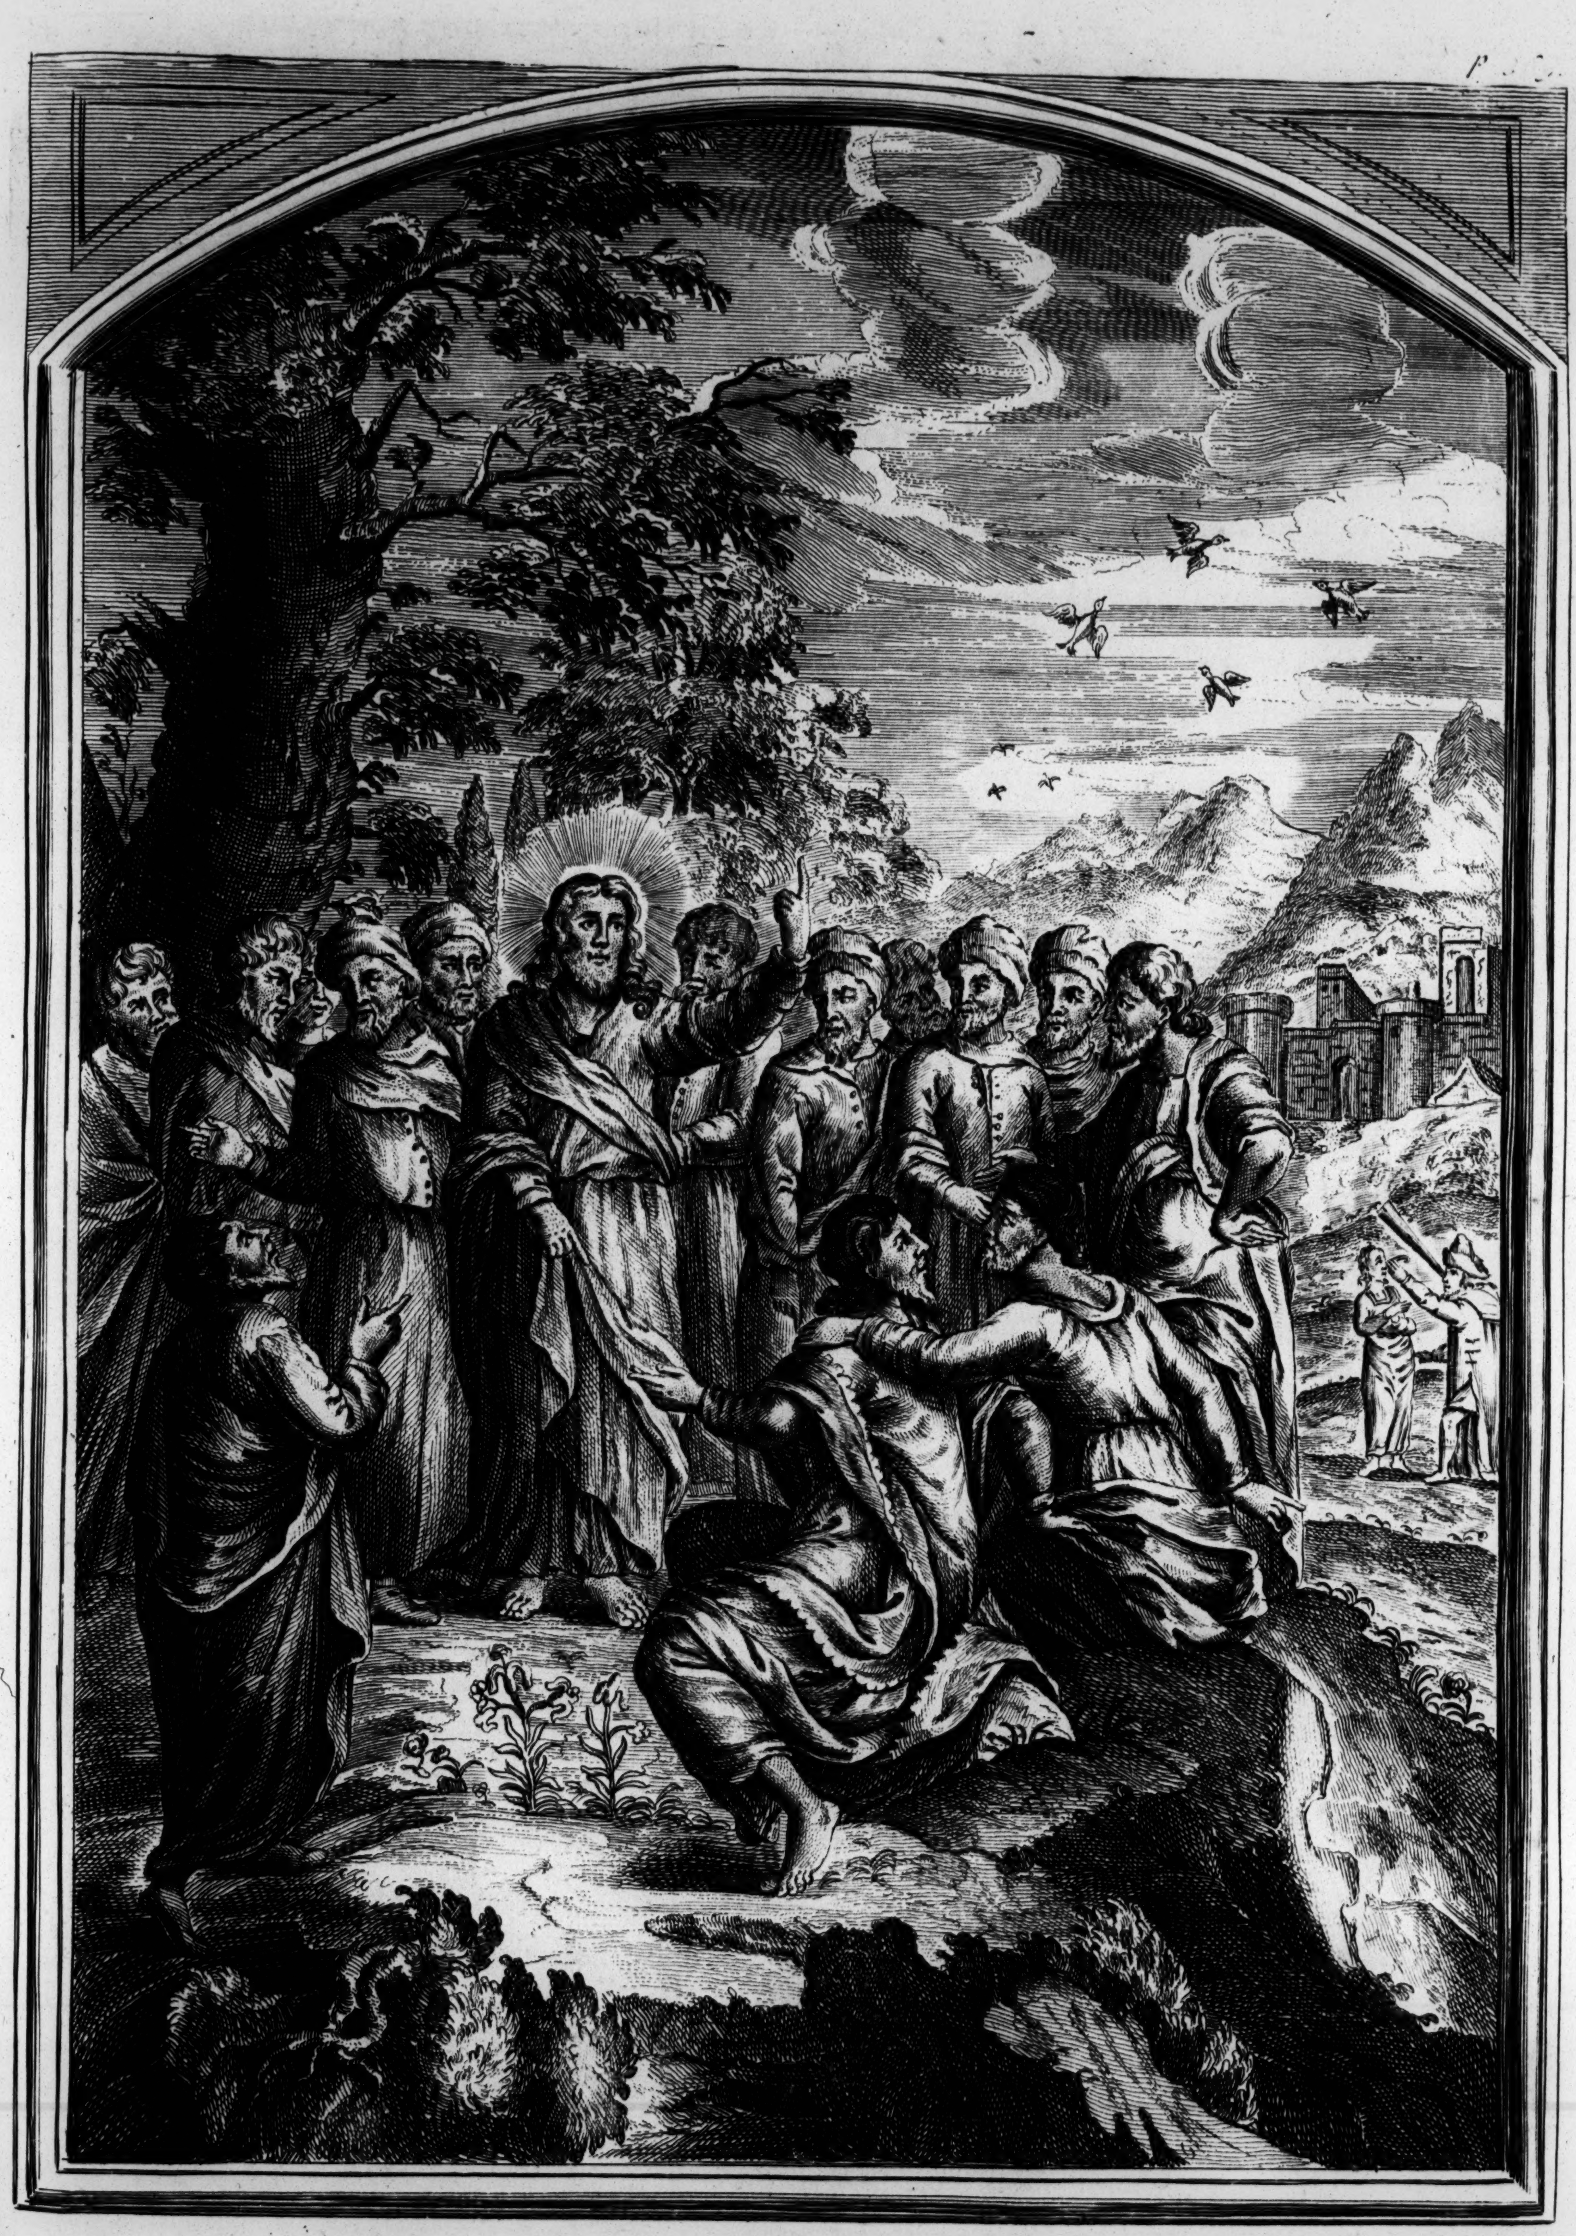
36 Neither ſhalt thou ſwear by thy head, becauſe thou canſt not make one hair white or black.

37 But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatſoever is more than theſe, cometh of evil.

38 ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.

39 But I ſay unto you, that ye reſiſt not evil: but whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other alſo.

40 And if any man will ſue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak alſo.



The Sermon on yͤ Mount.

41 And whoſoever ſhall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.

42 Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away.

43 ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy:

44 But I ſay unto you, Love your enemies, bleſs them that curſe you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you, and perſecute you:

45 That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven, for he maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt.

46 For if ye love them which love you, what reward have you? do not even the publicans the ſame?

47 And if ye ſalute your brethren only, what do you more than others? do not even the publicans ſo?

48 Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

CHAP. VI.

1 Chriſt continueth his ſermon in the mount, ſpeaking of alms, 5 prayer, 14 forgiving our brethren, 16 faſting, 19 where our treaſure is to be laid up, 24 of ſerving God, and mammon: 25 Exhorteth not to be careful for worldly things: 33 but to ſeek Gods kingdom.

TAKE heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be ſeen of them: otherwiſe ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven.

2 Therefore when thou doſt thine alms, do not ſound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do, in the ſynagogues, and in the ſtreets, that they may have glory of men. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward.

3 But when thou doſt alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth:

4 That thine alms may be in ſecret: and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, himſelf ſhall reward thee openly.

5 ¶ And when thou prayeſt, thou ſhalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray ſtanding in the ſynagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeen of men. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward.

6 But thou, when thou prayeſt, enter into thy cloſet, and when thou haſt ſhut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in ſecret, and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly.

7 But when ye pray, uſe not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking.

8 Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.

9 After this manner therefore pray ye; Our father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.

10 Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

11 Give us this day our daily bread.

12 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

13 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

14 For, if ye forgive men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will alſo forgive you.

15 But if ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your Father forgive your treſpaſſes.

16 ¶ Moreover, when ye faſt, be not as the hypocrites, of a ſad countenance: for they diſfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to faſt. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward.

17 But thou, when thou faſteſt, anoint thine head, and waſh thy face:

18 That thou appear not unto men to faſt, but unto thy Father which is in ſecret: and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall ward thee openly.

19 ¶ Lay not up for your ſelves treaſures upon earth, where moth and ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and ſteal.

20 But lay up for your ſelves treaſures in heaven, where neither moth and ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor ſteal.

21 For where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo.

22 The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be full of light.

23 But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body ſhall be full of darkneſs. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs.

24 ¶ No man can ſerve two maſters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or elſe he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other. Ye cannot ſerve God and mammon.

25 Therefore I ſay unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink; nor yet for your body what you ſhall put on: Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment.

26 Behold the fowls of the air: for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are not ye much better than they?

27 Which of you by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his ſtature?

28 And why take ye thought for raiment? Conſider the lillies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they ſpin.

29 And yet I ſay unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory, was not arayed like one of theſe.

30 Wherefore if God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is caſt into the oven, ſhall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?

31 Therefore take no thought, ſaying, What ſhall we eat? or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithal ſhall we be clothed?

32 (For after all theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things.

33 But ſeek ye firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you.

34 Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow ſhall take thought for the things of it ſelf: ſufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

CHAP. VII.

1 Chriſt ending his ſermon in the mount, reproveth raſh judgment, 6 forbiddeth to caſt holy things to dogs. 7 Exhorteth to prayer, 13 To enter in at the ſtrait gate, 15 To beware of falſe prophets, 21 Not to be hearers, but doers of the word: 24 like houſes builded on a rock, 26 and not on the ſand.

JUdge not, that ye be not judged.

2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye ſhall be judged: and with what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you again.

3 And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brothers eye, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye?

4 Or how wilt thou ſay to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye? and behold a beam is in thine own eye?

5 Thou hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye; and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to caſt out the mote out of thy brothers eye.

6 ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine, leſt they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you.

7 ¶ Ask, and it ſhall be given you: ſeek, and ye ſhall find: knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you.

8 For every one that asketh, receiveth: and he that ſeeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it ſhall be opened.

9 Or what man is there of you, whom if his ſon ask bread, will he give him a ſtone?

10 Or if he ask a fiſh, will he give him a ſerpent?

11 If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more ſhall your father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

12 Therefore all things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them, for this is the law and the prophets.

13 ¶ Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat:

14 Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

15 ¶ Beware of falſe prophets, which come to you in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

16 Ye ſhall know them by their fruits: Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles?

17 Even ſo every good tree bringeth forth good fruit: but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit: neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and caſt into the fire.

20 Wherefore by their fruits, ye ſhall know them.

21 ¶ Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

22 Many will ſay to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name? and in thy name have caſt out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profeſs unto them, I never knew you: Depart from me ye that work iniquity.

24 ¶ Therefore, whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them, I will liken him unto a wiſe man which built his houſe upon a rock:

25 And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe: and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock.

26 And every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them not, ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh man which built his houſe upon the ſand:

27 And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe: and it fell, and great was the fall of it.

28 And it came to paſs when Jeſus had ended theſe ſayings, the people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine.

29 For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the ſcribes.

Chap. v, vi, vii. The three preceding chapters contain the matter of that excellent ſermon, or diſcourſe, which our Bleſſed Saviour ſpake to his diſciples at their firſt ſetting out to preach the Goſpel to the Jewiſh nation; and therein it ſhall be obſerved, he particularly is careful to condemn the innovated traditions of the Phariſees, and expoſe their pretended obſervance of the letter of the law. But though

It is agreed by all Chriſtians, that this is the diſcourſe, delivered by Chriſt to his diſciples, yet it is frequently argued, whether this be the ſame diſcourſe that is recorded by Luke; for theſe two Evangeliſts ſeemingly differ very much in ſome particulars. Thus Matthew declares, that Chriſt went up into a mountain to teach, ver. 2. his diſciples; whereas Luke ſays, that he prayed, and that "he continued there all night in prayer to God," Luke vi. 12. Matthew ſpeaks of the election of the Apoſtles, chap. x. ver. 2. as if it was made a long time after this diſcourſe, but Luke mentions it as done at the time of his being on the mountain before he had begun to preach, chap. vi. 13, &c. Luke ſays plainly, that Jeſus was come down and ſtood in the plain, when he ſaid to to his diſciples, "bleſſed be the poor," ver. 17,—20. and Matthew here, as expreſly writes, that he was then upon the mountain, when he opened his mouth and taught them, chap, v. 1, 2. Again, Matthew has ſpecified eight Beatitudes, which Luke reduces to four, Matt. v. 3,—10. compared with Luke vi, 20, 21, 22. I ſay, upon theſe accounts many learned men have reſolved, that the diſcourſe of Jeſus on the mount recorded here by St. Matthew, is not the ſame as that recorded by St. Luke, chap. vi. 20, &c. ſaying that as Chriſt preached often he is recorded by St. Luke to have repeated in a diſtinct ſermon, what he had more fully taken notice of, in a former diſcourſe, tranſcribed and publiſhed for our inſtruction by St. Matthew in chap. v, vi, vii. See Auſtin, in lib. ii. de conſ. Evang. c. 19. and the author of the imperfect work upon Matthew Hom. 9. as alſo Cromatius on Matt. v. 1. and Gregory hom. 9. in Ezechiel. But Tacian, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, Origen, Euthymius and Theophylact (ap. Maldonat.) agree, that theſe two diſcourſes are copies of the ſame ſermon.

Therefore let us ſee what grounds there are of reconciliation. It is granted that Luke ſays Chriſt went up into a mountain to pray; and that Matthew does not ſay ſo; but he does not deny that particular; neither does he aſſign any reaſon, why he went up; but only records what he did there; and only ſo many of his actions as ſerved his purpoſe in writing his book of the Goſpel, which was to treat of the Doctrine of Chriſt in particular, therefore he omits the reaſon, which Luke gives, how Jeſus went up into the mountain to pray, and only certifies us, that when he was arrived on the mountain and was ſet down, he opened his mouth and taught his diſciples. The ſame reaſon may be aſſigned why our Evangeliſt does not mention our Saviour's choice of his Apoſtles; which account does not appear till we come to chap. x. 1. And though that objection raiſed from the diſagreement of the place, where this ſermon was preached, for one ſays on the mountain; the other on the plain, appears to be the ſtrongeſt; St. Auſtin ſolves it many ways, of which I ſhall only tranſcribe the following: Chriſt, having gone up into a mountain, as Luke ſays, vi. 12. to pray, afterwards deſcended a little from the top, which Luke calls the plain, Lib. ii. de conſ. Evangl. c. 19. But be that as it will, we are certain that this ſermon was ſpoken to the diſciples on the mountain; and therefore the moſt probable opinion is, that after Chriſt had been in the mountain and prayed, choſe his twelve Apoſtles, and was returned down to the plain, as Luke ſays, did go again up into the mountain and taught thoſe diſciples, as Matthew here deſcribes. So that

From what has been noted it may be obſerved, that the Evangeliſts, St. John excepted, who ſeems to be more accurate, do not always concern themſelves in declaring the exact order of time, when every thing was ſpoke or done; but content themſelves with amaſſing, or collecting the matters of fact, the ſubſtantial part of Chriſt's diſcourſes, his miracles and his actions, without being very curious about every minute circumſtance, or order, or method; for their buſineſs was not to make men chronologers, but Chriſtians. — And, this is the reaſon why one brings in a diſcourſe of Chriſt after ſuch a remarkable paſſage; another before it, and yet both theſe methods are ſuitable to their principal deſign; which, ſays Dr. Horneck, was to give an account of the treaſure, no matter in what order the Jewels lie. And accordingly we ſee, that though Luke ſets down the delivery of this ſermon or the ſubſtance of it, after the miraculous cure wrought upon the man, who had the withered hand, Luke vi. 12. Matthew chuſes to ſpeak of it before he mentions the miracle; not that one ſaith it was done before, and the other after, which would be a flat contradiction, and a proof that one gave a falſe account. But the caſe is only this, one thought proper to record the ſermon before the miracle, and the other poſtponed the ſermon to the ſaid miracle. And as in this, ſo in all other circumſtances, let it be now obſerved once for all, that where there is no oppoſition there is no diſagreement, but none of the Evangeliſts oppoſes or denies what the other ſaith; therefore they do not diſagree; though it is allowed, that one mentions a circumſtance, which another may leave out, but ſuch an omiſſion does not infer a denial of the fact.

As to the time when this ſermon was delivered, the common account fixes it in the ſecond year of Chriſt's miniſtry, and, ſays Dr. Horneck about the middle of May. And for the ſubject of it,

It may be properly called the pandects of Chriſtianity, or the moſt complete body of practical divinity; and the moſt perfect ſyſtem of the duties we owe to God and man. It contains not only all that is good and ſound in moral Philoſophy, but a great deal more; and gives the laſt directions for perfecting human nature, and how a man may come up to emulate the life of the angelic choir. And yet this doth not make the particular leſſons here laid down impracticable, or impoſſible to be performed; on the contrary, the kingdom of heaven, and the everlaſting enjoyment of God, is denied to thoſe, who refuſe to live up to theſe canons, Matt. v. 20. and vii. 24, 25, 26. which ſhew the life here preſcribed, is attainable, the duties practicable, the neglect inexcuſable, and the performance poſſible; for it is contrary to the infinite goodneſs and righteouſneſs of God to require things for which he gives no power, nor capacity. I may add, that

By this ſermon the Chriſtian world will be judged in the laſt day; and then we muſt ſtand or fall according as our behaviour ſhall agree with its doctrine. For,

All that is neceſſary to ſalvation lies here plainly delivered within the compaſs of three chapters. So that no man of ſound reaſon can pretend either want of time to read them, or want of memory to remember them, for in leſs than half an hour the whole duty of a Chriſtian may be ſurveyed. In a word,

This ſermon, both as for ſubject and its author, is the greateſt and beſt that ever was preached or publiſhed, the ſubject you've heard contains all things neceſſary to our ſalvation; the author is the great Saviour of the world, the Son of God, in whom are all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. It was, I ſay, publiſhed by him who could not be miſtaken in the law he gave, or in the ſanction of it, who knew very well that with the aſſiſtance of his grace we are able to do, what the neglect of ſo ſolemn a meſſage doth deſerve; and how great the encouragements are, that are here given to thoſe, who have the boldneſs to force their way through the impediments of this preſent world into eternal glory; Dr. Horneck's ſermon on the vth of Matt. vol. 1. page 2.

CHAP. V. ver. 1. And ſeeing the multitudes he went up into a mountain.] Theſe words relate to the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter; where we read that great multitudes of people from Galilee, and Decapolis, from Jeruſalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan; and, as Luke adds (ch. vi. 17.) as far as from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, partly to hear his gracious words; and partly to be healed of their diſeaſes and infirmities. But theſe multitudes, as we learn from the text, grew ſo numerous, that he was obliged to withdraw with his diſciples into a mountain, not, as ſome have thought, that he might the better be heard from thence preaching to the multitudes below: but as Auſtin, Chryſoſtome, Hierome, and other eminent commentators write, that he might avoid the crowd, and, as it follows, teach his diſciples privately by themſelves.

—— Into a mountain.] There have been ſeveral conjectures concerning the name of this mountain; but as the Scripture gives it no name, we ſhould abuſe our readers by aſcertaining thoſe weak traditions, which ſay it was the mount of Olivet, or a mountain about three miles diſtant from Capernaum. And therefore, I can't forbear taking notice of that great impoſture of the Fryars, who have given the name of Chriſt's mount to a certain mountain in Judea, in order to pick the pocket of the credulous traveller; for, here they pretend to ſhew the very ſtone, on which Chriſt ſat, when he delivered this ſermon; and who would not pay well to ſee ſuch a curioſity! But there is no credit to be given to ſuch fallacious inventions.

Neither can I agree with thoſe who aſſign the reaſons of his aſcending in a mountain on this occaſion to be an imitation of the eternal father's delivery of the law to Moſes on mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 11. or, to be a token of the ſublimity and grandeur of his doctrine and precepts; becauſe, theſe are only far-fetched ſpeculations without any foundation in the context, which as I have obſerved before, barely ſays, that he went up into a mountain, and taught his diſciples ſeparate from the multitudes.

—— And when he was ſet, his diſciples came unto him.] Chriſt being about to teach his diſciples, ſat down in imitation, no doubt, of the Jewiſh teachers, who ſat, and the hearers ſtood; and Luke ſpeaking of Chriſt teaching in the ſynagogue, alludes to this very thing, ſaying, "He cloſed the book, and gave it again to the miniſter, and ſat down, and the eyes of all that were in the ſynagogue were faſtned upon him!" Luke iv. 20. Now, in theſe ſynagogues, which were much in the nature of our Pariſh Churches, there was a ſeat, whereon the teacher ſat, and the hearers ſtood at his feet; whence aroſe that proverbial phraſe, "That ſuch a one was brought up at the feet of ſuch a teacher, as Paul ſaith of himſelf, That he had been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel," Acts xxii. 3.

—— His diſciples.] The Apoſtles in the firſt place were part of theſe diſciples. But we are not to ſuppoſe theſe principals were his whole aſſembly, no; for the word Talmid in Hebrew, and Μαθητὴς in Greek, directs us to underſtand the word diſciples in a large acceptation, even of all ſuch of the multitude, that believed in the great Jeſus, and confeſſed that he was the Meſſiah, or Saviour of the world; ſee Luke vi. 13. John vi. Acts ix. 26. and xi. 26. So that we are to infer from hence, that all, who have given their names to Jeſus Chriſt, reſigned themſelves to the rules of his diſcipline, and profeſs his religion, are concerned in this ſermon. The leſſons here reach every one that names the name of Chriſt, whether they be high or low, rich or poor, for Chriſt here conſidered men not as gentlemen, or noblemen, but purely as Chriſtians; which bare name will never ſave them, if they don't obey the will and precepts of our great Lord and maſter Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 2. And he opened his mouth and taught them.] This phraſe of opening the mouth, is uſed in Scripture when the ſpeaker intends to utter ſome great and important matter. So when David intended to rehearſe the wonderful works and providences of God toward the children of Iſrael, he begins with, "Give ear O my people, to my law; and incline your ears to the word of my mouth. I will open my mouth in a parable," Pſ. lxxviii. 1, 2. So that this phraſe, and he opened his mouth, he ſpeaks the attention of all conſiderate men, and imports that the Lord of preachers on this occaſion is going to publiſh things of the greateſt importance, upon the conſequence whereof depends our eternal weal or woe.

Ver. 3. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.] As the inſpired Pſalmiſt begins that book of Pſalms with a "Bleſſed is the man that walketh not in the counſel of the ungodly." So our Saviour begins his ſermon with the ſame ſubject, and it is remarkable, that he pronounces thoſe bleſſed who are commonly accounted the moſt wretched and miſerable in this world. Yet they are not the poor in ſpirit, to whom Chriſt here ſpeaks, whoſe poverty is outward, or ſuch who are in a ſtate of beggary; neither thoſe who have voluntarily renounced their eſtates and riches, and enter into a monaſtery or nunnery, vowing perpetual poverty, chaſtity and blind obedience, with a view of encreaſing their own merit; but the poor in ſpirit, to whom Chriſt here promiſes the kingdom of heaven are thoſe, who are clothed with a true Chriſtian humility, which conſiſts in a lively ſenſe of God's greatneſs, holineſs and goodneſs; low and deſpicable thoughts of our own unworthineſs; a hearty deteſtation and abhorrence of ſelf-conceitedneſs, ſelf-admiration and deſire of vain-glory; in a preference of others in honour before ourſelves, according to the command and character of humility in Rom. xii. 10. Yet in this preference the humble perſon is to take care, while he thinks of others better than himſelf that he does not run into deſpair, nor conceal, nor hide the grace of God beſtowed upon him, when the edification of others requires a declaration of it, as is evident from Pſ. lxvi. 16. and 1 Cor. xv. 10. And from hence flows a holy contentedneſs in the mean condition, God hath placed us in. And laſtly, this humility is not complete, without a chearful and humble ſubmiſſion to what God requires to be done. But,

It may be asked, why humility ſo deſcribed is called poverty in ſpirit? I anſwer, becauſe the humble man hath no good thing of his own. He carefully diſtinguiſheth what is God's, and what is his own. He is ſenſible that all the evil he hath is his own; and if what he may call his own be conſidered, he will appear a very poor, miſerable wretch, deſtitute of mercy and favour, and comfort, and fit only to fall a prey to the rage of the Devil. What good he hath or finds in himſelf, he aſcribes to the true cauſe, God bleſſed for evermore, 1 Cor. xv. 10. He freely and feelingly acknowledges, that he is nothing, and can do nothing that is good, without the power and influence of God. He ſees nothing in himſelf that can help him, or ſave, or ſecure him. All his riches, hope, life and power, and ſtrength, and virtue is in Chriſt Jeſus; and, having nothing of his own, that he can boaſt of, he may be truly called poor in ſpirit, and entitled to the kingdom of heaven; ſee ch. iii. 2.

Ver. 4. Bleſſed are they that mourn, for they ſhall be comforted.] Our Saviour you ſee ſubjoins the mourners to the humble, or poor in ſpirit; becauſe humility is the cauſe of mourning, or mourning is the effect of humility. For the poor in ſpirit mourns at the preſence of ſpiritual evils, and the abſence of ſpiritual bleſſings. So that the mourners who are here pronounced bleſſed, are ſuch as David, and Peter, and Magdalene, who mourned for their ſins, Pſal. xxxviii. 8. Matt. xxvi. 75. Luke vii. 38. and for the ſins of others, as David, Jeremiah, and other pious men have done, Pſal. cxix. 136. Jer. ix. 1, 2. Ezek. ix. 4. 2 Cor. vii. 11. But

To prevent miſtakes, that this text does enjoyn a continual mourning; it is to be obſerved, that it enjoyns no ſuch continuance, but only ſignifies, that they are bleſſed, who mourn as they have occaſion to reflect either upon the ſpiritual evils which are preſent, or ſpiritual bleſſings which are abſent from them; for if our lives were to be filled with mourning, the Apoſtle had in vain exhorted us to rejoyce in the Lord always, i. e. upon every occaſion, Phil. iv. 1.

Nor will it avail a man to be always mourning, if he does not ſorrow in order to a greater end, even to eſtabliſh our ſouls in the love of God, to ſtrengthen our graces, to corroborate our repentance, and averſion from ſin, and to purify our outward and inward man more and more; and, therefore, it is emphatically called, ſorrowing to repentance, 2 Cor. vii. 9. This mourning is agreeable to that of the Saints mentioned by Ezekiel, ix. 4. and Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 21.

——For they ſhall be comforted.] They ſhall be ſupported by the Divine Spirit, and in their weakneſs ſhall be made ſtrong, 2 Cor. xii. 9. They ſhall be enlightned in the midſt of their mourning, ſhewing them the will of God, who ſuffers them to mourn for a ſeaſon, that he may purify them for himſelf. And this is the effect of that famous promiſe, unto the upright there ariſeth a light in darkneſs, Pſal. cxii. 4. They ſhall be comforted by good men, as we read in Hezekiah's caſe, Iſa. xxxviii. 2, 3, &c. and by meditating on, and hearing the word of God preached to them in this world, Pſal. cxix. 50. which will give them a livelier ſight and clearer apprehenſions of the things which are not ſeen; ſo that when death ſhall approach, it will be received the ſaying of good old Simeon, "Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace," &c. Luke ii. 29. to partake of thoſe heavenly joys, prepared for the ſervants of the Lord.

Then it is, that they who now go on their way mourning for their own, or the publick and private ſins of others, ſhall find reſt to their ſouls; their mourning ſhall be turned into joy; they ſhall now reap the fruit of their labours and bring their ſheaves with them; all which is beautifully deſcribed by the Pſalmiſt, xxiii. 2. and Iſaiah more fully, xxxv. 10. and lxi. 3. But the author of the Book of Revelations explains theſe words, they ſhall be comforted, moſt clearly of all, "God, ſays he, ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there ſhall be no more death; neither ſorrow nor crying; neither ſhall there be any more pain; for the former things are paſſed away. And they ſhall ſee his face, and his name ſhall be upon their foreheads, and there ſhall be no night there, and they need no candle, nor the light of the ſun, for the Lord gives them light, and they ſhall reign for ever and ever, Rev. xxi. 4. and xxii. 4, 5.

Ver. 5. Bleſſed are the meek, for they ſhall inherit the earth.] What is ſaid of meekneſs here, is agreeable to that of the Pſalmiſt, The meek ſhall inherit the earth, Pſal. xxxvii. 11. Where it is not to be underſtood of thoſe who are mealy-mouthed, as we ſay, or gentle, or calm, when it is our duty to be angry with thoſe that notoriouſly affront the Divine Majeſty, and wrong their conſciences, Gal. iii. 1, 2. and v. 12. of which ſort of anger the Scripture furniſheth us with many examples, as Exod. xxxii. 19. John ii. 15—17. Acts xiv. 14, 15. and with thoſe eſpecially, over whom we have a more immediate care, when they prove incorrigible in their ſins, Gen. xlix. 6, 7. And,

Here it won't be improper to note, That there is a rational anger, which with ſome warmth and heat, pleads and argues for God's honour, but runs not into unſeemly behaviour, or into reviling language. And this is the anger we are to ſhew when God is diſhonoured by ourſelves, or by others. So that meekneſs excludes paſſion, rage and fury; but not all anger: for a rational anger is as much our duty to exert, as to ſhew a rational meekneſs; ſo as all that is called meekneſs is not lawful, neither is all anger ſinful, Eph. iv. 26. Now,

The meekneſs to which a bleſſing is aſſigned in the text, is that temper of mind, that grace or gift of the Divine Spirit, whereby a man is able to curb, and ſubdue and moderate his anger, wrath and paſſion, peeviſhneſs and cholerick diſpoſition, when it is neceſſary: and to behave himſelf with calmneſs, gentleneſs and great modeſty, and moderation in his ſpeeches and anſwers, in his actions and tranſactions with his neighbours. To which purpoſe Paul admoniſhes Titus to ſhew all meekneſs to all men, ch. iii. 2. Solomon lays it down as a rule, that a ſoft anſwer turns away wrath, Prov. xv. 1.

The bleſſing promiſed to theſe meek perſons is, that they ſhall inherit the earth, which ſome ancient interpreters to ſave themſelves the labour of ſearching the Scriptures, have abruptly declared, that by earth, we are to underſtand heaven, as being eminently the land of the living. But as I have obſerved before, this bleſſing is a repetition of the Pſalmiſt, xxxvii. 11. who intended in that pſalm to ſhew, that wicked men, ſhould by God's judgment ſuddenly periſh, while righteous men lived eaſily and quietly in the land of Canaan, Pſal. xxxvii. 9, And therefore, as Chryſoſtom has well obſerved on the place, that becauſe the Jews had been oft taught this leſſon in the Old Teſtament, our Saviour addreſſes himſelf to them in the language or phraſe of ſpeech they had been accuſtomed to. This ſon of David, ſays Dr. Whitby, repeateth and confirmeth to them the promiſe to them by David. But then

It is to be noted, that our Saviour doth not here promiſe to advance the meek unto an affluence or great abundance of temporal things, to make him great in power, or rich and wealthy in the world. For, "a man's life, at leaſt the true comfort and ſatisfaction thereof, conſiſts not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth," Luke xii. 15. So that from this promiſe we have no reaſon to expect thoſe things which are not needful to the comfort and ſatisfaction of our lives. Experience avouches, that this is not the ordinary portion of the meek; and therefore doth ſufficiently inſtruct us that this is not the bleſſing promiſed by that God, who cannot lie, or fail of the performance of his promiſe: And therefore poſitively this phraſe ſeems rather to import, that meekneſs is the beſt way to the moſt ſure enjoyment of theſe things, as far as they are needful and convenient; and to enjoy them with the greateſt quiet and tranquility, without that ſtrife, debate, anxiety and trouble, which imbitter the enjoyment of theſe things to others; and with the greateſt and trueſt comfort, ſatiſfaction and contentedneſs of mind.

Ver. 6. Bleſſed are they that hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs.] The righteouſneſs here mentioned, is by ſome thought to be the righteouſneſs of faith, by which, we being juſtified, or freed from the guilt of ſin, have peace with God; and this undoubtedly is a fit matter of our ſpiritual thirſt and hunger; but yet I think this cannot be the proper import of the words. Becauſe the Greek word Δικαιοσύνη, i. e. righteouſneſs, bears no ſuch ſenſe in any other part of the Goſpel: And ſecondly, becauſe the Jews, to whom Chriſt ſpeaks, had no idea of this righteouſneſs; no apprehenſion that their Meſſiah was to die, and much leſs that they ſhould be juſtified by his death: And therefore, had Chriſt ſpoken of this righteouſneſs, none of them could have underſtood his meaning, as we may learn from his diſcourſe on this very ſubject, John vi. for the Jews could not underſtand it: Wherefore the righteouſneſs here intended, is that inherent righteouſneſs, which conſiſts in a ſincere endeavour to practiſe all thoſe duties which God requires at our hands, and to eſchew that evil which he hath forbidden. In which ſenſe Zacharias and Elizabeth are ſaid to be "both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments of the Lord, blameleſs," Luke i. 6. And it is repreſented as our duty to "ſerve God in righteouſneſs and holineſs before him all the days of our life," ver. 74, 75. And here it is ſaid a little below, at ver. 20. "except our righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, we can in no caſe enter into the kingdom of God." So that

To hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, is to be as ſenſible of the want of it, as eagerly deſirous to have it, as induſtrious to obtain it, as reſtleſs and inceſſant till we do enjoy it; as men uſual are when they are pinched with hunger and thirſt. And they who ſtand thus affected to it, ſhall be ſatisfied with it, i. e. they ſhall have all the means and aids required to make them thus righteous here, and ſhall have the reward of righteouſneſs hereafter, and ſo ſhall be bleſſed; for ſeeing it is God himſelf, who by his word and ſpirit, raiſes in them this diſpoſition towards righteouſneſs; ſince he inviteth every hungry Soul to eat of this ſpiritual food, and ſaith to every thirſty ſoul, come drink of thoſe waters of life, ſeeing this righteouſneſs renders them ſo acceptable and well pleaſing to his ſight; and laſtly, ſeeing he hath promiſed them this ſatisfaction, they on all theſe accounts may reſt aſſured that they ſhall attain this food of the ſoul.

Ver. 7. Bleſſed are the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy.] Ammianus Mercellinus, a grave heathen writer, taking notice of the differences among Chriſtians in his time, about matters of religion, and the hatred one ſect bore to another, ſays, "no wild beaſts are ſo cruel, nor ſo barbarous to another as ſome Chriſtians are to thoſe that differ from them in opinion," which is a very bad character, and it is a ſhame, that heathens and infidels ſhould have occaſion given them to ſpeak ſo reproachfully of this noble religion, whoſe precepts run in another ſtrain, forbidding the very appearance of cruelty and animoſity; but on all occaſions breathing into the ears of its diſciples, mercy and charity, according to the dictates of its founder, who told us from the beginning that bleſſed are the merciful for they ſhall obtain mercy." Now

The merciful temper is a compaſſionate heart, or an inward pity and compunction at the ſight or hearing of the miſeries of others, and therefore we are expreſsly called upon to put on Bowels of mercy; Col. iii. 12. This is ſo neceſſary that without it the moſt pompous external acts of mercy prove fruitleſs and ineffectual; 1 Cor. xiii. 3. where by charity muſt be meant true Chriſtian pity and compaſſion, which may be abſent from the moſt ſtately beneficence, including an actual relief of our calamitous and miſerable neighbours. For, if any one ſhall pretend to pity the neceſſitous, and ſay "depart you, be you armed and filled, without giving ſuch things as are needful for the body," James ii. 16. he not only mocks the poor, but God alſo, who made them ſo, to be aſſiſted by the merciful beneficence of the wealthier ſort. So that any one that deſires the true character of a merciful man, muſt, according to his capacity in life, viſit his diſtreſſed neighbours when ſick, or in priſon, helping them in thoſe circumſtances, as far as in his power, and contribute to their cure, when diſtempered, according to the example of St. Paul, Acts xxviii. 8, 1. and James i. 27. giving them drink when thirſty, Rom. xii. 20. feeding them when hungry, Acts xvi. 34. reſcuing and delivering them from danger, if it be in our power, and in a juſt cauſe, Acts xx. 10, 12. covering their nakedneſs, and giving them cloths when they have none, Acts ix. 39. receiving them into our houſes, or providing lodging and harbour for them when they have no place to reſt in, Acts xvi. 15. and burying them decently. when they leave, or have no means to diſcharge the expences of their funerals, Acts viii. 12. Tobit ii. Theſe are ſome of the principal acts of that mercy which is due to the bodies of our miſerable brethren, and ſpecified with great urgency by Chriſt himſelf, Matt. xxv. 35, 36. But this is not all. For,

The mercy of a Chriſtian muſt alſo extend to the Souls of our neceſſitous brethren in their oppreſſion under ſin and ignorance. When we find them out of the way to eternal life, we muſt admoniſh, teach and direct them according to the rule laid down in Heb. xii. 12, 13. we muſt reprove them when they ſin, and correct them if obſtinate, Eph. v. 11. 1 Cor. v. 5. we muſt comfort them in diſtreſs, and ſpeak peace to them under dejection, 2 Cor. i. 4. we muſt forgive their offences and pardon the affronts and injuries they have done to us, eſpecially where they profeſs ſorrow and repentance, Matt. xviii. 21, 22, 25. we muſt in a word bear with their infirmities, eſpecially where they appear to be invincible, Rom. xv. i. and laſtly, we muſt pray for them whether they be our friends or enemies, James v. 16. Matt. v. 44.

This is a general character of a merciful Chriſtian, and happy is he who can lay a juſt claim to it, for he ſhall find mercy from the Lord in his day. But I would not be underſtood in a negative ſenſe, that no man can lay claim to the mercifulneſs in the text, but he who anſwers this character in every particular, no, that is not intended. For every man who in his ſeveral ſtations, exerciſes all thoſe charities, which his capacity allows of, or looks upon other mens afflictions as their own, has a right claim to the mercy promiſed to a merciful perſon in the text. So he whoſe neceſſities at home, incapacitate him from relieving the temporal wants of his neighbour, may be in a condition to redreſs his ſpiritual.

Ver. 8. Bleſſed are the pure in heart: for they ſhall ſee God.] The pure in heart are thoſe who have an antipathy to ſinful thought, or a ſettled abhorrence of ſuch thoughts, deſires, paſſions, and affections, as are manifeſtly contrary to the will of God, and are the parents or cauſes of impure and ſinful ſpeeches and actions, whereby our neighbour may be any ways wronged, defrauded, ſlandered, abuſed or reviled, and our own ſpiritual and everlaſting concerns are neglected. In a word, a pure heart abominates all thoughts which are injurious to God, to our neighbour, or to the intereſt of our ſouls. And here it would be proper to diſtinguiſh between the mind and the heart. The mind may be aſſaulted with evil thoughts, and the heart ſhall remain pure and untainted, if it gives no conſent, no approbation, nor reſpect to them, therefore ſays David, I hate vain thoughts, Pſ. cxix. 113. whereby he expreſſes the purity of the heart. And God expoſtulating with Jeremiah (ch. iv. 14.) ſays, "how long ſhall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee," ſhew that the heart preſerves its purity if it does not permit evil thoughts to enter and lodge in it.

— Shall ſee God.] The end of the man whoſe heart denies entrance to, and will not permit evil thoughts to lodge therein, ſhall finally be bleſſed with the eternal enjoyment of ſeeing God face to face, at his tranſlation into the kingdom of glory.

Ver. 9. Bleſſed are the peace-makers, for they ſhall be called the children of God.] The original Greek word which we tranſlate largely by the term of peace-maker is εἰρηνοποιοὶ which in a ſtrict and more adequate ſenſe, ſignifies thoſe who make or procure peace among perſons that diſagree and uniting thoſe that are at variance. This is the meaning of the word in Greek authors: But in Scripture the word is of a larger ſignification, extending even to ſuch as do make peace with God, and with their own conſciences, to which purpoſe we read in Job xxi. 22. "acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace, for your iniquities have ſeparated betwixt you and your God," Iſa. lix. 2. And including thoſe who make it their buſineſs to live peaceably, as much as in them lies, with all men, in human ſociety, and ſeek to maintain that peace which neither nature, religion, friendſhip or good-neighbourhood, have ſettled among men, with whom we live, Rom. xii. 18. In fine, this word in the goſpel ſuppoſes one who hath made peace with God and his conſcience, lives peaceably, giving none offence wilfully, and from a ſenſe of Chriſtian love and charity, endeavour to reconcile diſagreeing neighbours, telling them with the Pſalmiſt how good and how pleaſant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity, Pſ. cxxxiii. 1. And thus the peace-maker ſhall in a more ſpecial manner, than other good Chriſtians be called the children of God, becauſe they act in the neareſt degree to the perfection of the divine nature; he being the God of peace. Thus they expreſs his nature in their own; for his divine eſſence, is the true pattern of peace. God makes peace within thy borders, ſays David; he ſpeaks peace to his people; he creates peace, and calls to peace; is the author of peace, and the Lord of peace; as I collect from many parts of the Sacred Books.

Ver. 10. Bleſſed are they that are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.] Here the word διώκειν to perſecute, is properly to follow hard after a thing, and with great earneſtneſs to endeavour to ſeize upon a thing we deſire, or to purſue it, as hunters do a prey, which they don't quit till they take it. The word in Scripture is uſed ſometimes in a good, and ſometimes in a bad ſenſe. In a good ſenſe when it is applied to virtue, as "follow that which is good," 1 Theſſ. v. 15. "Follow peace with all men," Heb. xii. 14. "Follow after charity," 1 Cor. xiv. 1. "Follow after righteouſneſs," 1 Tim. vi. 11. In all which places for follow in the original the word διώκειν is uſed, which in other places we render perſecute, to ſhew that till it be joined with ſomething elſe that alters the ſenſe, it imports no more than to follow hard after a thing. When it is applied to perſons it is commonly underſtood in a bad ſenſe, and implies purſuing with a deſire or intent to hurt the perſon purſued. which is the uſual notion and acceptation of the word, even to proſecute or purſue a perſon with an intent to afflict, or hurt, or puniſh him: and that's the meaning of the word in the text, where the perſecuted muſt be perſons hunted or haunted, teazed, tormented, impriſoned, abuſed, or in a word evil-entreated, as is evident from the ſcope of the context wherein Chriſt endeavours to comfort thoſe whom the world counts miſerable.

By righteouſneſs here is meant the whole circle of religious duties and offices, or obedience to the laws of God, or of the Goſpel; and it takes in both believing and practiſing, i. e. believing what God has commanded us to believe, and practiſing what God in his word has commanded us to practiſe, and conſequently forbearing to believe or practiſe, either what God hath not revealed, or hath forbid to believe or practiſe. Thus righteouſneſs here is the ſame with goodneſs, as it is oppoſed to wickedneſs, in which ſenſe, we have read it at the 6th verſe, and ſhall read it again at the 20th, and at the 33d of the ſixth chapter; and is ſometimes called the righteouſneſs of faith, Rom. iv. 13. i. e. a chearful performance of the duties God hath commanded in the Goſpel. Hence

It is eaſy to collect that to be perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, is to be evil entreated for aſſerting or maintaining a doctrine or principle, which God hath revealed plainly either by the light of nature, or by the light of Scripture, or for not ſubſcribing to a doctrine manifeſtly falſe, or contrary to the Scripture. In like manner for eſpouſing a worſhip or practice, which God hath plainly commanded; or for not yielding to a worſhip or practice, which he hath plainly forbid, as the three young men in Daniel, and Daniel himſelf were perſecuted.

—— Theirs is the kingdom of heaven.] This reward you ſee is the ſame with what was promiſed to poverty of ſpirit, or deep humility, ver. 3. And the reaſon why Chriſt promiſes the ſame recompenſe to the perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, as he doth to the humble, is, becauſe there is a very great affinity betwixt humility and ſuffering for righteouſneſs ſake. For ſuffering for righteouſneſs ſake is the deepeſt act of humiliation; eſpecially if that ſuffering be accompanied with death. Humility can go no lower; a man in ſuffering and dying for righteouſneſs ſake, pulls down all his lofty thoughts, makes all ſtoop to the croſs of Chriſt; ſubmits his faith to the Goſpel, and for things inviſible, denies himſelf in all the viſible comforts of this life, which is humility in its glory, and bring him that is ſo perſecuted, before the bodies of other men to the kingdom of heaven, there to be glorified in the firſt reſurrection, Rev. xx. 4, 5.

This of bearing perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake, or for Chriſt's ſake, and the Goſpel was ſet laſt, becauſe it was then, as it yet is, ſays an ingenious author, the lot of thoſe, who labour to attain thoſe excellent conditions, to which the foregoing bleſſings are pronounced. Which to prepare his diſciples to undergo, he repeats this laſt, by application thereof to them there preſent, ſaying, "Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you, but falſely, and for my ſake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven, for ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you." Now

Thoſe bleſſings, which are eight in number, excluſive of the eleventh verſe, (which I have noted to be only a repetition or application of the former) have obtained the excellent name of the eight beatitudes in the Chriſtian Church; becauſe they begin ſeverally with bleſſing, and jointly contain the chief heads, wherein a man's happineſs particularly centers. And

Tho' Luke has not ſet the bleſſings down either in the ſame order, or number, yet, to ſo many of them as he recites, he oppoſes their contraries under ſo many woes, viz. "Wo unto you that are rich. 2. Wo unto you that are full. 3. Wo unto you that laugh now. 4. Wo unto you when all men ſhall ſpeak well of you, Luke vi. 20, &c.

Ver. 11. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, &c.] Theſe words I have ſaid are an application of the former verſe to the diſciples of Jeſus; and is, as it were a prophetic admonition to them, that they in a particular manner would be opprobriouſly ſpoken againſt, and burthened with falſe and unjuſt accuſation before kings and magiſtrates for his ſake and the Goſpel. And here we ought to obſerve, that this reviling of conſcientious Chriſtians, began very early. It was not long after this manifeſtation of the miniſtry of Chriſt, that the Jews called him, the maſter of the houſe, Beelzebub; then we may ſuppoſe that his Apoſtles, and thoſe of his houſhold the Church, could not long eſcape their virulent tongues. So it was when Paul and his company, out of charity for the ſalvation of their fellow-creature, preached the Goſpel at Philippi, their reward was calumny; and inſtead of gratitude they charged them with rebellion, for they brought them before the magiſtrates, ſaying, "theſe men being Jews, exceedingly trouble our city, and teach cuſtoms which are not lawful for us to receive," Acts xvi. 20. And again Tertullus the orator for the Jews againſt Paul, calls him "a peſtilent fellow, and a mover of ſedition," &c. Acts xxiv. 5. See alſo Acts xvii. 6, and 18. In all which circumſtances the diſciples of Chriſt did not render railing for railing, or reviling for reviling, not even when they ſuffered death, as ſome of them alſo did for his name, but approved themſelves to be his diſciples by "baring the reproach of Chriſt, and eſteeming it greater riches than the treaſures of the world," 1 Pet. ii. 21, 22. Knowing that God hath promiſed and will certainly give a crown of righteouſneſs unto the man, who ſhall perſevere unto the end, when he is reviled and perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake. Therefore he continues in

Ver. 12. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for ſo perſecuted they the prophets that were before you.] Chriſt having in all the preceding beatitudes, particularly ſhewn wherein the bleſſedneſs of thoſe virtuous men whom he commends, doth conſiſt, he doth the like in this exhortation to joy; for having in the foregoing verſe pronounced thoſe perſons bleſſed, who are reviled and evil ſpoken of for righteouſneſs ſake, or for the name of Chriſt; he declares in this the nature of their bleſſedneſs, "rejoice, ſays he, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." And to encourage to a more chearful bearing of theſe unjuſt reproaches, he ſets before them the example of the ancient Prophets, "for ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you." To ſhew that this was the cuſtom of the world many ages agone, to ſpeak all manner of evil of their teachers. For they called Moſes a pragmatical man; Samuel, an old dotard; Elijah, a troubler of Iſrael, and an enemy to the commonwealth; Eliſha, bald-pate; Micaiah, an impertinent fellow; and Amos, a clown. But they dealt much worſe with Iſaiah, whom, after their revilings, they ſawed aſunder; and after a thouſand reproaches they ſtoned Jeremiah to death.

Our Lord having thus far gently opened the underſtandings and hearts of his diſciples, to receive farther inſtruction, goes on, and gives them ſome little intimation of the work or miniſtry, he intended ſhortly to ſend them about and employ them in, ſaying,

Ver. 13. Ye are the ſalt of the earth.] Tho' ſome pious annotators have underſtood theſe words as ſpoken to the whole body of Chriſtians wherever diſperſed throughout the whole world, and to ſhew the nature and tendency of the Chriſtian religion, as meaning, if you are true followers of me, thus it is with you, and thus certainly it will be with you, even as it is with ſalt; what ſalt doth, you will do in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and in your actions and converſations you will imitate the nature of that mineral; ſo Dr. Horneck on this text: yet it is plain from the context that theſe words were directed particularly to the Apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt, importing, that as I have conferred my gifts upon you, and have appointed you for paſtors and teachers in my Church, that by your doctrine and example, the world might be purged and preſerved from corruption, and ſeaſoned with righteouſneſs and holineſs. For, as the text is a metaphor taken from the creature ſalt; whoſe acrimonious quality purgeth out putredinous humours, as it preſerves fleſh from corruption; ſo they by the powerful preaching of the piercing word, and ſound doctrine committed to them, were to ſeaſon mankind in all parts of the earth, whether they ſhould be ſent, and leave an example to all future miniſters to do the ſame. So that

What we learn from this text is plainly this. Ye, my Apoſtles and diſciples are now appointed by that pure word and holy doctrine which ye are to preach, and by the ſavour of your good converſation, to purge out that corruption from the world in which it lies, and repreſent them, your hearers, to God as a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, holy, and acceptable to God , but if yourſelves ſhould looſe the ſavour of your good converſation, and become putrified members in my body, you would be wholly uſeleſs to theſe good ends; and therefore can expect nothing but to be rejected by me, and caſt off, as unſavoury ſalt is caſt into the dunghil.

Ver. 14. Ye are the light of the world.] As the effect of light is to make things manifeſt, Eph. v. 13. and to direct us in the way wherein we ſhould walk. So we learn from this metaphor that Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, ye are appointed by me to manifeſt my doctrine to the world; even that doctrine, which will diſcover to them what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God, and ſo direct their feet into the way that leadeth to eternal life, and will enable them to walk as children of light; and if you cauſe this light to ſhine forth in your doctrine and Chriſtian life and converſation, the light of it is ſo clear and radiant, that it cannot be hid from them.

Ver. 16. Lo therefore let this your light ſhine before men that they may from your good converſation, as well as from your doctrine, ſee your good works and glorify your father, which is in heaven. Hence note,

That though Chriſt's apoſtolic diſciples are chiefly concerned in theſe metaphors; yet they are in ſome meaſure applicable to all Chriſtians; for it is the duty of all Chriſtians to "ſhine as lights in the world," Phil. ii. 15. And Chriſt having ſaid, "He that forſaketh not all he hath, cannot be my diſciple," preſently ſubjoins, "Salt is good, but if the ſalt have loſt its ſavour, wherewithal ſhall it be ſalted," Luke xiv. 33, &c.

2dly, The good works here mentioned muſt be ſuch as by the light of nature ſeem good and honourable in the ſight of men; becauſe they were to engage the very heathens to ſpeak well of Chriſtianity. And,

3dly, Though theſe good works are commanded to ſhine before men, yet they are not to be done phariſaically, with oſtentation, to gain credit among men, that we may the better deceive them and ride over them; but for God's glory, and the edification of our neighbour; that they diſcerning the holineſs, juſtice and goodneſs of his precepts, and the excellent effects they have on thoſe that embrace them, may thereby be convinced that their religion is the inſtitution of a juſt and holy God, full of kindneſs and good-will towards men.

Ver. 17. Think not that I am come to deſtroy the law or the prophets.] The word in the original which is here tranſlated deſtroy, is more properly rendred diſſolve. Which premiſed, I ſay, our Lord hath taught us that all the law and the Prophets are comprehended in two precepts, Matt. xxii. 40. compared with Rom. xiii. 8. Gal. v. 14. James ii. 8. It is not therefore to be thought that Chriſt came to diſſolve the moral law, or any rules of morality delivered by the Prophets; but he came rather that "the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled by us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit;" Rom. viii. 4. And that this is the law intended in this place may be concluded. Becauſe, 1ſt, Chriſt only undertakes the true interpretation of the precepts with reſpect to the moral law: and in theſe alone can he be rationally conceived to require "our righteouſneſs ſhould exceed that of the Scribes and Phariſees," not in the litteral obſervance of the ritual precepts, in which they were exactly ſcrupulous, whilſt they neglected judgment, mercy, and the love of God. And of them only could he ſay, that "he who brake the leaſt of them, and taught men ſo to do, ſhould be the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven," ver. 19, 20. ſince otherwiſe, ſays Dr. Whitby, the Apoſtle Paul muſt have been chief in that number. But

2dly, Our Lord expreſly declares that "the law, or the rituals of the law and the Prophets, were until John," Luke xvi. 16. and adds, that the time was coming, when "neither in Samaria, nor in Jeruſalem, ſhould they worſhip the father," but ſhould worſhip him every where in a more ſpiritual manner, John iv. 22, &c. Moreover he foretels the diſſolution of that temple and Jewiſh polity, on which their ritual and judicial precepts did depend, ch. xxiv. add to this, that Paul ſaith, the "law was only given till the promiſed ſeed ſhould come," Gal. iii. 19. and that he being come, we no longer under the ritual dictates or pedagogy of the law. That Chriſtians were dead to the law "through the body of Chriſt," Rom. vii. 4, 5. That they were "looſed from the law, that being dead, under which they were held," ver. 6. That it was evacuated, 2 Cor. iii. 11. That they were redeemed from it by Chriſt, Gal. iv. 5. and that they ought no more to be ſubject to that yoke of bondage, or return to thoſe beggarly elements, ver. 9. and v. 1. That Chriſt had broken down the partition wall, and evacuated that law of commandments, Eph. ii. 14, 15. That he had "blotted out that hand-writing of ordinances, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his croſs," Coloſ. ii. 14. That it was only, "to continue to the time of reformation," Heb. ix. 10. That the "prieſthood being changed, there was a neceſſity of the change of the law," ch. vii. 12. and that there was "a diſannulling of the commandment going before, becauſe of the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it," ver. 18. Which things ſeem inconſiſtent with the doctrine that Chriſt came not to diſſolve that ceremonial law, from which he freed all Chriſtians, and made them dead to it by his body, evacuating this hand-writing of ordinances, and taking it out of the way by nailing it to his croſs. All which ſeems to claſh with our text. But then

3dly, Theſe rites of the law may be conſidered as they were typical of good things to come by Chriſt, Col. ii. 17. Heb. x. 1. The Prophets alſo may be looked upon as foretelling his days, and ſpeaking of the things he was to do and ſuffer, and of his future glory, and the glad tidings of the Goſpel, Acts iii. 24. 1 Pet. i. 10, &c. of the converſion of the Jews; the fall of antichriſt; the coming in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles; and of the final judgment: And in this ſenſe the text ſtands good, Chriſt came not to diſſolve the law and the Prophets, but to fulfil them, by exhibiting the antitype and the ſubſtance, of which theſe rituals were the types and ſhadows; and fulfilling theſe Propheſies, and taking care the truth of theſe things ſhould not fail; nor ſhould the law and the Prophets ceaſe to have their force till theſe things were accompliſhed; and ſo the phraſe ἕως πάντα γένηται occurs in Luke xxi. 31. till all things foretold by me be done, importing the performance of what was typified by the law, and foretold by the Prophets. See Matt. xxiv. 34. and Mark xiii. 30. Again,

4thly, Many of theſe ritual precepts had a ſpiritual ſenſe; as, the circumciſion of the fleſh, denoted the ſpiritual circumciſion of the heart; the reſt of the ſabbath, a reſt remaining for the people of God, &c. on which account the Apoſtle declares not only, that the law was holy, juſt and good, but that it was alſo ſpiritual, Rom. vii. 12—14. And in this ſenſe alſo, Chriſt came not to deſtroy the law, but to fulfil, eſtabliſh and perfect it, by changing him that was a Jew outwardly to one inwardly; and "the circumciſion of the fleſh in the letter, to the circumciſion of the heart in the ſpirit," Rom. ii. 29. Col. ii. 11. and Phil. iii. 3. And there he adds in

Ver. 18.——Till heaven and earth paſs away, one jot or one tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till all be fulfilled.] By one jot or one tittle of the law, I underſtand, one precept of it. And as for theſe words, till heaven and earth paſs away, they may be underſtood only of the moral law, or elſe muſt bear the ſenſe which Luke gives of them, ch. xvi. 17. Sooner may heaven and earth paſs away, than God ſhall fail of accompliſhing the things typified by the law, or foretold by the Prophets.

Ver. 19.—He ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven.] i. e. He ſhall be accounted unworthy to be reckoned one of the members of my kingdom, if he does not repent of his ſin. So when Paul ſaid, I am the leaſt of the Apoſtles, 1 Cor. xv. 9. is meant, I am unworthy to be called an Apoſtle.

Ver. 20.——Except your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees.] See in what the righteouſneſs of the Phariſees conſiſted, in the notes on ch. iii. 7. But our righteouſneſs is not to reſt as theirs did in the outward man; we are here taught, that except we obſerve all the precepts of the moral law in the ſpiritual ſenſe, we ſhall not be fit to enter into the kingdom of Chriſt.

Ver. 21. Ye have heard it has been ſaid by them of old time, Thou ſhalt not kill, &c.] The words τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, which are tranſlated, by them of old, ſhould be to them of old; as well on account of the grammatical conſtruction, as the ſenſe of the context; becauſe the words thus cited by our Lord, are ſpoken to them of old. And

Now our Bleſſed Saviour begins to expound the ſpiritual ſenſe and meaning of the law, which the Phariſees that ſat in Moſes's ſeat, were either ignorant of, or did not teach their diſciples, and to vindicate it from the groſs and corrupt comment of the ſaid Phariſaical teachers. Where obſerve, Chriſt doth not deliver a new law, but expounds the old; doth not injoin new duties, but enforces the old ones. For the law of God was always perfect, requiring the ſons of men to love God with all their hearts, and their neighbour as themſelves. And in this expoſition of the law, Chriſt begins with the ſixth commandment, Thou ſhalt not kill, to ſhew that beſides the actual taking away of life, a perſon may violate that command by raſh anger, and by diſgraceful and reviling words; which the Phariſees looked upon as no breach of the law. Therefore he adds

Ver. 22.——Whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment.] i. e. To the dreadful judgment of God. And from hence we learn, that ſome anger may be juſt and lawful, not as it is defined to be a deſire of revenge, or doing evil to another; purely becauſe he hath done ſo to me; we being forbidden to avenge ourſelves, Rom. xii. 19. Prov. xxiv. 29. But it is lawful, being only an inward commotion and diſpleaſure of the mind, ariſing from the apprehenſions of ſome evil done to me, or to others for whom I am concerned, with a deſire to remove the evil: In this ſenſe, I ſay, anger cannot be always ſinful; becauſe,

1ſt, Some anger hath been found in that Jeſus, who did no ſin, 1 Pet. ii. 22. As when the cauſe of God and piety were concerned; "he looked upon the Phariſees with anger, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts," Mark iii. 5. Again,

2dly, Anger is implanted in our very nature: Therefore to ſay it were wholly evil in its exerciſe, would be blaſphemouſly to impeach God with being the author of that ſin. And,

Finally, It is no where ſaid we muſt not be angry at all; but only we muſt be ſlow to anger, James i. 19. and not to be haſty in our ſpirits to exert this paſſion, Prov. xiv. 29. But if this paſſion were always evil, we ought not only to be ſlow to do, but always careful to avoid falling into any occaſions of anger.

Ver. 23, 24. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to thy altar, &c.] If we have given juſt occaſion of offence to our Fellow-Chriſtians, we muſt not think that God will accept of our devotions, tho' never ſo coſtly, whether publick or private, till we are reconciled, or have reconciled ourſelves to our offended or injured neighbour.

I apply what is ſaid here of bringing our gift to the altar, to any devotion, whether it be prayer, or receiving the ſacrament of the Lord's Supper, or conſecrating part of our eſtate and goods to God's ſervice, &c. For, tho' Chriſt in that phraſe alludes to the practice and cuſtom of the Jews, who looked upon God as ſome ſoft and eaſy deity, and appeaſable by the free-offering of ſheep, turtles, pigeons, &c. upon the altar, the holieſt place in the tabernacle or temple of Jeruſalem; yet, ſince by bringing a thing, or coming to the altar of God, is ſometimes meant divine worſhip in general, as in Malach. ii. 13. Pſal. xxvi. 6. the ſame phraſe may be juſtly underſtood of Divine Worſhip, wherein we intend to expreſs our dependence on, and duty to God; and that the want of reconciliation, in caſe we have offered any ſignal injury to our fellow-creature, either in word or deed, renders the gift, or devotion, we offer, unpleaſing, or unacceptable.

Ver. 25, 26. Agree with thine adverſary, &c.] Theſe words are an appendix to thoſe immediately preceding, and contain the ſanction which is intended to enforce the duty of being reconciled to our offended brother, when quarrels and differences have riſen betwixt us. Laws looſe their force without a penalty annexed, and tho' one would think it was puniſhment enough to threaten, as Chriſt doth in the preceding verſe, that without forgiveneſs and reconciliation, our devotions are not, will not, and cannot be pleaſing to God, nor find acceptance in his ſight: yet, theſe words contain a communication of ſomething more dreadful, which ſhall undoubtedly be inflicted on the perſon that neglects to renew that love and charity, which hath been broken by quarrels, wrath, malice and offences given to our fellow-creature. But

To apprehend the true meaning of this Scripture, remember that as our Saviour has juſt in the four preceding verſes, aſſured us of the greatneſs of the ſin of inordinate anger, and reproachful language, and unwillingneſs to forgive, or to be reconciled to thoſe, whom we have offended, goes on in the text, proſecuting the ſame ſubject: And, that none might complain of God's rigour and ſeverity in caſting a man into hell-fire, for an angry or reviling expreſſion, ſhews by what degrees God proceeds to the execution of that ſentence, not only in avenging virulent and angry expreſſions, and names and titles, but uncharitableneſs and delay of reconciliation with our brethren, to whom we have given juſt occaſion of offence. For,

God offers mercy, and is willing to accept of our timely repentance, while we are now in the way, in this world (for there is no repentance in the grave) and thereupon to reverſe the judgment threatned. If we fall out with our brother, he will allow us time for repentance and reformation, upon which terms he is alſo willing to be friends with us. But if we delay that repentance and change; and forbear or neglect to be reconciled to God and man; his patience then will turn into ſeverity and juſt vengeance. Thus,

As among men he that comes to terms with his antagoniſt, and agrees with his adverſary quickly, yields betimes, and doth not ſtubbornly ſtand out againſt a man more potent than himſelf, finds favour and mercy, and kind uſage; but if he be obſtinate and inflexible, he is without any more ado brought before the judge, and by him condemned, and delivered to the officers of juſtice, and by them thrown into priſon, where he muſt lie and periſh, and never think to be releaſed, till all the debt be paid. So God is gentle and gracious, and will not refuſe him that betimes acknowledges his folly, which he hath committed, in yielding to the temptations of the Devil, and the fleſh, when they tempted him to uncharitable language and behaviour. But if God obſerves the contrary, that we perſiſt to our hatred, malice, &c. he will judge and doom that man to priſon, even to hell, where he muſt lie for ever.

This is the plain meaning of our Saviour's words. So that what is ſaid here is a ſimilitude taken by judicial proceedings uſed among men againſt their knaviſh debtors that are able to pay, and will not.

Ver. 27, 28.——Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.——Whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.] As the ſcribes and Phariſees by their traditions had corrupted the ſixth commandment, and had introduced monſtrous errors and abuſes among the Jews. So they dealt with the ſeventh in like manner, which they interpreted ſtrictly of the outward act of adultery, without concerning themſelves about laſciviouſneſs or adulterous thoughts, deſires, luſts, &c. of which particulars they ſaid nothing to the people. For which reaſon Chriſt inſtructs his diſciples how they muſt behave in order to fulfil that part of the law, i. e. not only to avoid the outward act of adultery, but to baniſh from their hearts and minds all laſcivious and ſinful thoughts. For if the looking upon a woman cauſe ſecret, lewd purpoſes, deſires, luſts, and affection in the mind, and will, the adultery and fornication, is actually committed in the heart.

Ver. 29, 30. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and caſt it from thee.——And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and caſt it from thee, &c.] Theſe words are metaphorical, and are taken from ſurgeons, who cut off a corrupt limb, hand, or foot, or arm, &c. to preſerve the other parts; and cauſe one to periſh that the other may continue whole and untainted. Thus in like manner Ovid.

> Enſe reſcindendum eſt, ne pars ſincera trahatur.
> Metamorph. lib. 1.

Therefore the meaning of our Bleſſed Saviour muſt be this, if theſe parts of thy body adminiſter occaſion to ſin; if looking upon an object, or touching it, cauſes, or is apt to cauſe evil thoughts, and impure deſires, luſts and deſigns, pluck out and cut off the occaſions of theſe inward evils. At leaſt, forbear looking that way as much as if thine eyes were plucked out, and avoid touching that object, as much as if thy hands were cut off. For, it is better for thee that thou enter into life [eternal] with one eye, or maimed, or that one of thy members ſhould periſh, i. e. it is better for thee that thou ſhouldſt miſs that ſatisfaction, which enters by thine eye, and is prompted by thy hand, than upon that account to be caſt into hell.

Ver. 33.——A writing of divorcement.] From the inſtance of adultery Chriſt paſſes to that of divorce: which tho' not contained in the decalogue, or the ten commandments, was yet a part of the Moſaic law, Deut xxiv. 1. as an indulgence granted by permiſſion to the Jews for prevention of greater evils, by reaſon of the hardneſs of their hearts. So that whereas by the law, Lev. xx. 10. and Deut. xxii. 22. the wife that lay with another man than her huſband was to be put to death with her companion in the crime. It might be in the power and choice of the abuſed huſband, to ſpare, if he thought fit, his wife's life, and to diſmiſs, or put her from him entirely, with a bill of divorce in this or ſome ſuch like form. "Of my own accord without conſtraint of any, I have determined to diſcharge, forſake, and caſt off, who haſt hitherto been my wife; and I do now in ſuch manner diſcharge, forſake, reject and caſt thee off from me, that thou mayſt be at thy own diſpoſe, and mayſt depart whither thou haſt a mind, at thy own will and pleaſure. Nor ſhall any one at any time hinder it; and be thou ſo diſcharged that thou mayſt be married to any man." Grotius on the place.

This permitted favour, intended for a mercifnl expedient, and that in the caſe of adultery only, the Jews perverſly extended to almoſt every trifling occaſion of difference that happened between them and their wives. So that, at any time, if a man grew weary of his wife, and deſired to be clear of her, he could accompliſh his end by ſuch a writing of divorcement. Wherefore

Our Lord informs his diſciples better, and that they might endeavour to quaſh ſo groſs an addition to the law, tells them that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, which word, though moſt properly and uſually ſpoken of unmarried perſons, is here by ſynedoche generis, as the Grammarians ſpeak, uſed for adultery, cauſeth her to commit adultery, if, according to the liberty granted in the bill of divorce, ſhe marry another huſband; and whoſoever ſhall marry her ſo divorced, committeth adultery alſo. And

Here it is to be obſerved, that this was a mere Phariſaical trick, and no part of the law; and therefore our Saviour doth not ſay in this caſe as in the former. "Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid (by Moſes and the Prophets) to them of old time;" but barely it hath been ſaid, viz. by ſome of the ſcribes and Phariſees, who palm upon you their own inventions for the word of God; ſee Matt. xix. 7.

In fine, this inſtruction of our Saviour's, is no contradiction to the law of Moſes, but raiſing an imperfect into a more perfect law; for the law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of better hope did.

Ver. 33—Thou ſhalt not forſwear thy ſelf, thou ſhalt perform unto the Lord thine oath.] We have the ſenſe of theſe words in Levit. xix. 12. but the words themſelves ſeem to be a paraphraſe of the ancient expoſition of the law among the Jews upon that law in Leviticus, where it is, "Ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſely, neither ſhalt thou prophane the name of thy God," which words it is like were paraphraſed by the words in the text; and therefore Chriſt does not ſay that the text is the letter of the law, but only "it hath been ſaid by them (or thoſe expoſitors) of old." Others have thought that this text was a comment made by the ancient Jews upon the third commandment, or that they relate to Numb. xxx. 2. Yet, however it be, or whoever were the authors of this ſaying, it muſt be confeſſed that they ſpake conformable to the will of God, and therefore theſe words are in effect a divine precept, and of perpetual obligation. Now,

An oath is a ſolemn and religious calling of God to witneſs the truth; which if it be falſe, or ſhall be broken or not performed, imprecates the heavy wrath of God, and his judgments upon thoſe that take it. This is the import of that ſaying, Deut. vi. 13. where God directs the Iſraelites, that if there be a neceſſity for their ſwearing, That they ſhould ſwear by his name. And for this reaſon it is called the oath of God, or the oath of the Lord, Exod. xxii. 10.

An oath is either aſſertory or promiſſory, it either aſſerts and affirms the truth of what is paſt, or of what is preſent, or, we promiſe to ſay or do, or to not ſay or do a thing. The former is exemplified in Numb. v. 19. and is commonly uſed in courts of judicature, the latter is found in Gen. xxiv. 9. and Joſh. ix. 15. &c. and is uſed in contracts, commerce and compacts. And the words in the text, though they include the aſſertory do chiefly relate to a promiſſory oath. Hence we ſee that

In every oath, a man hath to deal with two parties, God and man, with God as the ſearcher of hearts, and the grand witneſs of the truth, and with man, for whoſe ſatisfaction, and acquieſcence in the matter the oath is taken, which ſhews the difference between an oath and a vow. For in a formal vow God is immediately addreſſed, ſo that God and the party vowing are alone concerned, but in an oath man as well as God is made a party.

In every oath man obliges and ties himſelf to the manifeſtation of the truth, not only becauſe it is a voluntary act and promiſe without the performance, whereof he cannot be juſt, and ſhall be abandoned by human ſociety; but becauſe he engages the moſt Sacred Being in the ſaid promiſe, and gives God for his ſecurity, even that God who hath not only power, but is concerned in juſtice to avenge the perjury. Now,

Some will ſay, it is therefore better not to ſwear, yea they have ſaid, it is not lawful to ſwear.

I anſwer, in the word of the Lord, who hath ſaid, "by myſelf have I ſworn," Gen. xxii. 16. compared with Heb. vi. 13. and Pſ. xcv. 11. The Angel alſo in Daniel, "lift up his hands to heaven, and ſware by him that lives for ever and ever," chap. xii. 7. And ſo it can be proved from many texts of Scripture, that the uſe of an oath was lawful to the Jews. See Gen. xiv. 22, 23. xxvi. 31. xxxi. 53. Exod. xxii. 11. Jer. iv. 2. Ezek. xvi. 59. But,

The greateſt difficulty is, whether it is lawful for a Chriſtian to take an oath, for not only Chriſt in the following verſe ſaith, But I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all, but we find the primitive Chriſtians were very cautious how they ventured upon an oath, even on ſolemn and ſerious occaſions, thinking a Chriſtian ought to be believed upon his bare word and affirmation. Now

As to the words ſwear not at all, they are not to be extended to the utmoſt latitude, they will abſtractly bear; but their univerſality muſt be reſtrained to the ſubject and matter, meaſured by our Saviours hope and deſign, and by the Sins he intends to reprove; even as that ſaying of his in John x. 8. where he tells us "that all that came before him were thieves and robbers" where alſo it is evident this general expreſſion muſt be reſtrained to thoſe who gave out that they were the Meſſiah, elſe John the Baptiſt and all the Prophets of old muſt be comprehended under the notion of thieves and robbers. So when Paul ſaith, "all things are lawful for me," 1 Cor. vi. 12. it muſt neceſſarily be reſtrained to things not forbidden, elſe an inference might be drawn from the words that Paul thought lying, and ſtealing and fornication were lawful for him. After the ſame manner the expreſſion, "I became all things to all men," 1. Cor. ix. 22. muſt be underſtood of things indifferent, elſe it might be interpreted of his becoming an idolater, to pleaſe idolaters; and ſo here ſwear not at all muſt neceſſarily be reſtrained to the ſins Chriſt intended to reprove, which were the leſſer oaths, as they call them, uſed in common diſcourſe, and in ordinary tranſactions and negotiations: So that Chriſt denies not but that upon extraordinary occaſions, before ſuperiors and at their command, in a ſerious and weighty matter, a difference may be ended, and a doubtful truth confirmed by an oath, the lawfulneſs of which we are alſo aſſured of from the practice of the Apoſtle Paul. For,

This Apoſtle who could not but know his maſters mind did upon extraordinary occaſions make uſe of thoſe religious aſſeverations; for what are thoſe expreſſions of his we meet with, "I call God for record upon my ſoul, God is my witneſs behold before God I lie not. They are really ſolemn oaths. And therefore it cannot altogether be unlawful for a Chriſtian to uſe them upon ſome occaſions; not to mention, that the Goſpel doth not reverſe the law of nature, which I could prove hath taught moſt civilized nations to have recourſe to them in things doubtful. But I ſhall treat of this ſubject more at large in James v. 12.

Ver. 34,—37, But I ſay unto you ſwear not at all, neither by heaven — Nor by the earth, &c.] The oaths Chriſt chiefly alludes to, and doth ſo ſtrictly forbid, were the oaths, which moſt of the Jews had uſed themſelves to in their diſcourſes, dealings and communications, and had been taught by the Phariſees to making nothing of, or to look upon as harmleſs, and ſuch as inferred no obligation of performance; ſo that there are two things that Chriſt reproves here. Firſt, their uſing any thing like an oath in their ordinary communications. Secondly, the particular oaths by any creature, ſuch as Heaven and Earth, and Jeruſalem, &c. That in this prohibition Chriſt did not mean the taking an oath in a judicial court when the nature of the thing, and ſuperiours require it, is evident from hence, becauſe ſuch oath by heaven, or earth, or Jeruſalem, &c. were never uſed among the Jews upon thoſe publick occaſions; for, then they ſwore by the Great creator of heaven and earth, as the Lord lives, God do ſo unto me, and more, &c. and conſequently this prohibition muſt be underſtood of oaths in ordinary communications, as appears from ver. 37.

In fine, Chriſt only intends to prove, that their excuſes and pretences of not taking the name of God in vain, when they ſware by heaven and earth, &c. were impertinent and frivolous; for in ſwearing by the creatures they did effect ſwearing by the maker of them; and when they ſwore by heaven, they ſwore by the God whoſe throne is in heaven; when by the earth, their oath was as injurious and offenſive to God, as if they had ſworn by him whoſe footſtool the earth is; when by Jeruſalem, it was as bad as ſwearing by the great King, God bleſſed for evermore, who had taken that city into his peculiar care and protection; and when by their heads, it was nothing leſs than ſwearing by that God, whoſe power and goodneſs appeared in the ſmalleſt things about them, ſuch as the hairs of their heads, which they had ſo little command of, that they could not in the root of it, turn a white one black, or a black one white. This is the thing Chriſt declares to the ſinners of his time; and the ground of his aſſertion is plainly this; becauſe in an oath, not pretences, but the nature and import of the thing are conſidered by Almighty God. Men always ſwear by a greater, viz. a ſupreme being. This is an eternal rule, and whatever trivial things may be brought, or put into an oath, that doth not alter the nature of it, which hath ſtill relation to God, who is the creator of all the leſſer things men ſwear by, and is as much prophaned by ſuch oaths, as if they had particularly named him. See the notes on ver. 33.

Ver. 37. Let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay, &c.] An excellent rule in converſation. The meaning is not that we in our anſwers and diſcourſes, muſt not uſe any other words than yea or nay, according to the queſtion propoſed. That is contrary to the example of he that lays down this rule, which example is the beſt comment on the text; whoſe general intent is to teach us, that to avoid greater ſins, we are to ſhun the leſſer. To avoid ſwearing in diſcourſe, we muſt allow ourſelves in nothing that comes to more than bare affirmations and negations. To direct us that in our diſcourſes we are to be calm, not to be moved into paſſion, and from thence into aſſeverations, and impertinent confirmations of what we ſay or promiſe. But to confine ourſelves to the rules of plainneſs and moderation in all our ſpeeches and diſcourſes, keeping within the compaſs of plain affirmations and negations, without the unneceſſary and irreligious addition of an oath.

Ver. 38. — An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. But I ſay, &c.] Theſe words are properly an abridgment of Exod. xxi. 23. And it is called the law of retaliation, in uſe not only among the Jews, but among the ancient Greeks and Romans, who puniſhed the perſon, who had unjuſtly hurt another in a certain limb or part, ſuppoſe the eye, tooth, foot or hand, with the loſs of that part, which he had taken from his brother. But this law did not give the Jew liberty to exerciſe any private revenge, he could not by this law, I ſay, on his own accord wound him in the eye, foot, or tooth, &c. who had wounded him in any of thoſe parts, for the whole matter was to be laid before the judges to be determined, Exod. xxi. 22. So far the Jews acted by God's permiſſion, which the Phariſees by their traditions applied to, or interpreted of the lawfulneſs of private revenge, and returning evil for evil, making that a duty which at the beſt was but a permiſſion, vouchſafed to carnal man, to prevent a greater evil, ſuch as murder, and exceſſive private revenges. Here then Chriſt condemns the revengeful doctrine of the Phariſees, and informs his diſciples, that they muſt fulfill the law by bearing injuries patiently. And therefore he adds,

Ver. 39. But I ſay unto you, &c.] Who are my diſciples, that ye reſiſt not evil men, when for my ſake they perſecute you; and if any one ſmites thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other alſo.

In which phraſe, and the two following, in the 40, and 41 verſes, repreſenting to the reader the perſon, property, and liberty, the three great privileges of every free-man, our Lord inſtructs his diſciples, that it were better for them, and they ought rather to bear injuries; to ſuffer wrong twice over, than once to revenge themſelves after the example of the Phariſees.

Ver. 42. Give to him that asketh, &c.] By this it appears, that it is ſcarce enough for us to prove ourſelves the diſciples of Jeſus by bearing injuries, without retorting. But that Chriſtianity teacheth to do good for evil; to ſhew kindneſs in giving or lending, as our ability, and the petitioners neceſſity may anſwer, even to thoſe, who have done us wrong.

Ver. 43. —— Hate thine enemy.] Theſe words have been foiſted into the law by the ſpirit, which had corrupted ſeveral other parts thereof, as already obſerved, God commands us "to love our neighbour," Lev. xix. 18. but no where to hate our enemy, on the contrary to help him, Exod. xxiii. 4, 5. The reaſon for ſuch a corruption therefore appears to be this. The Phariſees, who had got into the Prieſthood, and could be ſatiſfied with nothing leſs than the whole ſpiritual and temporal government of this nation, ſtuck at nothing to raiſe their power and authority among the people, nor ſcrupled to corrupt the law to help them out in their wicked deſigns, one of which was to deſtroy, or at leaſt to cruſh all thoſe who oppoſed their meaſures, theſe they called enemies, becauſe they were not their diſciples, and affirmed that it was lawful to hate them upon that account, and if they had a fair opportunity to avenge themſelves of them. Wherefore Chriſt teaches us in the next verſes to avoid and reject that wicked doctrine of hatred, and commands his diſciples to love their enemies, in ſuch a manner, and for ſuch reaſons as are ſpecified in the context.

Ver. 48. Be ye therefore perfect even as your father, which is in heaven is perfect.] Theſe words either relate to the duty immediately preceding (of loving our enemies) ſee ver. 45. or to all the virtues and ſelf-denials preſſed and recommended in this chapter. If to the duty, they import an impartial and univerſal charity. If to all the virtues, it imports that we are to be ſincere and conſcientious in the practice of them all, of one as well as of another, even as our heavenly father exerciſes all his perfections for the good of mankind and the whole creation, and particularly for the good of thoſe that love him. All which may be reſolved into this propoſition, That a Chriſtian's perfection conſiſts in a chearful imitation of the perfections of his father which is in heaven, "we muſt be followers of God as dear children," Eph. v. 1.

It is not then here intended, that we ſhould arrive at the perfection of the Divine nature, all that is required of men and Chriſtians is a limited perfection, which amounts to no more than ſincerity, which is an evangelical perfection, and ſuch as God, for Chriſt's ſake, is willing to accept of.

CHAP. vi. Ver. 1. Take heed that you do not your alms before men to be ſeen of them, &c.] This was a notorious cuſtom of the Phariſees againſt whoſe pride and oſtentation, Chriſt, having ſhewn how they had corrupted the law, deſcends to caution his diſciples, and give them proper rules, whereby their alms and prayers might obtain their reward in the ſight of God, who will never accept of thoſe offered up in a vaunting manner, with an immediate view to deceive their neighbour, or to gain thereby a popular praiſe; for all ſuch will come ſhort of a reward from God," Luke vi. 24.

Ver. 3.—Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth.] This is a proverbial kind of ſpeech, ſignifying a moſt concealed ſecret, i. e. Don't blaze abroad thine acts of charity, or be not the publiſher of thine own praiſe.

Ver. 4.—Openly.] In the clear light of the reſurrection of the juſt.

Ver. 6.—Enter into thy cloſet.] Withdraw to ſome private corner, and be content, that thou haſt God for the witneſs of thy devotions.

Ver. 7. When ye pray uſe not vain repetitions.] This was a caution againſt the battology, or tedious repetitions in the Phariſaical prayers, of which hereafter in Mark xii. 40.

Ver. 8.—Your father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.] God perfectly knowing what we have need of, and being entirely diſpoſed, by his eſſential goodneſs to ſuccour us, will not that we ask or ſollicit him like a man, whom we may miſtruſt; or as if we thought to change his eternal decrees by our importunity; but he is pleaſed that we offer up our neceſſitous petitions in a few words, which ſhall acknowledge our entire dependence on him, and ſet forth his great mercies towards us.

Ver. 9. After this manner therefore pray ye.] In handling of theſe words it has been enquired, whether Chriſt thereby deſigned to give only a general model or directory to all our devotions? or, a particular form of words to be uſed by all Chriſtians? They that maintain extempore prayer, aſſert the former queſtion. But the whole body of ancient interpreters, and the ſober part of the modern, ſays the learned Dr. Mangey, agree, "That this command of our Saviour extends not only to the ſubject matter, but to the form of words here ſet forth. However, in favour of the aſſerters of the former opinion,

It muſt be obſerved, that the words, after this manner, might eaſily lead an unlearned, or unthinking perſon to believe, that they were only a general direction to pray to that, or to the like effect. Which is wholly owing to the inaccuracy of the Engliſh Verſion, which ought to have rendred the Greek οὕτως, not by after this manner, but by the demonſtrative particle thus, as thus pray ye, or ye ſhall thus pray; and this manner of tranſlation is confirmed from the parallel place in Luke xi. 2. where there ſeems no diſcretionary liberty left to men, either to uſe or not to uſe this form; for, they are poſitively commanded when they pray to ſay, Our Father, &c. Therefore,

This granted, The Lord's Prayer here preſcribed is always to be a part of our devotions; and not only the conſtant acceptation of the words in this ſenſe, and the practice of the ancient Church in all ages. But the words themſelves alſo naturally lead us to this ſenſe of them; Hierom. lib. 3. againſt Pelagius; Auguſtin's Homilies; Gregory the Great's Epiſt. and Cyril. Hieroſol. Catech. 5.

This prayer was held in ſo much reverence by the pureſt ages of Chriſtianity, that none were admitted to join in it, except they were in actual communion with the Chriſtian Church, Chryſoſtome Hom. in Matt. Auſtin againſt Pelagius. And with a great deal of reaſon, becauſe the ſucceſs of this prayer is only founded in the reconciliation to God by his Son. "The haſtening of God's kingdom, the forgiveneſs of our treſpaſſes, and the deliverance from our ſpiritual enemies," are only due to us as Chriſtians, by vertue of our relation to our Lord Jeſus; the bleſſings here asked for, do ſo much exceed both human merit and underſtanding, that they could neither be diſcovered without the preaching, nor claimed without the ſatisfaction of a Redeemer.

It is further obſervable, that as we in this prayer profeſs the faith and the hope; ſo likewiſe do we promiſe the practice of a Chriſtian. Every article of it is a leſſon of ſome virtue, and ſuppoſeth our own honeſt endeavours to improve thoſe ſpiritual perfections, for which we here pray. The Lord's Prayer is not only a direction to our deſires, but a rule of behaviour; and as Tertullian obſerves, contains an abridgment of all the Goſpel-precepts, Tertul. on prayer.

In ſhort, it ſets forth the full extent of our hope, and the conditions of it; and ſhews in one ſhort view, both what we are entitled to ask by the merits of our Saviour, and what we are obliged to do by the rule of his Goſpel.

—Our father which art in heaven.] God is called father as he is the creator of the world, and all things therein; in which ſenſe the prophet of old ſays, "O Lord thou art our father, we are the clay, and thou the potter, and we all are the work of thy hand," Iſa. lxiv. 8. when we therefore look up to heaven and pierce the clouds with theſe words, we can't fail of acts of humility, acknowledging that it is he that hath made us and not we ourſelves; and rendering to him as moſt due the glory of all our actions and ſucceſs. Again,

He is called father in reſpect of his care and preſervation of his creatures. In which ſenſe, the devout and grateful Pſalmiſt, ſaying, "Thou O God art the thing that I long for, thou are my hope, even from my youth. Through thee have I been holden up ever ſince I was born; thou art he that took me our of my mothers womb; my praiſe ſhall be always of thee," Pſ. lxxi. 5, 6. and let him that ſays the Lord's prayer be never ſo high, or never ſo low, when he repeats theſe words Our father muſt be ſenſible of God's bounty.

Laſtly, God is our father, by right of our redemption through Chriſt our Saviour, and thus when a Chriſtian ſays, Our father which art in heaven, profeſſes his faith in a redemption that is paſt, and that God is in a peculiar manner become his father in the ſaid act of redemption, before which there was neither command nor allowance to call God father. Therefore when he prophetically promiſes, "that he will be to them a father, and they ſhall be to him as Sons," he repreſents that nearneſs of relation that would thence after be founded by the Meſſiah among Chriſtians. So, this expreſſion of father in the Chriſtian ſenſe, which is the ſenſe of this prayer, ſpeaks the priviledge of our redemption, "by which means we that were afar off, are brought to be near," and are treated as children in the aſſurance of an "inheritance, eternal, incorruptable, undefiled, reſerved in the heavens for us."

This is then the ſenſe in which every one muſt be ſuppoſed to call God their father in this prayer: Firſt, in the capacity of men profeſſing him to be the giver of life, breath and all things, and then in quality of Chriſtians owning him the author of eternal life by the redemption. Chryſoſtome on this place.

—Our] Our Saviour doth not once in the whole Goſpel ſay our father but in the Lord's prayer, where he ſpeaks not his own words, but ſuch words as he directs his diſciples to offer to God in prayer. Wherever beſides he mentions God, he calls him my father, or your heavenly father, ſhewing by this diſtinction, that he only in a true ſenſe is the Son of God, and therefore of the ſame divine nature with his father. See John v. 18. xx. 17. ſo that he by nature, but we only by his grace and redemption call God our father. Conſequently, as when we ſtyle ourſelves Sons, we mean no more than the priviledges of Chriſtianity. So when we ſtyle him ſo, we ſhould mean no leſs than that he is one with his father, and by that, over all, God bleſſed for ever. Rom. ix. 5.

——Which art in heaven.] The Jews being filled with a vain notion, that all worſhip was confined to Jeruſalem, and that their prayers were not ſo well aſſured of acceptance from any other place; which notion was founded upon that glorious appearance that always attended the tabernacle in that place. Our Saviour to oppoſe this narrow opinion, commands us to pray to our father in heaven, teaching us thereby that God is omnipreſent, that our prayers have equal acceſs to him from all parts of the world, and that his goodneſs is always ready to help us.

——Hallowed be thy name.] This is the firſt petition of the Lord's prayer, beſeeching that every one may pay a juſt reſpect and homage to the name of our God, and by that to his perſon and authority. We here pray that an inward reverence may every where accompany an outward reſpect; and that all his creatures may worſhip and praiſe him. We in this petition expreſs a true zeal for God's ſervice, and the moſt beneficial charity to each other; ſince the eſtabliſhment of his worſhip would bring along with it, univerſal order and peace to men. In ſhort we pray for two things; that God would in his due time, "enlighten the dark corners of the earth, that his ways may be known upon earth, his ſaving health among all nations," and that thoſe who already know him, may live anſwerably to that "knowledge, and adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour, in all things."

This is what may be properly gathered from the nature of holineſs, as it is found in the Deity and manhood. This word, from whence comes hallowed, ſignifies in general a ſeparation of things or perſons from common uſe, and is for that reaſon promiſcuouſly attributed to God and his creatures, Pſ. lxxvii. 13. Iſa. vi. 3. But with this great difference, that in God it is the eſſential beatitude of his nature, that can never change or be diminiſhed, but in creatures it is only relative, and encreaſeth or leſſens according to their wills. Hence when ſanctification is applied to God, as in this place, it is, it means only to confeſs and attribute to him that tranſcendent holineſs, which he hath independently of our worſhip and praiſes, and to wiſh that all mankind may be ſenſible of it.

Ver. 10. Thy kingdom come.] i. e. Eſtabliſh thy Son's ſpiritual kingdom in this world, by thy word and ſpirit, and deſtroy the kingdom of Satan and ſin; and bring to perfection both theſe works in thy kingdom of glory, Luke xxii. 18. 1 Cor. xvi. 24. This kingdom then ſignifies the viſible Church of Chriſt, and by howſoever different appellations of the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of his dear Son, or the kingdom of Chriſt, it is called, it only means the ſame kingdom, in different lights. As it is called the kingdom of God, it ſets forth thoſe more perfect methods of obedience to his will, which we are taught by the Goſpel. As it is called the kingdom of Chriſt, it repreſents the immediate founder and governor of it, our Lord Jeſus. And laſtly, as it is called the kingdom of heaven, it ſignifies that merciful diſpenſation, which will carry us thither, which muſt now improve us in grace, and hereafter conſummate us in glory. But

Some may ſay, how can we now pray for the coming of this kingdom, ſeeing that the Church of Chriſt has been come for ſeveral ages?

This kingdom, it is anſwered began in John (ſee the notes on Matt. ii. 2.) when he preached repentance, and continued to encreaſe by the miniſtry of our Saviour and his Apoſtles. But then as it is not come to that wideneſs in its extent, and that purity in its members, that the Divine wiſdom deſigned, and our Saviour's ſufferings deſerved; we therefore pray that God would in his due time haſten thoſe bleſſings.

That this kingdom of God is not come in its full perfection on earth, appears from the narrow extent of Chriſtianity, compared with Matt. xxiv. 14. Pſ. lxxii. 2 Cor. iv. 4. Rom. xi. 25. for the bounds of Chriſtianity do not extend at preſent to one ſixth part of the known world. Again,

This kingdom is not come, becauſe there is a want of due obedience in its members. A government cannot be ſaid to be perfect, where the laws and conſtitutions of it, have not their due force; and this hath been generally the caſe of our Saviour's kingdom. Our faith ſhone with the greateſt luſtre, at its firſt riſing, but "all that generation were gathered to their fathers, and there aroſe another generation after them, which knew not the Lord, nor the works which he had done for Iſrael," Judg. ii. 2. The lives of the modern Chriſtians are much degenerated from the precepts and example of the great patriarch of their ſouls, practiſing hatred and revenge, which are contrary to Chriſt's ſpiritual kingdom; in which ſenſe we pray that God's kingdom may come, or that the profeſſors of Chriſtianity may turn unto the Lord with all their hearts.

Finally, the kingdom of God cannot be ſaid to come, till the pious and faithful members thereof receive their reward in Heaven. And in this ſenſe moſt people underſtand this petition. For firſt a kingdom cannot be ſaid to be perfect, ſo long as its ſubjects are under hardſhips and oppreſſions; which is the ordinary caſe of the true members of Chriſt's Church, neither can his kingdom be ſaid to be accompliſhed, till his faithful ſervants are made ſharers in it, and they that have already ſuffered with him, be admitted to reign with him.

—— Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.] The will of God is our ſanctification, 1 Theſſ. it contains all thoſe rules of duty, that he hath impoſed upon his creatures in order to make them holy, as he is holy, and perfect as their father is perfect. It is called therefore in reſpect of our own narrow and imperfect diſpoſitions the good and acceptable and perfect will of God, Rom. xii. 2. and is ſet forth in thoſe ſeveral laws, which he hath made the condition and meaſure of his favour; which laws are that portion of natural light with which he hath bleſſed every one; and the more perfect copy of it is the revelation of his Son from Heaven, which muſt be done or executed in all its precepts, as willingly and faithfully on earth by men, as it is in heaven by angels, whoſe obedience ought to be a pattern to men.

Ver. 11. Give us this day our daily bread.] This is the firſt petition in this form, wherein we pray particularly for our private neceſſities. Yet ſome of the ancients have thought that the ſpiritual food and nouriſhment, received in the Holy Sacrament, were the ſubject of this petition. But the literal interpretation is more to be approved, which by daily bread, underſtands no other than the temporal neceſſaries of life; and our Saviour by commanding us to pray for them, teacheth us to diſtinguiſh between the inſenſibility or careleſneſs of the Stoick, and the religious faith and concern of a Chriſtian, who is here directed under the name of bread; to pray for all temporal neceſſaries of life, and to avoid aſking any thing contrary to the rules of the Goſpel, James iv. 2. This petition therefore ſhews, that nothing more than neceſſary things deſerve the care of a Chriſtian, and that even that care is made ſuperfluous by an humble truſt in God, Matt. vi. 31.

The ſubſtance therefore of the petition is this, Thou, O ever merciful Lord, beſtow on us all needful things, as well for this life preſent, as for the everlaſting; diſtributing them unto us according to our need by little and little; that being never utterly deſtitute, we may not fail, but ſtill perſiſt in thankſgiving unto thee our father, and the author of all goodneſs; and that not poſſeſſing them in too much abundance all at once, but having a daily dependance on thy bounty and merciful kindneſs, we may not reſt ſecure, within ourſelves, and ſo forget to call upon thee, Prov. xxx. 8. 9.

Ver. 12. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.] Now the debts we in this place pray to be delivered from are plainly by Luke in a parallel place ſaid to be our ſins againſt God; and our debtors are thoſe, who have offended us, and not made reparation and reſtitution. This explication of the words is alſo warranted from verſe 14, 15. and from the parable of the unmerciful ſervant.

—— As we forgive.] We do not here pretend to give a law or an example to God by our moſt imperfect one; ſeeing we all ought to take example by him, Eph. iv. 32. Col. iii. 13. Nor do we hereby ground our prayers upon the merits of our works, Dan. ix. 18. But we here ſubſcribe to God's order to pardon our neighbour, if we purpoſe to be pardoned ourſelves at the throne of grace. And then the words of the text may be properly paraphraſed in this manner. "Let thy favour, O Lord, be to me in proportion to my affection to my brethren; blot out my ſins, as I for thy ſake have pardoned their injuries. Let my prayers for pardon have the ſame acceptance at thy tribunal, which their entreaties have had with me. I am willing to be accepted or rejected at the laſt day upon thoſe terms; and deſire to meet with no more mercy in the next world than I have practiſed in this; becauſe thou haſt ſaid, "bleſſed are the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy," Matt. v. 7. See the note upon that Scripture.

Ver. 13. Lead us not into temptation.] Or, as I have it in an old tranſlation publiſhed by order of K. Henry VIII. Let us not be lead into temptation. By which, we are taught, as in the former petition to avoid the guilt and puniſhment of paſt ſins, ſo in this, to prevent the danger of ſinning for the future. We firſt asked forgiveneſs from God's mercy; and now protection from his providence and aſſiſting grace from his ſpirit, that we may be delivered, not abſolutely from the ſeveral trials of human virtue, which more or leſs is the condition of human nature whilſt on earth; but from thoſe additional trials that ſurprize. We herein ſuppoſe, that temptations may overtake us, but we deſire that they may be ſuch as are common to men, ſuch as we may have either means to eſcape a virtue, to go through. So we thereby only deſire to be diſcharged from ſuch trials, as make our perſeverance in well doing not only difficult, but doubtful.

The Calviniſts have taken occaſion from theſe words to charge God with the concurrence to wicked actions, in flat contradiction to the Apoſtle James, who ſays, "Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man," chap. i. 13.

— But deliver us from evil.] Modern interpreters have generally underſtood by evil thoſe calamities which beſal men either in their temporal or ſpiritual condition. They apply the word as being general or moral evil; and therefore mean by it either the external harms which they ſuffer, or the ſins which they commit. But that this is not the genuine ſenſe of the place will appear, not only from the tenour of the foregoing petition, where we expreſs our fears of evil in general, under the word Temptations; but eſpecially from the very conſtruction of the Greek word τȣ̃ πονηρȣ̃, which ſignifies, the author of our fear and the prompter of thoſe temptations; and therefore it ſhould be rendered deliver us from that evil one, the tempter, the Devil, who is ſo called by way of eminency, for his tranſcendent rebellion againſt Heaven and perpetual malice to mankind. See Eph. xi. 2. vi. 12. John xii. 31. And therefore in praying to be delivered from the evil one, we particularly mean to be delivered from that ſort of pride, or preſuming confidence, of our own merit and capacities in oppoſition to God; this is the great artifice of the Devil, and agrees beſt with the ſin that threw him out of heaven; Ezek. xxviii. 15. Iſa. xiv. 13. and for this reaſon, he who is lifted up with this pride is ſaid to fall into the condemnation of the devil, 1 Tim. iii. 3. 6. who then finds no difficulty to bring in infidelity, as he always endeavours, for it is his buſineſs, 1 Theſ. iii. 5. But if he finds that he can't conquer this way, he then ſtrives to work upon us by deſpondency and dejection. Therefore ſays the Apoſtle "if any one be afflicted he ſhould pray," to be delivered from the evil ſpirit, that beſets him, even as it did king Saul, 1 Sam. xvi. 14. And theſe are the ſeveral temptations which may be properly called thoſe of the Devil.

— For thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory.] It muſt be owned that this clauſe or doxology is not mentioned by Luke, nor to be found in many copies of Matthew; yet as the Syriack verſion, and the Greek liturgies, and moſt of the ancient copies of this Evangeliſt patronize, this concluſion of the Lord's prayer we admit it; as alſo becauſe it was a familiar doxology of the Jews in their ancient ſtate, 1 Chron. xxix. 11, &c. and moreover it is very improbable, that the pious fathers of the Greek church ſhould preſume to add their own inventions to a form of our Lord's own compoſing. Now,

The import of this clauſe ſeems to be this, "thou, O Lord, art the only abſolute and rightful Sovereign, and all men are concerned to honour thee, and obey thy laws. Thou art the ſupreme governor of the world, and King of thy church; therefore let thy kingdom come, and thy will be done. And as thine is the power, or as thou art inveſted with all power, give us daily bread, and forgive us our daily ſins; for herein we acknowledge thy power to ſupply our temporal neceſſities, and authority to forgive or pardon our ſpiritual infirmities. And ſo, thine will be the glory by us, and from us, when thou ſhalt vouchſafe to grant theſe our petitions.

— For ever and ever.] i. e. thy kingdom, O heavenly Father! is eternal, thy power eternal, and thy glory eternal. The God to whom we pray has been always merciful to them that ſeek him in prayer; and will be ſo to us alſo, if we petition him as we ought, nothing doubting, for he is the ſame, yeſterday, to day, and for ever.

Ver. 14. For if we forgive men their treſpaſſes.] This is a good leſſon for us to learn: for, though God promiſes remiſſion of ſins to him that forgiveth others, yet it is not ſaid nor included that this virtue can alone obtain favour with God, if other Chriſtian duties are neglected. For, though negative precepts are abſolute, and he that forgiveth not, ſhall never be forgiven: yet affirmative promiſes, admit of this limitation, ſi cætera ſint paria, if no other condition of ſalvation ſhall be wanting. As for example, He that heareth not, the Goſpel revealed to him, ſhall be damned is abſolutely true: But, he that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved, is only true; if he who ſhall be baptized perform the condition of his baptiſmal covenant, when he is in a capacity ſo to do. Or,

This promiſe is made to one who from his heart forgives his brother; becauſe he who doth thus forgive all the offences of his brother, in obedience to God's commands, and from a ſincere deſire to obtain forgiveneſs of God, will by the ſame motives be induced to do whatever elſe is neceſſary to obtain favour and acceptance with him.

Ver. 16, 17, 18. When ye faſt, be not as the hypocrites.] Do nothing which may ſignify you faſt for any worldly view, to gain applauſe from men, by affecting a ſullen countenance, like as the Phariſees do, who vitiate and diſcolour their faces, and aboliſh their native complection, for hypocriſy can disfigure the face by painting it black and ſable, as well as pride can do it with red and white. On the contrary he adviſes us to anoint the head and waſh the face, we to look as at other times, uſing our ordinary garb and attire, and not to affect any thing that may make us look like mourners, when really we are not ſo. Hence,

We ſhould note, that though hypocrites by their dejected countenances and mournful habits, do ſeek to gain an extraordinary reputation for piety and devotion; yet the ſincere Chriſtian is to be abundantly ſatisfied with God's approbation of his ſervices, and with the ſilent applauſe of his own conſcience.

Ver. 19, 20. Lay not up for your ſelves treaſures upon Earth, — But in Heaven.] By the word treaſure we are not to underſtand every thing which we lay up for the future, provided we be ready, when the glory of God, or the duties of charity require us to part with it; for merchandize and husbandry cannot be carried on without ſomething laid up in ſtore; but that is in the forbidden ſenſe our treaſure, which we chiefly prize, delight in and ſet our hearts upon, ver. 21. and that which we do chiefly ſpend our time and ſtudy to purſue and proſecute, with the neglect, and to the hazard of our heavenly treaſures, which are thoſe good habits that will bring us to an inheritance in glory. Therefore,

Thoſe and the following words to the end of the chapter contain an excellent diſſuaſive from an inordinate affection to, and from an anxious ſollicitude about the good or comfortable things of this life. — Taken from the conſideration of the nature of them, they being fading, and ſubject to caſualty, ver. 19. —— From the miſchief of them, when our hearts are ſet upon them, and our minds are anxious about them. For, "they take of our hearts from thoſe true ſpiritual and laſting bleſſings, ver. 20, 21. which we ſhould primarily and chiefly proſecute, ver. 33. They corrupt all our actions and turn them into deeds of darkneſs, ver. 22, 23. They rival God, and take of our affections due to him, ver. 24. They ſhew great want of faith, and truſt in God, ver. 30." They add to the evils of this preſent life, ver, 24. tormenting the mind with cares, which are fruitleſs, ver. 27. and needleſs, ſeeing our heavenly father knoweth our wants, ver 32. and he, who is ſo liberal in making proviſion for the graſs of the field, and for the fowls of the air, will not be wanting in his proviſions for the neceſſities of his children, ver. 26, 28, 29, 30. And they are heatheniſh, for after all theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek. ver. 32.

Ver. 22, 23.——If thine eye be ſingle, thy body will be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body ſhall be full of darkneſs.] By the ſingle eye, is meant a liberal perſon; and by the evil eye, is intended the covetous man that layeth up treaſures upon the earth. This phraſe is not peculiar to our Saviour in this place; it was in uſe before among the Sacred Writers, and ſpoke proverbially among the Jews, who were wont to ſay, "He that gives a boon, or gift, let him do it with a good eye," i. e. freely, or liberally. So the author of Eccluſ. ſays, "Give thy firſt-fruits ἐνάγαθῷ ὀφθαλμῷ, with a good eye. See alſo Prov. xi. 25. James i. 5. Rom. xii. 8. 2 Cor. viii. 2. ix. 11, 13. On the contrary, the evil eye, is the covetous eye that repines at his neighbour's good. See Prov. xxviii. 22. xxiii. 6. Eccluſ. xiv. 10. Tob. iv. 16. Matt. xx. 15.

Hence we learn, That as the eye gives light to the body, to lead it ſafely in the way, ſo the eye, or mind, free from covetouſneſs, and ready to relieve the wants of Chriſt's needy members, will be a light to the Chriſtian, to lead him in the way of life: Whereas coveteouſneſs being the root of all evil, he that hath this evil eye muſt be led by it into evil, and walk in darkneſs, and in that way that leads to utter darkneſs; for the friendſhip of this world is enmity to God, James iv. 4. 1 John ii. 15.

Ver. 24. No man can ſerve two maſters.] This is an excellent rule whereby we may infallibly diſcern what we do prevalently love in any caſe, even that which we cleave to, with neglect of that which ſtands in competition with it.

The two maſters here ſpoken of are God and mammon, or the world. God is our maſter by creation, preſervation and redemption; he has appointed us our work, and ſecured to us our wages. But the world can only be ſaid to be our maſter by intruſion, uſurpation, and a general eſtimation of thoſe who make it their chief good, or chief joy. Now,

Theſe two maſters have contrary intereſts, and ſend forth contrary commands to their ſervants: But where commands interfere, and intereſt claſh, it is impoſſible to obey both; therefore no man can pretend to ſerve both God and the world, tho' he may ſerve God with the world, while he makes the goods of the world ſubſervient to the glory of God.

Ver. 25.——Take no thought for your life.] So it is repeated at ver. 34. Take no thought for the morrow. We are not by theſe words forbidden to labour with our hands to get proviſion for ourſelves and others, Eph. iv. 28. But, ſince our Lord had above forbid his diſciples to lay up treaſures on earth, and foreſeeing that it might thence be aſked, how then ſhall we provide for food and raiment? obviated the objection in the words of the text.

Where we may obſerve, that he doth not ſay, take no pains; or, uſe no endeavour to get an honeſt livelihood: But only be not thoughtful about your meat, drink and raiment, be not over-careful, too ſolicitous, make it not thy main buſineſs; not thy maſter, Do thy juſt endeavour, and leave the reſt to God. And,

This he enforces by an argument, a majori, i. e. reaſoning from the greater to the leſs, in this form. Is not the life more than meat, and the body more than raiment? Therefore, ſince God is the author of both thy life, and of thy body, and thou oweſt both to his bounty and goodneſs; canſt thou doubt that whilſt thou continueſt in his ſervice, and doſt honeſtly perform thy part, he will afford thee raiment to cover thy body, and food to ſuſtain the life, which of his free grace he hath given them. But,

If reaſon will not rule thee, take this example from the animal world, which are inferior to thee in creation. Behold the fowls of the air: for, they ſow not, neither do they reap nor gather into barns. They only ſeek about and pick up what they can find, according to the inſtinct, and law of their nature: Yet your heavenly father feedeth them, or provideth them food enough to live upon: and are not ye much better than they? As if he had ſaid, ſurely, if God ſo provides for theſe leſſer parts of his creation, he will much rather provide for mankind, its moſt noble part. The ſame argument from the leſs to the greater, is found on the ſame account at the 28th verſe.

Ver. 27. Which of you by taking thought.] i. e. By all endeavours, artifice, care and ſkill.

Ver. 30.——O ye of little faith.] This was an expreſſion applied by the Jews to thoſe, by way of reproof, who having enough for the preſent, did vex and torment themſelves with apprehenſions of future want.

Ver. 32.——Theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek.] The Jews valuing themſelves upon their extraordinary election by God, looked upon all other nations as ſinners, whom are here called Gentiles, or Heathens, who with an anxious care, ſays the text, not having the true knowledge of God, nor a lively apprehenſion of his providence, nor faith in his fatherly love, ſeek only after the things of this world, and ſerve mammon rather than God.

Ver. 33. But ſeek ye firſt the kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, &c.] The perſons ſpoken to in this place, were the diſciples of Chriſt, and in them all Chriſtians to the end of the world. They imply that our deſires, affections, hopes, expectations, duty and obedience, ſhould not terminate as the Heathen or Gentile did; but that our firſt and chiefeſt care ſhould be to ſerve our great maſter God Almighty, by an entire ſubmiſſion to his holy will and pleaſure; and then in their night-time we may alſo ſeek for thoſe things which are neceſſary for the conveniency and comfort of this life: And when the kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs is ſought firſt and chiefly, then all theſe things that are fit for us, ſhall be added to thoſe that ſtand in need. Wherefore to conclude this ſubject, he wills his diſciples not to be ever thoughtful for the time to come, ſaying,

Ver. 34. Take therefore no thought for to morrow.] See ver. 25. For every day brings vexation and trouble enough with it (which is here called the evil of the days;) ſo that we need not increaſe our preſent cares, by perplexing thoughts concerning the future, or how we ſhall toil thro' the world hereafter. Hence we learn this excellent leſſon: We ought always to wait God's pleaſure, which if it be to our relief, contrary to our expectation, it would be the height of folly for us to trouble ourſelves in caring for that evil, which will not happen to us: And if it be to our affliction and puniſhment, what good can we propoſe to reap by anticipating the ſorrow before its appointed time. For, as it follows:

——Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.] i. e. As God ſends us afflictions gradually, and at proper times or ſeaſons; we ought not to caſt ourſelves down entirely in an inſtant through a fore-boding care and apprehenſion of future times, that they will be more afflicting to us.

Having thus thoroughly cautioned his diſciples againſt worldly-mindedneſs; in the next place he proceeds to warn them to beware, that they be not raſh and haſty in paſſing judgment upon others, according to the example of the Phariſees; ſee Luke xviii. 11.

CHAP. vii. Ver. 1. Judge not, that ye be not judged.] Some have interpreted this Scripture to be an admonition for us not to form raſh or haſty reſolutions on the judgments or puniſhments, and promiſes of God, leaſt he alſo bring the like upon us. For thus we read, "Speak not evil one of another, brethren: He that ſpeaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: But if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law but a judge," James iv. 11. This alſo is what Chriſt pointed at in the affair of the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate had mingled with their ſacrifices; and in the misfortune of the eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and ſlew them, Luke xiii. 1—5.

Other ſome interpret theſe words, judge not, to mean, "don't be irreconcileable to your neighbour; nor inexorable when he begs pardon for injuries done to thee. There are others who think, that judge not, is put here for condemn not. And there are many more who ſay, that this text prohibits us both to condemn and judge our neighbour raſhly. And this, I think, is neareſt the ſenſe of the place. But I underſtand it to prohibit not only raſh judgment, but all vain curioſity into our neighbour's affairs; therefore we ſee that judgment is ſet before condemnation, like as the enquiry into a cauſe precedes the ſentence of judgment. But

If this be the caſe, ſays Hierom, &c. ſhall not a man be at liberty to judge freely of the ſin, when he ſees a murder committed, or adultery conſummated in his preſence? We alſo read how Paul did not only judge, but alſo condemned the Corinthians, and "delivered ſome up to Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh that the ſpirit might be ſaved," 1 Cor. v. 3, &c. 1 Tim. i. 20. Peter proceeded to the cutting off of Annanias and Saphira, Acts v. 1. And Chriſt, who has ſaid, judge not, gave his Apoſtles power of judgment concerning ſins, Matt. xvi. 19. xviii. 18. John xx. 23. xxi. 15. He has impowered all men to form right judgment, John.

Hillary alſo has ſtarted this objection, if we are forbid by this place, judge not, to judge at all; what means the following words, "with what judgment ye judge, ye ſhall be judged," ver. 2.

Hierom replies. Chriſt has not forbid us to judge, but on the contrary, has taught us ſo to do. In publick affairs, 1 Tim. v. 24. and in private; ſo that we don't wreſt circumſtances againſt the truth of the facts; and wherein a good or bad judgment may be given, charity obliges us to give the ballance of the good in favour of our neighbour, 1 Cor. xiii. 5. Therefore Auſtin declares it to be his ſentiment, that we are herein only forbidden to judge raſhly, where the affair may admit of a double interpretation, i. e. always to form the beſt judgment of our neighbours doubtful actions; to which we may apply what follows, at ver. 4. and more particularly, that of Paul, "Therefore thou art inexcuſable, O man, whoſoever thou art that judgeſt, for wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thy ſelf; for thou that judgeſt doſt the ſame things," Rom. ii. 1. And as the judgment of God is according to truth, ſo we ſhould always form, as near as we are able, our judgments according to his pattern: for otherwiſe "he ſhall have judgment without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy, James ii. 13. From the whole

We learn, That Chriſt did not forbid ſimply and indefinitely all judging; but only haſty, unadviſed, raſh, unrighteous and falſe-judging; even ſuch judgment as will bring them under judgment for it that give the ſame. Judge not ſo, as to bring judgment upon your ſelves for giving it. Judge nothing before the time, 1 Cor. iv. 5. Judge no man before he has had full liberty to make his defence, firſt hearing him, John vii. 51. Judge not according to outward appearances only, but judge righteous judgment, John vii. 24. Judge not according to the fleſh, John viii. 15. which generally puts a falſe gloſs upon our neighbours actions. Neither judge others for that whereof ye your ſelves are guilty, Rom. ii. 21, &c. For ſo you will be like the Phariſees, ver. 3, 4. But the godly man is merciful, loving, and righteous, Pſal. cxii. 4.

It is therefore lawful for magiſtrates to ſit in judgment in criminal matters, or, to condemn notorious offenders; it is by the Lord's authority that kings reign, and princes decree judgment, againſt the factious and prophane, ſeditious and ungodly perſon; ſee Prov. viii. 15. Rom. xiii. 4. 1 Tim. ii. 2.——Church-governors in like manner may judge, condemn, and paſs the cenſures of the Church upon notorious and ſcandalous offenders, Matt. xviii. 17. and xvi. 19. 1 Cor. v. 3—12—15. Every Chriſtian may freely paſs his judgment on the manifeſt and notorious actions of his Chriſtian brother; or how ſhall he comply with thoſe duties enjoined him by Levit. xix. 17. Eph. v. 11. 2 Theſſ. iii. 6. Rom. xvi. 17. 2 Tim. iii. 5. 1 Cor. v. 11. Now, I ſay, it is impoſſible for any one to perform thoſe duties who does not judge, who walks diſorderly; who commits deeds of darkneſs; who is a fornicator or idolater; who makes diviſions, &c. and therefore to forbid this ſort of judging is conſequentially to forbid the practice of theſe Chriſtian duties.

Ver. 3. The mote that is in thy brother's eye. —— The beam that is in thine own eye.] This is a proverbial expreſſion; and by the tenour of it confines the preceding not of judging to the bounds of our expoſition, for, by the mote are underſtood ſmall or trifling ſins, or rather ſome things that we ſuppoſe are ſins in our neighbour, which we would not regard in ourſelves, or as the old claſſic expreſſes it,

In alio eſt virtus, quod in me vitium vertis.

By the beam is meant on the contrary ſome notorious, or habitual ſin of our own. Which teacheth us that thoſe who would have other men look upon their own infirmities with a compaſſionate eye, muſt not look upon others with a cenſorious eye.

Ver. 6. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye pearls before ſwine.] By dogs and ſwine, we are to underſtand all thoſe wicked, prophane and obſtinate people, who reject the grace of God, and pertinaciouſly continue in their filthy luſts, after they had ſeen the miracles, heard the Goſpel, and received the knowledge of the truth. Among ſuch perſons, ſays Chriſt to his diſciples, ſpend not much time, ſeeing your labour will not only be loſt, but be hazardous to yourſelves. Such were the Jews to whom Paul preached, when he turned to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 41, 46. Such were eſpecially thoſe Scribes and Phariſees, rulers of the Jews, who ſeeing Chriſt caſt out devils, ſaid, he did it by confederacy with Beelzebub the prince of the devils, Matt. ix. 34. xii. 24. who being reduced to ſilence by his miracles were filled with madneſs, Luke vi. 11. and took counſel how they might deſtroy him, Matt. xii. 14. and confeſſing that he did many miracles, concluded thence that he was to be taken of, John xi. 47, 53. who conſulted how to cut off Lazarus alſo, becauſe by reaſon of him, many believed in Chriſt, John xii. 10, 11. and being aſſured of Chriſt's reſurrection, by the teſtimony of thoſe very ſoldiers, whom they had placed as a guard about his ſepulchre, corrupt theſe witneſſes with money, to diſguiſe it with a bare-faced lie, Matt. xxviii. Add to this that Buxtorff, that learned orientaliſt, ſays this was a proverbial expreſſion, importing, that charitable reprehenſions are ſure to be caſt away upon incorrigible ſinners, Buxt. Flor. p. 306.

Ver. 7,—11. Ask and it ſhall be given you, ſeek and ye ſhall find, &c. for every one that asketh receiveth, &c.] Theſe words contain a command and a promiſe. The duty commanded is importunity and conſtancy in prayer, deſcribed by the verbs ask, ſeek, knock; the promiſe is audience and acceptance with God. Yet

We can't be aſſured, that we obtain the promiſe, except we alſo take off our hearts and affections from every evil way, therefore ſays the Pſalmiſt, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear my prayer," Pſ. lxvi. 18. At leaſt

We muſt obſerve upon it, and begin to do the will of God, John ix. 31. for when once his holy fear is rooted in our hearts, his ear will be ſtill open to our prayers, Pſ. cxliv. 1 John xxi. 22.

We muſt alſo forgive the treſpaſſes of our neighbour againſt us, or we can't be diſpoſed to obtain the pardon of our own, Eccluſ. xxviii. 3, 4, and Mark xi. 25, 26.

We muſt not ask any thing but what is agreeable to God's holy will, 1 John v. 14. Nor any thing but what is for our good.

We muſt likewiſe pray in faith, that is believing God is able to ſupply all our wants; that he ſees all our neceſſities, and knows how to relieve them; and ſo will not with-hold any good thing from them, that lead a godly life. See Matt. xxi. 22.

We muſt be inſtant when we pray for ſpiritual things, and wait with patience till the Lord will pleaſe to anſwer our petitions, Luke xviii. 1. comp. with Eph. vi. 18. And

We muſt pray, at leaſt for ſpiritual bleſſings with fervency of ſpirit, we muſt knock, ſays the metaphor here, we muſt be in agonies of devotion, Col. iv. 12. to ſhew how much we deſire them; the fervent, being the availing prayer, James v. 16.

Ver. 12. All things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do unto you, even ſo do unto them; for this is the law and the prophets.] This was a rule both among the Jews and Gentiles; as,

Quod tibi fieri vis, fac alteri

Γενοῦ πᾶσιν ὡς σοι θέλεις παντας.

Nilus.

Quod tibi fieri non vis, alteri ne feceris.

And in theſe words of the Rabbi Hillel, Do not thou that to thy neighbour, which thou hateſt when it is done to thee. To which purpoſe good Tobit alſo ſaith, do that to no man which thou hateſt, ch. iv. 15.

This is an incomparable rule of life. It is the great rule of righteouſneſs and equity in all our dealings with mankind, to which we are bound as well by the light of nature, as the moſt perfect law of Chriſt. To us Chriſtians, it is the ſum of the Old Teſtament, the law and the Prophets, ſo far as concerning our duty to our neighbour, and the ſubſtance of the ſecond table of the old law, requiring us not only to be juſt in our outward actions, but to ſpeak, think and judge of others, as in like circumſtances we may in equity and reaſon expect they ſhould ſpeak, think, and judge of us. And alſo in a negative acceptation not to ſpeak, think, or judge of others, as we conceive, that in like circumſtances, they ought not to ſpeak, think, or judge of us.

Ver. 13, 14. Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate, &c.] This is a metaphorical expreſſion, where by gate is meant our firſt entrance into a religious courſe of life, and its being ſtrait denotes the difficulties they generally meet with from the fleſh, the world and the devil, when they are reſolved to renounce their ways, and walk in the paths of righteouſneſs. We are here particularly informed, that example muſt not be taken from a multitude; and that afflictions and temptations are great means to obtain God's favour, and the way for us to arrive at the kingdom of glory. For what ſon is he whom the father chaſtneth not, Heb. xii.

CHAP. VIII.

2 Chriſt cleanſeth the leper, 5 healeth the centarion's ſervant, 14 Peter's mother-in-law, 16 and many other diſeaſed. 18 Sheweth how he is to be followed: 23 ſtilleth the tempeſt on the ſea, 28 driveth the devils out of two men poſſeſſed, 31 and ſuffereth them to go into the ſwine.

WHEN he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him.

2 And behold, there came a leper, and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean.

3 And Jeſus put forth his hand, and touched him, ſaying, I will, be thou clean. And immediately his leproſy was cleanſed.

4 And Jeſus ſaith unto him, See thou tell no man, but go thy way, ſhew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer the gift that Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them.

5 ¶ And when Jeſus was entred into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beſeeching him,

6 And ſaying, Lord, my ſervant lieth at home ſick of the palſy, grievouſly tormented.

7 And Jeſus ſaith unto him, I will come and heal him.

8 The centurion anſwered and ſaid, Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof: but ſpeak the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be healed.

9 For I am a man under authority, having ſoldiers under me: and I ſay to this man, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my ſervant, Do this, and he doth it.

10 When Jeſus heard it, he marvelled, and ſaid to them that followed, Verily I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael.

11 And I ſay unto you, that many ſhall come from the eaſt, and weſt, and ſhall ſit down with Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven.

12 But the children of the kingdom ſhall be caſt out into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

13 And Jeſus ſaid unto the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou haſt believed, ſo be it done unto thee. And his ſervant was healed in the ſelf-ſame hour.

14 ¶ And when Jeſus was come into Peters houſe, he ſaw his wives mother laid, and ſick of a fever.

15 And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them.

16 ¶ When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with devils: and he caſt out the ſpirits with his word, and healed all that were ſick:

17 That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, Himſelf took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes.

18 ¶ Now when Jeſus ſaw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other ſide.

19 And a certain ſcribe came, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt.

20 And Jeſus ſaith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

21 And another of his diſciples ſaid unto him, Lord, ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father, 22 But Jeſus ſaid unto him, Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead.

23 ¶ And when he was entred into a ſhip, his diſciples followed him.

24 And behold, there aroſe a great tempeſt in the ſea, inſomuch that the ſhip was covered with the waves: but he was aſleep.

25 And his diſciples came to him, and awoke him, ſaying, Lord, ſave us: we periſh.

26 And he ſaith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he aroſe and rebuked the winds and the ſea, and there was a great calm.

27 But the men marvelled, ſaying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the ſea obey him!

28 ¶ And when he was come to the other ſide, into the country of the Gergeſenes, there met him two poſſeſſed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, ſo that no man might paſs by that way.

29 And behold, they cried out, ſaying, What have we to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time?

30 And there was a good way off from them an herd of many ſwine, feeding.

31 So the devils beſought him, ſaying, If thou caſt us out, ſuffer us to go away into the herd of ſwine.

32 And he ſaid unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of ſwine: and behold, the whole herd of ſwine ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea, and periſhed in the waters.

33 And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing; and what was befallen to the poſſeſſed of the devils.

34 And behold, the whole city came out to meet Jeſus, and when they ſaw him, they beſought him that he would depart out of their coaſts.

Chap. viii. The Evangeliſt having concluded Chriſt's doctrine delivered in his ſermon upon the mountain, ſays, that "the multitude were aſtoniſhed; becauſe he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the Scribes," chap. vii. ver. 29. which authority relates to his confirmation of his doctrine by miracles. For, when he had cured all manner of diſeaſes, Demoniacks, Lunaticks and Paralyticks, the people flock'd to him from all quarters, Matt. iv. 24, 25. So Mark i. 27. "They all marvelled, ſaying, what is this new doctrine? For, κατ' ἐξουσίαν with authority he commanded the unclean ſpirits, and they obey him." But Luke ſpeaks very particularly, "They were amazed at his doctrine, for his word was ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ attended with the power of miracles;" and therefore after Matthew has ſhewn how Chriſt was come to fulfil the law and the Prophets, by his more perfect doctrine, he proceeds in this chapter to record ſome inconteſtable and publick miracles, whereby he proved his miſſion not only ſuperior to that of the Scribes, but alſo to be immediately derived from God Almighty. But,

As this atteſtation of Chriſtian doctrine, the miracles of Chriſt, has been attacked by the greateſt power of antichriſtians, in order to obviate any of their impudent aſſertions, I judge it will be both pleaſing and inſtructing to the reader to find in this place, before we enter upon the particular miracles of our Saviour, a Diſſertation upon miracles, ſignifying their uſe, and wreſting thoſe wrought by Chriſt out of the falſe gloſs and oppoſition they have of late met with from thoſe who endeavour to root, as far as in their power, the very name of a revealed religion, out of the hearts and minds of that creature man, whoſe chief good is dictated to him from the Sacred Writings, and who is chiefly intereſted in the veracity or truth of thoſe miraculous facts, which we find recorded in them to be wrought by Jeſus Chriſt.

A Diſſertation upon MIRACLES.

THERE is one God the Creator and Preſerver of all mankind, &c. whom he rules and governs according to the original deſign of their creation. And, as he can't expect a reaſonable ſervice from his other creatures, ſo he governs thoſe, who are capable of understanding the nature and obligation of them, by proper laws, rewarding and puniſhing every individual according as they obſerve or violate them.

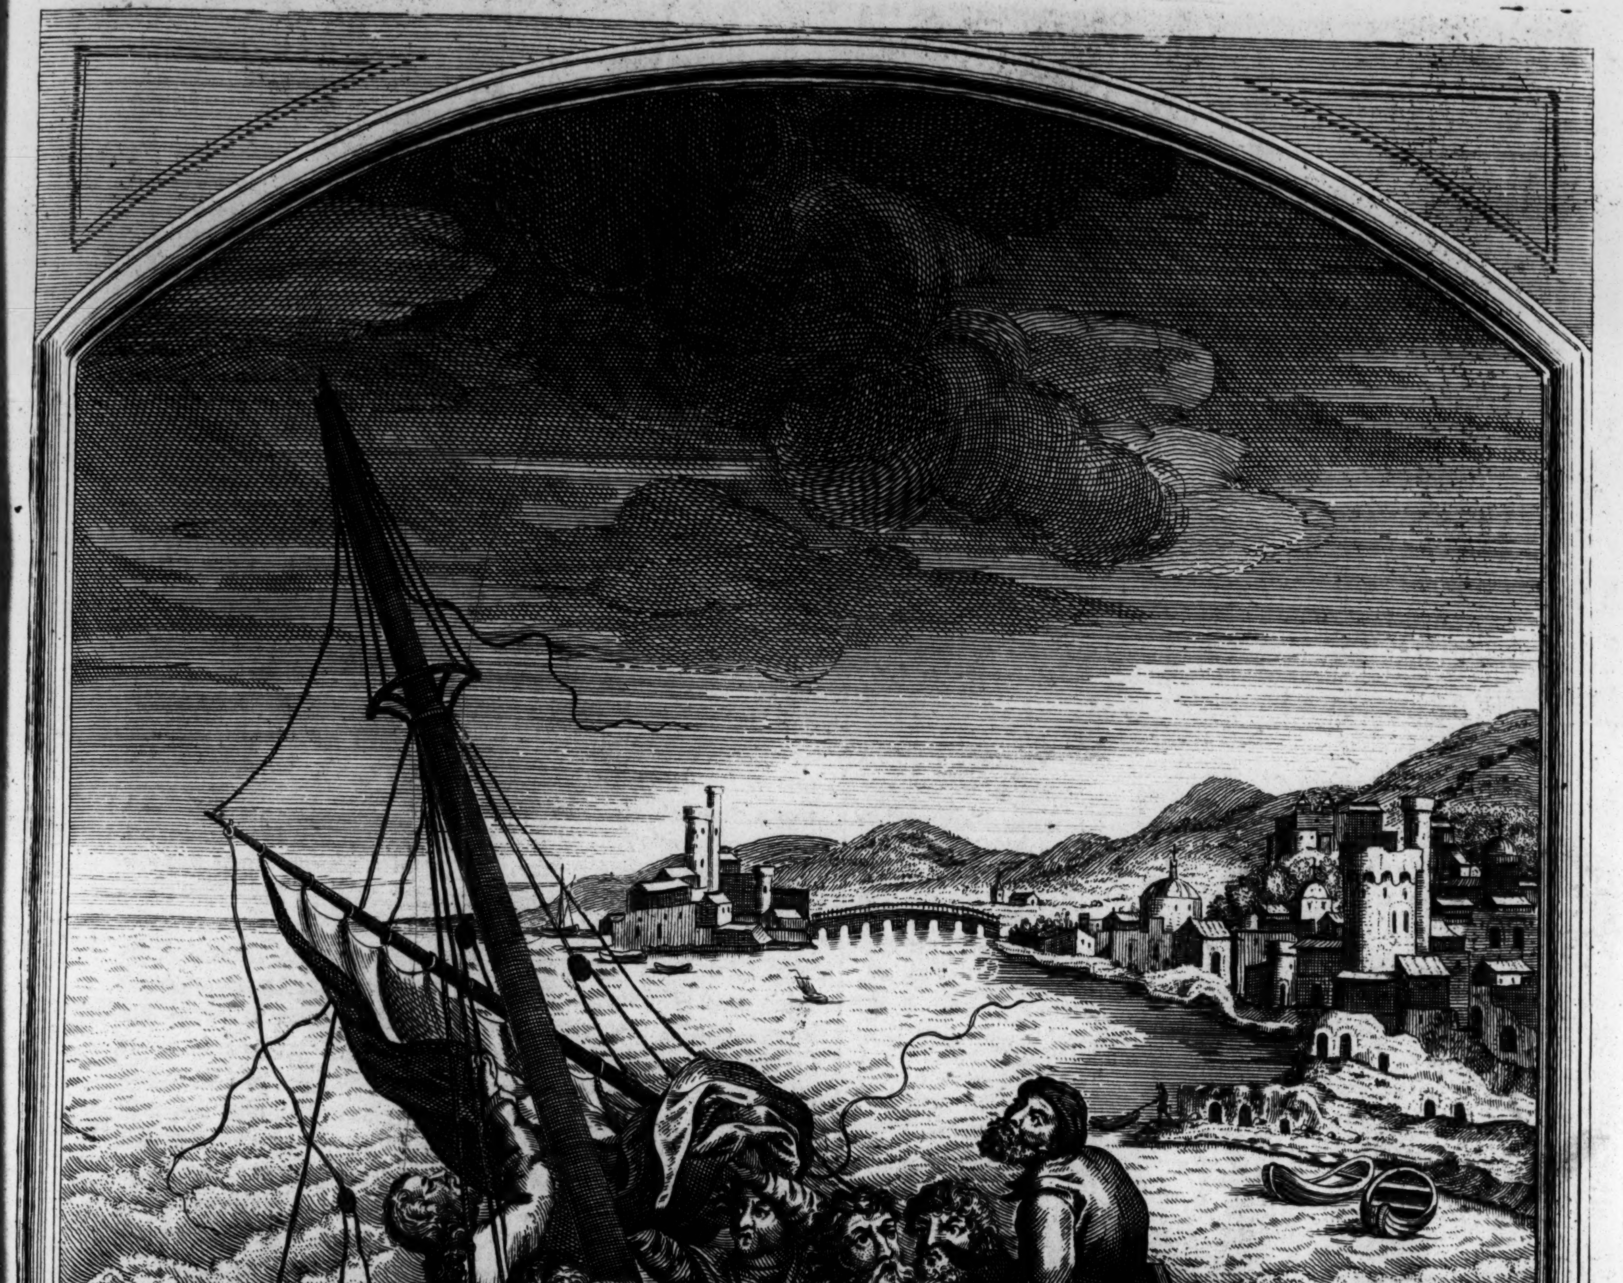
Theſe laws are made known to man either by our natural powers, and reaſonable faculties, which is the meaning of natural religion; or elſe, upon a deficiency of human reaſon in the attainment of ſuch a knowledge, by ſome extraordinary goodneſs of our Creator, revealing in what manner the Godhead muſt be obeyed, and the recompenſe the creature may expect in return for complying with that his duty; and this is what we properly term revealed religion, or revelation, which vouchſafement is moſt ſuitable to the character of an infinite perfect Being. Now

Reaſon dictates that ſuch a revelation can't be expected to be made to every ſingle perſon, but only to ſome peculiar or ſelect perſons, who receiving full inſtructions from God, and coming in his name, and with proper credentials of their Divine Miſſion, may have ability and authority to inſtruct others, otherwiſe the reſt of mankind could be under no obligation to receive and ſubmit themſelves to their direction. And as miracles have been looked upon as the proper teſtimonials of any perſons being inveſted with ſuch a Divine diſpenſation of truth, tho' others have proceeded ſo far in the oppoſition as to deny the very poſſibility of them, or at leaſt that they are of any uſe in religious matters, I ſhall now ſet forth the nature of miracles, their uſe, and particularly the authority of our Saviour's miracles.

A miracle has been variouſly defined, and is generally underſtood to be "ſomething very extraordinary and ſurprizing, above, or contrary to, the common courſe or law of nature." But however this definition has gained applauſe of the multitude, it is in no wiſe exact. Neither is that free from juſt exception, which ſays, "a miracle is an extraordinary operation, above the power of all created beings, and performable by God alone." Becauſe the Scriptures do expreſly attribute miracles to created beings, inferior to God as well in wiſdom as in power. For the original of 2 Theſſ. ii. 9. reads it, "with all miracles, ſigns, and lying wonders;" ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει ϗ σημείοις ϗ τέρασι, this agreeing with the tranſlation of σημείοις τέρασσι ϗ ποικίλαις δυνάμεσι, "with ſigns and wonders and divers miracles," Heb. ii. 4. Where in the former paſſage the miracles are ſaid to be after the working of Satan, or, in the power and with the aſſiſtance of the Devil. To this we might add our Saviour's warning his diſciples to beware of falſe prophets, and falſe chriſts, &c. Matt. xxiv. 24. as God had before admoniſhed the Iſraelites againſt the like deceit, Deut. xiii. 1, 3. So that the Scriptures ſuppoſe that miracles may be effected by the Devil and his inſtruments; but of this hereafter, more largely. But,

I apprehend with a late ingenious author, That a "miracle is an action done, or an operation viſibly performed by any being that is really and truly above the reach, natural power and capacity of that ſaid Being, who doth it, of himſelf, and without the aſſiſtance of ſome ſuperior agent, to perform." For was the action done, let it be never ſo ſurprizing to others, only the proper effect of its cauſe, it is not miraculous in it ſelf. And therefore, a miracle, when ſpoken of as done by a man, in confirmation of a Divine Miſſion, is ſomewhat viſibly performed by him, in order to prove himſelf to be ſent of God, that is ſtrictly and truly above all his natural powers and capacities; and which he could not of himſelf perform, without the influence, and aſſiſtance of ſome ſuperior agent. As for example, ſpeech is a faculty natural to man, but that a lion ſhould ſpeak, is as truly a miracle, as if a man was, out of the ordinary courſe of nature, enabled to fly. It is alſo the natural faculty of man to compute the magnitudes, to underſtand the motions of Heavenly Bodies, their influence upon the waters, and other bodies, and to foretel the conſequences of ſuch particular motions and influence, but it would be as really a miracle for him to command the winds and the waves into ſubmiſſion and ſilence, or to ſtop the courſe of the Heavenly Bodies, as that by his bare word he ſhould create the whole world out of nothing. So that

What



Jeſus appeaſes a great Tempeſt.

Matth. VIII.

What is, and what is not a miracle, is to be determined not by the extraordinarineſs of the work, or the opinion of the ſpectator ; but by the agreement and proportion between the action performed, and the capacities and powers of the agent or performer of ſuch an action. If the action done be certainly above all the powers of the agent, of himſelf an unaſſiſted, to perform it, it is a true and proper miracle ; proving all that a miracle can or need to prove, namely the co-operation and aſſiſtance of ſome inviſible and ſuperior power. Therefore ſuch as deny the poſſibility of miracles, on a preſumption that they are an infringement upon the eternal decrees of God, and unchangeable laws of nature ; are put to ſilence, becauſe, by this ſcheme we admit no miracle to be poſſibly done by God himſelf, I ſay the actions of God ; upon this ſcheme, cannot be miraculous ; becauſe, as all power belongs to him, he can't be acted by the aſſiſtance of any Being ſuperior to himſelf.

How then ſhall it be determined when any thing is a proper miracle, or not ? For, it will be difficult to know all the powers of human nature ; and conſequently, whether the effect be proper to the cauſe, or the act to the doer ; or whether it be above the natural faculty of the agent, and ſo miraculous ?—— It is anſwered, That until we can certainly determine the meaſure and capacity of the reaſonable powers which God hath implanted in human nature, we can't bound the extant of human knowledge, nor fix thoſe limits, beyond which the underſtandings of men cannot reach ; yet the circumſtances of the caſe will lead us into the truth of the matter ; for tho' our converſation with learned men and ſtudy with much obſervation, experience and reaſoning, ſupported with ſtrong natural powers and faculties, render a man capable of great and uncommon improvements, which are by no means to be accounted miracles, becauſe within the reach of the agent's faculties ; yet ſhould one who had enjoyed none of thoſe advantages in learning, become in an inſtant, as knowing and underſtanding of all parts of literature, as the perſon already deſcribed, his knowledge muſt neceſſarily be eſteemed as the effect of ſome ſupernatural agency and influence. And

As to the external operations, it is an eaſy matter to judge what are miraculous, and what not. For whatever appears to be done according to certain fixed laws, of nature's eſtabliſhing, can have nothing of real miracle or wonder in them. But when a man is ſeen and known to ſupercede or change theſe laws of nature, by giving ſolidity and firmneſs to the water to ſupport him ; by rarifying his own body, ſo as to ride upon the wings of the wind ; by operating upon diſtant bodies by the ſole act of his own will ; in a word, if any man can overcome a ſuperior reſiſtance by a leſſer, then it is plain his work is miraculous. So

In like manner, the prediction that depends on certain fixed laws of cauſes and effects, which he has ſtudied and underſtands (as in the knowledge of aſtrology) is not to be wondered at. But a prediction of very diſtant things depending on the determination of free agents, or that ſeem to be entirely at the pleaſure and direction of providence, muſt be looked upon as the effect of a ſuperior aſſiſtance, and ſo miraculous in the perſon that acts in the prediction, if it is perfectly accompliſhed.

Again, it is true that, it is no miracle to hear men, after a long courſe of ſtudy and application to languages, ſpeaking with divers tongues ; but when men, known to be never bred up to ſuch ſtudy and application, are in an inſtant become capable, and heard to ſpeak all the languages of the moſt different nations, ſhall we doubt of ſuch a miracle ? we know that ſuch a turn cannot be owing to any alteration of conſtitution, nor, much leſs, to ſlight or craft ; but we muſt confeſs it to be done by the influence and information of ſome ſuperior intelligence, and conſequently miraculous. In like manner, it is no wonder to ſee a ſkilful phyſician cure diſeaſes ; and a due and proper application of remedies reſtore health, and eſtabliſh a bodily vigour ; but it can only be in the power of one aſſiſted with a Divine, or ſome ſuperior Being, by a ſingle word to reſtore the ſick to a healthful ſtate ; to make the lame and maimed whole and ſound, the deaf to hear, the blind to ſee, and the dead to return to life, ſuch feats are real miracles, tho' at the ſame time I don't aſſert, which would be falſe, that all things as ſeem moſt to exceed the powers of human nature, done by any perſon, are in themſelves a ſufficient teſtimonial that he is the meſſenger of God ; unleſs they can be proved circumſtantially to be done by the immediate interpoſition of God, or by the miniſtry of his holy Angels. Becauſe real miracles have been wrought to weaken the credit of an authority actually derived from God ; and, as ſhall hereafter be ſhewn, the Scriptures ſuppoſe, that they may be wrought in confirmation of falſe pretences, and in oppoſition to the true religion. So that Every miracle-worker muſt firſt be tried before we ſubmit to his authority. And let his works be never ſo prodigious, men need not, except they will, be impoſed on. And there are methods, as you ſhall ſee below, within our power, whereby we may detect the falſhood of vain pretenſions, and prove the impoſtor to be, either a cunning jugler, or elſe in league with evil and deſtructive ſpirits. Hence I conclude, that it is not a miracle-working power alone, that ought to be accepted as a ſufficient proof of any one's miſſion from God ; but we are only to adhere to ſuch, as work miracles in confirmation of doctrines oppoſite to the intereſt of Devils, Matt. xii. 25. 26.

I know that the miſtaking things unuſual, ſometimes for ſupernatural, has given the enemies of Chriſtianity a topick of argument againſt the premiſes ; and I grant, that this miſtake has been very frequent among that ſect of Chriſtians, called by themſelves Roman Catholicks, the aſſerters of Papal infallibility ; and it may be, for argument ſake, allowed, that many effects may be miſtaken for ſupernatural and miraculous by ſome, which are not ſo in truth ; either through credulity, ignorance or ſimplicity, when they read of trances, rapts, apparitions, long faſts, incorruption of bodies, cures of the diſeaſed, &c. when they ſee ſome deliverances from dangers, or ſuch like vouchſafements of God's goodneſs ; but though none of theſe be real miracles, it can't thence be inferred, That the miracles of our Saviour, or of his diſciples were only things unuſual, and not ſupernatural effects ; or, that the belief of real miracles is abſurd, becauſe ſome that are alledged to be real and ſupernatural favours are, probably no more than unuſual things, or, what is worſe, done to gain credit or profit to the perſon by whom, or to the places, where, they are ſaid to be done. And theſe are not only confeſſed, but have been from time to time diſcovered by the more conſcientious Chriſtians, and after their manifeſtation and detection, ſuch counterfeits have been proceeded againſt and puniſhed ; of which proceeding againſt certain Friars, uſing ſuch cheating, I recommend my reader to Dr. Stillingfleet's enquiry into Roman Miracles, p. 635, &c. and Spondanus ſays of the ſame Friars, that they were burnt alive for this crime, Spond. A. D. 1508.

Such romances and forgeries of the miracles of martyrs and other Saints, we find to have been uſed not only in latter, but ancient times. Thus we read that a roman council of ſeventy Biſhops in the 5th age, prohibited the uſe and reading of them ; and ſuch like legends were ſtill complained of in latter times, for which Dr. Stillingfleet quotes (Enquiry p. 594.) Petrus Damiani, who lived in the eleventh Century, and Guibert, that came ſoon after, with many others more modern. But, neither the Dr. nor Petrus Damiani, nor Guibert, nor the reſt, did therefore exclude the belief of true and real miracles, but on the contrary, held theſe diſcoveries an argument to convince us of true miracles ; for, the ſame argument, that convinces us of falſhood, does alſo, at the ſame time, prove the veracity of the oppoſite truth.

The diſcreet reader of ſuch ſtories will aſſent to no more, than what he ſees credibly atteſted ; to whoſe judgment, it is left to conſider, whether the relater of ſuch ſtories hath either not well weighed the gravity of the matter, or weakneſs of the atteſtation. Where alſo, ſince no true miracle, i. e. any done by God's aſſiſtance, can poſſibly contradict any Divine attribute, his veracity, or his wiſdom, &c. (for ſo God would deny, or contradict, himſelf,) it follows, that no miracle, thus peccant, can ever be ſufficiently witneſſed for true. By true, I mean ſuch, as our Lord and his diſciples did. So that 'tis granted, that, if any pretended miracle can be certainly and demonſtratively ſhewed contrary to faith, or the Divine laws, it is enough to invalidate any teſtimony of the truth of ſuch a miracle, though wrought by one pretending himſelf to be the meſſenger of God, (which he never can be) or an eye-witneſs thereof. Hence

It is further granted that no miracle, tho' ſuch as our Lord did, and ſo atteſted, can be true, if clothed with ſuch circumſtances, as are by ſome other certainty known to contradict or prejudice God's laws and truth, his veracity, honour, wiſdom, or any other Divine attribute, as I touched above; becauſe God, the only author of true miracles, can't contradict or deny himſelf in any attribute whatſoever. So that if Apollonius, Mahomet, Antichriſt, or, an Angel from Heaven be ſuppoſed to come, pretending to do miracles, and ſuch ſigns, that ſhould bear a ſimilitude of our Lord's, and his Apoſtles, and teach a doctrine otherwiſe certainly known to be contrary to our holy faith, and the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity; or, if the miracles of Moſes and of our Lord, ſhould moſt certainly and demonſtratively contradict each other in their laws, yet one law muſt be judged ſpurious, tho' they both have the ſame apparent atteſtations; or, if both, i. e. contradictories be true, all religion muſt be abandoned, and the Divinity deny itſelf.

I adviſe the gentlemen of the Romiſh communion to examine their pretended miracles of all ages by this rule; let them firſt conſider, how their doctrine agrees with that of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; let them find there the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, Indulgences, Purgatory, Image-worſhip, &c. and then ſearch for the truth of their miracles; there can be no true miracles in a religion, whoſe doctrine is oppoſite to God, and his truth. Therefore, we know the truth of a miracle from its doctrine, which was firſt eſtabliſhed by miracles; yet where true doctrine has been ſignalized by miracles, they have been mutually corroborated by each other; and the reaſon is obvious why miracles are now ceaſed, becauſe there is nothing more in matter of faith neceſſary to be determined, than what is already in Scripture delivered to us, and confirmed with miracles by our Lord and his Apoſtles, who alſo is declared in Scripture to have been ſent in the latter age of the world, finally to publiſh to it, and confirm with miracles the whole will of God his Father, in the faith of which, mankind is to be ſaved.

I ſay, there is not the like neceſſity of miracles, ſince, as in the days of Chriſt, and of his holy Apoſtles, now in the encreaſe, as in the firſt planting of the Chriſtian religion; becauſe, thoſe firſt miracles done by them, and deſcending to latter ages by a plenary authority, do afford a ſufficient credibility of themſelves, and theſe again, ſo believed, eſtabliſh a ſufficient confirmation (ſo far as miracles may do it) of the doctrine they taught, and propagated to poſterity. And, tho' ſeveral nations are, as yet to this day unconverted to this faith, it is nevertheleſs ſpread already over the greateſt part of the earth, which, joined with the many other motives, (tho' miracles be excepted) ſeems an ample conviction for any rational creature, that the Chriſtian, is the true religion.

Again, there remaining but a little of the harveſt to be gathered in, and the labourers being many, there ſeems to be need of the leſs help of ſuch an extraordinary means.

Finally, the rarity or want of ſuch evidences in latter times, ſeems to be ordered by the Divine Providence, purely to ſerve to the greater merit of our faith. Of which miracles we may ſay, as our Lord ſaid to Thomas the Apoſtle, Bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed.

That theſe ſupernatural and extraordinary works were reſtrained in the Apoſtles time, ſo as not to be done by them in all places, and upon all occaſions, where and when they preached, is notorious in Paul at Athens, where other motives ought to have had ſome operation in this place of learning; nor upon all perſons that were even objects of their pity, otherwiſe Paul would not have left his ſervant Trophimus ſick at Miletum. Theſe are Scripture teſtimonies; and thoſe that cry out for the faith of the Fathers, let them conſult Auſtin, (de civit. Dei, lib. xxii. c. 8. & de verbis Dom. ſer. 18.) Hom. vi. 1 Cor. c. 2.

Nor are we under any neceſſity to affirm, that the miracles of our Bleſſed Saviour, and his Apoſtles, were abſolutely needful at the firſt introduction or publication of the Goſpel of Chriſt, for the conviction of all ſorts of people? Becauſe the ſanctity of our dear Redeemer's doctrine, infinitely exceeds all the inventions of men, and exactly accords with the Moſaic inſtitution, rightly underſtood, which law was already eſtabliſhed by the legiſlator's miracles; beſides the many ancient Prophecies in the Old Teſtament, ſo clearly fulfilled in our Lord, run parallel with miracles, and ſhew the perſons that delivered them clearly to be ſent from God. Which made Peter boaſt in theſe words, we have alſo a more ſure word of Prophecy, 2 Pet. i. 19. To this I might add the teſtimony of the Baptiſt, a perſon of ſo extraordinary a life and miſſion, which had it not been moſt rationally creditable, our Lord would not have reprehended the Phariſees ſo often for disbelieving it; all theſe, I ſay, abſtract from miracles, ſeem to infer a ſufficient manifeſtation, as to the more learned and prudent among the Jews, both of the quality of our Lord's perſon, and truth of his doctrine, excepting that ſome of the Prophecies, made expreſly concerning our Lord's doing of miracles, could not be fulfilled without them. Now to proceed,

Satan and his Inſtruments, Magicians, may do things miraculous (or even divinely ſupernatural, as to appearance) in the eyes of men, not knowing how they are wrought For, though in the common ſchool-opinion, ſpirits can make no alteration, or change ſubſtantial or accidental, in corporal things immediately and by their own power over them ſave only in moving them from one place to another, as they pleaſe; yet, this ſingle loco-motive power, allowed them, and ſo alſo their perfect skill in all the operations of bodies, and their ſeveral diſpoſitions and qualities, by the ſeperating and joining, extracting, mingling and applying theſe one to another, may do wonderful feats, (eſpecially if the phyloſophy be true, which works all alterations, forms and qualities in matter by local motion and figure) and this done with all the celerity and velocity of motion, which bodies can poſſibly be capable of. Thus, as we eaſily heat any thing at pleaſure by applying fire to it, it is hard to ſay what thus mediately by the means of one body duly applied, approximated to, and working upon another, is not in their power to effect; or, how little that meaſure of time is that is required to it; eſpecially in ſuch productions as are leſs elaborate, and to which fewer cauſes are neceſſary and may more eaſily and ſpeedily be applied.

By this way then, it ſeems in their power to raiſe winds and tempeſts on land or ſea, rains, thunders and lightnings. See the firſt chapter of Job. Satan with a tempeſt caſt down the houſe upon the heads of Job's children, and with a fire from Heaven, deſtroyed his ſervants and flocks. This is no illuſion; it was a real tempeſt and real fire, ſo that it ſeems not out of the natural power of Satan, to convey, in a forenoons time, fire to the ſacrifice of Baal's prieſts in their conteſt with Elijah, concerning the truth of their religion; or, to have brought rain, 1 Kings xviii. 15. or fire from Heaven, 2 Kings i. 10. as Elijah did, though this only, mediately, by the application of the natural cauſes thereof, which proves ſuch a work only natural; whilſt the Prophet did it, immediately by the Divine Power, and ſo his work was ſupernatural and miraculous.

It ſeems alſo in their power to ſuſpend the operations, whether of natural agents, or artificial inſtruments, or alſo of men and beaſts, by interpoſing the natural impediments thereof, that they ſhall not produce their uſual effects; in ſo much as to ſuſpend the fire from burning, the ſword or bullet from wounding, or wild beaſts from devouring; even as the Angel ſhut up the lions mouth from hurting Daniel.

It ſeems alſo in their power to tranſport and convey bodies from place to place, having all treaſures in his diſpoſal, and to elevate and to carry thoſe more heavy in the air, as he pleaſeth. So Satan carried our Lord out of the deſert to the pinacle of the temple, even as the good ſpirit or Angel carried Philip from near Gaza to Azotus, Acts viii. 39. See alſo 1 Kings xviii. 12. and 2 Kings xi. 16. Ezek. iii. 12, 14. The ſtories told of Simon Magus, if true, were doubtleſs affected by the ſame art or power of the Devil.

Thus the Devil, well knowing the firſt ſeeds and originals of bodies, how to haſten their productions, ſeems able by the application of natural cauſes to produce ſome living creatures, of a more imperfect conſtitution, and leſs organized, moſt like unto thoſe produceable ordinarily in a putreſcent matter by heat alone, without the need of any other ſeed thereof, of this conſtitution are flies, frogs, and ſeveral ſorts of worms and ſerpents, called by the Sacred Pen-man, Luke x. 19. the power of the enemy, perhaps becauſe, in his power to produce them, and with them, as his inſtruments, to be offenſive and hurtful to mankind, tho' it is ſolid here, according to the common opinion of ſchools, that it is not in his power to make any perfect animal even from pre-exiſtent matter, neither can he exactly prepare and organize the body fit for all operations of the ſoul; nor can he renew all its decays, when defective, periſhed, or withered internal or external limbs, conſumptions, or the like. Why? Becauſe the compoſition of ſuch creatures is more difficult, having a complication of many cauſes, which demonſtrates them not to be perfected on a ſudden. And alſo the decays, in ſuch creatures, are ſuch, as not to be repaired at all by pure natural cauſes or ſeeds. And finally, it is not in his power to make any metamorphoſes, or to change the ſhape of one ſpecies into that of another. For which I have the authority of Auſtin (de civit. Dei, lib. 18. c. 18.) and others. Canon, Cauſa 26. Qu. 5. c. 12. Quiſquis aliquid credet poſſe fieri, aut aliquam creaturam in melius aut in deterius immutari, aut transformari in aliam ſpeciem vel ſimilitudinem, niſi ab ipſo Creatore——procul dubio infidelis eſt [ſpeaking of the transformation of witches into other bodies] but ſeems poſſible one ſubſtance ſhould be changed into another by the power of the Devil, when both the ſubſtances are of a more ſimple, and of an eaſier tranſmutation. This I might exemplify in Pharaoh's magicians, who by their enchantments, i. e. by the power of the Devil, with ſome ſuperſtitious ceremonies invoked and invited, changed their rods into ſerpents, the waters of Egypt into blood, and out of it brought frogs. This might be granted, ſalva fide, if it was not queſtionable, whether natural cauſes, however approximated or applied, can in ſo ſhort a ſpace of time compleat their effect? For, there is no natural activity ſo extenſive, which is not limited with in ſome certain ſupreme degree and bound. But, to argue with more reaſon, Moſes's ſerpent devouring theirs, ſeems to intimate a deluſion in this act of the magicians, and argues their having no ſolidity. If then, they had no ſolidity, that transformation pretended to be wrought by the magicians, was no more than the appearance of ſpirits, which appearing in the likeneſs of men, or of any other bodies, are mere repreſentations, and ſo ſuddenly compacted, framed and diſſolved without needing any entrance or egreſſion where they appear; and have no ſolidity. This made our Saviour argue, from the ſolidity of his parts, of his fleſh and bones, that he was no ſpirit or deluſion, appearing to them, Luke xxiv. 39. which ſpirits alſo, whatever they may do, need not to aſſume any real body, where they can make the ſame ſhow and diſcovery of what they intend without it. So that from hence I may reaſonably conclude, that theſe were only the appearances of blood, frogs, ſerpents, viz. ſpirits appearing in their likeneſs, aſſuming ſome aerial body eaſily faſhioned by the Devil's art, or elſe true ſerpents, blood, frogs ſubintroduced by a moſt ſwift local motion from ſome other place, the rods being conveyed away; either of theſe latter ways being much eaſier performed by evil ſpirits, than the firſt, ſuppoſing that both were in their power, eſpecially when we read of the reſtraint of theſe deluſions in the fourth paſſage of the lice (an eaſier act than the former) and the wondering magicians calling it, The finger of God, Exod, viii. 19.

It alſo ſeems to be in his power to inflict or cure diſeaſes, eſpecially thoſe leſs mortal, or ſuch as himſelf hath cauſed, by application of natural cauſes, after the manner of experienced phyſicians. But I would have it obſerved, that thoſe diſeaſes, which ſorcerers or witches by his agency do inflict, (by command or permiſſion) can't be removed without God permits them, and if Satan refuſes ſuch a cure; or, if they do cure them, it is by transferring ſuch a diſeaſe on ſome other perſon, or elſe it falls on themſelves; as you may find it proved in Angevin's Fleau des Demons et ſorciers, lib. 3. c. 2.

It is alſo in his power to poſſeſs or dwell in beaſts or men, to ſpeak in them, with languages utterly unknown to them; to give an activeneſs and ſtrength far above what is common in human nature; ſo that the man poſſeſſed in the country of the Gadarenes, brake all the chains and fetters they could bind him with, neither had they any way to tame, or keep him in, which may be attributed to the legion of Devils; which were ſo many as afterwards to diſtribute themſelves by Chriſt's permiſſion into two thouſand ſwine, Mark v. And, if he can thus poſſeſs, he can alſo quit ſuch a poſſeſſion, and that in a ſeeming obedience to the commands of one that is his devotee: When, by relinquiſhing his lodging in ſome particular perſon, he may do more miſchief to mankind in general, by making an Apollonius, or a Simon Magus, by ſuch a feat, paſs for a Saint, or a Demi-god.

He ſeems alſo to have power of aſſuming a body inanimate, a Cadaver, to move it, to ſpeak in it, and imitate all the actions of life; but ſince he can make the ſame appearances, ſimilitudes, and diſcourſes, and produce all the ſame effects by framing to himſelf an aereal body, not diſcernable by mortals from a ſolid or ſubſtantial one, it may be rationally ſuppoſed, that he takes rather this way, by deceiving our ſenſes; than the other of aſſuming real bodies, which ſeems to be clogged with many more incongruities. He ſeems to have proceeded in this manner in our Lord's temptation, when he preſented all the world's pomp and glory before our Saviour, and offered it all to him for one act of adoration. Could he demand ſuch honour, or offer ſuch a reward, if he had not arrayed himſelf in great pomp and ſtate? But that he can thus diſguiſe himſelf, is certain; for, the Apoſtle ſaith, he is able to counterfeit an Angel of light. This ſeems the ordinary way of working, rather by illuſions, than realities, if perhaps both theſe are in his unreſtrain'd power.

In fine, to conclude his power about bodies, I ſay, he can preſerve dead bodies for a long time from corruption, and make them ſend forth a flagrant ſmell or ſavour; he can preſerve a living body a long while without food, and he can render it ſenſeleſs and dumb under torments, &c. but this is miraculous, for nature alone can do the ſame, at leaſt, by the aſſiſtance of human art. But this is not all; he likewiſe ſeems to have a ſtrange power over ſouls. For, tho' it be commonly held, that he can't frame, nor create any new phantaſms, or ſpecies of things, in the brain; but only make uſe of thoſe he finds, and ſuch as have entred by the outer ſenſes; yet, he can preſent feigned and ſtrange objects both to the external ſenſes, and by a various moving of the humours or ſpirits in the brain, in which theſe ſpecies or phantaſms are ſubjected, mingling and confounding there, what was ordinarily ranged and compoſed, he can excite the fancy, and by it the intellect to work upon, and conſider ſome of his preſentations more than others; by which means he may trouble the judgment, cauſe frenzies, and madneſs, work much diſturbance in the acts of the ſoul, and, in like manner, by the diſcourſe of the intellect, he can bring the operation of the Will and Paſſions to execute whatever he pleaſes, ſo much as in his power to do. And, this is done, much after the manner as the ſpirits and humours are moved in our dreams and fevers, in which much variety of fancies are uſually raiſed, when the outward ſenſes are ſhut up; (Canon Cauſa 26. Q. 5. c. 12.) By this means he alſo effects ſtrange tranſports of the mind, and violent motions of the body; as the evil ſpirit in Saul, who is ſaid, when it came upon him, to have propheſied in the houſe, 1 Sam. viii. 10. The like is ſtoried of the heathen prieſts at the time when they delivered the Devil's oracles, Plut de Oracul. defectu. Thus alſo, by cauſing a ſudden refraction of the animal-ſpirits from the external into the inner parts, he can produce extaſies, and rapts, accompanied with ſeveral other viſions introduced by a ſenſeleſsneſs of the outward members of the body; and can make the poſſeſſed ſpeak ſtrange and unknown tongues, but no magnalia Dei, or, wonderful works of God. Thus it was he perſuaded to the Sabeans and Caldeans, the plundering of Job's goods, Job i. 17. to David the numbering of the people, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. to Judas his haſty riſing from ſupper, and repairing to the high-prieſt's, and there to betray our Lord, Matt. xxvii. to Ananias and his wife the concealing part of the price of their land, Acts v. 2. Thus he excited the high-prieſt's maid ſo earneſtly to queſtion Peter; and his officers ſo barbarouſly to uſe our Lord. So he was a lying ſpirit in the mouth of Ahab's Prophets, 1 Kings xxii. 22. This is his power to work, and make divers impreſſions, in the ſouls of the children of diſobedience, Epheſ. ii. 2.

The celerity of motion, and the co-intelligence one evil ſpirit has with another gives me to believe, that the Devil doth, or may know all, or the moſt notable things done in abſence, and in the remoteſt parts of the earth; can diſcover and declare preſent or paſt things, that are loſt by us, ſtolen or ſtrayed from us, and this power gains him the moſt credit; I ſay, in the declaring and diſcovering of theſe things, when conſulted, either by words in thoſe perſons he poſſeſſeth, Acts xvi. 16. or with them to whom he is familiar, or in the repreſenting them, either exteriourly to the outward ſenſe (by which they ſeem to behold with their eyes; (Sheffer Laponia, c. ii. p. 122.) what things are acted in places remote) or, interiourly to the fancy, and that alſo by caſting them, his inſtruments, firſt into an extaſy, (ibid. p. 135.) And herein lies the Devil's chiefeſt trading and practice, credit and reputation, becauſe, what he thus delivers, are certain truths.

Again; He, in ſome meaſure, can give ſhrewd conjectures of the preſent ſituation of mens hearts, thoughts and intentions; and, by his exact knowledge of all the ſymptoms of mens paſſions, he is made able to judge thereon: and not only this, but he may be ſuppoſed to give a great gueſs at contingent futurities, within ſome diſtance of time; nor is this out of the power of nature; for, a wiſe man by his long experience in the world can know contingent futurities, it may be, ſome thouſands of years after, by the like courſe of the Divine Providence in all times; according to that of Solomon; that which hath been is that, which ſhall be: and there is no new thing under the ſun, Eccl. i. 9. But how ſhall the Devil have this knowledge? He has been in the world many thouſands of years; ſo that he ſhall know theſe things by the obſerving of the conjuncture of preſent cauſes and paralliſing them with thoſe events of the like affairs, which are already paſt; by knowing the courſe of mens ſins, and God's juſtice; and more certainly, when he catches at any Divine Prophecy already fulfilled, then he ſpeaks with confidence; declares the fact that will certainly come to paſs, knowing the future events muſt neceſſarily anſwer their Divine Prediction. And, by this means, it is lawful to conjecture that the heathens, the poets, and the ſybiles came acquainted with the expectation of the Meſſiah; and that mens deaths, great dearths, or plenties, the ruin or riſing of ſtates, &c. are foreſeen by the Devil.

It can't then ſeem ſtrange, if, I ſay, he can alſo communicate all theſe things, when known to him, to his diſciples, by ſome external diſcourſe with them, or by repreſenting, what he would manifeſt, to their inward fancies, as hath been ſaid, in ſuch repreſentations we commonly ſuffer in dreams; or, by exhibiting thoſe ſigns of beaſts, birds, or other creatures, which his own art of divination hath very differently conſtituted and diviſed to portend and ſignify evil or good, proſperous or adverſe affairs to the conſulters of him. And in this act the ſubtilty of the Devil moſtly appears; for, when he riſes and reveals ſuch things, he pretends himſelf neceſſitated thereto, (viz. to appear and declare ſuch things they aſk, or to do ſuch ſervices, as he is then commanded) by ſuch art, of which he is the ſole wicked inventor and founder; and which, that it might deceive us the more, and draw us more to his beck, he contrives to conſiſt, and to be compoſed, of many Sacred Words and Ceremonies, Obſervances, Faſting, Abſtinence from venery and all pollution (Porphyry, apud Aug. de civ. Dei lib. 10. c. 11. to ſeem forced thereby to obedience; but theſe are always mix'd with ſome other ſuperſtitions and fopperies, which manifeſt them to be the dictates of Satan. And he will, when permitted from above, do miſchief unto the practicer, tranſgreſſing the rules and preſcriptions of ſuch his Black Art.

From the premiſes, it ſeems conſequent, that man, being ignorant of the juſt extent of theſe ſtrange effects, which are poſſibly produceable by natural cauſes, cannot certainly know all the ſtrange works in the power of Satan, by the ſole management of the ſame cauſes we ſee. Let us but reflect on the quick influence the ſoul hath upon the body, in the betraying of its paſſions, in the impreſſions made on the infant in the womb, from the mother's fancies and longings, which, not ſatisfied, leave very often continual marks; and recollect the account of Jacob's lambs, whoſe ſpots proceeded from the ewes, beholding the ſtreaked rods; then ſuppoſe Satan to have only a loco-motive power over bodies, yet in conjoining or ſeparating differently qualified matter, we can't ſay what it may not produce. But, who ſhall demonſtrate by reaſon, that Devils have only a loco-motive power over corporals? Suarez (de angelis, lib. iv. c. 25.) indeed, aſſerted it, as the common opinion of the ſchools, yet at laſt he concludes, difficile ſit efficaci ratione illam perſuadere; it will be a hard matter to prove it by reaſon.

Many of the foregoing examples make appear, that the ſame effects may be truly ſupernatural, and Divinely miraculous, as done by one perſon, aſſiſted by the Divine Power; and not ſo, as done by a ſecret application of natural cauſes. Thus we have obſerved that the fire and rain called by Elijah from Heaven, 1 Kings xviii. was ſupernatural and miraculous by the power of God; but the fire and tempeſt brought from Heaven by Satan, was not ſo, Job i. So Moſes's rod changed into a ſerpent, and by his command, the waters into blood, were miraculous, by the power of God; but if the magicians ſerpents were real, they were only done by inchantments. In like manner, the Devil's departure out of a poſſeſſed body, by conſtraint of the Divine Power is miraculous; not ſo, if he ſhould voluntarily quit it, at the inſignificant command of a magician, to the end ſome greater miſchief might be effected againſt mankind.

From the foregoing power granted to the Devil, and thro' him to his emiſſaries and diſciples, we may rightly think, knowing our own weakneſs in forming ſuch a judgment, that ſuch wonders, which do not abſolutely appear, whether truly miraculous, and wrought by the Finger of God, or deluſions, the effects of the Devil's art in managing natural principles, can't determine for the orthodox faith, or, for the real ſanctity of the agent or patient, becauſe none can conclude from the work, whether 'tis really Divine, or only ſo appearing, as not to be diſcerned from a true miracle wrought by the power of God; in which uncertainty, we muſt ſuſpend our belief, concerning what is endeavoured to be proved by ſuch an act, till other circumſtances concur, from which we may be enabled to determine whether the work be of God, or no. Therefore,

Suppoſe the Devil be ſometimes permitted to effect by natural cauſes ſome of thoſe things, which the ſervants of the Almighty have wrought by his aſſiſting power; there are, I ſay, common circumſtances in thoſe works, by which the diabolical and the Divine operations may eaſily be diſtinguiſhed; as,

Firſt, if the end of ſuch a work be certainly known to be evil, it claims Satan for its author; if an apparently Divine miracle be wrought to the prejudice of the true faith, certainly known to be ſo; for, God's works, or true miracles, never contradict the end they are applied for, nor each other; or, if the miracle appears manifeſtly hurtful, vain or unprofitable; ſuch qualities are inconſiſtent with the Divine attributes of goodneſs, wiſdom and juſtice; they are certain characteriſticks of Satan, who is in every thing oppoſite to the Creator, and giver of all goodneſs.

Secondly, if the perſon by, or upon, whom ſuch miracles are wrought, be of a ſtrong and true faith, has lived a godly life, apparently virtuous, holy, charitable, and more eſpecially an humble life, which is leaſt in the power of the Devil to counterfeit, who fell from his glory by pride; we may preſume them to be Divine. Becauſe Satan is not permitted to work his feats in any inſtruments, that are, or have not been notoriouſly diſtinguiſhable, for their wicked lives and actions.

Thirdly, if theſe ſtupendious works are not wrought by any ſuperſtitious, inſignificant, impertinent, or ridiculous ceremonies, (ſi nec invocationibus Angelicis, nec incantationibus, nec aliqua prava curioſitate faciunt aliquid) but with a clean heart and pure mind, lifted up in prayer to God alone (ſed munde & pure & manifeſte orationes dirigentes ad Dominum, &c.) according to Irenæus, we have a clear indication, that Satan hath no hand in them, who uſually doth no favours, without ſome extravagant rites preliminated, as it were, by the way of a pre-contract with him; and, if theſe obſervances be in ſome things ſacred, as many times they are, that he may the better impoſe upon his ignorant diſciples, making them believe they do not ſerve, but command the evil ſpirits; yet at the ſame time they are commonly confined to a place, time, number, and ſuch inſignificant preparations of the perſon, whereby they may eaſily be diſcerned to be merely diabolical.

Fourthly, the publication and frequency of ſuch works, is a great circumſtance whereby to diſtinguiſh and diſcern from whom they have their original; and conſequently things ſeldom and ſecretly done, are moſt liable to ſuſpicion, as leſs ſubject to a ſtrict examination.

Wherefore, when we read of a work done for a known good end, the honour of God or his faith, or for the good of our neighbour, accompanied with the former circumſtances, we may juſtly conclude either from the perverſeneſs and malice of Satan's will, or reſtraint of his liberty, that it is none of his working, tho' not out of the Devil's natural power to effect. This conſequence is ſo neceſſary to be inferred, that without it the very people, who ſaw the inſenſibleneſs of the ancient martyrs in the midſt of cruel torments, who ſaw them paſs through fire, and preſerved from the ravenous jaws of the tiger and lion; who ſaw our Lord's and Elias's faſts; his bringing fire from Heaven upon the ſacrifice, and procuring rain; who ſaw Eliſha make the bar of iron to ſwim, and declare, when in the city, what Gehazi did in the field; not to mention the ſtory of the bitter pottage; who ſaw the three children walking in the midſt of fire; who ſaw Peter and Paul's extaſies and rapts, &c. our Lord's ejection of Devils; and the miraculous cures of ſuch diſeaſes as are remediable, for any thing we know, by medicines and art, all which have been ſaid before to be feaſible, by application of natural cauſes, and conſequently within the verge of Satan's activity: I ſay, the very people might and ought to queſtion them, (if we don't conclude as above) whether they be the work of a Divine or diabolical power. And,

I ſay now, that when our Lord and his diſciples argued the truth of their doctrine, and Divine Miſſion from their open and frequent miracles, they muſt neceſſarily extort from all thoſe, that own, or ſuppoſe, the truth of Chriſtianity, and of the Scriptures, a belief and conſent, that ſome of the miracles, wrought by them, were, and are, out of the power of Satan abſolutely or permiſſively, God not permitting. Tho' it ſeems highly probable, and lawful for us to aſſert, that Satan in his own perſon, as well as thro' the inſtrumency of other enemies of God's revealed truth, and members of unſound religion, may work real and true miracles, when God is pleaſed for his greater glory to make his enemies (unwilling and compelled) to confeſs, and by ſome other acts to confirm his truth againſt themſelves. For, as God hath a reſtraining power over Satan and his inſtruments, to hinder and retard them from many things they otherwiſe would do; ſo hath he a compulſive power, which can neceſſitate and compel them to do, what otherwiſe they would not do. Here then 'tis ſuppoſed, that in ſuch a caſe God manifeſts them to be his inſtruments, in this their conſtraint, to confirm ſuch truths, leaſt any one ſhould be ſeduced by them, when they voluntarily and unforced, ſpeak lies, for eternal truths. This may be very properly exemplified in that paſſage of Acts xvi. where Satan is recorded to have been forced for many days together, in the damſel poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination, to confeſs, that Paul and Silas, were the ſervants of the moſt High God, which ſhew to men the way of ſalvation, ver. 16. In that of Numbers xxiv. 12, 13. where Balaam, God's ſpirit coming upon him, and his inchantments laid aſide, was forced to bleſs Iſrael, and prophecy the reign and coming of the Meſſiah, much againſt his own will, as plainly appears from his coveting Balaak's rewards; and moſt malicious deſign againſt Iſrael, teſtified from the apparition of the Angel in the way; becauſe his way and purpoſe were diſpleaſing to him, and afterwards from his adviſing Balaak, under the ſpacious pretence of friendſhip, to caſt ſuch a ſcandal before the children of Iſrael, as ſhould make them offend God, in partaking of the feaſts of their ſacrifices, and committing fornication with their daughters. In that of Samuel, 1 Sam. xvi. 14. and xviii. 10. where Saul propheſied in the company of Samuel and David, tho' at other times poſſeſſed with an evil ſpirit, and at other ſeaſons, had ſuch rapts, and ſpeak ſuch extravagances, which the ſaid evil ſpirit effected him with, or ſuggeſted to him; which agitations were ſometimes calmed and aſſwaged by David's muſick; 1 Sam. xviii. 10. Such alſo, was the Prophecy delivered by the evil ſpirit, raiſed in the form of Samuel, by the witch of Endor; which ſpirit told her, that the conſulter was Saul diſguiſed. Theſe examples, I think, prove what I aſſerted, that Satan, and his inſtruments, may do, and tell truth by conſtraint from the Divine Power, directly againſt themſelves, and for their confuſion. And to theſe examples I could add that of Exodus vii. 11, 22. viii. 7. and the prieſts of Baal were famed (1 Kings xxii. 6.) for Prophecy, or for telling of fortunes, i. e. making conjectures which might happen ſometimes true, (for, he hath very bad luck that never gueſſes right,) gueſſing always the thing ſeemingly moſt to their advantage; nor had the king of Iſrael ſent to the God of Ekron, 2 Kings i. 2. If the prieſts of that God had not uſed to return anſwers; but they did no ſuch miracle as Elijah or Eliſha: and tho' Simon Magus, like other conjurers, and the poſſeſſed maid, wrought many and great wonders by his ſorceries, Acts viii. 6. 11. which were called, by the people of Samaria, the great power of God, he could do nothing like thoſe of the Apoſtles; inſomuch that, he himſelf, with the reſt of the people, wondered very much at the miracles and ſigns wrought by Philip, Acts viii. 13. before he ever ſaw the Apoſtles, Peter and John, confer the Holy Ghoſt; or the people ſpeak with tongues, or experienced Peter's diſcovery to him of his thoughts, thinking at the ſame time, that what our Lord and his diſciples did, was only the effect of a ſuperior kind of art magick, and therefore offered money to learn it, Irenæus lib. i. c. 20. But,

In reply to the premiſes, ſome may be apt to urge, That it is not conſiſtent with the goodneſs of God to ſuffer men, under the influence of evil ſpirits, to do miracles, eſpecially where the Devil propoſes to oppoſe the cauſe of God, and thereby to eſtabliſh his own dominion.

I anſwer, if it be granted, that it is conſiſtent with the Divine Goodneſs, to give any Being powers and faculties ſuperior to us; there can be no inconſiſtency in the permiſſion of the exerciſe of their powers. Again, had God ever intended that a miracle, ſhould be an immediate end to all debates in religion, he would have commanded us in his revelation, to look upon a miracle, as the immediate effect of his own power; nor would he ever have permitted that to paſs into the power of Satan. But there is no ſuch command; on the contrary he has acquainted us by his word, with the power and craft of evil ſpirits, and cautioned us againſt being deceived by them. So that the moſt that can be argued from hence is, That the permiſſion of evil ſpirits to do wonderful works, ought, indeed, to render us more careful and diligent in our enquiry into the proofs of every pretenſion to a Divine Miſſion; but does not carry in it the leaſt imputation againſt the Divine Juſtice and Goodneſs, becauſe we can't otherwiſe be impoſed on by them, than through our own negligence and partiality. As in the caſe of temptations; they are permitted as trials of our faith, and God is nevertheleſs eternally good. So miracles, which are the effect of the Devil's power, under God's permiſſion, are ſo many extraordinary temptations or trials, to draw away (if it were poſſible) the elect from the faith; yet God is juſt, who has provided a way for his ſervants to eſcape the Devil's wicked deſign. Conſequently, tho' God permits the Devil to do wonderful things, he does not prompt them to be deceived by them, we can't be deceived, except we are willing to forſake God, and follow the dictates of Satan; becauſe the doctrine taught by the Devil and his emiſſaries, are inconſiſtent with true piety, and in many things contrary to plain morality. Yet,

I admit, that in caſe an impoſtor ſhould ſtart up and boaſt himſelf againſt God, and confront the Divine Will with diabolical wonders in vindication of his own impious doctrines, without doubt, God would either reſtrain the power by which the impoſtor acts, or enable his own meſſengers to ſurpaſs him by ſuch extraordinary deeds, which he knows are out of the reach of evil ſpirits to imitate. This was the very caſe between Moſes and the Egyptian magicians, for though the magicians for a while imitated and rivalled the works done by Moſes the ſervant of the Lord, the moſt High God cauſed them to be ineffectual, and at laſt entirely reſtrained the power by which they acted, but made Moſes to triumph in his continued power to do miracles, and thereby proved to the ſpectators that Heaven itſelf decided the victory in his favour. And this neceſſarily brings me to conſider the deſign or uſe of miracles.

The deſign of miracles cannot be to prove or eſtabliſh the proofs of the Principles of natural religion, as the being of a God, his perfections and providence, and the difference between good and evil; becauſe all religion is to ſtand the teſt of our reaſon before we can be under any obligation to receive its dictates. So that the very ſuppoſition of a miracle implies, that our notions of God and his will are true, and therefore cannot be wrought to prove them ſo. But,

When mankind has loſt the ſenſe of theſe important principles and truths by a long continuance in deep ignorance and vice; as in the caſe of the Iſraelites, when God ſent Moſes to them in Egypt, or, when God is pleaſed to reveal to us other matters of great moment and conſequence to our happineſs; as he did in the perſon of his Son Jeſus Chriſt; it was neceſſary that ſuch an immediate meſſenger from God atteſted with the moſt eminent credentials of a Divine Miſſion, to preach the firſt and moſt neceſſary, though almoſt forgotten and forſaken principles of the Being of a God and his providence, and the obligations to virtue and goodneſs, as moſt certainly was the caſe of the Jewiſh nation at the time of our Saviour's manifeſtation to the world; or they could in no wiſe have deſerved the harſh appellation of a generation of vipers, &c So that the miracles are not a proof of the verity of thoſe principles, but of the Divine Miſſion of the preacher, to gain him authority and credit with his hearers.

Neither are miracles neceſſary as a farther teſtimony of the truth of a former revelation, ſufficiently atteſted by God to any ſerious and impartial enquirer; otherwiſe Abraham's anſwer to the rich man would have been impertinent, Luke xv. 19, &c. For the revelation by Moſes had been ſufficiently atteſted to be divine, and therefore it was unreaſonable to hope for new miracles to confirm it. An excellent leſſon to inſtruct us, that as ſuch means either by negligence or ſloth; through pride and obſtinate prejudice, will not ſee, or not acknowledge the evidence of the divine teſtimonials, which have been, we can't ſuppoſe any obligation, on the part of God, to work new miracles for a further teſtimony of the ſame evident truth. And we are to remember that God hath been pleaſed to order the circumſtances of religion, as that it ſhall be a matter of our own choice; and to cover it with ſome difficulties, that men may uſe care and diligence in ſearching both into its nature and evidence; that ſo their very believing may be an act of the greateſt reaſon ſupported by thoſe rational motives and inducements, which is naturally ſuited to convince and perſuade men. But if God, under a falſe notion of his goodneſs, muſt be ſuppoſed obliged to work new miracles to remove every inſignificant cavil againſt the ſtanding evidence of his holy religion, there can be no longer room for enquiry; all reaſon muſt be needleſs and abandoned; and God muſt neceſſarily work miracles continually, as often as man's pride and vanity demands them. But,

Miracles were abſolutely neceſſary to give a ſufficient credit and authority to our Lord's perſon and pretenſions; that to prove that he was the meſſenger of God, and was authorized by him to inſtruct and ſave the world by a new religion. For it would have been impoſſible ever to have perſuaded the Jews to abandon their religion actually inſtituted by God, and for which, on that ſame account they had the higheſt veneration without the moſt expreſs and clear warrant from God himſelf; or, to have prevailed with the Gentiles to abandon the altars of their deities, without ſome inconteſtible proofs that thoſe perſons acted by a Divine Miſſion, who preached to them to turn from ſuch vanities. But there could be no ſtronger proofs than miracles. Therefore,

The only end or uſe of miracles in my opinion, when they are the work of God or his ſervants, is, to confirm that perſon's miſſion from God, who comes in the name of the Almighty, and by his authority imparts a revelation of the Divine Will to mankind; Or, to convince men of the miſſion of his ſervants, and to ſecure the greater credit to the meſſage they deliver in his name, when oppoſed by the greateſt power of Satan. For, let his doctrines and precepts be never ſo excellent, they being within the reaſonable powers and faculties to be invented by man, would not in themſelves be a proper evidence of any perſons miſſion from God, but if theſe doctrines and precepts be ſupported by divine miracles, that would be a certain proof that the teacher, who doth them, ought to be eſteemed a meſſenger ſent from God. Now,

You may know that a miracle is divine, or done by the immediate aſſiſtance of God, or miniſtry of his Holy Angels, both with reſpect to the things wrought to the perſon who is ſaid to work the miracles, and to the end for which they are done. For,

Firſt, Since God cannot affect what is impoſſible, nor can be ſuppoſed to uſe little tricks like the cunning deceits of artful impoſtors, or any means that ſhould ſeem improbable or incredible to confirm the truth. So all things that are termed miracles of God muſt be in themſelves not only poſſible, but alſo probable, creditable and conſiſtent with the perfections of God, to inveſt himſelf in; and with his character, as governour of the world, to do, diſcovering ſomewhat of that almighty power, wiſdom and goodneſs, which neceſſarily belongs to the eternal Being.

To this I may add, that it is neceſſary for the things pretended to be miracles to be done openly before many and proper witneſſes, with that manifeſt ſincerity, openneſs and freedom, which becomes a good man, acting by a Divine Commiſſion. And the proof from hence will ſtill be more convincing, if they be many in number, and the perſon ſo working does enable others to do the ſame or greater in confirmation of the ſame end. And it muſt always be obſerved, that the teſtimony of theſe facts be as well conveyed to us with equal certainty or probability, as other paſt facts require to be attended with to gain our credit.

Secondly, The pretending to work miracles by a divine authority and miſſion, ſhould be in a full exerciſe of his reaſon and ſenſes; living in the fear of God, and of a good report for an unblameable and virtuous converſation; and preſerving an exact harmony and agreement in every thing that he delivers. For who can believe that God would make choice of madmen to deliver to the world the words of ſobriety and truth, or that he would ſend immoral and wicked men to eſtabliſh the practice of virtue and all goodneſs: neither can any one inſtructed of God deliver oppoſite and contradictory meſſages, no more than it is poſſible for the God of wiſdom and all knowledge to contradict himſelf.

Thirdly, We muſt enquire what purpoſes are intended to be anſwered by thoſe miracles pretended to be Divine, or what doctrines and precepts they are, for whoſe confirmation they are wrought; and then fix this, as an eternally true principle, That no miracles whatſoever, wrought in oppoſition to the principles of true reaſon and natural religion, can be from God.———Nor muſt we admit of his authority, who would introduce a falſe object, or a method of worſhip, unſuitable to the nature and perfections of the one true God, or attempt to diſprove the truth or doctrines of any former revelation, that was really from God. Becauſe, there can be no greater impoſſibility in nature than for the Supreme Being to commiſſion any perſon to teach and perſuade others, that he doth not exiſt; that there is no providence, nor future ſtate; and that there is no obligation to piety, juſtice, charity and the government of our paſſions. For it is as demonſtrable, that there is a God, as that we are alive, whoſe worſhip is founded on reaſons peculiar to himſelf, and can belong to none other, and whoſe revelation is calculated, "to lead men into juſt and becoming ſentiments of the Divine Being and perfections; to direct and appoint that method of worſhip that will be acceptable to himſelf; to recover men from their ignorance; to reform them from their vices, and to lead them into the practice of virtue and true goodneſs, by proper motives and arguments; for the general welfare of ſocieties, every one's particular happineſs in this life, and for their preparation for a better world hereafter." So that unleſs miracles are calculated and appointed to ſerve this end, the interpoſition of the Divine Providence for the confirmation of his will, they ought never to be acknowledged as any proof of a Divine Miſſion from the premiſes.

It may poſſibly be concluded, that I have fallen into that erroneous method of arguing, called a circle, by appealing for the Divinity of miracles, to the doctrines they confirm; and then proving the doctrines, by an appeal, to the Divinity of the miracles. Wherefore I anſwer, from the definition of a miracle, that the very doing of it argues the interpoſition or aſſiſtance of ſome ſuperior agent; and that the end, for which ſuch a miracle is done, evidently diſcovers the nature and diſpoſition of that Being, by whoſe influence it is performed. The doctrines prove, not the aſſiſtance of a ſuperior power, but whether the aſſiſtance be given by a good or bad one. The miracles prove, not the goodneſs of the doctrine, but that he who preaches the good doctrine ſo confirmed, acts by an authority ſuperior to his own. Conſequently neither of them ſeparately prove the Divine Miſſion; but where they both concur, they certainly prove, That the miracle-worker acts by the authority of ſome ſuperior, good and powerful Being, agreeable to the ſuperior power of God.

All which characters and marks are applicable to the Chriſtian Revelation; for, whether we conſider the miracles alone, or the perſon Jeſus Chriſt, or his Apoſtles that wrought them, or again the doctrine and precepts, which they were wrought to confirm: They will appear to be not only poſſible, probable and conſiſtent with the Divine Perfections, but alſo many in number, done openly in the ſight of many creditable and proper witneſſes, and conveyed down to us by unexceptionable authority. The perſon, Jeſus Chriſt, was ſuch a one, as moſt eminently anſwers all the characteriſticks of the ſecond rule above; and as for his doctrine it is the whole will of God: As you may plainly gather from the following ſhort account;

Jeſus went about all Galilee teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe among the people: and his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all ſick people, that were taken with divers diſeaſes, and torments, and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with devils, and thoſe that were lunatick, and thoſe that had the palſy, and he healed them, Matt. iv. 23, 24. Was this acting like an impoſtor? did he not go publickly about Galilee healing? was not his fame ſpread abroad? for what? for healing, &c. he healed them.

At Capernaum, they brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with devils; and he caſt out the ſpirit with his word, and healed all that were ſick, Matt. viii. 16.

In his own city, in the ſight of the ſcribes, he ſaid to the ſick of the palſy: Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe.

And he aroſe, and departed to his houſe.

But when the multitude ſaw it, they marvelled, and gloriſied God, Matt. ix. 6, 7, 8.

What did Chriſt ſay, and do, when the Baptiſt, who in priſon had heard of the works of Chriſt, ſent to him two of his diſciples to queſtion him? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, go and ſhew John again thoſe things, which you do hear and ſee; the blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed up, and the poor have the Goſpel preached to them, Matt. xi. 2—5.

Luke ch. vi. 17, 18, 19. He came down [from the mountain] with them [the twelve] and ſtood in the plain, and the company of his diſciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jeruſalem, and from the ſea-coaſt of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diſeaſes, and they that were vexed with unclean ſpirits; and they were healed. And the whole multitude ſought to touch him; for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

Did Jeſus turn water into wine in ſome private corner? John ii. Did he not do it at a marriage-feaſt, when many were gathered together, where the ſervants, the governor, and thoſe invited to the feaſt, were teſtimonies of what was done? And ſoon after that, when he went down to celebrate the paſſover at Jeruſalem, in the feaſt-day, many believed in his name, when they ſaw the miracles, which he did, John ii. 23.

There was a chief man of the Phariſees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews; the ſame came to Jeſus by night, and ſaid unto him, Rabbi, we [I and the reſt of the nation] know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do theſe miracles, that thou doſt, except God be with him, John iii. 1, 2.

Who can think that Nicodemus, a Jew, a ruler of the Jews, and a Phariſee, would have come with ſuch a ſtory in his mouth, to a private, ſkulking impoſtor? Truly, ſuch an example demands our aſſent to Jeſus's miracles, and that we ſhould ſay with him, No man can do theſe miracles, which thou doſt, except God be with him. Which puts me in mind of the doctrine Jeſus taught; it certainly had ſome effect on his auditory, by concurring with his miracles. He was a preacher, he was a doctor, he was a maſter; he was generally preaching before he wrought any miracle. But what was his doctrine?

Jeſus began to preach, and to ſay, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand, he taught in the ſynagogues, and preached the Goſpel of the kingdom, Matt. iv. 17. 23, &c.—— He taught as one having authority, Matt. vii. 29. —— And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their ſynagogues, inſomuch that they were aſtoniſhed, and ſaid, whence hath this man this wiſdom, and theſe mighty works? and they repeated, whence hath this man all theſe things? Matt. xiii. 4, 56. You ſee here in the firſt place, Jeſus preached up repentance, a ſorrow for having offended a good God; which repentance, he in other places of the Evangeliſts is recorded to have taught by ſelf-abnegation or denial; love of God above all things; and of our neighbour as ourſelves; by bearing wrong, and afflictions with patience, by being juſt to all men; and not only by praying for the converſion of, but by forgiving our enemies. Such doctrine as this, could not conſiſt with the darkneſs, ſpite, and ſenſuality of Satan, who riots in luxury, hatred, and rapine. So, tho' it be granted, that Satan, or Beelzebub might, by himſelf, or his emiſſary, do ſuch ſigns and wonders; yet, I inſiſt on it, what I have in a preceding page urged, that he never could do them accompanied continually with ſuch a doctrine, ſubverting his own kingdom.

But why all this pains to prove the truth of what is in reality denied to be fact? Our Saviour's miracles were, ſay they, not real; they were only chimeras, allegories. If they had been real, the Jews would certainly have embraced his happy doctrine, ſeeing they had expected him, the Meſſiah ſo long; expected him every moment, the time of his advent being come, according to their Prophets, and the calculations therefrom by the Doctors of the law. Beſides, they expected to be made a mighty people, when the Meſſias came, to be freed by him from all temporal care, and eaſed of all concupiſcence to ſin, by his mediation. So that, in this life, they might live as in a Paradiſaical State of happineſs.

I have already produced a liſt of ſome paſſages from cotemporary authors, that do atteſt the miracles of our Saviour, but as thoſe hiſtorians are pretended to be intereſted in a falſe account, and as the Jews incredulity is urged againſt their reality, I ſhall here obſerve, that the Jews never doubted of the miracles recorded of Jeſus in the Goſpels, all that they ſaid or accuſed him of was, that he did them by ſome bad art, or means; I ſay, they never denied their appearance, and reality. Nay, the Goſpel facts have been acknowledged by thoſe to be true, whoſe temporal intereſt it has been to deny them. But they would ſay, this man caſts out devils, by Beelzebub the prince of the devils, Matt. xii. 24. the putting a wrong conſtruction on the manner or means did not diſprove, but confirms the reality of ſuch facts. They really confeſſed his actions were above nature, ſeeing they attributed them to a more than natural, tho' a wrong, Being. This is confeſſing the miracle. The Jews who ſaw, or heard of, the miracle of Jeſus curing the paralytic on the Sabbath-Day, never attacked it with the aſperſion of a fallacy, but they only cavill'd at his doing of it upon the Sabbath-Day, John v. 10. conſult what I have ſaid above, concerning the anſwer Chriſt gave to John the Baptiſt's meſſage; there you will ſee what miracles he did; how he openly profeſſed them to be wrought by him, under the noſes of the Jews, who would not only have immediately refuted and given them the lie, but would certainly have ſtoned him to death. He, in that anſwer, bids them look and ſee with their eyes the very facts, not hiſtorical hyperbols, and to hear nothing, that can be ſaid to have been exaggerated by ſelf-intereſted hiſtories; but what their own ears and eyes could then, at that preſent time hear, and ſee, ſulfilling. What would ſuch an anſwer avail him? what conviction could it have been to theſe diſciples, who were jealous of their maſter's, the Baptiſt's glory, if they had not heard and ſeen real prodigies, and ſuch as could no ways be excepted againſt?

Why did not the Phariſaical pride, flatly deny the fact of Lazarus's reſurrection from the dead? They would certainly, if it could have been done, diſproved ſuch a thorn in their ſide, ſuch a ſhort way would have ſaved them much trouble and credit. They granted his miracle-working power, but were, thro' ſpleen, reſolved to cut him off; for which purpoſe, the chief prieſts and the Phariſees gathered a council and ſaid, what do we? For this man doth many miracles, if we let him thus alone, all men will believe in him, and the Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and nation, John xi. 47. Here the ſynagogue confeſs the truth, the reality of his miracles, for they were ſubject to ſenſation to the underſtanding, to the eyes and ears; or, how could they, the Jews, be afraid, that all men would thereby be induced to believe in him. If they had not been real miracles, why did they not proceed againſt him as an impoſtor? It could not be for favour, becauſe they never ſhewed him any. It could not be thro' any temporal fear; for, he was poor and needy, who had not where to lay his head.

I don't now find it neceſſary to mention any more teſtimonies from the Evangeliſts, but ſhall confirm theſe already alledged, by the collation of ſome conceſſions and abſurdities which the Rabbinical tribe has been forced to eſpouſe, rather than acquieſce in the evidence of theſe miracles, which they would not deny. They then pretend that Jeſus Chriſt found a certain inſcription of the name of God, which he either tranſcribed for uſe, or committed to his memory, ſo that as oft as he ſhould, or did pronounce this marvellous name, every thing jumpt up at his pleaſure, as if God was preſent to ſay the word. What ſtuff! what fables! what a heap of nonſenſe and contradiction! nothing of it is likely, and much leſs capable of deſtroying the veracity and reality of our Saviour's miracles.

Can it be thought that the Jews would ever expoſe their ignorance in ſuch wretched terms, if the facts they would conceal or invalidate were only imaginary facts? If they had queſtioned the reality of the facts, I mean the miracles wrought by Jeſus Chriſt, their only way would have been reſolutely to deny them? To explain what is not, is to play with the wind; and to hazard the real belief of any thing, which we know to be falſe, by endeavouring to ſubvert it with ſuch far-fetch'd and nonſenſical explications, is the height of ſtupidity and madneſs: But this was the procedure of the Jews aginſt our Saviour's miracles, they acknowledged the reality of the facts, and could not tell how to avoid their evidence; therefore they ſaw his miracles and believed them to be true, which was to be proved.

But why ſo great propenſity and deſire to avoid the evidence of theſe miracles, which were wrought among 'em by Jeſus Chriſt? They, as it is objected above, longed for the coming of the Meſſiah, of whom it was propheſied he ſhould do ſuch extraordinary and miraculous things.

The motive is flagrant, if we do only conſider theſe two things, firſt, the nature of the Jewiſh nation and law, which deſired nothing more, and propoſed no further reward than temporal benefits, and ſecondly, the ſtate of the Jewiſh nation at the time Jeſus did theſe things, which then had loſt all its power, authority and magiſtracy: "the ſceptre was gone from Juda, and the government was taken from the elders of the nation." The Sanhedrim was diſſolved and its members, that aforetime had been abſolute, were levelled with the other doctors of their law; and the power of life and death was devolved to the Roman governor.

Here, in the firſt place we muſt look upon the affections of theſe people. Their affections were to live grand in this world; their only object was temporal gain. Secondly, Let us conſider, whether the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, or his doctrine, which he daily preached among them were agreeable to theſe affections. He preached up pennance, ſelf-reſignation, contempt of the world, and the love of God above all things.

Thus we ſee from the poſture of the Jewiſh ſtate, and their worldly affections, that it was not to their purpoſe to acknowledge Jeſus for the Meſſiah. The reduction of their power, and their vanity made them wreſt the prophecies, which in their proſperity they had rightly interpreted, to what ſuited beſt their preſent purpoſe, this made them overlook the poverty of Jeſus Chriſt the true Meſſiah, and look for ſome other that ſhould renew and encreaſe their ancient ſplendor that ſhould ſubject every nation to their yoke, and heap up riches to the houſe of Jacob; that ſhould be a warrior and a temporal conqueror, ſubduing the Gentiles with a ſtrong army. I ſay, the Jews, who exceeded all others in pride and ſenſuality, who expected to be exalted above the heathen, and to reign victorious on the earth under the banner of the Meſſiah, did loſe nothing of thoſe expectations, ſo much the more deſirable and coveted, under ſuch circumſtances, as I have ſhewn their nation lay under. Theſe diſpoſitions and affections baniſhed the thoughts of an humble, meek, and poor Meſſiah; who was manifeſted in the fleſh under an humble and low condition; eſteemed no more than the ſon of a carpenter; who neither promiſed grandeur, nor worldly goods to his followers, who was free from pride, auſtere, and reſerved the execution of his promiſes, which were really conſolative and majeſtick, to the next world. Thus we ſee the Jews were naturally inclined to abhor whatever had the appearance of poverty or humility: No wonder then why they remain'd obſtinate at Chriſt's preaching and miracles. Nay, Chriſt had not fulfilled all the prophecies, he had not been the Meſſiah, had the Jews been otherwiſe than obſtinate, for he alone is the Meſſiah, in whom alone all the prophecies concerning the Meſſiah agree; but the obſtinacy and blindneſs of the Jews was one of theſe prophecies, it was then neceſſary in proving Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, that they ſhould disbelieve his perſon, though they acknowledged his miracles, for that is obſtinacy, &c. Deut. xxviii. 15, &c. and xxxii. 28, 29. Pſal. xvii. 44. and lxviii. 24, &c. Wiſ. ii. 21, 22. Iſa. i. 3, 4. and v. 13. and vi. 8, &c. and xxix. 9, &c. and xlii. 19, &c. Jer. v. 21, &c. And,

I hope it will appear from the premiſes, That the miracles wrought by Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles, in confirmation of the Chriſtian Religion, were real and true miracles, effected by the aſſiſtance of a Divine Superior Being. For,

The characters of theſe miracle-workers can no ways be attainted with any deceitful ſubtilety, or breach of morality; and the doctrine, which they taught and confirmed with their miracles, and for which they laid down their lives, inſtructs us in the belief of a God and his providence; of a future ſtate wherein every one ſhall receive a reward or puniſhment according to their deeds; teaches us the ſpiritual nature of God, and that the worſhip of the heart and ſpirit is moſt acceptable to him; that men thereby may be recovered from their idolatry, and brought back to the worſhip of the one only living and true God, and to the practice of that duty, which is owing to each other. By which means we ſhould learn to obſerve and practice whatſoever things are true, honeſt, juſt, pure, lovely, of good report, virtuous, and praiſe-worthy And to mortify every inordinate affection and evil habit within ourſelves, and to attain to thoſe excellent diſpoſitions of mind, by which, we, here on earth, may reſemble God, become moſt uſeful in life, and beſt prepared for future happineſs. In a word, the doctrine of Chriſtianity, which they taught, eſtabliſheth the practice of theſe two great duties, The love of God, and the love of our neighbour, which is both reaſonable, and plain, and eaſy enough to be underſtood; founded upon the reaſon and nature of things, and tending manifeſtly to make man better in themſelves, more uſeful to others, and more acceptable to God. So that,

I conclude, that as there is nothing in the nature of the Chriſtian Religion, that hath the leaſt tendency to prove its being an impoſture; but, on the contrary, is calculated, to ſerve the nobleſt ends and purpoſes: So its being confirmed by ſuch wonderful works, I ſay, by ſo numerous and great miracles, ſufficiently argues its Divine Original; and that, therefore, theſe doctrines and miracles together carry with them an indiſpenſible obligation on all men, who are capable of underſtanding the nature of ſuch evidences, on which Chriſtianity is founded, both believe and obey it.

As it cannot be expected, neither was it intended in this Diſſertation, which is already of a great length, to treat of the miracles of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. any further than to evince, that he did work real and true miracles: But care ſhall be taken to bring the ſtrongeſt evidences for each miracle wrought by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, in their proper and diſtinct places as they occur in the Goſpels and Acts of the Apoſtles.

Ver. 2. And behold, there came a leper, and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. 3. And Jeſus put forth his hand and touched him, ſaying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leproſy was cleanſed.] This is the firſt miracle Matthew records that Jeſus did, when he was come down from the mountain: But I ſhall refer you for its particular proof to Luke v. 12.

Ver. 4. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, See thou tell no man.] We have the like prohibition in this ſame Goſpel, Matt. ix. 30. and xii. 16. as alſo in Mark v. 43. And I apprehend the cauſe thereof to be, That Chriſt inſtructs us to be more attentive to the precepts of his doctrine, than amazed at his miracles. For as miracles for the moſt part, produce little more than vain effects of admiration, did rather hinder thoſe, who terminated their expectations in ſome corporeal favours, they expected to receive from them, than forward them in the attainment of the chief end of Chriſt's manifeſtation in the fleſh, which was the eternal ſalvation of our ſouls.

Ver. 5. Capernaum.] This was a city in the land of Judea. It lay eaſtward from Jeruſalem, on the borders of the lake Genezareth, not far from Bethſaida. Adamnanus ſaith, that it extended itſelf from weſt to eaſt, covered with a mountain on the north, and waſhed with the lake of Tiberias on the ſouth. This was the principal place of our Saviour's abode, during the three years of his preaching. He wrought many miracles here alſo; but the inhabitants received little benefit from his miniſtry, which brought upon them many of his reproaches, telling them, that though they were exalted unto Heaven, they ſhould be brought down into hell, &c. Matt. xi. 23. Here alſo Chriſt called Matthew, and invited him to follow him.

—There came unto him a centurion's ſervant.] This miraculous account, as far as ver. 14. being repeated with ſome other circumſtances in Luke vii. 1, &c. I ſhall refer my reader to that place for my Annotations.

Ver. 14. And when Jeſus was come into Peter's houſe, he ſaw his wife's mother, &c.] See Mark i. 29, &c.

Ver. 16 ——They brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with Devils, &c.] See Mark i. 32, &c.

Ver. 19.——I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt, &c.] See all this account to ver. 23. in Luke ix. 57, &c.

Ver. 22.——Let the dead bury their dead.] Some at firſt ſight may be ſo weak to infer from theſe words, that the diſciples of Chriſt are not permitted to perform their parentalia, the laſt duty of a child to his natural parent; by which the heathen world endeavoured moſt to demonſtate their affections to thoſe, from whom they had themſelves received life. But,

Theſe words are far from ſuch a prohibition of a natural duty: They plainly regard the ſpiritual death of the ſoul; for all men by nature are ſpiritually dead in ſin, as appears from theſe texts, Luke xv. 24—32. John v. 25. Rom. vi. 13. 2 Cor. v. 14. Eph. ii. 1. and v. 14. Coloſſ. xi. 13. and Rom. iii. 23. v. 12. And then the ſenſe will be, Let thoſe who do not obey my word, but are enthralled in the bondage of ſin, and are dead unto righteouſneſs, take care to bury this their brother, who is dead before he has been regenerate from the corruption of Adam's ſin. For if thou wilt not follow me in the regeneration, thou canſt have no part with me.

Ver. 23. to 28. And when he was entered into a ſhip, &c.] See Mark iv. 35. to the end of the chapter.

Ver. 28, &c. And when he was come to the other ſide into the country of the Gadarenes, &c.] See Mark v. 1, &c. and Luke viii. 26—39.

CHAP. IX.

2 Chriſt curing one ſick of the palſie, 9 calleth Matthew from the receit of cuſtom, 10 eateth with publicans and ſinners, 14 defendeth his diſciples for not faſting, 20 cureth the bloody iſſue, 23 raiſeth from death Jairus daughter, 27 giveth ſight to the blind men. 32 healeth a dumb man poſſeſſed of a devil, 36 and hath compaſſion of the multitude.

AND he entred into a ſhip, and paſſed over, and came into his own city.

2 And behold, they brought to him a man ſick of the palſie, lying on a bed: and Jeſus ſeeing their faith, ſaid unto the ſick of the palſie, Son, be of good cheer, thy ſins be forgiven thee.

3 And, behold certain of the ſcribes ſaid within themſelves, This man blaſphemeth.

4 And Jeſus knowing their thoughts, ſaid, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?

5 For whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee? or to ſay, Ariſe and walk?

6 But that ye may know that the ſon of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins (then ſaith he to the ſick of the palſie) Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe.

7 And he aroſe, and departed to his houſe.

8 But when the multitude ſaw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given ſuch power unto men.

9 ¶ And as Jeſus paſſed forth from thence, he ſaw a man named Matthew, ſitting at the receit of cuſtom: and he ſaith unto him, Follow me. And he aroſe, and followed him.

10 ¶ And it came to paſs, as Jeſus ſat at meat in the houſe, behold, many publicans and ſinners came and ſat down with him and his diſciples.

11 And when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto his diſciples, Why eateth your maſter with publicans and ſinners?

12 But when Jeſus heard that, he ſaid unto them, They that be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick.

13 But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance.

14 ¶ Then came to him the diſciples of John, ſaying, Why do we and the Phariſees faſt oft, but thy diſciples faſt not?

15 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come when the bridegroom ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt.

16 No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment: for that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worſe.

17 Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: elſe the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles periſh: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preſerved.

18 ¶ While he ſpake theſe things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler and worſhipped him, ſaying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and ſhe ſhall live.

19 And Jeſus aroſe, and followed him and ſo did his diſciples.

20 ¶ (And behold a woman which was diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment.

21 For ſhe ſaid within her ſelf, If I may but touch his garment, I ſhall be whole.

22 But Jeſus turned him about, and when he ſaw her, he ſaid, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour)

23 And when Jeſus came into the rulers houſe, and ſaw the minſtrels, and the people making a noiſe,

24 He ſaid unto them, Give place, for the maid is not dead, but ſleepeth. And they laughed him to ſcorn.

25 But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid aroſe.

26 And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

27 ¶ And when Jeſus departed thence two blind men followed him, crying, and ſaying, Thou ſon of David, have mercy on us.

28 And when he was come into the houſe, the blind men came to him: and Jeſus ſaith unto them, Believe ye, that I am able to do this? They ſaid unto him, Yea, Lord.

29 Then touched he their eyes, ſaying, According to your faith, be it unto you.

30 And their eyes were opened, and Jeſus ſtraitly charged them, ſaying, See that no man know it.

31 But they, when they were departed, ſpread abroad his fame in all that country.

32 ¶ As they went out, behold, they brought to him a dumb man poſſeſſed with a devil.

33 And when the devil was caſt out, the dumb ſpake: and the multitudes marvelled, ſaying, It was never ſo ſeen in Iſrael.

34 But the Phariſees ſaid, He caſteth out the devils through the prince of the devils.

35 And Jeſus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom, and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people.

36 ¶ But when he ſaw the multitudes, he was moved with compaſſion on them, becauſe they fainted, and were ſcattered abroad, as ſheep having no ſhepherd.

37 Then ſaith he unto his diſciples, The harveſt truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few.

38 Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt, that he will ſend forth labourers into his harveſt.

Chap. ix. This chapter is a continuation of ſeveral miracles, which Matthew witneſſeth were done by Chriſt. But as they have been related more circumſtantially by ſome other Evangeliſts, I ſhall now only refer you to thoſe places where I intend to be more particular in their examination. Therefore,

Ver. 2. They brought to him a man ſick of the palſy, &c.] See this account in Mark ii. 3, &c. to 13.

Ver. 9. — He ſaw a man named Matthew, &c.] This is the Evangeliſt Matthew, or as Mark calls him, Levi the ſon of Alpheus, ch. ii. 14. conſult the introduction or argument prefixed to this Goſpel, and Mark ii. 14—18.

Ver. 14. — Why do the Phariſees faſt oft, &c.] See Luke v. 33. to the end.

Ver. 18. — Behold, there came a certain ruler, &c.] See Mark v. 22, &c.

Ver. 20. — Behold, a woman which was diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood twelve years, &c.] See Mark v. 24. to 35.

Ver. 32. — Behold, they brought to him a dumb man poſſeſſed with a devil, &c.] See Luke xi. 14—27.

Ver. 37, and 38. Theſe two verſes are ſpoken by Chriſt by way of parable, which kind of ſpeech being very frequently met with in the Sacred Book, it will be proper to give you ſome general account of them, before we proceed any further. Therefore,

Let it be obſerved, That Chriſt and his forerunner John in their parabolical diſcourſes were wont to allude to things preſent. The old Prophets, when they would deſcribe things emphatically, did not only draw parables from things which offered themſelves, as from the rent of a garment, 1 Sam. xv. from the ſabbatic year, Iſa. xxxvii. from the veſſels of a potter, Jer. xviii, &c. but alſo when ſuch fit objects were wanting, they ſupplied them by their own actions, as by rending a garment, 1 Kings xi. by ſhooting, 2 Kings xiii. by making bare their body, Iſa. xx. by impoſing ſignificant names to their ſons, Iſa. viii. Hoſ. i. by hiding a girdle in the bank of Euphrates, Jer. xiii. by breaking a potter's veſſel, Jer. xix. by putting on fetters and yokes, Jer. xxvii. by binding a book to a ſtone, and caſting them both into Euphrates, Jer. li. by beſieging a painted city, Ezek. iv. by dividing hair into three parts, Ezek. v. by making a chain, Ezek. vii. by carrying out houſhold-ſtuff like a captive and trembling, Ezek. xii, &c. By ſuch kind of types the Prophets loved to ſpeak. And Chriſt being endued with a nobler prophetic ſpirit than the reſt, excelled alſo in this kind of ſpeaking, yet ſo as not to ſpeak by his own actions, that was leſs grave and decent, but to turn into parables ſuch things as offered themſelves. So here in this text on Matthew, ix. 37. and again, in John iv. 35. On occaſion of the harveſt approaching, he admoniſhed his diſciples once and again of the ſpiritual harveſt. Seeing the lilies of the field, he admoniſhes his diſciples about gay clothing, Matt. vi. 28. In alluſion to the preſent ſeaſon of fruits, he admoniſhes his diſciples about knowing men by their fruits, Matt. vii. 16. In the time of the paſſover, when trees put forth leaves, he bids his diſciples learn a parable from the fig-tree: when its branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that ſummer is nigh, &c. Matt. xxiv. 32. Luke xxi. 29. The ſame day, alluding both to the ſeaſon of the year and to his paſſion, which was to be two days after, he formed a parable of the time of fruits approaching, and the murdering of the heir, Matt. xxi. 33. Alluding at the ſame time, both to the money-changers whom he had newly driven out of the temple, and to his paſſion at hand; he made a parable of a nobleman going into a far country to receive a kingdom and return, and delivering his goods to his ſervants, and at his return condemning the ſlothful ſervant becauſe he put not his money to the exchangers, Matth. xxv. 14. Luke xix. 12. Being near the temple where ſheep were kept in folds to be ſold for the ſacrifices, he ſpake many things parabollically of ſheep, of the ſhepherd, and of the door of the ſheepfold; and diſcovers that he alluded to the ſheepfolds which were to be hired in the market-place, by ſpeaking of ſuch folds as a thief could not enter by the door, nor the ſhepherd himſelf open, but a porter opened to the ſhepherd, John x. 1, 3. Being in the mount of Olives, Matth. xxxvi. 30. John xiv. 31. A place ſo fertile that it could not want vines, he ſpake many things myſtically of the husbandman, and of the vine and its branches, John xv. Meeting a blind man, he admoniſhed of ſpiritual blindneſs, John ix. 39. At the ſight of little children, he deſcribed once and again the innocence of the elect, Matth. xviii. 2. xix. 13. Knowing that Lazarus was dead and ſhould be raiſed again, he diſcourſed of the reſurrection and life eternal, John xi. 25, 26. Hearing of the ſlaughter of ſome whom Pilate had ſlain, he admoniſhed of eternal death, Luke xiii. 1. To his fiſhermen he ſpake of fiſhers of men, Matt. iv. 10. and compoſed another parable about fiſhes, Matt. xiii. 47. Being by the temple, he ſpake of the temple of his body, John ii. 19. At ſupper he ſpake a parable about the myſtical ſupper to come in the kingdom of Heaven, Luke xiv. On occaſion of temporal food, he admoniſhed his diſciples of ſpiritual food, and of eating his fleſh and drinking his blood myſtically, John vi. 27——53. When his diſciples wanted bread, he bade them beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, Matt. xvi. 6. Being deſired to eat, he anſwered that he had other meat, John iv. 31. In the great day of the feaſt of tabernacles, when the Jews, as their cuſtom was, brought a great quantity of waters from the river Shiloah into the temple, Chriſt ſtood and cried, ſaying, If any man thirſt let him come to me and drink. He that believeth in me, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water, John vii. 37. The next day, in alluſion to the ſervants, who by reaſon of the ſabbatical year were newly ſet free, he ſaid, If ye continue in my word, the truth ſhall make you free. Which the Jews underſtanding literally with reſpect to the preſent manumiſſion of ſervants, anſwered, We be Abraham's ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man: how ſayeſt thou, ye ſhall be made free? John viii. They aſſert their freedom by a double argument: Firſt, becauſe they were the ſeed of Abraham, and therefore newly made free, had they been ever in bondage; and then, becauſe they never were in bondage. In the laſt paſſover, when Herod led his army through Judea againſt Aretas king of Arabia, becauſe Aretas was aggreſſor and the ſtronger in military forces, as appeared by the event; Chriſt alluding to that ſtate of things, compoſed the parable of a weaker king leading his army againſt a ſtronger who made war upon him, Luke xiv. 31. And I doubt not but divers other parables were formed upon other occaſions, the hiſtory of which we have not.

CHAP. X.

1 Chriſt ſendeth out his twelve Apoſtles, enabling them with power to do miracles, 5 giveth them their charge, teacheth them, 16 comforteth them againſt perſecutions, 40 and promiſeth a bleſſing to thoſe that receive them.

AND when he had called unto him his twelve diſciples, he gave them power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out, and to heal all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe.

2 Now the names of the twelve apoſtles are theſe; The firſt, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother.

3 Philip, and Bartholomew, Thomas, and Matthew the publican, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Labbeus, whoſe ſirname was Thaddeus.

4 Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iſcariot, who alſo betrayed him.

5 Theſe twelve Jeſus ſent forth, and commanded them, ſaying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not.

6 But go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael.

7 And as ye go, preach, ſaying the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

8 Heal the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, raiſe the dead, caſt out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

9 Provide neither gold, nor ſilver, nor braſs in your purſes.

10 Nor ſcrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither ſhoes, nor yet ſtaves: (for the workmen is worthy of his meat.)

11 And into whatſoever city or town ye ſhall enter, enquire who in it is worthy, and there abide till ye go thence.

12 And when ye come into an houſe, ſalute it.

13 And if the houſe be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

14 And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, nor hear your words: when ye depart out of that houſe, or city, ſhake off the duſt of your feet.

15 Verily I ſay unto you, It ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha, in the day of judgment, than for that city.

16 ¶ Behold, I ſend you forth as ſheep in the midſt of wolves: be ye therefore wiſe as ſerpents, and harmleſs as doves.

17 But beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues.

18 And ye ſhall be brought before governors and kings for my ſake, for a teſtimony againſt them and the Gentiles.

19 But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what you ſhall ſpeak, for it ſhall be given you in that ſame hour what ye ſhall ſpeak.

20 For it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Spirit of your Father which ſpeaketh in you.

21 And the brother ſhall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and cauſe them to be put to death.

22 And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake: but he that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved.

23 But when they perſecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not have gone over the cities of Iſrael till the Son of man be come.

25 It is enough for the diſciple that he be as his maſter, and the ſervant as his lord: if they have called the maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more ſhall they call them of his houſhold?

26 Fear not them therefore: for there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed; and hid, that ſhall not be known.

27 What I tell you in darkneſs, that ſpeak ye in light: and what you hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the houſe-tops.

28 And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul: but rather fear him which is able to deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell.

29 Are not two ſparrows ſold for a farthing? and one of them ſhall not fall on the ground without your father.

30 But the very hairs of your head are all numbred.

31 Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many ſparrows.

32 Whoſoever therefore ſhall confeſs me before men, him will I confeſs alſo before my Father which is in heaven.

33 But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, him will I alſo deny before my Father which is in heaven.

34 Think not that I am come to ſend peace on earth: I came not to ſend peace, but a ſword.

35 For I am come to ſet a man at variance againſt his father, and the daughter againſt her mother, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law.

36 And a mans foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold.

37 He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me: and he that loveth ſon or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me.

38 And he that taketh not his croſs, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

39 He that findeth his life, ſhall loſe it: and he that loſeth his life for my ſake ſhall find it.

40 ¶ He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me.

41 He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, ſhall receive a prophets reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous mans reward.

42 And whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones, a cup of cold water only, in the name of a diſciple, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward.

Ver. 1. He gave them power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out, and to heal all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe.] ἐξουσία πνευμάτων, here is genitivus objecti, ſay Grammarians; power of unclean ſpirits, being put for power over, or againſt them. So βλασφημία τοῦ πνεύματος, Matt. xii. 31. is expounded, ver. 32. blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt; ſee Iſa. iii. 14. Joel iii. 19. 1 Cor. ix. 12. But that which chiefly is to be obſerved here, is this, that Chriſt here delegates power to the Apoſtles, and afterwads to the ſeventy diſciples, Luke x. 9, 17. and after his reſurrection to Believers in the general, to do this in his name, Mark xvi. 17, 18. And tho' the Apoſtles were not at preſent impowered to impart theſe gifts to others, yet after our Lord's reſurrection they were enabled to do it, by baptizing, and laying their hands upon them; which is ſo eminent a demonſtration of the truth of Chriſtian faith, as hath no parallel in any hiſtory, excepting that of Moſes, who laid his hands upon Joſhua, and he was filled with the ſpirit of wiſdom, Deut. xxxiv. 9. and of Eliſha, on whom the ſpirit of Elijah reſted, 2 Kings ii. 15. Tho' this was done, not by any power they had to communicate to others the virtue which reſided in them, but in the caſe of Joſhua by the particular command of God, Numb. xxvii. 19, 20. and in the caſe of Eliſha by the will of God; and was a ſignal confirmation that they were both Prophets ſent by God; and much leſs was it done, as here, by invocation of their names. For among all the accounts the heathens have given us of their famous magicians, and workers of wonders, there is not one to be found, who ever pretended to a power to delegate their virtue to others, or to impart their power to them, upon the invocation or uſing of their names, or belief of their doctrine. And hence Arnobius, having ſummed up the miracles our Saviour did, adds, that he not only did them by his power, Verum quod erat ſublimius multos alios experiri & facere ſui nominis cum adjectione permiſit, "but permitted many others to do them, by invocation of his name; nor did he any of thoſe miracles which raiſed aſtoniſhment in others, which he enabled not his little ones, but even ruſticks to perform. And then he triumphs over the heathens thus, "What ſay you, Oh ye ſtiff and incredulous minds?" Alicuine mortalium Jupiter ille Capitolinus hujuſmodi poteſtatem dedit? "Did ever that Jupiter whom ye Romans worſhip in the capitol, give the like power to any mortal?" and then he concludes this to be the evidence of a true Divine Power, "for to tranſcribe your miraculous power to a man, and to give authority and ſtrength to a creature, to do that which you alone can do, ſupra omnia ſitæ eſt poteſtatis, continentiſque ſub ſeſe eſt rerum omnium cauſas, "is an evidence of one who hath power over all, and hath the cauſes of all things at his beck." Arnob. adv. Gentes l. 1. p. 30, 31.

Ver. 2. Firſt Simon.] It is the obſervation of many of the fathers, Cyprian Ep. 71. Baſil. de judicio, Dei. Hillar. in Matt. Theoph. in loc. and interpreters here, that Simon is here reckoned the firſt of the Apoſtles; not as being ſo in dignity, but as being firſt called; for which ſee Mark i. 16. Matt. iv. 18. And therefore this word is omitted both by St. Mark, ch. iii. 16. and St. Luke, ch. vi. 14. which ſure they would not have done, had they imagined it to be ſo remarkable, for eſtabliſhing St. Peter's monarchy, as the Papiſts do.

Ver. 6. But go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael.] He calls all Iſrael ſheep, tho' they were not obedient to the voice of the ſhepherd, as being all God's choſen people; he calls them loſt ſheep, becauſe they were in ſo great peril of being loſt and ruined by the ignorance and wickedneſs of their guides; ſo Pſal. cxix. 176. Iſa. liii. 6. Jer. l. 6. To them the Apoſtles are firſt ſent, becauſe they were children of the kingdom, Matt. viii. 12. to whom the promiſe of the Meſſiah was made, Gen. xvii. 1. and the adoption and promiſes eſpecially belonged, Rom. ix. 4. Whence the Apoſtle ſaith, the Goſpel ought firſt to be preached to them, Acts xiii. 46. They who by ſheep here, underſtand the elect by a ſecret decree of God, muſt, contrary to the tenor of the New Teſtament, make Chriſt and his Apoſtles to be ſent to none, who rejected the Goſpel; yea, they make Chriſt ſend his Apoſtles to them, whom they could never find; it being not poſſible for them, without a revelation, to know who were thus the elect of God.

Ver. 8. Raiſe the dead.] Dr. Mills here notes, That theſe words are wanting in many Manuſcripts; and, becauſe the Apoſtles raiſed none from the dead before Chriſt's reſurrection, he conjectures, that they have been added to the text: But, againſt this imagination, let it be noted, That theſe words are to be found in the Vulgar, Syriack, Arabick, and Ethiopick Verſions, and left out only in the later Verſion of the Perſick; and the argument which he and Grotius, uſe for the excluding theſe words from the text, would exclude alſo the cleanſing of the lepers, for we read of none cleanſed by them in that interval: But it is to be obſerved, that the words in this chapter reach to their miſſion after Chriſt's reſurrection, and many of them were not fulfilled before: For then only was it, that they were brought before councils, and ſcourged in the ſynagogues, and brought before kings and governors, for Chriſt's ſake, ver. 17, 18. then only was the ſpirit given them, to teach them how to ſpeak, ver. 19, 20. then were they hated of all men for his name. Note therefore, that there was a double miſſion of the Apoſtles. The 1ſt, Was to the Jews only, excluſively to the Gentiles, and Samaritans, ver. 5. and thus they were ſent, two and two, Mark vi. 7. to go thro' the cities and villages of Iſrael to preach, ſaying, the kingdom of Heaven is at hand, here ver. 7—23. Luke ix. 5, 6. which miſſion they compleated before our Saviour's death, Luke ix. 10—22—35. and in this they were only impowered to heal diſeaſes, and to caſt out Devils, Matt. x. 1. Mark vi. 7—13. Luke ix. 1, 2. But,

2dly, They had a ſecond miſſion after our Lord's reſurrection conceived in theſe words, as my father ſent me, ſo ſend I you, John xx. 21. And this was to be executed after the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, by being his witneſſes in Jeruſalem, and all Judea and Samaria, and to the utmoſt ends of the earth, Acts i. 8. And to this miſſion relates this commiſſion, to cleanſe the lepers, and to raiſe the dead; for, beſides the many things already mentioned, which cannot poſſibly relate to their firſt miſſion; moſt of the things mentioned in this chapter, are the very things ſpoken in our Lord's prediction of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and are there mentioned as things to be done then, Matth. xxiv. 9. And theſe words, ver. 22. He that endures to the end, ſhall be ſaved, are the very words which Chriſt uſeth, when he ſpeaks of the deſtruction of the Jewiſh polity, Matt. xxiv. 13. Mark xiii. 13. and therefore it is obſervable, That St. Mark and Luke, who relate only what appertained to their firſt miſſion, ſpeak nothing, in the chapters mentioned, of their commiſſion to cleanſe the lepers, or to raiſe the dead; or, from ver. 15, to 31. as knowing, that theſe things belonged to their ſecond miſſion.

——Freely you have received, freely give.] Tho' theſe words are by latter Fathers extended to both the Sacraments, according to thoſe words of Tertullian, Nulla res Dei pretio conſtat, "We receive nothing for the things of God;" yet, from the connection of them with the commiſſion given to cure diſeaſes, caſt out Devils, and raiſe the dead; and from the words of Irenæus, l. 2. c. 57. ſaying, "The Church did all theſe miracles, neither ſeducing any man, nor taking money for them, for as ſhe hath received them freely of God, ſo ſhe freely miniſters them," I ſay, from theſe things it is evident, that theſe words only relate to the diſpenſing of miraculous gifts, and they aſſuredly do wreſt, and very much abuſe them, who plead from them againſt the maintenance of the miniſtry. For, 1. Chriſt ſending the Seventy on the ſame errand, and inveſting them with the ſame power, bids them "into whatſoever houſe they entred, to eat and drink what was ſet before them, becauſe the labourer was worthy of his hire," Luke x. 7. And many of the Apoſtles, when executing this commiſſion, even the brethren of our Lord, and Cephas, did ſo, 1 Cor. ix. 4, 5. St. Paul alſo, who did not uſe this liberty, not only juſtifies his right to do ſo, but requires them who are "taught the Word, to communicate to him that teacheth in all good things," Gal. vi. 6. ſee the note there; and pronounceth him that "labours in the Word and doctrine, worthy of double honour, that is, maintenance; and ſaith, the Lord hath ordained, that they who preach the Goſpel, ſhould live of of the Goſpel," 1 Cor. ix. 14

Ver. 10. Nor yet ſtaves.] That the reading of Theophylact, and many MSS. μηδὲ ῥαβδὸς, nor ſtaves, is the true reading, is evident from Mark vi. 8. Luke ix. 3. where they are permitted to carry one ſtaff. And by this precept, our Lord taught them, when they were employed in his ſervice, to depend upon his providence for the proviſion of what they wanted; and therefore, he ſpeaks thus to them, "When I thus ſent you forth, lacked ye any thing?" Luke xxii. 35. it follows, "for the labourer is worthy of his meat;" and therefore, even they were diſpenſing theſe miracles, our Lord allows them to receive it: Only Theophylact here notes, That Chriſt here ſays, he is worthy τροφῆς οὐ τρυφῆς, "of his food, not of dainties; for it becomes not a teacher to fare deliciouſly."

Ver. 11. Enquire who in it is worthy.] So ver. 13. And if the houſe be not worthy. Here Camero pronounces them innovators, who conclude hence, that the reaſon why one is rather called than another, is in men themſelves, i. e. in any diſpoſition in them to receive the word; that is, he pronounceth all the ancients, innovators: For that they were of this opinion, is evident from Dally's teſtimon. veterum, and from Voſſius in his Pelagian hiſtory, l. 7. c. 2. and is demonſtrable from theſe words of Chriſt; for he ſends his Apoſtles to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, i. e. to thoſe who had ſtrayed from the ſalutary paſtures of the law, and the Prophets, to them whom he calls to repentance, Mark vi. 12. to whom the Goſpel was to be preached, Luke x. 9. He ſpeaks therefore not of them, who were called already, but who were to be called to Chriſt's ſheepfold, to the kingdom of heaven, and to faith, and repentance, as the preparations for entring into it. 2. In thoſe who are thus to be called, Chriſt manifeſtly ſuppoſeth, ſome would be found by the Apoſtles ἄξιοι, worthy, ſome unworthy; bidding them to enquire, who were ſuch, and who not; and accordingly, to deport themſelves towards them: Now, whence ſhould they know this, but from ſuch diſpoſitions found in ſome, which rendred them fit for the kingdom, or from whom they might hope, they ſhould not labour in vain, in calling them to repentance, and preaching the kingdom of God to them: So alſo, when he ſends his ſeventy diſciples on the ſame errand, bidding them ſay, peace to the houſe they come to; and promiſing, that if a ſon of peace were there, their peace ſhould reſt upon it, Luke x. 6. What can this ſon of peace be, but one diſpoſed to receive ſuch perſons peaceably, and kindly, and to hearken to their admonitions? And is not this the very thing which fitted them for the Divine Benediction? This will be ſtill more evident, from the conſideration of the perſons oppoſed to the worthy, and the ſons of peace; for they were ſuch as were not diſpoſed to hearken to the word, or to receive the preachers of it, Matt. x. 14. Mark vi. 11. Luke x, 10. for which they were to look upon them as impure; yea, for which Chriſt pronounces, their puniſhment would be greater in the day of judgment, than that of Sodom and Gomorrah: And muſt not ſuch dreadful Judgments befal them, for want of ſuch diſpoſitions, as might, and ought to have been in them towards the Goſpel of the kingdom, and thoſe who came to them with the kind offer of the bleſſings of it? They, therefore by refuſing to receive the word, judged themſelves unworthy of eternal life, Acts xiii. 46. when they might, and ſhould have done the contrary; and for want of thoſe good diſpoſitions, which others had, and they might have had, fell ſhort of the ſalvation tendred to them.

Ver. 13. But, if it be not worthy, let your peace return unto you.] That is, They ſhall not obtain the peace you wiſh them, or receive any benefit from your wiſhes; ſo this phraſe ſignifies in thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, My prayer returned into my boſom, Pſal. xxxv. 14. ſee Iſa. lv. 11.

Ver. 14. Shake off the duſt from your feet.] The Jews thought the duſt of heathen lands polluted; ſo that the import of this phraſe is this, "Look upon ſuch, as thoſe heathens whom I have forbid you to preach to;" when therefore ye depart from them, ſhake off the duſt of your feet, as a teſtimony that you ſo eſteem them.

Ver. 15. Verily I ſay unto you, it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.] The gloſs which ſome have put upon theſe words, viz. That the puniſhment of that city ſhall be greater, when Chriſt comes to execute his judgment on the Jewiſh nation, than that which Sodom and Gomorrah ſuffered, for refuſing the preaching of Lot, doth certainly pervert the import of theſe words. For, 1. Chriſt ſaith not, it hath been more tolerable for Sodom, but, ἔσαι, it ſhall be ſo; which ſhews, he had reſpect not to the paſt, but future ſufferings of Sodom and Gomorrah. 2. Chriſt adds, it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom, &c. in the day of judgment: Now, though the times of the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, are ſometimes ſtiled the days of vengeance, yet never are they called the day of judgment; but that phraſe ſtill relates unto the final judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, 2 Pet. iii. 7. that day to which the wicked are reſerved to be puniſhed, 2 Pet. ii. 9. ſee Matt. xii. 36. 1 John iv. 17. So alſo doth the phraſe ἐν τῇ κρίσει, uſed by St. Luke, chap. x. 14. concerning the ſame perſons, always ſignify, Matt. xii. 41, 42. ſo that the Sodomites ſhall certainly receive a future judgment. And, who can rationally conceive, that men polluted with ſuch unnatural luſts, ſhould be fit to come into that place, into which nothing enters that is polluted, or defiled? Rev. xxi. 27. Here alſo, it is well noted by Grotius, that the ſin of thoſe who reject the Goſpel, rendring them obnoxious to greater puniſhment than Sodom and Gomorrah were to ſuffer at the day of judgment, becauſe committed againſt greater light and greater confirmation of the truth, muſt be a wilful ſin, which it was in their power to avoid.

Ver. 17. But beware of men.] i. e. Avoid as much as in you lies, the perſecutions you may ſuffer from them: For, as Theophylact here notes, this is to be wiſe as ſerpents, viz. to be circumſpect in declining their ſnares, and giving them no juſt occaſion to afflict us; and to be harmleſs as doves, is to offend no man by word, or example, and ſo to give them no occaſion to do evil to us.

Ver. 19, 20. Take no thought how, or what he ſhall ſpeak, for it is not you that ſpeak, but the ſpirit of my Father which ſpeaketh in you.] Chriſt promiſing here to his Apoſtles, immediate aſſiſtance from the Holy Sprit, forbids them, προμελετᾶν, to meditate before-hand what they ſhould ſay, Luke xxi. 14. Vain therefore are the Papiſts, who aſcribe the ſame aſſiſtance to their fathers met in councils, ſaying, "It is not they that ſpeak, but the Holy Ghoſt that ſpeaketh in them; and yet make prayers, and diſputations, and many other things, requiſite to an infallible deciſion. Vain alſo are the Anabaptiſts, Quakers, and whoſoever do now expect the like aſſiſtance in prayer, and preaching; after theſe extraordinary gifts are ceaſed, as the Apoſtles had by virtue of them, they may as well pretend to "ſpeak with tongues, and caſt out Devils, as the Apoſtles did, by virtue of the ſame aſſiſtance.

Ver. 23. But when they ſhall perſecute you in this city, flee into another.] It follows not from theſe words, that a paſtor, who is fixed to a particular congregation, may fly from it in times of perſecution; their caſe being not the ſame with that of the Apoſtles, whoſe commiſſion was to go through all the cities of Judea, beginning at Jeruſalem, Acts i. 8. ſo that they only fled from one part of their Juriſdiction to another, and were ſtill executing the office and truſt committed to them.

——— I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not have gone over the cities of Iſrael till the ſon of man come.] This Dr. Lightfoot underſtands as ſpoken of their firſt miſſion, and ſays, the meaning of the words is this, You ſhall not have finiſhed it, till the Son of man riſe from the dead. But, 1ſt, In that firſt miſſion, they met with no perſecution in any city; but, where they were not received, left it of their own accord, ver. 11. 2dly, They preſently returned from their firſt commiſſion to their Lord, and told him all that they had done, and taught in proſecution of it, as we read, Luke ix. 10. Mark vi. 30. 3dly, This phraſe, the coming of the Son of man, doth never, that I know of, ſignify our Lord's coming at his reſurrection, but either his coming with the Roman army to deſtroy the Jews, as Matt. xxiv. 27, 30, 37, 44—xxv, 13. Mark xiii. 26. Luke xviii. 8.—xxi. 27. or elſe, his coming to the final judgment, Matt. xvi. 27. And ſeeing the Apoſtles were none of them to live till the Day of Judgment, it ſeems neceſſary to underſtand this of his coming to avenge his quarrel on the Jewiſh nation. And to this ſenſe, lead the following words; and if you meet with great obloquies, and perſecutions, from the Jewiſh nation, whilſt you are thus ſpreading the Goſpel thro' Judea, (as they did even to the beginning of the war, Joſeph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. James, the brother of our Lord, and other Chriſtians, being ſlain by Ananus the high-prieſt, but three years before the war broke out;) 'tis only what was done to your Lord; and therefore, what you have equal reaſon to expect, for the diſciple is not above his maſter, ver. 24. 25, 26.

Ver. 26. Fear ye not them therefore; for there is nothing hidden that ſhall not be revealed.] Theſe words are capable of two good ſenſes: 1ſt, Let not the dread of of theſe perſecutors affright you from preaching of the Goſpel, as deſpairing of the ſucceſs of it; for, tho' at preſent, it ſeems to be hidden from the world, and it is like to be obſcured a while by the calumnies of the Jews, and others, I will cauſe it to ſhine thro' all the world, and diſſipate all the clouds they caſt over it, and break through all obſtacles, and will render it mighty, to caſt down every high thought, that exalts it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt, 2 Cor. x. 5. or thus; fear not the calumnies with which they ſhall load you, (as they did your maſter, calling him Beelzebub, ver 25.) for, I will make the innocency and excellency of your doctrine, as clear as the light; and your integrity in the diſpenſing of it, and your patience in ſuffering for it, to redound to your praiſe, honour, and glory, throughout all ages, and eſpecially at the revelation of our Lord from Heaven, 1 Pet. i. 7.

Ver. 27. What I ſay to you in darkneſs, ſpeak ye in the light, and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the houſe-tops.] i. e. What I, the Meſſiah, have ſaid to you in private, when I inſtructed you on the mountain, apart from the people, or at other times in obſcure parables; in ſome manner thereby imitating the method of inſtruction by the Jewiſh Doctors, whoſe cuſtom (as Dr. Lightfoot, and Dr. Hammond remark on this place,) was to whiſper into the ear of thoſe, whom they ordained to declare aloud their dictates to the aſſemblies. So I ordain you to ſpeak openly and clearly, in the audience of all men, and as it were, from the battlements on the tops of houſes, ſo very common among the Jews, from whence alſo they often preached to the people; ſee Deut. xxii. 8. 2 Sam. xi. 2. Acts x. 9. which agrees with the tradition of Hegeſippus, recorded by Euſebius in his Eccl. hiſt. lib. 2. c. 53. That James the juſt was carried to the top of the temple to preach to the people at the paſſover.

Ver. 28. And fear not them who can kill the body, but cannot kill the ſoul, &c.] Theſe words contain a certain evidence of the ſoul's immortality, and its continuation, after it is ſeparated from the body in a ſtate of ſenſibility. For, Chriſt here doth not ſpeak of an eternal death, but only of the temporal; becauſe it muſt be allowed, that man can only perſecute us to the grave, which reaſon compared with that paſſage of Luke, where it is ſaid, that the adverſaries of the Chriſtians can only kill their bodies; ch. xii. 4. and here, that they cannot kill their ſouls, evinceth maniſeſtly, that the ſoul doth not periſh with the body, nor reduced into a ſtate of inſenſibility, at its departing out of that houſe of clay.

Ver. 29. Are not two ſparrows ſold for a farthing?] The Greek of this word farthing, is aſſarion; which is a piece of copper weighing half an ounce, in value a halfpenny farthing, as being the tenth part of the Roman penny, and the leaſt money then current in their ſtate under the Roman government. And therefore, as the word aſſarion, was only made uſe of by the Evangeliſt, that by its little value we ſhould be convinced of the little regard a bird is in the eyes of our Creator, compared with a man; ſo our tranſlators, not keeping exactly to the real intrinſick value of the aſſarion, have given us the ſenſe of the Evangeliſt, by properly and ſignificantly expreſſing its meaning by our leaſt money, a farthing; ſo the French renders it for the ſame reaſon, by un ſou.

——— Without your father] i. e. Without his permiſſion, or againſt his will. Here alſo obſerve, that the phraſe here to fall to the ground, imports to fall down dead, Le Clerc. in loc.

Ver. 31. Therefore fear ye not, ye are of more value than many ſparrows.] This is the concluſion of the premiſes, whereby Jeſus infers, that God has a ſpecial care of his ſervants. And then brings this illation,

Ver. 32, 33. Whoſoever therefore ſhall confeſs me before men, &c.] i. e. Shall make an open and free profeſſion of believing in me (Rom. x. 9, 10.) I will, in the great Day of Judgment, acknowledge his faith, and receive him into the glory of my father who is in heaven; but he that wilfully putteth away from his heart the words of Salvation, and lives without fear, or as if he was never to give an account of his faith and practice, ſhall be caſt out in that Day of the Lord, both body and ſoul into hell, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

Ver. 34. Think not that I am come to ſend peace.] We are not to underſtand theſe words of that inward peace of conſcience, which none can enjoy, that are not rooted in the doctrines of Chriſt. They relate, as the context ſhews to a peace or agreement with the wicked, with whom we, according to this declaration, ought to live in a continual ſtriſe; becauſe the love, or wickedneſs of the world, ſays the Apoſtle, is at enmity with God: Therefore it follows:

———I came not to ſend peace, but a ſword.] Not by any natural property of Chriſt or of his Goſpel, which teacheth nothing but kindneſs, patience, long ſuffering, meekneſs, and forgiveneſs, and is the only means of a true reconciliation between God and man, and of peace and brotherly love with one another. Therefore this ſword, or diviſion, or diſagreement on earth, which Chriſt declares he doth ſend, is an accidental conſequence of his doctrine and faith, occaſioned by the oppoſition of the Devil and the world againſt Chriſt and his kingdom. So alſo what is ſaid in the next verſe is to be interpreted in like manner.

Ver. 35.——To ſet a man at variance againſt his father, &c.] Should theſe words be underſtood literally, that Chriſt came to ſow diviſions and animoſities among relations and in families, his doctrine could not be of God, who is the Lord of peace, and the God of all comfort; but we learn from hence, that as Chriſt is the prince of peace, he taught his diſciples to be peaceable alſo, and at the ſame time told them, that they muſt be perſecuted for righteouſneſs-ſake, becauſe they were of that peaceable nature, they would ſuffer many indignities from wicked men; that even a ſon, or a daughter, who had wickedly embraced the doctrine of Devils, by refuſing, or neglectin to obey the Lord their God, would refuſe to honour their father and mother; by which means it may be ſaid, that the ſaying of the Pſalmiſt is verified, "Mine own familiar friend, in whom I truſted, which did eat of my bread, hath, lift up his heel againſt me," Pſal. xli. 9. or, as it is otherwiſe worded, to the ſame effect, in the context, "And [then it may be ſaid] a man's foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold," ver. 36. The 37th, 38th, and 39th verſes are ſo many illuſtrations of this interpretation of ver. 35.

Ver. 42.——Whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones a cup of cold water only, &c.] See the Annotations hereafter, on Mark ix. 41. or Heb. vi. 10.

CHAP. XI.

2 John ſendeth his diſciples to Chriſt. 7 Chriſt's teſtimony concerning John. 18 The opinion of the people, both concerning John and Chriſt. 20 Chriſt upbraideth the unthankfulneſs, and unrepentance of Chorazin, Bethſaida, and Capernaum: 25 and praiſing his father's wiſdom in revealing the Goſpel to the ſimple, 28 he calleth to him all ſuch as feel the burden of their ſins.

AND it came to paſs when Jeſus had made an end of commanding his twelve diſciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.

2 Now when John had heard in the priſon the works of Chriſt, he ſent two of his diſciples,

3 And ſaid unto him, Art thou he that ſhould come, or do we look for another?

4 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Go and ſhew John again thoſe things which ye do hear and ſee:

5 The blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed up, and the poor have the goſpel preached to them.

6 And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.

7 ¶ And as they departed, Jeſus began to ſay unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderneſs to ſee? A reed ſhaken with the wind?

8 But what went ye out for to ſee? A man clothed in ſoft raiment? behold, they that wear ſoft clothing, are in kings houſes.

9 But what went ye out for to ſee? A prophet? yea, I ſay unto you, and more than a prophet.

10 For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee.

11 Verily I ſay unto you, among them that are born of women, there hath not riſen a greater than John the the Baptiſt: notwithſtanding, he that is leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, is greater than he.

12 And from the days of John the Baptiſt, until now, the kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

13 For all the prophets, and the law propheſied until John.

14 And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was for to come.

15 He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

16 ¶ But whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? It is like unto children ſitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17 And ſaying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented.

18 For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they ſay, he hath a devil.

19 The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they ſay, Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners: but wiſdom is juſtified of her children.

20 ¶ Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not.

21 Wo unto thee, Chorazin, wo unto thee, Bethſaida: for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in ſackcloth and aſhes.

22 But I ſay unto you, It ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.

23 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

24 But I ſay unto you, that it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee.

25 ¶ At that time Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes.

26 Even, ſo Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight.

27 All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father: neither knoweth any man the Father, ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him.

28 ¶ Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.

29 Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls.

30 For my yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light.

The firſt nineteen verſes of this chapter being repeated with ſome variation, by the Evangeliſt, Luke vii. I ſhall only at preſent animadvert upon part of the ſixth and the fourteenth veſes, and refer you to the reſt of the text in the Annotations intended to be made on the ſaid viith chapter of Luke.

Ver. 6.——The poor have the Goſpel preached to them.] It had been propheſied by Iſaiah and the Pſalmiſt, that the Meſſiah ſhould cure the blind, lame, and dumb, Chriſt therefore bids the meſſengers from John to tell the accompliſhment of thoſe Prophecies in him to their maſter, and God-like, adds the reſurrection of the dead, and the preaching of the Goſpel to the poor. By which method of preaching he informed John of the difference between his way of teaching, and that of the Doctors of his time, for the ſcribes, as John knew full well, were proud and mercenary teachers, never teaching any without extraordinary fees, and deſpiſing the common people, whom they diſtinguiſhed by an odious appellation of people of the earth; ſupporting their impudence with a very fooliſh and ridiculous proverb of their own invention, which ſays, that "the ſpirit reſted upon none, but the rich man." Grounded, I ſuppoſe, upon an obſervation in the Old Teſtament, which never mentions any Prophet ſent to one inferior to a king: But Chriſt, the great Prophet of all, who was come to ſave all mankind, firſt preached to fiſhermen, as an earneſt of his univerſal love, and our univerſal redemption. And, therefore, he adds, bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me; or, and therefore, tho' I have begun my miniſtry out of the common way of the Prophets and ſcribes; let not my preaching the joyful tidings of their redemption from ſin and ſlavery of Satan, to the poor firſt, inſtead of the rich; to fiſhermen rather than to kings, be a motive to any one to diſcredit my miſſion from God; for, I ſay unto you, God will bleſs with eternal life as many as ſhall take up their croſs and follow me. Tho', its probable, this might be the more properly added on this occaſion, at the appearance of ſome ill-nature, and, as it were, ſpleen, of John's diſciples againſt Jeſus, as may be obſerved from their ſaying to John, "To whom thou bareſt witneſs, behold the ſame baptizeth, and all men come to him," q. d. we are abandoned, few men come to our baptiſm; but vaſt multitudes reſort to him.

The opinion of Diodati on this text being very pertinent, I ſhall alſo make bold to tranſcribe it as confirming the premiſes, the words that ſhall not be offended in me, ſays this commentator imports," that taketh not occaſion to alienate himſelf from me by reaſon of the weekneſs, diſintreſſedneſs and poverty of my perſon and ſtation of life, nor on account of my doctrine, which oppoſeth all the temptations, ſnares and ſubtilites of the world fleſh and the Devil; and bringeth tidings of, and carrieth along with it, the croſs of tribulations and afflictions in the cauſe of God: According to that of the Apoſtle," we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs, &c. 1 Cor. i. 23. &c.

Ver. 14. And if you will receive it, this is that Elias, which was for to come.] This relates to a general tradition of the Jewiſh nation, that Elias the Tiſhbite was to come in perſon, as the forerunner of the Meſſiah of the Jews; that he in perſon was to anoint him and to publiſh his advent among them, by preaching before the coming of the Son of David; as may be more particularly obſerved in that queſtion put to John the Baptiſt, (John i. 21.) Art thou Elias? and in that current opinion of the ſcribes, that Elias muſt firſt come and reſtore all things Matt. xvii. 10. compared with Mal. iv. 5. and Ecclus. xlviii. 10. And this was the reaſon why Trypho the Jew declares, that "all we Jews, expect Elias to anoint Chriſt at his comming;"

Dialog. p. 268. Morover the ancient Chriſtians of the primitive church in the ſecond century generally believed that Elias the Tiſhbite is to come in perſon before the great and terrible day of the Lord, or his ſecond advent; as de la Cerda in Tertull. de reſurrectione Carnis, and Hueſius upon Origen Maldonate, obſerve; and Mr. Mede in his Diſc. 25. p. 48. ſays, that "it is well known that all the fathers were of this opinion." See Pet. Alexandrinus in Apoc. ii. And Arethas Cæſarienſis, calls it the unanimous received opinion of the church, But Chriſt, in oppoſition to this Jewiſh tradition, aſſerts "that John the Baptiſt was the very perſon, of whom it was written, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face; as it is confirmed by Mark i. 1—4. And that this meſſenger deſcribed by the Prophet Malachi, ch. iii. 1. was the ſame perſon he afterwards had mentioned at ch. iv. 5. And therefore, that Elijah could be no other than John the Baptiſt: for when Chriſt warned his diſciples "to tell no no man of the viſion in the mount, till the Son of man was riſen from the dead," Matt. xvii. 9. ſhews, that his ſaid diſciples had been pre-inſtructed by the ſcribes, that Elias muſt firſt come. Therefore, when this enquiry was made, our Saviour granted the promiſe of an Elias to come, and reſtore all things, ver. 11. But adds, I ſay unto you, that the Elias promiſed hath come already, and the Scribes knew him not, but did unto him whatſoever they would, ver. 12. From whence the diſciples were convinced that he ſpake to them of John the Baptiſt, ver. 13. And therefore, the Fathers above have taught a falſe opinion, or misinterpreted the plain words of Chriſt; for as our Saviour plainly declares, John is that Elias, which was to come; becauſe he came in the power and ſpirit of Elias, Luke i. 16. So that we are not by vertue of any Prophecy, or ambiguity in a prophetic ſtile, to look for, or expect another. For thus our Saviour ſpeaks thus: the Prophet Malachi ſaith, "behold, I ſend my meſſenger before my face; Now, I aſſure you, the Baptiſt is the very perſon of whom this is written by the ſame Prophet, "behold, I will ſend you Elias the Prophet," &c. Whence your ſcribes teach you to expect the perſonal appearance of Elias the Tiſhbite: But I ſay unto you, that they are blind guides, and know not, or will not tell you the truth; for the Prophet by that name pretypes him, whom you have ſeen, and heard, baptizing the people and preaching repentance, John the Baptiſt, who is come as a meſſenger before my face, to declare my coming, who am the expectation of Iſrael.

CHAP. XII.

1 Chriſt reproveth the blindneſs of the Phariſees concerning the breach of the ſabbath, 3 by ſcriptures, 9 by reaſon, 13 and by a miracle. 22 He healeth the man poſſeſſed that was blind, and dumb. 31 Blaſphemy againſt the holy ghoſt ſhall never be forgiven. 36 Account ſhall be made of idle words. 38 He rebuketh the unfaithful, who ſeek after a ſign. 49 And ſheweth who is his brother, ſiſter, and mother.

AT that time Jeſus went on the ſabbath-day through the corn, and his ſciples were an hungred, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat.

2 But when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto him, Behold, thy diſciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the ſabbath-day.

3 But he ſaid unto them, Have ye not read what David did when he was an hungred, and they that were with him,

4 How he entred into the houſe of God, and did eat the ſhew-bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the prieſts?

5 Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the ſabbath-days the prieſts in the temple profane the ſabbath, and are blameleſs?

6 But I ſay unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple.

7 But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltleſs.

8 For the ſon of man is Lord even of the ſabbath-day.

9 And when he was departed thence, he went into their ſynagogue.

10 ¶ And behold, there was a man which had his hand withered: and they asked him, ſaying, Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-days? that they might accuſe him.

11 And he ſaid unto them, What man ſhall there be among you, that ſhall have one ſheep, and if it fall into a pit on the ſabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out.

12 How much then is a man better than a ſheep? wherefore it is lawful to do well on the ſabbath-days.

13 Then ſaith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand: and he ſtretched it forth; and it was reſtored whole like as the other.

14 ¶ Then the Phariſees went out, and held a councel againſt him, how they might deſtroy him.

15 But when Jeſus knew it, he withdrew himſelf from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all,

16 And charged them that they ſhould not make him known:

17 That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying,

18 Behold, my ſervant whom I have choſen, my beloved in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed: I will put my ſpirit upon him, and he ſhall ſhew judgment to the Gentiles.

19 He ſhall not ſtrive, nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets.

20 A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, and ſmoking flax ſhall he not quench, till he ſend forth judgment unto victory.

21 And in his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt.

22 ¶ Then was brought unto him one poſſeſſed with a devil, blind and dumb: and he healed him, inſomuch that the blind and dumb both ſpake and ſaw.

23 And all the people were amazed, and ſaid, Is not this the ſon of David?

24 But when the Phariſees heard it, they ſaid, This fellow doth not caſt out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils.

25 And Jeſus knew their thoughts, and ſaid unto them, Every kingdom divided againſt it ſelf, is brought to deſolation; and every city or houſe divided againſt it ſelf, ſhall not ſtand.

26 And if Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf; how ſhall then his kingdom ſtand?

27 And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, by whom do your children caſt them out? therefore they ſhall be your judges.

28 But if I caſt out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

29 Or elſe how can one enter into a ſtrong mans houſe, and ſpoil his goods, except he firſt bind the ſtrong man? and then he will ſpoil his houſe.

30 He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad.

31 ¶ Wherefore I ſay unto you, All manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven unto men: but the blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall not be forgiven unto men.

32 And whoſoever ſpeaketh a word againſt the Son of man, it ſhall be forgiven him: but whoſoever ſpeaketh againſt the holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

33 Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or elſe make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit.

34 O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, ſpeak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh.

35 A good man out of the good treaſure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treaſure, bringeth forth evil things.

36 But I ſay unto you, That every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

37 For by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned.

38 ¶ Then certain of the ſcribes and of the Phariſees anſwered, ſaying, Maſter, we would ſee a ſign from thee.

39 But he anſwered and ſaid to them, An evil and adulterous generation ſeeketh after a ſign, and there ſhall no ſign be given to it, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas.

40 For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whales belly: ſo ſhall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

41 The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe in judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it, becauſe they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and behold a greater than Jonas is here.

42 The queen of the ſouth ſhall riſe up in the judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it: for ſhe came from the uttermoſt parts of the earth to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, and behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

43 When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeeking reſt, and findeth none.

44 Then he ſaith, I will return into my houſe from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty ſwept, and garniſhed.

45 Then goeth he, and taketh with himſelf ſeven other ſpirits more wicked than himſelf, and they enter in and dwell there: and the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the firſt. Even ſo ſhall it be alſo unto this wicked generation.

46 ¶ While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren ſtood without, deſiring to ſpeak with him.

47 Then one ſaid unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren ſtand without, deſiring to ſpeak with thee.

48 But he anſwered and ſaid unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?

49 And he ſtretched forth his hand towards his diſciples, and ſaid, Behold, my mother and my brethren.

50 For whoſoever ſhall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the ſame is my brother, and ſiſter, and mother.

This chapter contains many excellent leſſons, which our Saviour has taught his diſciples to obſerve, even to the end of the world. And again, many indignities, falſe accuſations, and means invented by the Scribes, Phariſees and rulers of the people, to enrage the populace of their nation, againſt this Prince of peace, Chriſt Jeſus the righteous, whom they followed in great crowds, gladly heard him preaching the Goſpel, were greatly aſtoniſhed at his doctrine and miracles, and were ready to conclude from thence, like rational men, that he was the Meſſiah expected, by the concurrent teſtimonies of the Prophets, to appear about that time. But the Bleſſed Jeſus, who knew their thoughts, was always upon his guard againſt thoſe his enemies, whom you have read before, he calls wolves in ſheeps clothing. He was reſolved, nevertheleſs, to free the people from the heavy burthens, which their rulers laid upon them, Come unto me, ſays he, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. Take my yoke upon you —— for my yoke is eaſy and my burden is light, and learn of me, for I am not as your teachers and doctors of the law are proud, imperious, and above their duty of preaching to the common people; I make no diſtinction between the rich, and the ſoul of a poor man, (they both muſt go to one place, if happy) as it is the practice of your doctors, who teach, as if they believed, a man could be ſaved for his much wealth; but I am not ſo minded, I am meek and lowly of heart, and preach the Goſpel of peace and Salvation to the poor, Matt. xi. 5. This galled the proud Phariſees, who deſired to appear more righteous than other people, and therefore reſolved at all adventures to impeach to the people the man that had no ſin. The Evangeliſt therefore in this chapter begins with their accuſations againſt our Saviour; and like a faithful and juſt hiſtorian, lays down the accuſation in the ſtrongeſt terms, and then ſubjoins the anſwer, by which Chriſt cleared himſelf from the crime charged againſt him, and put them to ſilence. For, ſays he,

Ver. 1. At that time Jeſus went on the ſabbath-day through the corn, and his diſciples were an hungred, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat. 2. But when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto him, Behold, thy diſciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the ſabbath-day.] This is the crime and the charge laid by the Phariſees againſt Chriſt founded upon a ſpecious pretence, of a breach of that commandment, Thou ſhalt keep holy the ſabbath-day, and herein they, as at other times, ſeem to remind our Saviour with that his ſaying, how he was "not come to deſtroy the law but to fulfil it," Matt. v. 13. for from this action they accuſe him of deſtroying the law, or at leaſt of permitting his diſciples ſo to do. But our Saviour cleared himſelf, as you ſhall ſee hereafter.

—— At that time.] i. e. In the ſame ſeaſon in which the premiſes of this Goſpel in the foregoing chapter were done, or in the time between Eaſter and Whitſuntide; for Luke ſo fixes the time of this action, by ſaying, it was done on the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt, Luke vi. 1. Of which ſecond ſabbath the learned Godwyn and Lightfoot have given the following accounts. Godwyn ſays, (in his Moſes and Aaron, l. 3. c. 5.) having firſt obſerved, that the fourteenth of the month Niſan, which is about the 29th day of March, was the paſſover, the fifteenth the feaſt of the paſſover, the ſixteenth, the ſecond of the paſſover, or the morrow after the feaſt of the paſſover, called in Greek δευτέρα τȣ̃ πάχα, that upon the δευτέρα or morrow after the feaſt of the paſſover, they offered a ſheaf of the firſt-fruits of their harveſt, Levit. xxiii. 10. as upon the Pentecoſt, or Whitſunday, they offered two wave-loaves, Levit. xxiii. 17. That from this δευτέρα or morrow after the Paſſover-feaſt, they did count fifty days, as we do to Whitſuntide from Eaſter, by numbering the weeks between; where it was called Pentecoſt, and the feaſt of weeks, counting the weeks according to the number of the ſabbaths following the δευτέρα or morrow after the feaſt of the paſſover. Thus the firſt ſabbath following they called the ſecond-firſt ſabbath; the ſecond, they called the ſecond-ſecond, and the third, the ſecond-third; and ſo on. So that all the weeks and ſabbaths, during the time of the Pentecoſt, as the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, &c. took their denomination from the δευτέρα, or morrow after the feaſt of the Paſſover. Which obſervation, ſays he, gives light to that paſſage of Luke vi. 1. where we read of a ſabbath termed deuteroproton, i. e. the ſecond-firſt ſabbath, or the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt; and by it is meant the ſabbath next after the ſixteenth of Niſan, which was the δευτέρα, or morrow after the feaſt of the paſſover. And Dr. Lightfoot confirms this account with very little variation; ſee Chradock's Harmony, p. 93.

If it ſhould be objected by any one, that a ſheaf of corn could not be offered ſo ſoon in the year, I muſt anſwer that ſuch an objection will betray an ignorance of the husbandry of that country of Paleſtine, where barley ſeed-time, was about the beginning of our November. So that barley being ſown at the beginning of winter, and through the mildneſs of the climate, growing all the winter, it was come to that ripeneſs at that time of the paſſover, that from that time, after the ſheaf was offered, the barley-harveſt began.

Though this may ſeem to be a digreſſion from the words of the text; yet as it helps to ſettle the time of this action, I hope it won't be adjudged unneceſſary. But to proceed with the ſtory as here follows: The diſciples following their maſter through the corn-fields, did pluck the ripe ears, rubbed them in their hands, and eat them to ſatisfy their hunger; ſee Mark ii. 23. which the Phariſees, who always watched with an evil eye and for miſchief, obſerving, preſently picked a quarrel with them, and laid a charge againſt his diſciples before Jeſus himſelf, ſaying, "Behold thy diſciples do that which is not lawful to do on the ſabbath-day." Where obſerve, they did not lay the charge for plucking the ears of corn, which was allowable for any Iſraelite to do, Deut. xxiii. 25. but only for doing it on the ſabbath-day; becauſe it is ſaid, thou ſhalt keep holy the ſabbath-day, Exod. xx. 8. and becauſe of the prohibition of gathering manna, on the ſabbath-day, ſee Exod. xvi. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. It may be preſumed that theſe were the ſtrength of their argument. To which Jeſus, taking the defence of his diſciples upon himſelf, reply'd thus:

Ver. 3. Have ye not read what David did.] See 1 Sam. xxi. 6. It ſhould be remarked here, that as the Phariſees valued themſelves very much upon their ſkill or knowledge in the law of Moſes, Chriſt twits them with ignorance by this queſtion, when he ſays, have ye not read, or have ye forgotten the account of David, in 1 Sam. xxi. 6.

—— And they that were with him.] As this ſeems to claſh with the original ſtory in 1 Sam. xxi. 1. where this ſtory is related primarily, and from whence we may reaſonably ſuppoſe our Lord quoted the ſame, there have been many conjectures to reconcile theſe two Scriptures. Some have done it merely upon the authority of the concurrent teſtimony of three Evangeliſts, Matthew, Mark and Luke, who agree in this text; amongſt whom we find the learned Grotius, who, though he acknowledges that the prieſt ſurprized and wondering at the manner of David's coming, asked him, Why art thou alone? and no man with thee; concludes nevertheleſs, that David had ſome company with him in his flight, who went not throughout with him to the prieſt at Nob, but made an halt ſomewhere by the way. But

If we duly conſider the condition that David was then in, and the manner of his eſcape, at that juncture, from the ſtone Ezel, (where we may reaſonably conclude, he was alone, and which none was ſo much as privy to, but his friend Jonathan only, 1 Sam. 20.) may perhaps find reaſon enough to ſuſpend our belief of David's having then any company with him; and rather ſuppoſe that from David's telling the prieſt he had appointed his ſervants to wait for him at ſuch a place, 1 Sam. xxi. 2. and taking with him of the ſhew-bread, as if it were for them, as well as for himſelf, a traditional report might go along with the hiſtory, that David had ſome with him, who did eat of that bread, as well as he. And this ſerving to make the inſtance more forcible againſt the Phariſees; that not David only, who had been anointed their king by God's expreſs command, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. did eat of the conſecrated bread; but his common ſervants alſo, at his hand, and that without blame; might make our Lord urge both the text and the tradition together, as it is accordingly recorded by the Evangeliſts.

Ver. 4.— He entred into the houſe of God.] This houſe of God was not the temple, which was not yet built; neither was it the tabernacle or place where the ark was depoſited, becauſe it was then at Shiloh, 1 Sam. i. 24. iii. 21. iv. 3. which was therefore called the houſe of God; but this houſe of God mentioned in the text was a tabernacle in the ſacerdotal city of Nob, where they were wont to place the ſhew-bread, concerning which ſee the following note.

—— Shew-bread] The Hebrew lechem panaim, and the Greek ἄρτȣς ἐνωπίȣς, ſignifies literally the bread of faces, or of the face. The Jews thus term the loaves of bread, which the prieſt of the week put every ſabbath-day upon the golden table, ſtanding in the holy of holies before the Lord. Theſe loaves were ſquare, and had four faces, as the Rabbins ſay; they were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, repreſenting the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and they were of ſuch a conſiderable bigneſs, that each cake or loaf contained two tenth-deals, or about ſix pints of flour. Theſe were ſerved up hot on the ſabbath-day in the preſence of the Lord, at which time, if any were left, the ſtale ones were taken away, becauſe they could not be eaten but by the prieſts alone, Levit. xxiv. 5, 6, 7. And therefore nothing but urgent neceſſity could exempt David from ſin, when he eat of them.

This offering was accompanied with frankincenſe and ſalt, and wine, according to ſome commentators, Villapond de Templo, l. 4 c. 57. The frankincenſe was burnt upon the golden table, and the wine was poured out as a libation before the Lord every ſabbath-day, when the loaves were changed.

It is not agreed as to the manner in which the loaves of ſhew bread were ranged upon the altar of the ſanctum; for ſome think there were three piles of them of four in each; others will have them to be in two piles of ſix in each; and it is hard to conceive how it could be otherwiſe, or that a table of two cubits in length, and one in breadth, could allow room enough for twelve loaves, each of which contained ſix pints of flour. The Rabbins ſay, that between every two loaves there were two golden pipes, ſupported by forks of the ſame metal, whoſe ends reſted upon the ground, to convey air to the loaves, to prevent their growing mouldy.

Moſes in Leviticus xxiv. 8. ſeems to ſay, that theſe loaves were provided at the charge of the Iſraelites; but this ought to be underſtood only, as it was the people that paid the firſt-fruits and tenths to the prieſts, which was the chief of their income. And of theſe tenths and firſt-fruits they took wherewith to make the ſhew-bread, and every thing elſe incumbent upon them to provide in the ſervice of the temple. In the time of David, 1 Chron. ix. 32. the Levites of the family of Kahath had the care of the ſhew-bread, or as it was then called in Hebrew, lechem hammahharacheth, the bread of ordering; ſo that its probable that the Levites only baked and prepared them, for it is clear that the prieſts that offered them before the Lord, 1 Chron. xxiii. 28. according to the Vulgate tranſlation.

Ver. 5. Or have ye not read in the law.] See Levit. xxiv. 8. Numb. xxviii. 9.

—— On the ſabbath-days.] i. e. On every ſabbath-day.

—— The prieſts in the temple prophane the ſabbath, and are blameleſs.] i. e. Do ſuch things as would conclude they broke the ſabbath, and yet they are not guilty of ſuch a breach, becauſe what they do there in the temple on the ſabbath-days is their office in the worſhip of God: So that altho' another perſon, not called to the miniſtry, would have been juſtly blamed for breaking the law, if he ſhould have killed victims, flead off skins, waſhed the entrails, cut wood, &c. yet the prieſts did theſe, and many other things, as part of their duty, and were therefore blameleſs. And from hence our Saviour concludes at

Ver. 6. But I ſay unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple.] Or, and if you Phariſees! think the holineſs of the temple can excuſe, and bear them guiltleſs in ſuch works of the ſervants of the temple, I tell you plainly, "that in this place is one greater than the temple."

—— In this place.] The Latin Vulgate renders this paſſage corruptly by the adverb hic, i. e. here; whereas the Greek read it ὧδε, which is rightly tranſlated in this place. Upon which ariſeth a queſtion, in what place? Hierom ſays, in that very place where Chriſt was talking with the Phariſees, becauſe as he was God, there was always a temple, where he was preſent. But Maldonate anſwers very poſitively; that without doubt Chriſt hereby declared, that he himſelf was the temple, becauſe in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily; Coloſſ. ii. 9. So that as Le Clerc judiciouſly obſerves on this place. Chriſt argues from the leſs to the greater; if thoſe prieſts were blameleſs in their works on the ſabbath purely becauſe they were for the ſervice of the temple; much more are my diſciples excuſable in this action of plucking and robbing the corn on the ſabbath-day, becauſe they have not time to prepare their proviſions againſt the ſabbath-day, being ſo much taken up in my ſervice, who am greater than the temple.

Ver. 7.— I will have mercy and not ſacrifice.] This maxim, which is firſt laid down againſt the degenerate Jews in the days of Hoſea (vi. 6.) from whom our Lord often quotes it againſt their wicked poſterity, ſhews that they had forſaken the true worſhip of God, and reſted in ſome outward rites of their own invention. Therefore Chriſt would inſtruct them and us, that a good and virtuous life is infinitely preferable to a ceremonial worſhip; that the works of mercy and piety are infinitely to be preferred before an external worſhip, yea, before the greateſt, moſt holy and moſt indiſpenſible of all rites, viz. the ſacrifice. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 8. where he deſcribes the taking of the temple by Pompey.

Ver. 8. For the Son of man is Lord even of the ſabbath-day.] If we compare this text with that of Mark ii. 27. "The ſabbath was made for man, and not man for the ſabbath. 28. Therefore the ſon of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath;" we muſt be convinced that Jeſus Chriſt did not hereby intend they, ſhould underſtand that he himſelf is the Son of Man here mentioned; but that we are to interpret this paſſage of any man, or of every Jew, as not obliged to keep the ſabbath to his own deſtruction or hurt. This is the opinion of the learned Grotius and ſagacious Le Clerc. Though Maldonate intimates that he ſpeaketh of himſelf, as affirming, that he was greater than the temple, and, as being the Lord of the ſabbath, could diſpenſe with its obſervation by the natural right of every man having power to do as he will with his own things. But, if this be the genuine meaning of the place, what will become of that in Mark, as above; or how can it be ſuppoſed, that Chriſt, claiming ſuch a power in himſelf to diſpenſe with the obſervation of the ſabbath, inſtead of putting the Phariſees to ſilence by ſuch a declaration as he did, would not rather have given them an opportunity to accuſe him of blaſphemy, and to ſtone him according to their law, for uſurping, as they would have called it, a power proper to God alone, who commanded the ſabbath-day to be kept holy, and therefore, either the Phariſees, according to Maldonate's opinion, muſt have believed Jeſus Chriſt to be God, which it is plain they did not; or, that they were ſo weak not to take advantage of his uſurping a power proper to God alone, which cannot be ſuppoſed; becauſe they were ſeeking occaſion to cut him off; or finally, which is moſt reaſonable, that this text was underſtood by thoſe crafty Jews in the literal ſenſe that every Son of a man has a right in caſe of neceſſity to ſave his own or neighbour's life, or that of his beaſts, as our Saviour elſewhere argues, on the ſabbath-day; though it be effected by ſome deed, which in itſelf is a breach of the ſabbath; for they took it right that the Son of man, or ſimply man is Lord of the ſabbath, or greater in the eye of the Lord than the keeping of a ſabbath, which was made for man to worſhip God in, but not by any means to be an hindrance of any good, much leſs an inſtrument of his deſtruction, ruin or death.

Ver. 9. And when he was departed thence, he went into their ſynagogues.] Luke in a parallel Scripture writes, "And it came to paſs alſo on another ſabbath, that he entred into the ſynagogue, &c." Luke vi. 6. ſo that this may be probably fixed on the next ſabbath after the laſt mentioned at ver. 1. ſee above in the notes. And this ſudden miracle which he intended to work in the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day, ſhews, that Chriſt was ſo little afraid of the Phariſees, that he the more threw himſelf into their way, knowing that they would miſinterpret his deeds, and accuſe him falſly, that from thence he might have the better opportunity of teaching and upbraiding them from their own mouth.

—Synagogue.] This is a Greek word συναγωγὴ, ſignifying either an aſſembly of people, which we call a congregation, or, moſt commonly the houſe, or place where the Jews aſſembled to pray, to read or to be attentive to the reading of the Sacred Books, and other rabbinical inſtructions. The origin of ſynagogues has by many learned men been accounted very modern; but we read of them in the days of Eliſha, when the devout perſons aſſembled on the ſabbath-day, to hear him read the law, 2 Kings iv. 23. and what can we make the place of prayer, where Judith paſſed the night in prayer at Bethulia, but the ſynagogue of that city? Judith vi. 21. the ſame alſo is apparent from Pſal. lxxiv. 8. Ezek. xxiii. 31. Eſther iv. 6. To which we may add the teſtimony of the 1 Mac. iii. 59. and that of James in the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſaying, "Moſes of old time, hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the ſynagogues every ſabbath-day.

After the time of the Maccabees, the number of ſynagogues encreaſed ſo much in Iſrael, that there was ſcarce a village without one. Maimod. in Tephilla. c. ii. ſect. 1. and in Jeruſalem alone we read of 480; for every trading guild or fraternity had one proper to their own craft, and the inhabitants from different nations built each a ſynagogue for themſelves. Hence it is, that we read, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, of the ſynagogues of the Alexandrians, of the Aſiaticks, of the Cilicians, of the Freed-men and of the Cyrenians, becauſe appointed for ſuch of the inhabitants of theſe cities, or nations, as ſhould at any time reſide at Jeruſalem.

The ſynagogue was a publick edifice, ſituate either within or without the city, and generally on high a ground, and were more eminent than other buildings. In the midſt was fixed a deſk or pulpit, from whence the book or roll of the law, was publickly read, and the miniſter preached to the people. The cheſt or preſs, in which was depoſited the ſaid roll, wrapped up in a fine rich embroidered cloth, was ſet in the eaſt on the moſt conſpicuous part of the ſynagogue, oppoſite to the door, which was always to the weſt. The women are there ſeparated from the men, and ſo ſeated in a gallery incloſed with lattices, that they may ſee and hear, but not be ſeen from below.

Every ſynagogue has one or more chiefs according to the circumſtances of the place where erected. One of its officers is called Chazan, it is he who appoints and chants the prayers; another is called Sciamas or ſervant, becauſe he keeps the keys, and is much in the nature of a church-warden. There is alſo, or has been, a prince of the ſynagogue called in the Goſpel archiſynagogues, and the angel of the ſynagogue, or the ſage, in Hebrew Chacham, who preſides in the aſſemblies, and in judicial affairs, that are ſometimes there decided, againſt thoſe who have given any ſcandal, and tranſgreſſed the law in any important matter, inflicting thirty ſtrokes with a whip upon the guilty perſon. Theſe alſo invite thoſe to ſpeak in the ſynagogue, whom they think capable of it, and offer that honour to ſtrangers if there be any preſent who ſeem to have the gift of ſpeaking, and hence we collect how it happened that our Saviour is recorded to have ſpoken ſo oft in the ſynagogues, and Paul entring into the ſynagogue at Antioch in Piſidia, was invited by the princes thereof to make them an edifying diſcourſe, Acts xiii. 13, 14, 15.

Ver. 10.—They asked him.] Here it is plain that the queſtion, "Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath day?" was put to Jeſus by the Phariſees; but, from the parallel account in Mark iii. 4. and Luke vi. 9. one might rather think that Jeſus put the queſtion to the Phariſees. This has been an old cavil of the Hereticks and all oppoſers of the Chriſtian truth to endeavour to find contradictory accounts in the Goſpel of Chriſt, but in this place Auſtin and Theophylact, diſtinguiſh rightly and anſwer concluſively for the truth. That the queſtion here recorded by Matthew is diſtinct from that recorded by Mark and Luke, as above; for that here Matthew tells us, That the Phariſees firſt asked Chriſt, and then Chriſt put a queſtion to the Phariſees, i. e. the Phariſees ſeeking occaſion to accuſe Chriſt, asked him whether "it was lawful to heal on the ſabbath day?" To which, as Mark and Luke, as above report, Chriſt anſwered interrogatively, ſaying "unto them (the Phariſees) I will ask you one thing, Is it lawful on the ſabbath days to do good, or to do evil? To ſave life or to deſtroy it?" Luke vi. 9. Mark iii. 4. Therefore Chriſt did not ask the Phariſees, whether it was lawful to heal, but whether it was lawful to do good, or evil, on the ſabbath-day? By which he upbraided them of their wicked and malicious deſign to enſnare him, and conſequently put them to ſilence; for, as Mark obſerves, they held their peace, ver. 4. "And then he ſaid unto them, by way of example, what man ſhall there be among you, that ſhall have one ſheep, and if it fall into a pit on the ſabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a ſheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the ſabbath-days."

—Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath days?] Here it is to be obſerved, that the Phariſees don't put this queſtion, whether it was lawful to heal by miracle, on the ſabbath-days? For, the granting ſuch a power in Chriſt would have been giving up the cauſe, and acknowledging him to be ſent from God. But, whether it was lawful to heal by medicine, or by the uſe of artificial and natural phyſick on the ſabbath-days; for they thought, or at leaſt were willing to believe, that Chriſt did all his cures that way; ſee Luke xiii. 14. John ix. 16. grounding their argument upon a Phariſaical tradition, which forbade ſuch a practice on the ſabbath-days, except in deſperate caſes.

—That they might accuſe him.] To the people as a tranſgreſſor and breaker of their law.

Ver. 12. How much more then is a man better than a ſheep?] Or, won't you grant that a man is of more honour, and in greater eſteem with God, (who made him only a little lower than the angels to crown him with glory and worſhip), than a ſheep made for the ſervice and uſe of man? Therefore, if the act of delivering a ſheep out of a pit, where probably, it muſt have periſhed, on the ſabbath-day, be amongſt you excuſable, and permitted in the ſtrict obſervance of the ſabbath: much rather it is lawful to deliver a man, the image of God, for whom the ſabbath was made, on that day from ſome great evil, or diſaſter, beſallen him, or to heal him of ſome ſore diſeaſe, eſpecially where the cure is to be performed by a miracle, as it was in this caſe, ver. 13.

Ver. 14. Then the Phariſees went out, and held a counſel againſt him, how they might deſtroy him.] Then, after that the Phariſees had ſeen the cure performed; and that the man's withered hand was made whole; they not regarding the miracle, adviſed in what manner they might conceal the manner, and accuſing him for the act of healing, which they ſaid was a breach of the ſabbath-day, and to be puniſhed with death; Numb. xv. 35.

Ver. 15. But when Jeſus knew it.] Not by any information thereof given him by a private friend; but by his own infinite knowledge; penetrating the very minds, thoughts and hearts of men; as you may read below at the 25th verſe, and in Luke iii. 22. vi. 8. ix. 47. xi. 17. and Matt. ix. 4.

—He withdrew himſelf from thence.] Not through fear; for no man could hurt him unleſs it was permitted him from above; but becauſe his hour was not yet come; as John has obſerved in like caſes, vii. 30. viii. 20. xiii. 1. xvi. 21. He withdrew to the ſea, in the abſence of the Phariſees, who were gone to conſult with the Herodians, Mark iii. 7.

—He healed them all.] i. e. As many as had faith, and afflicted with any diſeaſe, were preſented unto him for cure.

Ver. 16. And charged them that they ſhould not make him known.] At firſt ſight, we may ſuppoſe that the Evangeliſt ſays, how Chriſt charged the men whom he cured, not to make him known, leaſt the Phariſees and Herodians ſhould follow, and kill him; But, that this is not the ſenſe of the place, it is manifeſt, as well from the power of Chriſt, by which he had hitherto perfected himſelf, and was able to do ſo to the end againſt the ſtratagems and aſſaults of his enemies, as eſpecially from a parallel Scripture, which expreſſly fixes this prohibition on the Devils, or unclean ſpirits, caſt out of thoſe men whom he had cured, that they ſhould not make him known to be the Son of God; Mark iii. 12. Becauſe Chriſt would have men converted rather by the ſoundneſs of his doctrine, than merely by the ſight of his miracles, which, for the moſt part, producing nothing but vain effects of admiration, temporal advantages, and a deſire of participating of bodily favours, did rather hinder, than further Chriſt in the chief end of his coming to deſtroy the works of the Devil; 1 John iii. 8. and to ſave our immortal ſouls. So Diodati; but Le Clerc rather grounds this prohibition on Chriſt's deſire to keep his miracles from making a great noiſe abroad in the world, which in all probability, might raiſe up the jealous Romans againſt him, or at leaſt draw ſuch crowds about him, as to render him ſuſpected of ſome treaſonable practices againſt the ſtate. But be this as it will, I can't but prefer the Evangelical reaſon as it follows in Ver. 17. That it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by Eſaias the Prophet, &c.] In ch. xlii. 1, &c. of the ſaid Prophet. Where it is written, Behold, my ſervant [the Meſſiah] whom I have choſen; my beloved, [ſon] in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed. I will put my ſpirit upon him, and he ſhall ſhew judgment, [that Goſpel, which teaches nothing but what is juſt, and right, and fixes judgment on that which is wrong] to the Gentiles [or heathen nations.] And this he ſhall do, not with noiſe and clamour, not by oſtentation or violence; not only, as Moſes did, by a ſound of words, but by writing the Evangelical Law by his ſpirit in their hearts; ſo Janſenius; for he ſhall not ſtrive nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets; but he ſhall deal with the weakeſt and moſt feeble ſo gently and tenderly, that he ſhall not break, but rather bind up, confirm and ſtrengthen a bruiſed reed, or a poor, dejected ſoul, almoſt broken down under the ſenſe of its ſin and miſery: And he will not quench, but rather quicken, revive, and re-enlighten ſmoaking flax, or any one ſo very diſconſolate as to be ready almoſt to ſink into deſpair; whoſe flame and heat, of faith and hope, are ſo near extinguiſhed, that, like the wick of a dying lamp or candle, there is only ſo much warmth left, as by ſending forth a little ſmoak, ſhews it not wholly dead, which, ſays the Prophet, he will not quench until he ſend forth judgment unto victory, or cauſe his Goſpel to prevail with victory over all the power of the enemy, ſo that all the nations of the earth ſhall embrace the truth thereof, and believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Meſſiah, that his promiſes are true, and become obedient to his commands.

Ver. 19. He ſhall not ſtrive, &c.] He ſhall not ſeek after worldly glory, which are the cauſes of all ſtriſe, but he ſhall be humble and meek.

Ver. 20.——Till he ſend forth judgment unto victory.] See the notes on ver. 17. which I take as a plain expoſition of this text; but ſome Commentators will interpret it of the Judgment in the day of the Lord when Chriſt ſhall come with victory to judge the world: But I muſt diſſent from this interpretation of the Prophet, becauſe it is ſaid before, [i. e. Goſpel] was to be ſhewn [or preached] to the Gentiles, which can't be ſaid of the time after the judgment; therefore it muſt mean the time between the coming of the Meſſiah in the fleſh, and the end of the world, in which time all nations ſhall be gathered unto him by the efficacy of his Divine Word, and Revelation of his Will.

Ver. 21. Gentiles.] As this name frequently occurs in Scripture, it won't be amiſs to give my readers a true idea of it in this place. The Hebrews called the Gentiles by the general name of Goijm, which ſignifies the nations that have not received the faith, or revealed law of God. So that all who are not Jews, and circumciſed, are compriſed under the word Goijm. Before Jeſus Chriſt, the door to life and juſtification was open to the world by the belief and profeſſion of the Jewiſh religion only. The converts to Judaiſm were called proſelytes. But ſince the preaching of the Goſpel, the true religion is not confined to any one country, more than to another: For God, who as you read in the text, had promiſed to call the Gentiles to the faith, out of a ſuperabundance of his grace, has executed this promiſe in a great meaſure: ſo that the Chriſtian Church is ſcarce compoſed of any other than Gentile converts; and the Jews, too proud of their particular privileges, have, for the moſt part, been abandoned to their reprobate ſenſe of things, diſowning Jeſus of Nazareth their Meſſiah and Redeemer, for whom, for ſo many ages, they ſo impatiently waited.

The old Prophets declared in a very particular manner the calling of the Gentiles. Jacob foretold that the nations ſhould hope for a Meſſiah, and that he who was to be ſent, the Shiloh, ſhould be the expectation of the Gentiles or nations. Solomon, having built the temple, addreſſes God in theſe words:——"Moreover, concerning the ſtranger, which is not of thy people Iſrael, but is come from a far country, for thy name's ſake, and thy mighty hand and ſtretched out arm; if they come and pray in this houſe, then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the ſtranger calleth to thee for, that all the people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Iſrael, and may know that this houſe which I have built is called by thy name."

The Pſalmiſt ſays, that the Lord ſhall give the Gentiles to the Meſſiah for an inheritance; Pſal. ii. 8. And much more to the ſame purpoſe in Pſal. lxxxvii. 4. and lxxii. 9, 10. And Iſaiah abounds ſo much with ſuch like expreſſions that he has been juſtly diſtinguiſhed by the name of the Prophet of the Gentiles; ſee Iſaiah ii. 2, 3, 4. and xlix. 6. and Zech. viii. 23.

Ver. 22. Then.] When this time was is uncertain; ſome have thought it was at the time he came out of the ſynagogue; others fix it when he was come from the ſynagogue into the houſe, as mentioned by Mark iii. 19. But however this may be, let the reader obſerve that this is not the account of the demoniack, mentioned by Luke xi. 14.

——Blind and dumb.] Not ſo by nature, from the womb, nor by ſome violent diſeaſe; but made ſo by the enchantments of the Devil; as Chryſoſtome and Theophylact conjecture, becauſe the Evangeliſt tells us, that the Devil was no ſooner caſt out, but the poſſeſſed perſon being healed, recovered his ſight and hearing; ſee Matt. ix. 32. xvii. 15. Luke xiii. 11.

Ver. 23. Is not this the ſon of David?] i. e. The Meſſiah promiſed to be born of the race of David; ſee ch. i. 1. So that among the Jews, the ſon of David was ſynonimous with the word Meſſiah.

Ver. 24.——By Beelzebub the prince of the Devils.] Calmet ſays, it is a queſtion which is the true reading of this text, whether Beelzebub, as in the Vulgate; or, Belzebub, as the old Greek copies, and the oriental tranſlations from the Greek read it; or, Belzebuth, as the French pronounce it. But it is certain, that in the Hebrew books of the Old Teſtament we read Beelzebub, which is interpreted the God Fly, or the God of the Fly, at firſt the deity adored by the inhabitants of Ekron; ſee 2 Kings i. 2, 3, &c. And the worſhip of this falſe god muſt have been in great reputation in our Saviour's time, when it had obtained the title of prince of the Devils; ſince the Jews in the text accuſed Chriſt with driving out Devils in the name of Beelzebub, prince of the Devils, that is to ſay, in the name of Satan, Lucifer, or chief of the rebellious angels, whom the Jews of our Saviour's time, as appears from our Lord's anſwer, and way of arguing in the 26th and 27th verſes following, called by way of ſuperior diſtinction, Beelzebut, or Beelzebub, who at that time was of greateſt repute among their neighbouring nations. See Bochart de Animal. Sacr. p. 2. l. iv. c. 9. And Selden, De Diis Syriis. Syntag. 1. c. 6. But it may be asked, why the Jews, that ſaid, This fellow doth not caſt out Devils but by Beelzebub, ſhould attribute ſuch a power to the prince of the Devils. To this I anſwer. It was a received opinion, that the magicians could, by vertue of ſome ſuperior infernal power, conſtrain the inferior ſpirits to obey their conjurations; ſee Le Clerc on Matt. ix. 34.

Ver. 25. And Jeſus knew their thoughts.] By his Divine Power; ſee above ver. 15. Where it ſhould be obſerved, that they did not tell Jeſus to his face, that his power of miracles was from the Devil, but that this diſcourſe was whiſpered privately among themſelves, or to people, that they ſhould not believe in him for his work's ſake.

——Every kingdom divided againſt itſelf, is brought to deſolation, and every city or houſe divided againſt itſelf ſhall not ſtand.] Thus our Saviour began with a known and received axiom, or maxim, to convict his adverſaries of their unjuſt aſperſion of his miracles. For, having ſettled this propoſition, he makes the following application: "If I, as you ſay, caſt out Devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the Devils, then Satan caſts out Satan; and if Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf: therefore tell me, how then ſhall his kingdom ſtand. This was enough of itſelf to ſilence them; for indeed, upon the premiſed principle it was unanſwerable. But that he might make them quite aſhamed of their injuſtice, he proceeds with an argument ad hominem; for, ſays he,

Ver. 27.——If I by Beelzebub caſt out Devils, by whom do your children caſt them out.] By this dilemma the Jews were reduced, either to confeſs that their own children did caſt out Devils by the power of the Devil, which they were not willing to do; or to acknowledge, that there is a Divine Power, or Spirit, by which Devils may be caſt out, and by which their children were ſuppoſed to caſt them out; and that would juſtify him, as much as them. Thus, I ſay, he drove them to that ſtreight, that if they would condemn him, they muſt condemn their own children alſo; and if they would acquit theſe, they muſt acquit him.

Now, for the underſtanding of the force of this argument, it muſt be obſerved, that the Jews had an order of men among them, called Exorciſts, pretending to drive Devils out of places or bodies, poſſeſſed by them. So Joſephus relates, that a certain Jew named Eleazar, cured the poſſeſſed with the help of a ring, in which was ſet a root, ſaid by ſome to have been diſcovered by Solomon; the ſmell of which root, put under the noſe of the poſſeſſed, made him drop to the ground, then the Exorciſt conjured the Devil, forbidding him to return into that body. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. And he adds in another place, that a particular root called barad, which grows in Judea, has the virtue of caſting out Devils, by applying it to the body poſſeſſed. Moreover it is certain, that in our Saviour's time, there were Jewiſh Exorciſts, who took upon them to caſt out Devils in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, Mark ix. 28. Luke ix. 49. ſo that as moſt Commentators agree our Lord argued with the Jews from this cuſtom, or office, they had uſurped, not thereby approving their practice, nor indeed reproving them for it, but only as if he had ſaid: "You ſhew your malice in judging evil of me; becauſe that having Exorciſts of your own nation, (whoſe power I ſhall not now diſpute) making profeſſion of driving Devils out of men, Acts xix. 13. You don't condemn them; though you ought to miſtruſt their action as much as mine. But,

Maldonate thinks that Chriſt argues in this manner. He takes it for granted, that here by children in the text we are to underſtand the Apoſtles, who were born of Jewiſh parents, known to all them preſent. Then he puts the queſtion; In whoſe name do they caſt out Devils? Is it not in my name, ſays Chriſt? Therefore, if they are not accuſed of caſting out Devils in the name of Beelzebub, but are granted to caſt them out in my name; Why do ye ſay, that I caſt out Devils in the name of Beelzebub? For, if they caſt out Devils in my name, it is manifeſt that I, by whoſe name and authority they are caſt out, am greater than the Devils: Therefore, I don't caſt Devils out in the name of Beelzebub; for as the Apoſtles caſt them out by a power received from me, which you can't deny, conſequently you can't deny that I caſt them out by my own power, or as it follow, the Spirit of God.

——They ſhall be your judges.] Hierom thinks that Chriſt here alludes to what he afterwards ſpeaks more plainly in ch. xix. 28. That his Apoſtles ſhould ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael. And if Maldonate's expoſition of the former clauſe of this verſe be right, there is no doubt, but that this paſſage relates alſo to the Apoſtles condemning the Phariſees, in the day of the general judgment, for their perverſeneſs in this accuſation. But, I think, that the moſt natural ſolution of this difficulty will be to underſtand it thus: You Phariſees do grant, that your children caſt out Devils by the aſſiſtance of God; but, as there appears no more art in my actions than in theirs, therefore, let the ſame judgment paſs upon mine, as you give to their exorciſms. They ſhall be your judges; or, I am content to undergo the ſame judgment as you paſs upon them; judge me, as you judge them.

Ver. 28.——The kingdom of God, &c.] The ſtate of the Goſpel, or the diſpenſation of the Meſſiah. See notes on ch. iii. 2.

Ver. 29. Or elſe.] If the kingdom of God were not come, the Devil could not be overcome, nor put to flight, nor be diſpoſſeſſed of thoſe bodies from whence I have caſt him out.

——How can one enter into a ſtrong man's houſe, &c.] Here Chriſt proceeds to ſhew that he is God. Becauſe in this verſe he urges that every man muſt be ſuperior in power or ſtrength, before he can enter into anothers houſe to ſpoil his goods, intimating, that he had entred into a body where the Devil had got poſſeſſion, and expelled him thence. And therefore, that he muſt be confeſſed to be ſuperior in power to the Devil, which power none can have but from God; and conſequently it muſt be confeſſed, that he had caſt out Devils by the finger of God.

Ver. 30. He that is not with me, &c.] i. e. Ye may certainly conclude, that as it doth not ſuit the intereſt of Beelzebub to be with me, he, the prince of darkneſs, would rally all his forces, and lead forth all his legions, Luke viii. 30. againſt me, to withſtand and oppoſe me, and to ſcatter, if he could, what I had gathered.

Ver. 31.——The blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt ſhall not be forgiven unto men.] Having convicted the Phariſees of obſtinacy and falſe judgment, by the pure force of truth and reaſon; he then ſhews them the danger they had run themſelves into by their malicious cenſure upon him, and the work he had wrought by the Spirit of God; for, in ſo doing, they ſtruck with an impious deſign at his Godhead; knowingly reviling his Divinity, and wilfully blaſpheming the ſaid Holy Spirit, by which he had wrought thoſe wonderful works, which nothing could effect but a Divine Power: therefore to call the Spirit of God, an unclean ſpirit, or Beelzebub, is the blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and ſeems to be that ſin unto death, which the Apoſtle gives no encouragement to pray for remiſſion of, 1 John v. 16. as knowing, that our Lord had here declared it to be an unpardonable ſin.

The reaſon hereof may be this, ſays an ingenious author: The way and means to obtain forgiveneſs being repentance; and this repentance being an operation of the ſaid Holy Spirit in the heart of man: all other ſins may be repented of, and conſequently may be forgiven. But this horrid ſin, of blaſpheming the Holy Ghoſt, by calling the Spirit of God an unclean ſpirit, is ſo high an affront to the Holy Ghoſt, that thereupon withdrawing his aſſiſtance from ſuch ſinners, he leaves them ſhut up in hardneſs of heart, uncapable of repenting, and conſequently of being forgiven. A conſideration enough, one would think, to make all men of but common ſenſe, to fear; and beware how they revile, blaſpheme, or ſpeak contemptuouſly of, or againſt the Light, Grace, or Spirit of God in any of its operations or appearances. Ellwood. p. 131.

Ver. 33.——The tree is known by his fruit.] The whole verſe, of which theſe words are the laſt clauſe, is another argument Chriſt draws from the agreement that is in nature, between a tree and its fruit. Where note, the fruit denotes the miracle he had wrought: and the tree ſhews the ſpirit or power by which it was wrought. They could not deny the miracle, it was wrought openly in the ſight of the people. Neither durſt they deny that it was a good deed, to caſt a Devil out of a man, and thereby reſtored to ſpeech and ſight, whom the Devil had made both dumb and blind. Therefore the ſubtile Phariſees found they could not traduce the people by any medium leſs than a flat denial of the ſpirit by which it was wrought. But Chriſt by this metaphor taken from a fruit-tree, ferets them out of that deſign alſo, and ſhews them the neceſſity they were under to diſown the miracle, as well as the Spirit: or to own the Spirit together with the miracle.

Ver. 34. O generation of vipers.] As a viper is commonly eſteemed the moſt hurtfnl of all animals; Acts xxviii. 4—6. So Chriſt uſes this phraſe metaphorically, to explain his ſentiments of the conſummate malice of the Phariſees and Sadducees, who ſought all opportunities to calumniate and derogate from the good actions, and holy life and converſation of pious men: for by this appellation he ſhews, that detraction was as natural to the Phariſees and Sadducees, as priſon is to the viper. So Hierom in 30 Iſa. and Gregory Hom. 20. in Evang.

Ver. 36.——Every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak.] Moſt Commentators underſtand this text of all frivolous diſcourſes, which are no ways profitable to the edifying of the hearer, or ſpeaker: And then they conclude, that Chriſt thereby argues from the leſs to the greater, as if he had ſaid, "if men ſhall give account of every idle word in the day of judgment, much more of ſuch blaſphemy as ye Phariſees are guilty of, who ſay, that I caſt out Devils by Beelzebub. Where note, that by idle words, I would rather underſtand, falſe, or calumniating words, by which any one endeavours to fruſtrate the good effect of ſome good example or diſcourſe; for this was the drift of the Phariſees among the people, whom they endeavoured to draw off from their great opinion of him, and his doctrine; ſee above, ver. 24, 25.

Ver. 37. For by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned.] This is a proverbial expreſſion, like unto that you may have read in Job xv. 6. As if it were ſaid, a man, though he is not rightly judged by the accuſation of his enemies, ſhall be juſtly condemned by his own confeſſion; ſee below, ch. xxvi. 65. where the high-prieſt ſeems to follow this maxim in the condemnation of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 38.——A ſign.] Some means, which ſhall prove that thou art ſent from God.

Ver. 39.——There ſhall be no ſign given to it.] To that evil and adulterous generation, or to thoſe Phariſees and ſcribes, who asked for a ſign, not, as Chriſt knew their hearts, for their conviction; but with a wicked intention, tempting him, which reaſon is ſupported by parallel caſes in Iſaiah xxxviii. 22. and Judges vi. 17—36. And beſides, the very words import as much; for they did not ask, but, as it were, commanded, ſaying, "We would ſee a ſign from thee."

——But the ſign of the Prophet Jonas.] i. e. I will be unto you a ſign of condemnation; even as Jonas was to the Ninevites, who, a barbarous nation, and no ways enlightned by the law, believed in God, at the preaching of Jonas, an entire ſtranger to them, and repented of their wickedneſs; whereas the ſcribes and Phariſees, having heard ſo many exhortations to repentance from Chriſt, and ſeen ſo many and great miracles done by him, was ſo far from believing, that they maliciouſly report, that he is poſſeſſed with a Devil.

Ver. 40.—In the whales belly.] The word koilia, which is here tranſlated belly, ſignifies alſo with as much propriety, the ſtomach: therefore I would rather recommend that reading; becauſe there can't any thing paſs into the belly, or guts, which is not firſt digeſted in the ſtomach: and if ſo, how could Jonas be vomited up out of the belly?

Ver. 41. The man of Nineveh ſhall riſe in judgment with this generation.] See the notes above, on ver. 39.

Ver. 43. When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man.] By this, I apprehend, Chriſt would teach us, that the Jews were worſe, than if they never had received the knowledge and law of God. For, whereas the Devil was in ſome manner caſt out of them by the law, being thereby taught to turn from the Devil, and idols, and to ſerve the one and true God; deſpiſing the grace of God, they have deſerved inſtead of one, to be poſſeſſed with ſeven unclean ſpirits: In a word, by forſaking God, they are become ſeven times more children of the Devil.

Ver. 46.—His mother and his brethren ſtood without.] See the notes on ch. i. 25.

Ver. 49. And he ſtretched forth his hand towards his diſciples, and ſaid, behold, my mother and my brethren.] Thereby giving us to underſtand, that he came into the world, as other men, to live altogether with his parents; but to preach the Goſpel to thoſe, who were willing to hear and follow him, which diſciples he eſteemed, as much as others ſhould their parents.

CHAP. XIII.

3 The parable of the ſower, and the ſeed: 18 the expoſition of it. 24 The parable of the tares, 31 of the muſtard ſeed, 33 of the leaven, 44 of the hidden treaſure, 45 of the pearl, 47 of the draw net caſt into the ſea, 53 and how Chriſt is contemned of his own countrymen.

THE ſame day went Jeſus out of the houſe, and ſat by the ſea-ſide.

2 And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, ſo that he went into a ſhip, and ſat, and the whole multitude ſtood on the ſhore.

3 And he ſpake many things unto them in parables, ſaying, Behold, a ſower went forth to ſow.

4 And when he ſowed, ſome ſeeds fell by the ways ſide, and the fowls came and devoured them up.

5 Some fell upon ſtony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they ſprung up, becauſe they had no deepneſs of earth:

6 And when the ſun was up, they were ſcorched, and becauſe they had not root, they withered away.

7 And ſome fell among thorns: and the thorns ſprung up and choked them.

8 But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, ſome an hundred-fold, ſome ſixty-fold, ſome thirty-fold.

9 Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 And the diſciples came, and ſaid unto him, Why ſpeakeſt thou unto them in parables?

11 He anſwered and ſaid unto them, Becauſe it is given unto you to know the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.

12 For whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given, and he ſhall have more abundance: but whoſoever hath not, from him ſhall be taken away, even that he hath.

13 Therefore ſpeak I to them in parables: becauſe they ſeeing, ſee not, and hearing they hear not, neither do they underſtand.

14 And in them is fulfilled the propheſy of Eſaias, which ſaith, By hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand: and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and ſhall not perceive.

15 For this peoples heart is waxed groſs, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have cloſed; leſt at any time they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and ſhould underſtand with their heart, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them.

16 But bleſſed are your eyes for they ſee; and your ears for they hear.

17 For verily I ſay unto you, that many prophets and righteous men have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them: and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

18 ¶ Hear ye therefore the parable of the ſower.

19 When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and underſtandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was ſown in his heart: this is he which received ſeed by the way-ſide.

20 But he that received the ſeed into ſtony places, the ſame is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it:

21 Yet hath he not root in himſelf, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, by and by he is offended.

22 He alſo that received ſeed among the thorns, is he that heareth the word: and the care of this world, and the deceitfulneſs of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful.

23 But he that received ſeed into the good ground, is he that heareth the word, and underſtandeth it, which alſo beareth fruit; and bringeth forth ſome an hundred-fold, ſome ſixty, ſome thirty.

24 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which ſowed good ſeed in his field:

25 But while men ſlept, his enemy came and ſowed tares among the wheat, and went his way.

26 But when the blade was ſprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares alſo.

27 So the ſervants of the houſholder came and ſaid unto him, Sir, didſt not thou ſow good ſeed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares?

28 He ſaid unto them, An enemy hath done this. The ſervants ſaid unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up?

29 But he ſaid, Nay; leſt while ye gather up the tares, ye root up alſo the wheat with them.

30 Let both grow together until the harveſt: and in the time of harveſt I will ſay to the reapers, Gather ye together firſt the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn.

31 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of muſtard-ſeed which a man took, and ſowed in his field.

32 Which indeed is the leaſt of all ſeeds: but when it is grown, it is the greateſt among herbs, and becometh a tree: ſo that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

33 ¶ Another parable ſpake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three meaſures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

34 All theſe things ſpake Jeſus unto the multitude in parables, and without a parable ſpake he not unto them:

35 That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, ſaying, I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept ſecret from the foundation of the world.

36 Then Jeſus ſent the multitude away, and went into the houſe: and his diſciples came unto him, ſaying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field.

37 He anſwered and ſaid unto them, He that ſoweth the good ſeed, is the Son of man:

38 The field is the world: the good ſeed are the children of the kingdom: but the tares are the children of the wicked one:

39 The enemy that ſowed them is the devil: the harveſt is the end of the world: and the reapers are the angels.

40 As therefore the tares are gathered and burnt in the fire; ſo ſhall it be in the end of this world.

41 The Son of man ſhall ſend forth his angels, and they ſhall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity;

42 And ſhall caſt them into a furnace of fire: there ſhall be wailing and gnaſhing of teeth.

43 Then ſhall the righteous ſhine forth as the ſun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear let him hear.

44 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treaſure hid in a field: the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

45 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man, ſeeeking goodly pearls:

46 Who when he had found one pearl of great price, he went, and ſold all that he had, and bought it.

47 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was caſt into the ſea, and gathered of every kind.

48 Which, when it was full, they drew to ſhore, and ſat down, and gathered the good into veſſels, but caſt the bad away.

49 So ſhall it be at the end of the world: the angels ſhall come forth, and ſever the wicked from among the juſt;

50 And ſhall caſt them into the furnace of fire: there ſhall be wailing and gnaſhing of teeth.

51 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Have ye underſtood all theſe things? They ſay unto him, Yea, Lord.

52 Then ſaid he unto them, Therefore every ſcribe which is inſtructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is an houſholder, which bringeth forth out of his treaſure things new and old.

53 ¶ And it came to paſs, that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe parables, he departed thence.

54 And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their ſynagogue, inſomuch that they were aſtoniſhed, and ſaid, Whence hath this man this wiſdom, and theſe mighty works?

55 Is not this the carpenters ſon? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joſes, and Simon, and Judas?

56 And his ſiſters are they not all with us? whence then hath this man all theſe things?

57 And they were offended in him. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, A prophet is not without honour, ſave in his own country, and in his own houſe.

58 And he did not many mighty works there, becauſe of their unbelief.

Hitherto our Lord had ſpoken openly to the Jews; but they, with helliſh malice, as you have read in the former chapter, diſparaging his doctrine and miracles, he ſharply reproved their perverſeneſs and great obſtinacy, and for the future delivered his diſcourſes moſt commonly in publick by way of parables, which he afterward explained in private to his diſciples. But

Before I proceed to conſider the parables themſelves, I think it will be reaſonable to inform my reader, why our Saviour ſpake ſo often in that myſtical manner to his hearers? This was the queſtion of his own diſciples, ver. 10. To which Chriſt reply'd, I ſpeak to the people in parables, becauſe it is given to you, that are true believers, and my faithful diſciples, to know the myſteries of the kingdom of Heaven, or of the Goſpel; but to them, "whoſe heart is waxed groſs, hardned and obſtinate, and their ears dull of hearing, and who have cloſed, or wilfully ſhut their eyes againſt the light and truth of the Goſpel; leaſt at any time they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their heart, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them," ver. 11,—15. To ſuch as theſe as very unworthy of the favour, it is not given to have the myſteries of religion plainly revealed to them, but only myſtically and darkly by way of parable. So that it is plain, Chriſt ſpake to the people in parables, by way of puniſhment for their infidelity and hardneſs of heart, and deſpiſing and rejecting his former plainer diſcourſes on the mount, and in other places; and for their averſeneſs to believe in him, notwithſtanding the miracles he did, and for blaſphemouſly attributing his caſting out a Devil from one poſſeſſed, who was blind and dumb, to the power of Beelzebub the prince of the Devils, chap. xii. 24. Thus I ſay, Chriſt tacitly intimated his diſpleaſure againſt them, threatning a total concealment of thoſe glad tidings, which he was come to preach to all nations, in caſe they perſiſted in their obſtinacy, and unbelief. As if he had ſaid, they that upon my former plain and open inſtructions have believed and obeyed me, ſhall ſtill have more and more as plain manifeſtations made to him of the myſteries of the Goſpel; but they that hath made no good uſe of what hath been clearly made known to them, but continued ſtill faithleſs and obſtinate, ſhall for the future be deprived of that full light and ſun-ſhine of the Goſpel, and be afforded only ſome obſcurer glimmerings thereof, and behold it as through a veil, for this is the purport of the 12th verſe. To this we may add

Another reaſon reſpecting a ſort of people not maliciouſly faulty as thoſe already mentioned, but chiefly to blame for heedleſs inadverting, as may be learned from the 13th verſe. For as his plainer and more common diſcourſes were but little regarded by them, and not conſidered and attended to, as they ſhould be; but forgotten as ſoon as heard; therefore the more to engage their attention, and induce them to look cloſe into, and dwell longer upon what he taught, he put his diſcourſes into a more myſtical and uncommon dreſs, that their deſire of underſtanding his hidden meaning, might employ more of their thoughts about it, and put them upon making a ſtricter enquiry than otherwiſe they would do, and by that means his doctrine ſhould make a deeper impreſſion upon their minds and memories. For men are naturally deſirous to find out myſteries and hidden meanings, and more ordinarily attentive to what is unuſual, and out of the common road of talking; and conſequently may be ſuppoſed to take pains to diſcover what is under the diſguiſe of a parable, and be much more pleaſed and affected with ſuch a diſcovery, than if the ſame hidden treaſure had been offered to them at an eaſier rate.

It is granted therefore, that this myſtical way of inſtruction, hath ſomething of obſcurity in it. Yet as it may be managed, nothing can be more familiar, or more ſuitable to the capacities of the meaneſt auditors. For the vulgar ſort being but little receptive of abſtracted notions, and nice and lofty ſpeculations, are moſt likely to be inſtructed by a diſcourſe clothed in a dreſs, they have been well acquainted with, and illuſtrated by ſome material repreſentation. See the note on ch. ix. 37. where you will ſee that our Lord managed his parables with ſo great an analogy that a little thought and reflection of a very ordinary underſtanding, may diſcover what is hid under ſo thin a veil; and accordingly we find, that ſeveral of our Saviour's parables were preſently underſtood by his hearers in their true and naked meaning. But,

Beſides this general uſefulneſs of parables, they are more particularly proper for reproof, which is a thing ſcarce to be born by proud mankind, and therefore ought to be managed with great prudence and caution, leaſt it do more harm than good; for, if it be too plain and ſevere, it often hardens the offender more, and if it be too cool and lifeleſs, it loſes its force, and makes, or at leaſt leaves no good impreſſion. So that an effectual reproof muſt be delivered with ſufficient ſtrength and ſmartneſs, and likewiſe with ſo much privacy and ſecrecy, as may not exaſperate a man too much from a ſenſe of the great ſhare and ignominy, that attends the laying open his faults to the world. Now,

Reproving by way of parable does all this. If it be well choſen and applied, it carries ſmartneſs and ſtrength in its argument; and yet there is ſo much of a diſguiſe and covering upon it, as makes it very private, not graing ſo much upon that tender paſſion, ſhame, as a more publick and bareſaced reproof would do. Such a parable is like a lancet wrapt up in a ſpunge, when under pretence and ſhew of nothing but ſmooth and gentle uſage, the ſore is unexpectedly lanced, and the corruption is let out, which perhaps the patient would never have conſented to, if attempted roughly, without that ſtratagem.

This then was the wiſe courſe which our Lord in his great wiſdom took, by well-choſen, adapted, and parables very expreſſive of his meaning to remove the obſtinacy, hypocriſy, and other vices of the Jews, who were of that ſtubborn and refractory nature, as to be impatient of too open a rebuke; eſpecially the Phariſees, whoſe peculiar claim to righteouſneſs, their pride and haughtineſs, and great repute among the people, made them impatient of all reproof tho' wrapt up never ſo nicely in the diſguiſe of a parable, and conſequently much more, when their reproof was publick, and open, and in plainter terms. Tho' as to the Phariſees, when this milder way would not do, he more plainly and ſharply rebuked and expoſed their great wickedneſs and vile hypocriſy.

The truths couched under theſe parabolical expreſſions are of the greateſt importance, even ſuch as nearly concerns us to attend to, and to practice. The manner of expreſſing them is ſuch, as illuſtrates with great advantage, and very movingly recommends them, in ſuch a familiar way, as fits them to all, never ſo indifferent capacities.

——— Behold a ſower went forth to ſow. Ver. 4. And when he ſowed ſome ſeeds fell by the ways-ſide, and the fowls came and devoured them up.] The ſeed is the word of God, ver. 19. compared to ſeed, becauſe of its fructifying, growing and encreaſing nature. For it is this ſeed, that bringeth forth thoſe graces of Chriſtianity, which keep up the Divine Liſe in the ſoul, that makes it grow in grace, and in the knowledge and love of the beſt and nobleſt of objects, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, preparing it for heaven, and giving it an earneſt of an immortal and glorious inheritance. For, whereſoever that ſeed is ſown, and ſprings up, and brings forth fruit unto holineſs, the end will moſt certainly be everlaſting life.

—— Sown.] i. e. The Goſpel is preached, and made known to the world; its excellent precepts are openly declared, and planted in men's hearts by the propoſal of infinite rewards, and under the threats of infinite puniſhments to ſuch as do, or do not, obey and practiſe them.

This ſeed then, or the word of God being thus actually ſown, the Chriſtian Religion planted in the world, and all things done on God's part, in order to its being fruitful, according to his expectation; it highly concerns us, in the next place, to take care that it be ſo, and that nothing make it otherwiſe. That is, it muſt not be neglected like ſeed ſown or ſcattered, rather,

—— By the way ſide.] Laid open and expoſed to all ſorts of wandering, uſeleſs and wicked thoughts, which will trample the good doctrine preached to us, as all ſorts of travellers trample down ſeed ſown by the way ſide; ſo that it ſhall never more appear, nor be thought of by us. Nor muſt we leave it to the mercy of —— The fowls of the air.] The Devil, and his legions, who, like birds of prey, hover about us continually, always ready to deprive us of thoſe good inſtructions imbibed from the word of God.

Ver. 24. Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, the kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man, which ſowed good ſeed in his field.] Our Lord has given us the intepretation of this parable, at the 37 verſe. From whence it appears, that it is intended to ſhew that though there be many wicked perſons profeſſing Chriſtianity; that are Chriſtians only in name, and who in this world may be confuſedly mixed with the good, and go undiſcovered among men, and unpuniſhed by God in this world; nay, thrive and proſper in the things of the world, more than the virtuous, ſo as, in all outward appearance, they may be called the favourites of Heaven; whilſt the ſincerely good undergo many afflictions, and appear to men to be under God's diſpleaſure. Yet in the great harveſt to be at the end of the world, they ſhall be rightly diſtinguiſhed one from the other; when the hypocritical ſhall be ſeparated from the ſincere, and the former conſigned to everlaſting burnings, and the latter received into the glory of Heaven, prepared for them from the beginning of the world; ſee verſe 37—43, incluſive.

Ver. 44. —— The kingdom of heaven is like unto treaſure, &c.] This, and the parable immediately following, repreſent the tranſcendent excellency of the Chriſtian Religion, above all other things in the world; and informs us, that it is the greateſt wiſdom to part with every thing this world can afford, rather than be without the inward power and life of this Holy Religion; which is a pearl of ſo great price, ſo immenſe a treaſure, that nothing here below can ſtand in competition with it, more to be deſired than gold, &c. Pſalm xix. 10. CHAP. XIV.

1 Herods opinion of Chriſt. 3 Wherefore John Baptiſt was beheaded. 13 Jeſus departeth into a deſert place. 15 Where he feedeth five thouſand men with five loaves, and two fiſhes: 22 he walketh on the ſea to his diſciples: 34 and landing at Genneſaret, healeth the ſick by the touch of the hem of his garment.

AT that time Herod the tetrach heard of the fame of Jeſus,

2 And ſaid unto his ſervants, This is John the Baptiſt, he is riſen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do ſhew forth themſelves in him.

3 ¶ For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in priſon for Herodias ſake, his brother Philips wife.

4 For John ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for thee to have her.

5 And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, becauſe they counted him as a prophet.

6 But when Herods birth-day was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them, and pleaſed Herod.

7 Whereupon he promiſed with an oath, to give her whatſoever ſhe would aſk.

8 And ſhe being before inſtructed of her mother, ſaid, Give me here John Baptiſts head in a charger.

9 And the king was ſorry: nevertheleſs for the oaths ſake, and them which ſat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her.

10 And he ſent and beheaded John in the priſon.

11 And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damſel: and ſhe brought it to her mother.

12 And his diſciples came, and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jeſus.

13 ¶ When Jeſus heard of it, he departed thence by ſhip into a deſert place, apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities.

14 And Jeſus went forth, and ſaw a great multitude, and was moved with compaſſion toward them, and he healed their ſick.

15 ¶ And when it was evening his diſciples came to him, ſaying, This is a deſert place, and the time is now paſt; ſend the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themſelves victuals.

16 But Jeſus ſaid unto them, They need not depart, give ye them to eat.

17 And they ſay unto him, We have here but five loaves, and two fiſhes.

18 He ſaid, Bring them hither to me.

19 And he commanded the multitude to ſit down on the graſs, and took the five loaves, and the two fiſhes, and looking up to heaven, he bleſſed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his diſciples, and the diſciples to the multitude.

20 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained, twelve baskets full.

21 And they that had eaten were about five thouſand men, beſide women and children.

22 ¶ And ſtraightway Jeſus conſtrained his diſciples to get into a ſhip, and to go before him unto the other ſide, while he ſent the multitudes away.

23 And when he had ſent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone.

24 But the ſhip was now in the midſt of the ſea, toſſed with waves: for the wind was contrary.

25 And in the fourth watch of the night, Jeſus went unto them walking on the ſea.

26 And when the diſciples ſaw him walking on the ſea, they were troubled, ſaying, It is a ſpirit; and they cried out for fear.

27 But ſtraightway Jeſus ſpake unto them, ſaying, Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid, 28 And Peter anſwered him, and ſaid, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

29 And he ſaid, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ſhip, he walked on the water, to go to Jeſus.

30 But when he ſaw the wind boiſtrous, he was afraid: and beginning to ſink, he cried, ſaying, Lord, ſave me.

31 And immediately Jeſus ſtretched forth his hand, and caught him, and ſaid unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt?

32 And when they were come into the ſhip, the wind ceaſed.

33 Then they that were in the ſhip, came and worſhipped him, ſaying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.

34 ¶ And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Genneſaret.

35 And when the men of that place had knowledge of him, they ſent out into all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diſeaſed,

36 And beſought him, that they might only touch the hem of his garment: and as many as touched, were made perfectly whole.

Ver. 1. At that time.] In the third year of our Saviour's preaching, when John the Baptiſt was put to death, as appears from the context following.

—— Herod the tetrarch.] A political title to diſtinguiſh this Herod from Herod the Great, his father, and a king; ſee the notes on ch. ii. 1. His tetrarchy compriſed only Galilee and the Petrea, on the eaſt-banks of the river Jordan, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. c. 13.

Ver. 6. But when Herod's birth-day was kept.] According to ancient uſage among the Jews; ſee Gen. xl. 20.

Ver. 13. —— Into a deſert place.] Luke informs us, that this deſert place was near the city Bethſaida.

Ver. 15. And when it was evening.] Or, it drew near the cloſe of the day.

—— The time is now paſt.] The day is now ſpent; for the Greek word ὥρα does not only ſignify the twelfth part of a day, or night, but in general any time fit for tranſacting buſineſs; therefore, the meaning of this paſſage, is the time in which the multitude ſhould have departed, is now paſt. The remaining part of this hiſtory ſhall be more largely annotated in Luke ix. 10, &c.

Ver. 23. —— When the evening was come.] As this text ſeems to claſh with the account in ver. 15. it will be proper to remark, that the evening firſt mentioned, at ver. 15. implies the ſetting of the ſun; whereas in this place we are to underſtand the interval of time from ſun-ſet, till it was quite dark, Exod. xii. 6.

Ver. 33. —— Of a truth thou art the Son of God.] i. e. The Meſſiah whom we expected; for according to the beſt interpreters, the titles of Son of God, and of the Meſſiah, are ſynonimous; or ſtand for the ſame perſon in the New Teſtament; ſee ch. xvi. 16. compared with Luke viii. 28. ix. 20. Mark viii. 29. and John i. 49.

Ver. 34. — The land of Genneſaret.] A country, — territory, or canton, lying on the eaſtern-ſhore of the ſea of Tiberias, otherwiſe called Cinnereth, or the lake of Genezareth or Genezar. This lake or ſea according to Joſephus, is an hundred furlongs in length, and forty wide, or twelve Engliſh miles long, and two broad. The water of this lake was reputed very good to drink, and breeds abundance of fiſh, ſo that it was noted for a fiſhing-trade, which was carried on there, by Peter, Andrew, John and James. This lake is conſtantly ſupplied with freſh water by the river Jordan, which paſſes through the middle of it.

Ver. 36. And beſought him, &c.] Not, as we read in ch. viii. 34. that he would depart out of their coaſts; but on the contrary, that he would ſtay amongſt them, and cure thoſe that were diſeaſed; becauſe now, every place began to ring of the great cures and miracles done by Jeſus of Nazareth.

CHAP. XV.

3 Chriſt reproveth the ſcribes and Phariſees, for tranſgreſſing God's commandments through their own traditions,
11 teacheth how that which goeth into the mouth doth not defile a man. 21 He healeth the daughter of the woman of Canaan: 30 and other great multitudes: 32 and with ſeven loaves and a few little fiſhes feedeth four thouſand men beſides women and children.

THEN came to Jeſus ſcribes and Phariſees, which were of Jeruſalem, ſaying,

2 Why do thy diſciples tranſgreſs the tradition of the elders? for they waſh not their hands when they eat bread.

3 But he anſwered and ſaid unto them, Why do you alſo tranſgreſs the commandment of God by your tradition?

4 For God commanded, ſaying, Honour thy father and mother: and, He that curſeth father or mother, let him die the death.

5 But ye ſay, Whoſoever ſhall ſay to his father or his mother, It is a gift by whatſoever thou mightſt be profited by me,

6 And honour not his father or his mother, he ſhall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

7 Ye hypocrites, well did Eſaias propheſy of you, ſaying,

8 This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips: but their heart is far from me.

9 But in vain they do worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

10 ¶ And he called the multitude, and ſaid unto them, Hear and underſtand.

11 Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man: but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.

12 Then came his diſciples, and ſaid unto him, Knoweſt thou that the Phariſees were offended after they heard this ſaying?

13 But he anſwered and ſaid, Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted ſhall be rooted up.

14 Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both ſhall fall into the ditch.

15 Then anſwered Peter and ſaid unto him, Declare unto us this parable.

16 And Jeſus ſaid, Are ye alſo yet without underſtanding?

17 Do not ye yet underſtand, that whatſoever entreth in at the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught?

18 But thoſe things which proceed out of the mouth, come forth from the heart, and they defile the man.

19 For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſs, blaſphemies.

20 Theſe are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwaſhen hands defileth not a man.

21 ¶ Then Jeſus went thence, and departed into the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon.

22 And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the ſame coaſts, and cried unto him, ſaying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou ſon of David; my daughter is grievouſly vexed with a devil.

23 But he anſwered her not a word. And his diſciples came and beſought him, ſaying, Send her away, for ſhe crieth after us,

24 But he anſwered and ſaid, I am not ſent, but unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael.

25 Then came ſhe and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, help me.

26 But he anſwered and ſaid, it is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it to dogs.

27 And ſhe ſaid, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their maſters table.

28 Then Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

29 And Jeſus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the ſea of Galilee, and went up into a mountain, and ſat down there.

30 And great multitudes came unto him, having with them thoſe that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and caſt them down at Jeſus feet, and he healed them:

31 Inſomuch that the multitude wondred when they ſaw the dumb to ſpeak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to ſee: and they glorified the God of Iſrael.

32 ¶ Then Jeſus called his diſciples unto him, and ſaid, I have compaſſion on the multitude, becauſe they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not ſend them away faſting, leſt they faint in the way.

33 And his diſciples ſay unto him, whence ſhould we have ſo much bread in the wilderneſs, as to fill ſo great a multitude?

34 And Jeſus ſaith unto them, How many loaves have ye? And they ſaid, Seven, and a few little fiſhes.

35 And he commanded the multitude to ſit down on the ground.

36 And he took the ſeven loaves and the fiſhes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his diſciples, and the diſciples to the multitude.

37 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left, ſeven baskets full.

38 And they that did eat were four thouſand men, beſide women and children.

39 And he ſent away the multitude, and took ſhip, and came into the coaſts of Magdala.

Ver. 1. Then.] When Jeſus wrought ſo many miracles in Galilee, or at Genezareth, ſee John vii. 1.

—— Scribes.] See ch. xiii. 52.

—— Phariſees.] See ch. iii. 7.

—— Which were of Jeruſalem.] Or rather, as the French tranſlate it, qui etoient venus de Jeruſalem, i. e. who were come [by deputation] from Jeruſalem to corrupt the people, that they ſhould not follow Jeſus nor believe his works; and that they might tempt him, agreeable to what we read afterwards in ch. xxii. 16.

Ver. 2. — The tradition of the elders.] That doctrine which the Jews accepted, as delivered down to them only by word of mouth from Moſes, and other ancient doctors of their nation; and no where to be found in the written law, ſee ch. v. 21, &c. and the notes on ch. iii. 7.

—— They waſh not their hands, when they eat bread.] This is one of thoſe traditions, which the Jews had formed in conſequence of the law about pollutions, contracted by thoſe who touched any unclean thing; and becauſe this ſeemed, therefore, to be one of the beſt grounded, they began with accuſing his diſciples with the breach thereof. But Chriſt took no notice of ſuch cavilling, being no ways concerned about the breach of any precept, not expreſly laid down in the law of Moſes.

Ver. 3. But he anſwered and ſaid unto them, Why do you alſo tranſgreſs the commandment of God by your tradition?] You only endeavour to traverſe my doctrine by a feigned pretence, that I permit my diſciples to neglect ſuch traditions, as you ſay are founded upon the law of Moſes; but I will accuſe you of inſtituting traditions contrary to the commandments of God; which objection, muſt firſt be removed before you can pretend to bind me, or my diſciples, in the obſervance of the tradition of your elders.

Ver. 4. For God commanded, ſaying, Honour thy father and mother, &c.] See Exod. xx. 12. and Deut. v. 16. and Exod. xxi. 16.

Ver. 5. But ye ſay, whoſoever ſhall ſay to his father, or his mother, it is a gift by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me. Ver. 6. And honour not his father or mother, he ſhall be free.] i. e. The offering, which I make to God will be of ſervice to you; I have devoted that to God, which you ask of me, it is no longer either yours or mine, but you will ſhare in the merit of my offering. The word gift is in the original corban, ſee Mark vii. 11. which comes from the Hebrew word karab, or kekerib, to offer or preſent, and ſtands for an offering, a gift or preſent made to God, or his temple. So a Jew in a tranſport of paſſion, would ſay corban, or vow his ſubſtance to the temple, or God, rather than contribute to the ſupport of their neceſſitous parents; which cruelty is the thing aimed at by Chriſt in the text, ſee Mark vii.

Ver. 6. — Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect, by your tradition.] You would rather, therefore, entirely renounce the commandment of God, than abate of the leaſt of thoſe doctrines, received, as you ſay, from your elders.

Ver. 7. — Hypocrites.] Becauſe they pretending to be ſtrict obſervers of the law, and deſirous to be ſo accounted, yet broke the law by their traditions.

—— Well did Eſaias propheſy of you, &c.] In his xxix. 13. but this is not to be ſo underſtood, that Iſaiah propheſied of the ſcribes and Phariſees only; but that he therein accuſed the whole Jewiſh nation, as well thoſe of his own time, as them that came after; and thus it is accommodated by Chriſt in this place, to the ſcribes and Phariſees, as if he had ſaid, now I may ſay, that you ſcribes and Phariſees reſemble that character of the Jews in the days of Eſaias the Prophet.

Ver. 11. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man.] For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refuſed, if it be received with thankſgiving, 1 Tim. iv. 4. See Mark vii. 18, &c. and below, at ver. 17.

—— But that which cometh out of the mouth, &c.] i. e. Evil communications, ſee Mark vii. 21, &c. and below, at ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 22. — A woman of Canaan.] Mark calls her a Syrophenician, vii. 26. But that is no ways repugnant to Matthew, for the Tyrians and Sidonians, were Syrophenicians; as Pliny, lib. 5. c. 12, and 20. and Strabo, lib. 4. teſtify. So that it is true, what Mark ſays, that this woman was a Syrophenician; becauſe ſhe was of that country, ſhe, as Matthew expreſſes it, came out of the ſame coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, ver. 21. And it is alſo true, what Matthew ſays, that ſhe was a woman of Canaan, becauſe the Jews commonly by that name, underſtood the inhabitants about Sidon, ſee Gen. xii. 6. and xiii. 7.

——— Thou ſon of David.] See ch. ix. 27.

Ver. 24. —— Unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael.] To recal the Jews to a juſt obſervance of their law, which he continued to do to the end of his miniſtry; and his Apoſtles after him till they were finally rejected by the houſe of Iſrael; ſo that they had no room to be angry at any thing but their own obſtinacy, which I pray God they may repent of.

Ver. 26. — It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to caſt it to dogs.] This parabolical expreſſion ſhews the diſtinction, which Jeſus made between the Jews, whom he repreſents by the name of children, becauſe they alone, of all nations of the earth, acknowledged the true God, for their father; and the Gentiles or Heathens, whom he deſcribes by the brutal name of dogs, becauſe of their idolatrous worſhip wherein they were ſo much involved, that they did even pay Divine Honours to brute-beaſts, and thereby almoſt diveſted themſelves of the right to be called human creatures. And certainly this was the interpretation of this paſſage by the woman of Canaan, for ſhe preſently replied very dextrouſly;

Ver. 27. — Truth Lord.] I grant that I am a dog in compariſon to thoſe whom you call children; ſee the precedent notes.

——— Yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their maſters table.] Let me then obtain the ſame favour, as dogs do from their maſters; and partake of the crumbs, which your children don't eat; i. e. the miraculous cure of my daughter; of which I have heard, the Jews make no account; but have blaſphemouſly aſcribed thy curing of demoniacks, to ſome diabolical art.

Ver. 28. —— O woman, great is thy faith.] Becauſe ſhe, who knew nothing of the true worſhip of God, had ſuch faith in his works; which the Phariſees reviled, and were therefore called by him, a generation of vipers, chap. xii. 34.

Ver. 39. — Magdala.] A village on the ſouth-ſhore of the lake of Genezareth.

CHAP. XVI.

1 The Phariſees require a ſign, 6 Jeſus warneth his diſciples of the leaven of the Phariſees and Sadducees. 13 The peoples opinion of Chriſt, 16 and Peter's confeſſion of him. 21 Jeſus foreſheweth his death. 23 Reproving Peter for diſſuading him from it: 24 And admoniſhing thoſe that will follow him, to bear the croſs.

THE Phariſees alſo with the Sadducees, came, and tempting, deſired him that he would ſhew them a ſign from heaven.

2 He anſwered and ſaid unto them, When it is evening, ye ſay, It will be fair weather: for the ſkie is red.

3 And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day: for the ſkie is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can diſcern the face of the ſkie, but can ye not diſcern the ſigns of the times?

4 A wicked and adultrous generation ſeeketh after a ſign, and there ſhall no ſign be given unto it, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas. And he left them, and departed.

5 And when his diſciples were come to the other ſide, they had forgotten to take bread.

6 ¶ Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Take heed and beware of the Phariſees, and of the Sadducees.

7 And they reaſoned among themſelves, ſaying, It is becauſe we have taken no bread.

8 Which when Jeſus perceived, he ſaid unto them, O ye of little faith, why reaſon ye among your ſelves, becauſe ye have brought no bread?

9 Do ye not yet underſtand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thouſand, and how many baskets ye took up?

10 Neither the ſeven loaves of the four thouſand, and how many baskets ye took up?

11 How is it that ye do not underſtand, that I ſpake it not to you concerning bread, that ye ſhould beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the Sadducees?

12 Then underſtood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Phariſees, and of the Sadducees.

13 ¶ When Jeſus came into the coaſts of Ceſarea Philippi, he asked his diſciples, ſaying, Whom do men ſay, that I, the Son of man, am?

14 And they ſaid, Some ſay that thou art John the Baptiſt, ſome Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

15 He ſaith unto them, But whom ſay ye that I am?

16 And Simon Peter anſwered and ſaid, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God.

17 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon-Barjona: for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

18 And I ſay alſo unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it.

19 And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on earth, it ſhall be looſed in heaven.

20 Then charged he his diſciples that they ſhould tell no man that he was Jeſus the Chriſt.

21 ¶ From that time forth began Jeſus to ſhew unto his diſciples, how that he muſt go unto Jeruſalem, and ſuffer many things of the elders, and chief prieſts, and ſcribes, and be killed, and be raiſed again the third day.

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this ſhall not be unto thee.

23 But he turned and ſaid unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me: for thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men.

24 ¶ Then ſaid Jeſus unto his diſciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs and follow me.

25 For whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: and whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, ſhall find it.

25 For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?

27 For the Son of man ſhall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he ſhall reward every man according to his works.

28 Verily I ſay unto you, There be ſome ſtanding here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

Ver. 1. The Phariſees alſo with the Sadducees.] See ch. iii. 7.

——Tempting.] Men tempt one another, when they try by ſome ſly means to know whether things are really ſo as repreſented, or as they ſeem to be: whether men are ſuch as they are thought, or deſired to be; and ſo it is to be underſtood as oft as you read that the Jews tempted Chriſt.

——A ſign from Heaven.] See ch. xii. 38.

Ver. 3.——But can ye not diſcern the ſigns of the times?] By which our Saviour reproaches them, becauſe, ſays he, You have a good ſhare of reaſon, and make a good uſe of it, by experience, in matters of ſlight importance, as in the gueſſing at the good and bad weather at ſuch and ſuch times, by your obſervation of the face or appearance of the ſky; but you lay that reaſon quite aſide; when things of greater importance offer themſelves for your belief; as for example, you don't concern yourſelves to enquire whether the time of the coming of the Meſſiah is yet expire; tho' it is certain, that the ſigns of his coming, foretold by the Prophets, are now fulfilling; and conſequently, if you would ſtudy the ſigns of that time, your reaſon would eaſily direct you to ſee and know that your ſtate was now drawing to an end, being in the power of a Roman governor and that Jeſus, whom you ſee work ſo many wonderful works, is your expected Meſſiah.

Ver. 4. A wicked and adulterous generation, &c.] See ch. xii. 39. And here I ſhall obſerve, that the ancient and learned Hierom, ſays, that theſe four firſt verſes were not to be found in many copies of this Goſpel in his time: and indeed, I am of opinion, that it hath, at leaſt moſt of it, been ignorantly tranſcribed by ſome, unwary Amanuenſis from ch. xii. 38, 39. and 40th verſes. For, the firſt and fourth verſes agree in terms; and I think, that if this chapter ſhould take its beginning at the fifth verſe, it would be more coherent with the matter concluding the former chapter, and ſo more agreeable to Matthew's exactneſs.

Ver. 6.——Leaven of the Phariſees and of the Sadducees.] i. e. The Phariſaical doctrine of traditions; ſee ch. xv. 2, &c. and the doctrine of the Sadducees, who taught many falſe opinions concerning the ſoul; ſee ch. iii. 7. and below, at ver. 12. For as a piece of leaven ferments a whole lump of paſte, ſo will the doctrine of theſe two wicked ſects corrupt thoſe that follow them.

Ver. 13. Ceſarea Philippi.] i. e. The country of which Philip was tetrarch, who called his dominion Ceſarea, or Cæſar's country, in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, who had given it him; Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 3.

——Whom do men ſay, that I, the ſon of man, am?] Here Chriſt, as elſewhere, ſtyling himſelf the ſon of man, ſpeaks of himſelf, as if ſuch a thing was ſaid of him by a third perſon. So that it is here, as always when you meet with the like expreſſion, to be obſerved, that Chriſt does not call himſelf the Son of man; but in this queſtion ſuppoſes, that other men took him for the ſon of a man; as above, in ch. xiii. 54, 55, 56. Or, it may be juſtly underſtood to be ſpoken by way of upbraiding the Jews with their unbelief at his work, which were not in the power of a mere man to do; as if he had ſaid, don't my works convince the men that ſee them, that I am not the ſon of a carpenter, &c. ch. xiii. 55.

Ver. 14. And they ſaid.] Every Apoſtle as he had heard, told him, That, ——Some ſay thou art John the Baptiſt.] Riſen from the dead; ch. xiv.

——Some Elias.] Some again ſay, that thou art Elias, deſcended from Heaven to prepare mens hearts for the reception of the Meſſiah expected; according as they were taught by the ſcribes; ſee ch. xvii. 10.

——Others Jeremias, or one of the Prophets.] This might probably be the opinion of the Sadducees, who believed a tranſmigration of ſouls, and not able to withſtand the evidence of Chriſt's miracles, agreed that he was animated by the ſpirit of one of the old Prophets.

Ver. 15. He ſaith unto them; but whom ſay he that I am?] This queſtion is the antitheton to the former, in ver. 13. and plainly evinceth, that Chriſt did not call, nor would not have them, his Apoſtles, to believe he was ſo little as one of the Prophets, or Jeremias, or Elias, or John the Baptiſt, (who was the greateſt among men) and conſequently, much leſs that he was the Son of man: And therefore he thought it no robbery to accept the title of a God, when Simon Peter anſwered in the name of all the diſciples preſent, and ſaid, we believe that thou art Chriſt, or the Meſſiah, the Son of the living God; ſee ch xxvi. 63.

Let us run through the whole New Teſtament, and in every page almoſt we ſhall read of the Father or Son; terms of ſpeech which ſignify the ſame relation in all tongues and nations. Can it then be thought, that the Holy Ghoſt meant any otherwiſe by the relative words, Father and Son in the Godhead, than what all men interpret them? For, as we are only capable to receive things revealed by words or names, adapted to our natural faculties, it can't, without abhorrence, be thought that the Holy Ghoſt would deceive us in revealing to us the relation that is between the other two perſons of the Bleſſed Trinity by two ſuch relative names, which never alter their ſenſe nor meaning, if there had been no ſuch relation in the Godhead. Therefore, wheresoever we meet with them, they are to be underſtood in their proper and ſimple ſignification; or let ſuch as think they are able to interpoſe, aſſign a reaſon why the Holy Ghoſt did not expreſs himſelf in more ſignificant terms. Such a one won't fail of finding work enough in this world, and I fear, puniſhment in the next, who ſin ſo literally againſt the Holy Ghoſt, who not only has revealed to us the abſtract name of a Son, but, for fear of a miſtake, the revelation of the Son of God is ſo particular, as to diſtinguiſh him from all others that may be called Sons upon any account whatever; ſee Rom. i. 4. Heb. i. 5——8. For, in ſpeaking of the Son of God by eternal generation, it terms him, the Son of God in power, gives him the ſame name with the Father, deſcribes him as poſſeſſing the ſame Perfections, Attributes, Glory and Life with the Father, as alſo the ſame Knowledge and Will: Putting this difference between the children of God by Creation, Redemption, or Adoption, &c. and the Son by eternal generation; that they are the Sons of God only, by a faint analogy with his imitable perfections; whereas the Eternal Son is infinite, eternal and perfect God, and the Eternal Son of the infinite, eternal, and perfect God. Thoſe are never ſtiled the only begotten of the Father; the proper Sons of God, his beloved in whom he is well pleaſed, the firſt-begotten of all creatures, brought forth by the Father, and poſſeſſed by him in the beginning of his way, by whom all things were made, and himſelf not created but begotten. Theſe phraſes of Scripture plainly inſtruct us of a Son of God, not only nominal or appointed, or by office made ſuch in time, but actually eternal. Vid. Maldonat. in In. 3. 16.

For, when God ſent Moſes with his law, and in his name, and with a more extenſive power than any man had ever been inveſted with before; or, when he expreſſed his great love to Elijah by taking of him up in a chariot of fire. He never ſaid of either of them, this day have I begotten thee, but when God ſpeaketh of his own proper Son, τὸν ἴδιον υἱὸν, whom he ſent into the world in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; Rom. viii. 3—32. He endeavours to enforce our belief of his eternal ſonſhip by the communication of the Father's own nature and eſſence; for, as above, when he ſays of his ſon; this day have I begotten thee; Pſal. ii. 7. it would more properly be rendred from the Hebrew, this day have I brought thee forth, as a woman in travail bareth a child; whence we may obſerve the falſhood of that aſſertion of a late author, which will allow him only to be the Son of God at the union of the Godhead and Manhood, which makes him a Mediator; as if the words Mediator and Son were ſynonimous: But what we believe of the eternal generation is clogg'd with no ſuch abſurdities, and is ſtrengthened by a cloud of witneſſes.

For, hearken to the Son teſtifying of himſelf, I was brought forth when there was no depth, yea, before the mountains were ſettled, before the hills was I brought forth; when He (the Father) prepared the Heavens I was there by him as one brought up with him, Prov. viii. 22, 24, 25, 27, 30. compared with Mich. v. 1. Jer. x. 20. Does this text intimate a word of a Mediator? Does it not teach us that the Son was before all things? That he was from eternity in the boſom of the Father, and that He was brought forth by him, and had his nature and eſſence communicated to him from eternity? And conſequently, is it not impiety to aſſert the very contrary? that the ſecond perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity can only be accounted the Son of God, as God-Man, and not in his ſeparate ſtate of God? I have ſelected this one of many which I could enforce from the Old Teſtament in favour of our Belief, and ſhall proceed directly to the New Teſtament.

What can be reply'd to that paſſage of St. John? chap. i. ver. 1, 2, &c. Can his record of the word's exiſtence in the beginning be interpreted of any other word than the Son of God? Or, will it be deny'd, what is generally allowed, that by, in the beginning, he at leaſt denotes the firſt moment of time? And does not every grammar ſcholar know that the verb was, neceſſarily informs us of an exiſtence of that word prior, to that beginning of time, and conſequently leads us into the depth of eternity: So that by this Scripture, we naturally arrive at the knowledge that the Logos, the word, i. e. the Son of God, exiſted a Son from all eternity. Maldonat. in loc. Sect. 34. Therefore when Ambroſe de Fid. ad Gratian. c. 5. repeated theſe words. In the beginning was the word and the word was with God the ſame was in the beginning with God, exclaimed againſt the unbelievers and ſaid, "You read here that the word was (was, was, was) four times repeated with God, let then the impious man ſhew he was not."

Can any Scripture be clearer than this, the word was with God? Does it not, without manifeſt violence, plainly declare, that the Son of God was with the Father hid and inviſible till the word ſhould be made fleſh in the fulneſs of time, Maldonat. ib. Sect. 46. when the Son of God accepted of the name of the Son of man, and manifeſting himſelf to the Apoſtles, enabled them to preach and to ſhew us that eternal life which was with the Father. Therefore the Evangeliſt in 1 Eph. i. 2. concludes, We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, not a temporary limited glory, but natural to the Son, and as extenſive as the Father's glory, Baſil. de Fide. becauſe it was the glory not of a creature, but of him, who alone came forth from the Father, Maldonat. ib. Sect. 135. and poſſeſſeth all things that are the Fathers. Again, Who can [illegible] reſiſt the word of truth? or, who can contradict that Scripture, which teacheth that the Father, as he hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given the Son to have life in himſelf? John v. 26. which compared with ſome other texts, John vi. 57. xvii. 22. evidently compel us to believe, not only the allſufficiency of the Son, that he is the fountain and beginning of life, but eſpecially through the whole Scriptures, where he is mentioned by the name of the Son of God, "that he is from the Father," living by the Father, or "as one naturally brought forth from eternity by the Father.

Ver. 16.——The living God.] So the Jews were accuſtomed to name the great Creator of the heavens and the earth, and of all things therein, by way of diſtinction from the Gods adored by the heathens, which were for the moſt part ſtocks and ſtones, images, dead men, or other inanimate creatures; ſee Gen. xvi. 14. Ver. 18. And I ſay unto thee.] Context contain the moſt remarkable paſſage of Peter's life, as well for the occaſion upon which, as for the perſon, by whom they were ſpoken; and becauſe they are become of great conſequence to the Chriſtian Church, to enquire into the true and proper meaning thereof, having with the utmoſt violence been wreſted by a particular ſect of people, to lay a foundation of a ſupreme, infallible power, by which they endeavour to tyranize, by a pretended commiſſion, over the bodies and ſouls of their Fellow-Chriſtians.

The perſon ſpeaking was Chriſt the Son of God, our Saviour, (ſee the note on verſe 15 above) a ſtumbling ſtone and Rock of offence, to the rulers of the people and elders of Iſrael, upon which Rock, ſays Paul, "I have as a wiſe maſter-builder, laid the foundation (of the Chriſtian faith) 1 Cor. x. 1. for other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt," 1 Pet. ii. 4. 1 Cor. x. 3, 10, 11.

The perſon to whom this founder of our faith ſpeaketh, was Peter, Simon-Barjona, to whom our Evangeliſt gives the firſt place in the Apoſtolate; ſaying among the Apoſtles, "The firſt is Simon, who is called Peter," ch. x. 2

The hiſtory of this Apoſtle, as we find it recorded in Scripture, gives us an idea of him: that he was qualified with many perſonal endowments, which rendered him in an eminent manner qualified for the diſcharge of the apoſtolical office. He was particularly quick of apprehenſion, bold of ſpirit, ready in ſpeech; zealous in the ſervice of our Lord; reſolute, active and induſtrious: So that upon all occaſions he was more hot than the reſt at acknowledging Chriſt, Greg. Naz. Orat. 34. he was ready to ſpeak firſt, and to make himſelf the mouth of the Apoſtles; Chryſoſt. Tom. v. Orat. 59. nimble in all deliberations to propound his advice; always hot and eager, prompt, and vigorous to make the onſet in all undertakings. Chryſoſt. ib.

Thus you read in this Scripture when our Saviour asked the Apoſtles; whom ſay ye that I am? Peter ſtarteth forth, and preventing the reſt, ſaith, Thou art the Chriſt the Son of the living God, as before, John vi. 67, &c. when Jeſus ſaid unto the twelve : Will ye alſo go away, Simon Peter anſwered him, Lord · · · · We believe and are ſure that thou art that Chriſt the Son of the living God, which ſhews that the reſt of the Apoſtles were as much inſpired with the true faith in Chriſt, as Peter was, and that he only, as Gregory Naz. expreſſeth it, was more hot than the reſt in acknowledging Chriſt.

Again, Matt. xiv. 26, &c. he alone had the faith and courage to go down out of the ſhip, and walk on the waters to meet Jeſus walking on the ſea. But when he ſaw the wind boiſterous, his faith cooled, and he was afraid: But they that were in the ſhip came and worſhipped Jeſus, ſaying, Thou art the Son of God. In which paſſage, it is obvious for us to remark the zeal of Peter, his humane infirmity, and eſpecially the profeſſion of faith made by all them that were in the ſhip, which if it does not exclude Peter, at leaſt proveth they had acknowledged this faith before Peter made the above declaration, Thou art the Son of the living God.

Peter alſo ſignalizad his zeal and activity, when he propoſed the making an abode upon the mount for Jeſus, Moſes and Elias, not knowing what he ſaid; and when our Lord was diſcourſing about his paſſion, Peter drove by the impetuoſity of his nature, began to rebuke him, ſaying, be it far from thee, Lord, this ſhall not be unto thee, Matt. xvi. 22. for which he received this ſharp repremand, get thee, ſaid Chriſt to Peter, behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me; for thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men, ver. 23. A reprimand which becomes more remarkable, becauſe immediately ſujoined by the Evangeliſt to the words from whence ſome would infer his infallibility and ſupremacy over the Church of Chriſt; but with how much reaſon he can be called infallible and ſupreme head of Chriſt's Church, whom Chriſt has branded with the name of Satan, the diſtinguiſhing name of an apoſtate angel, judge ye!

Nor is Peter to be preferred to the other Apoſtles, on account of that natural courage and confidence, with which he earneſtly profeſſed to Jeſus, though all men ſhall be offended becauſe of thee, yet will I never be offended, Matt. xxvi. 33, &c. for immediately, in that night before the cock crew, he curs'd and ſwore that he knew not Jeſus of Galilee, John xviii. 10. Tho' juſt before that, he had drawn his ſword in the defence of Jeſus, and had cut off the right ear of the high-prieſts ſervant.

After the death of our Lord, Peter, hearing the women's report, that our Lord was riſen from the dead, ran with John (xx. 4, &c.) to the ſepulchre, and tho' John came firſt to the place, Peter went firſt into the ſepulchre.

At the conſultation of the Apoſtles to ſupply the place of Judas, Peter ſtood up, propoſed and preſſed, that there ſhould be one choſen to be a witneſs of the reſurrection of Jeſus, Acts i. 15. And in like manner, when there began to be a diſſention in the Church about circumciſion, and the Apoſtles, and elders, were come together for to conſider, and had diſputed much of this matter, Peter roſe up and declared his opinion.

In the promulgation of the Goſpel, and defence of it before the rulers of the Jews, he was generally at the mouth of the other Apoſtles, who ſtood up with him, while he uttered their common voice; ſo did Aaron ſpeak all the words, which the Lord had ſpoken unto Moſes, not that thereby he was preferable to Moſes; but becauſe, I know he can ſpeak well, ſaid the Lord, he ſhall be the ſpokeſman unto the people, and he ſhall be to thee, inſtead of a mouth, Exod. iv. 14, &c. So that this qualification did not give Peter any pre-eminence over his fellow Apoſtles: And conſequently from the premiſes, which contain all that can be ſaid in favour of Peter, we can collect nothing more than that he excell'd the reſt of the Apoſtles in his perſonal accompliſhments, which we all know are not always the baſis of preferment, or the means to ſet us above thoſe leſs qualified than ourſelves.

It is indeed obſervable, our Lord, on all occaſions, preferred him, as it were, to his other diſciples; for he directed his diſcourſe to Peter more frequently, and by a kind of anticipation, he granted or promiſed thoſe gifts and privileges on him, which were intended for them all. We know, that Peter was the firſt called to the Apoſtolick office; the firſt to whom our Bleſſed Saviour appeared after his reſurrection; and in a ſpecial manner, recommended to him the paſtoral care of his Church; but all this amounts to no more, than that Peter, like our Speaker in the Houſe of Commons, had a precedence of his colleagues, but was ſtill co-ordinate in degree, a precedence, which we all know, importeth no ſuperiority in power, command or juriſdiction; as is moſt erroneouſly affirmed by the aſſerters of Papal ſupremacy, to be granted by our Bleſſed Saviour to Peter, and from him, devolved upon the biſhops of Rome, laying their great ſtreſs upon the words of the following verſes; which I ſhall endeavour to clear from their interpretation.

——— Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church.] Theſe words are metaphorical or figurative, and were the reply of our Saviour to Peter; who, in the name of all the Apoſtles, had rendred an account of their faith; ſaying, thou art the Chriſt, the ſon of the living God. This is the rock, ſays Paul to the Corinthians; on which "as a wiſe maſter-builder I have laid the foundation of our faith, ſee above. From which authority, it muſt appear to an unprejudiced reader, that the rock on which Chriſt promiſed to Peter, he would build his church, was the faith that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of the living God. So that the beſt of interpreters, (Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 16. 3. Hil. de Trin. 6.) that were not intereſſed in a Papal ſupremacy, expound, that Chriſt ſaid he would build his church on Peter's perſon, for he did not build his church upon the man, but upon his faith; nay, it is the exhortation of one of their greateſt, I mean, moſt learned Popes, to "perſiſt in the true faith, and eſtabliſh and fix our life upon the rock of the church, the confeſſion of Bleſſed Peter, the prince of the Apoſtles," Greg. M. ep. 3. 33.

I am not ignorant that ſome have interpreted the rock of Peter's perſon, and others, that it means all the faithful paſtors and confeſſors of the Chriſtian Church; but the truth is ſo prevailing, which I have declared above, that divers of the moſt learned of the Romiſh divines, &c. have been forced to grant it. And,

If we ſhould reaſon the caſe, ſhould not the words of a commiſſion be plain and obvious? ſhould not the grounds of ſo main a doctrine, ſtand upon evident and indubitable teſtimony? Yet, according to univerſal agreement, this text, on which is laid ſo much ſtreſs, is only metaphorical. Is it reaſonable in an ambiguous account of things to ſubmit implicitly to the interpretation thereof by them, who are intereſſed in deceiving us? And ſhall we then be douped, or ſhall we run into that extreme of folly, we are ready to condemn in another, by rejecting the acknowledged piety and learning of a Chryſoſtom, an Auſtin, and a Nazianzen, for the opinion of a Bellarmine, a Baronius, or any of their Romiſh modern doctors? who, allowing them to be honeſt in their intentions, will never propoſe their own conceptions to be infallible; and therefore, I ſhould be excuſable to join with the interpretation of the primitive Fathers, in oppoſition to theſe, was I not able, as I have proved above, to ſhew the Popiſh interpretation contrary to the expreſs words of Scripture, and the Goſpel-diſpenſation.

Again, if this text gave Peter a promiſe of ſupremacy over the church, he muſt have been the ſupreme among the Apoſtles, and they, at leaſt, would have underſtood theſe words accordingly; but they did not. For how would ſuch a knowledge be reconciled with their contention for the chief place, Luke xxii. 14. This would be proclaiming them rebels to our Lord's poſitive determination? Mark ix. 34. Would they have diſputed about a queſtion, which they knew was ſtated by an irrevocable decree of him, whoſe words are more durable than the Heaven and the earth? It would be no leſs than branding the Apoſtles, whoſe authority doth ſupport our weakneſs, Auſt. Pſ. lxxxvi. with impudence and folly, to ſuppoſe that they knew, that the Lord had declared his will, to make Peter his viceroy, when they enquired of him who ſhould be the greateſt in his kingdom. What ſhall we ſay of the petition of Zebedee's children? and of Peter's indignation thereat? They both ſhew, that neither of them had any knowledge of Peter's preferment to this pretended honour and power by the Lord's infallible purpoſe and declaration. Seeing then the Apoſtles did not underſtand any ſuch commiſſion lodged in this text, muſt we be obliged under a curſe to ſubmit to the Romiſh interpretation? This is a bold ſtroke, preferring their own inventions to the judgment and advantages of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, who in the vehemency of their conteſts, inquiries, and petition concerning the point of ſuperiority, muſt have acted contrary to the character of the Meſſiah, in not only forbearing to reſolve them, clearly to inſtruct them, and to admoniſh them of their duty, but even by diſſembling his word and promiſe, if there was any ſuch.

But after all, the Papiſt is ſo fond of this rock, pretending ſo many advantages to their church, by proving it to mean the perſon of Peter, that they ſeem to be fixed as immoveable as a rock; and as men metamorphized into a ſtone, are ready to grant the ignorance of the Apoſtles, and (I dread to uſe the expreſſion,) the diſſimulation of our Bleſſed Jeſus, ſo that they can obtain the height of their ambition the Pope's ſupremacy! And no doubt, they will treat the ancient Fathers with as little reſpect.

The fathers grant the darling metaphor, that Peter had his name from a rock; becauſe he firſt merited to found the church by firmneſs of faith: But, if, therefore, ſays Origen, in Mat. xvi. p. 275. "You think the whole church to be built only on Peter alone, what will ye ſay of John the ſon of thunder, and of each of the Apoſtles; for Chriſt was the rock, and he beſtowed on the Apoſtles, that they ſhould be called rocks," Hier. in Amos ix. 12. that the church might be built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Peter being alſo one of the mountains, Baſil. In. Iſa. 2. p. 869. So that if we grant them, that the word Peter, ſignifies a ſtone, or a rock, yet it cannot with the leaſt ſhew of reaſon, be inferred, that he was the only rock among the Apoſtles; becauſe you ſee the ſucceſſive interpretation of the fathers does manifeſtly, and in expreſs words, confute that aſſertion; and declare that Chriſt, and all his Apoſtles were likewiſe called a rock, ſee before in this note.

—— And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, &c.] That is, ſay the Papiſts, the ſupreme power over all the church, Bellar. de Pont. l. 1. c. 3. But this inference, or falſe gloſs, is eaſily refuted; for, let that power be what it will, that is conveyed under the metaphorical expreſſion of a key, and binding and loſing (a matter which does not require my preſent diſcuſſion) they never were underſtood in this ſenſe by the Apoſtles, nor by Peter himſelf; and they have received, and, as all figurative expreſſions, do admit of various interpretations. But it would be neceſſary, that a power of ſuch importance, ſhould have been granted in downright and perſpicuous terms; a means by which every man granteth his commiſſion to thoſe he can inveſt with authority, and the method by which God has always made his will known unto men; for as the great Lactantius declares thoſe things (which are delivered as Divine Truths) can have no foundation, or ſtability, which are not ſuſtained by ſome oracle of God's word. A principle ſo juſt and reaſonable, that when God had ſaid unto Moſes, I will ſend thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayeſt bring forth my people, the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, Exod. iii. 10. Moſes began to excuſe himſelf, and was willing to decline the employment, till the Lord gave him demonſtrative tokens of his calling to the office, and of the ſucceſs of his undertaking, Calmet's Dict. Art. Moſes. And this was ever the reaſonable method with God, when he demanded of man, a reaſonable ſervice. And therefore the utmoſt import of theſe words; I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, is, that there was by them a power promiſed to be given unto Peter, but not excluſive of the other Apoſtles; for, as a noted Romiſh commentator confeſſeth, "Chriſt ſaid to Peter, I will give thee the keys, but he ſaid not, I will give them to thee alone," Rigalt. Epiſt. Firmil. but herein Peter receives a promiſe of "what Chriſt himſelf would alſo communicate to the reſt, that whatſoever they ſhould bind on earth, ſhould be bound in Heaven, &c." Id. in Cypr. de Unit. Eccl. Which words are explicative of the word keys, and are expreſly ſpoken and granted by our Saviour to all the Apoſtles, Matt. xviii. 18. in 20, 2[illegible]. So that, if for argument's ſake, we admit theſe words to confer a ſupreme power, their argument would ſtill become worſe; becauſe they then muſt be reduced to this abſurdity, that each Apoſtle was inveſted with a ſupreme power. Or, what is equally as abſurd, that Peter ſhould open the kingdom of Heaven to the Apoſtles, whom our Lord had admitted in long before.

I know that there is another text of Scripture, when Chriſt ſaid to Peter, feed my ſheep; i. e. ſays the Papiſt, "be thou the univerſal governor of my church;" this is their arbitrary gloſs, and preſumptuous improvement of the text, and therefore I ſhall anſwer to it in the words of Auſtin, "When it is ſaid to St. Peter, it is ſaid to all [the Apoſtles] feed my ſheep." And indeed thoſe that apply this in the Popiſh ſenſe to Peter, load him with a vaſt and crabbed province, and a task very incommodious, or rather impoſſible for him to undergo.

If it be urged, that the panegyricks of the ancient fathers have preferred Peter to his fellow Apoſtles; I have this to anſwer, that I can produce equal, if not greater encomiums, beſtowed by as good authority on the other Apoſtles; for it is ſaid of Paul, that "he was the tongue, the teacher, and the Apoſtle of the world. That he had the whole world put into his hands, and took care thereof, and had committed to his charge all the men dwelling upon earth," Chryſoſtom in 1 Cor. ix. 2. and in 2 Tim. ii. 1. And of James it is recorded, (Epiph. her. 78. Chryſ. in 1 Tim. or. 11.) that he was the firſt that received the epiſcopal chair, and "was ordained by the Lord himſelf the firſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem." And therefore he was eminently ſtiled among the primitive Chriſtians, (Clem. Rec. i. 68. Ruf. Euſeb. ii. 1.) the Biſhop of Biſhops, and Biſhop of the Apoſtles: Therefore, in this compariſon, the Papiſts muſt be obliged to withdraw their argument; as it is ſaid of Peter, "that before, certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles, but when they were come, he withdrew." And,

This I hope, will ſuffice to ſhew you, that neither in the words of this text, nor elſewhere in Scripture, is any foundation of a ſupreme power committed to Peter: For,

Conſidering Peter really, as to the character which he bore, he was an Apoſtle: This was his only office, as we may find in Scripture, and by which alone, he was known to antiquity, an office, "fraught with ten thouſand good things, comprehenſive of all the privileges of grace;" Chryſ. in Rom. i. Or. 1 To. 8. p. 114. Of whoſe authority, no Biſhop, ſays Bellarmine, can have part; therefore, Peter could have no proper and adequate ſucceſſor to his office, but it did naturally expire with his perſon, as did that of his fellow Apoſtles; for the Apoſtolick office, being temporary, could not be propagated.

Neither can it appear, that the Popes have any title from the perſonal qualities, which if they deſire it, we will grant, gave him a Primacy of worth or merit. But then we know by experience, and the Canon-law confirms it, "that a perſonal privilege, doth follow the perſon, and is extinguiſhed with the perſon," Reg. juris, 7. in Sexto.

Now the perſonal character of Peter is to be conſidered either in reſpect of their qualifications, or endowments, adherent to his conſtitution; as courage, reſolution, activity, forwardneſs in apprehenſion, and affluency of ſpeech. Or, in regard to his perſonal adjuncts, as his name and parentage: Or, more eſpecially, in regard to his perſonal acts and graces; as, his chearful obedience to the call of our Bleſſed Saviour; his faithful confeſſion of Chriſt; his reſolute adherence to him; his ſpecial love to our Lord; and ſingular zeal in his ſervice. Whence,

I infer, that on what part ſoever of this character, they ground the Primacy of Peter, with its rights and prerogatives, and pretend them to be derived to his ſucceſſors, as they ſay, the Popes; they muſt alſo prove the ſame perſonal qualifications, to be deſcended upon each individual Pope. But this can never with the leaſt pretence of reaſon be attempted, when we can produce thoſe that have ſat in the Papal chair, not only apoſtates from the faith of the Bleſſed Jeſus, but that have denied the direction of a good providence in God, by entring a league or contract with Satan, that he ſhould, for the promoting him to the triple crown, have a juſt claim both to his body and ſoul, when nature ſhould be diſſolved, Platina in vit. Sylv. 2. But, If this and ſuch like inſtances drive them to their uſual aſylum, a precarious aſſertion, that Chriſt altered the nature of the Apoſtolick Office in the perſon of Peter; ſo that it ſhould deſcend to the end of the world on his ſucceſſors; I appeal to the Holy Scripture and ancient tradition, which are ſilent in reſpect of any office beſide the Apoſtleſhip conferred on Peter, in the ſame manner, degree, and meaſure with the other Apoſtles. And conſequently ſuch an evaſion is a mere fiction. For,

If ſuch a power, which regarded our ſalvation, had been conveyed to poſterity, Reaſon, and, much more, the Divine Wiſdom would have expreſſed it in ſome authentick record, as a peculiar law, which was to end all diſputes, ſchiſms, and hereſies, by warning all poſterity to yield their ſubmiſſion to that poſitive act: But, no ſuch law appearing, or ever mentioned by the primitive interpreters of the Scripture to have been founded on Peter, we may reaſonably conclude, that the Popiſh aſſertion is wholly arbitrary, imaginary and groundleſs. But,

As my purpoſe is to give their arguments their full weight, they will fly from the Apoſtleſhip, and grant that the Pope is St. Peter's ſucceſſor, not as an Apoſtle, but only as Biſhop of Rome.

And this requires me to examine what orders or offices God hath appointed in the Church, the firſt, ſays Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 28. Eph. iv. 11. is Apoſtles, then Prophets, then Paſtors and Teachers. This is the order in which God ordained them, and to theſe the Apoſtle did afterwards add the office of a Deacon, Acts vi. 3. Which words are thus explained by Chryſoſtome; Tom. 8. p. 115. Apoſtles are rulers, not preſiding over nations and cities, but they, all in common, were entruſted with the whole world; Chryſ. in Eph. iv. 11. whereas Paſtors or Biſhops, do ſit, and are employed in one place. Thus ſays Card. Baronius; An. 58. ſect. 51. it was St. Peter's office not to ſtay in one place, but as much as it was poſſible for one man to travel over the whole world. So that it naturally follows from theſe authorities, that Peter could not be Biſhop of Rome: Becauſe he was not made ſuch, but ordained an Apoſtle by Jeſus Chriſt, but after he was an Apoſtle he could not become a Biſhop; for that would confound the offices, which God had made diſtinct, and been as great an irregularity, as if a Biſhop ſhould be made a Deacon. 2. Becauſe the two offices of Apoſtle and Biſhop are not conſiſtent in one perſon, the object of the former being the inſtruction and government of the whole world; but epiſcopacy is fixed to one particular place and attendance. 3. Becauſe, if it be granted, that he was Biſhop at Rome, it naturally proves this great and good man to be a non-reſident, which whoever practiſed in the primitive Church, would have been ſeverely cenſured, for Athanaſius writes, Apol. 1. You who have read the Scriptures, know how great an offence it is for a Biſhop to forſake his Church. Therefore, let ſuch a perſon be found out that can reſide upon the place, and diſcharge the cure by himſelf: but if he does not comply with this direction, let him be deprived; Concil. Lat. 3. (ſub Alex. iii.) c. 13.

Theſe and the like inconſiſtences confute the Popiſh notion of Peter's epiſcopal office. But we, to avoid ſuch a heap of rubbiſh, and to wipe off Peter, both the imputation of non-reſident, and of his ambition to be tranſlated to a more eminent biſhoprick, which the Papiſt impeaches him with by granting his removal from Antioch, after ſeven years poſſeſſion, to Rome, Theodor. Ep. 86. I ſay, to clear Peter of ſo great a crime in the opinion of the ancients, who P. Leo. Ep. 84. ſaid, If a Biſhop upon any account whatſoever transfer himſelf to another, ſhall looſe them both, I ſhall deny the matter of fact laid to his charge, becauſe it is now here mentioned by that diligent collector of Apoſtolick Hiſtory, Luke, and when Paul writ his Epiſtle to the Romans, he did not once mention Peter among his ſalutations; neither when he writ his Epiſtle to the Philippians, Coloſſians, and the 2d to Timothy from Rome, did he once mention Peter. If we conſult hiſtory, there is none of authority that affirms his preſence at Rome; and the moſt learned Romaniſts reject the account of his journey there. And I never heard of an author of credit that would venture his reputation upon aſſerting that Peter was Biſhop of Rome; ſee Barlow's Pope Suprem. fol. p. 9. ſect. 6. well knowing they would be eaſily detected of a falſhood by that ancient record the apoſtolical conſtitutions, which, amongſt many other moſt ancient traditions of the Church, inform us, that Linus was firſt ordained Biſhop of the Roman Church by St. Paul, but Clemens after the death of Linus by Peter in the ſecond place. But it was not lawful for any Biſhop to conſtitute another in his room to ſucceed him, although it were at the point of death, Syn. Antioc. can. 23. therefore Peter never was Biſhop of Rome. And conſequently the Pope's ſupremacy and infallibillity are utterly overthrown.

Yet, ſuppoſing that Peter was what they contend for, the Biſhop of Rome, and ſupreme head of the Church of Chriſt, and that his univerſal juriſdiction was derivable to poſterity, how will it be proved that this authority is derived upon the Roman Biſhop, who is called the Pope? They won't aſſert that Peter had this authority as Biſhop of Rome, but as the Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; ſo that to prove the Pope inveſted with ſuch a ſupreme authority, they muſt alſo contend for his, the Pope's Apoſtleſhip; which would be too abſurd to advance, and therefore requires no confutation. But,

If he was Biſhop of Rome, it would appear, as in other Churches in the Apoſtolick Age, by whom he was appointed to that charge. Peter did not preſume to fill up the place of Judas, but gave his lot with the reſt of the Apoſtles in the election; if then he had not power in this affair of leſs concern, how can it be ſuppoſed ſo good a man would either attempt it, or the other Apoſtles would connive at his uſurpation, eſtabliſhing an univerſal ſupreme juriſdiction at Rome, or elſewhere, to which the very ſurviving Apoſtle muſt give place? Would not this have been approved or proteſted againſt? The conſequences which muſt follow hence, are ſo deſtructive of Papal ſupremacy, that Bellarmine, at all adventure declares upon his own fancy, that God did command St. Peter to fix his ſee at Rome, iv. 4. but even this, could it be proved, as it can't; would not be able to prove the legality of the ſucceeding Biſhops to this time. They won't be ſo barefaced to ſay, that God hath by his poſitive command ordained every Pope to the ſee of Rome; for their own hiſtory declares the contrary.

We know that the Apoſtles did appoint Biſhops or Paſtors by their own right, as being the inſpired rulers of the Church of Chriſt throughout the world. But when God was pleaſed to deprive the Church of thoſe guides, every ſmall Church had a voice in the choice of its Paſtor; and it became a law that no Biſhop ſhould be impoſed on any Church againſt their will; Grat. diſt. 61. c. 13. P. Celeſt. 1. Ep. 2. i. e. not without the conſent of the Clergy and people, and his own order. And thus we read that the Biſhop of Rome was anciently elected, as uſually other particular Biſhops were, in thoſe times, by the Clergy and people of Rome only. But if ſuch an election had been for an univerſal Biſhop, who was to be entruſted with the welfare of all Chriſtians, and to be advanced above all Paſtors, it ſhould have been executed by the deputies of all the Clergy and people of the whole world, and not be left to a particular ſtate, whoſe ambition or partiality would naturally have more regard to their own private intereſt, than the univerſal benefit which is pretended to attend ſuch an election. We have an inſtance of this in the early days of Chriſtianity, when Pope Damaſus and Urſinus burned, ſays the hiſtorian, Am. Marcel. lib. 27. above human meaſure with deſire to ſnatch the epiſcopal ſee, there were 130 perſons kill'd in the very Church in one day; becauſe the wealth and pomp of the place did naturally provoke ambition; Sozom. 6. 23. ſo that hence it appears, the rich, or cunning-man, that was able to bribe or pleaſe the multitude, was, according to the Popiſh doctrine, the only fit perſon to be exalted to the ſovereignty of the Church.

This affair ſtill grew worſe; for from ſuch beginnings it grew into cuſtom for ambitious men; though baſe, and ignoble, to obtain the Papacy by corruption, and buying of ſuffrages, and without any ſuffrages of the Clergy or people; Platina in Sylveſt. & Clem. 2, &c. which drew that remarkable reflection from Bernard, de Conſid. 4 2. the whole buſineſs of making a Pope is managed by gifts, bribery and corruption; So that the Emperor thought it full time to interpoſe his power, thinking that by enacting, that no election to the ſee of Rome, ſhould thenceforward, without his approbation, be invalid; Platina in Pelag. 2. might deliver the ſtate of his imperial city from the oppreſſions of popular factions and Simonaical intruſions. Afterwards, when the eccleſiaſtic ſtate grew too great for the Emperor, whoſe power was almoſt quite defaced by rebellions or foreign invaſions, theſe Popes aſpiring to univerſal monarchy, upon the ruins of the Roman empire, formed a new ſcheme of election; they firſt elected or ordain'd a new ſet of officers (Cardinals) in the Church, who ſhould immediately have their dependance on themſelves, and then did appropriate the election of the Pope to theſe very Cardinals; Grat. diſt. 23. c. 1. Plat. in Nich. 2. who retain their power to this very day without any Divine Appointment: And therefore it has been ſeen, that general councils, Conſtance, Piſa, Baſil. have, notwithſtanding their pretence, aſſumed the choice to themſelves, which could not be done, was the other's power of Divine Right.

What I infer from hence is barely this, that admitting all the power they aſcribe to Peter, and derivable to his ſucceſſors, if ſuch there be, they have this ſtill to prove that this Power is according to God's inſtitution and intent, immutable and indefectible, which is impoſſible to be found in ſuch a change, revolutions, defaults and incapacities, obſtructions and forfeitures, which plainly appears in this ſhort account of a Pope's election, and would ſtill be much more conſpicuous, did time admit me to ſhew the time when there have been no Biſhops at Rome, or ſuch as were intruded by violence, when they have been notorious Hereticks, Sorcerers and Atheiſts; or whoſe elections were attended with ſuch circumſtances as made 'em uncanonical, and conſequently, according to their own principles, Null. And thus I have largely proved how falſely the church of Rome have wreſted this text of Matthew from the true to a bad ſenſe, for the ſake of ſupporting a moſt unreaſonable and unſupportable doctrine, but without which, their whole Hierarchy falls to the ground.

Therefore I ſhall conclude by ſumming up, applying and confirming the whole from the expreſs words of Scripture.

To us, there is one Lord, one Law-giver, one only Potentate, and one King, who is able to ſave and deſtroy, and of whoſe kingdom there can be no end. This is that Arch-Paſtor, or great ſhepherd of the ſheep, of whom God promiſed, "I will ſet up one ſhepherd over 'em, and he ſhall feed the ſheep. So that there ſhall be one fold under Chriſt their only ſhepherd, who has given his life for the ſheep, and thereby is made by the Father the head of the univerſal Church, and the rock of our ſalvation, againſt which the gates of Hell cannot prevail."

Ver. 20. Then charged he his diſciples that they ſhould tell no man that he was Jeſus the Chriſt.] Becauſe the Jews having by their misfortunes and eagerneſs after worldly glory, conceiv'd wrong ideas of the Meſſiah, whom now they expected to come, and deliver them from the power of the Romans, to whom they were tributary, he was afraid, ſhould they take it in their heads to arm themſelves and proclaim him their king, that he and his Apoſtles ſhould be accuſed of being movers of ſedition, and ſo his miniſtry might prove of little, or none effect.

Ver 21.—— Jeſus began to ſhew unto his diſciples, how that he muſt go unto Jeruſalem, and ſuffer many things, &c.] This he ſaid to inform his diſciples why he charged them to keep his title ſecret, and to wean them from theſe falſe ideas they had been inſtructed in, by the Scribes concerning the Meſſiah, whom he ſhews was not to be a temporal potentate; nor a bloody warrior to deliver his people out of the hands of earthly enemies, but that he was come to deliver them, and all mankind from Satan, the great enemy of the ſoul, who had tempted Eve to ſin, in whom her whole poſterity were made enemies with God, till a reconciliation could be wrought by his Son, the promiſed Meſſiah, whom the Prophets foretold ſhould ſuffer many things from the Jewiſh ſtate, and be killed by them, but ſhould at laſt riſe again from the bowels of the earth, and reign with great power and glory for ever, not on earth but in Heaven, where are many manſions provided for thoſe that believe his word and practice his commands.

Ver. 22. Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far from thee, Lord, this ſhall not be unto thee.] This anſwer plainly evinceth that Peter with all his faith, did not as yet believe in a poor ſuffering Meſſiah, he had not as yet overcome the prejudice of education, which taught him averſe notions of a powerful and warlike Meſſiah. And when he ſays, be it far from thee, Lord, it plainly ſhews, that he was ready, as he afterwards did, to deny a ſuffering Maſter. Therefore,

Ver. 23. He turned and ſaid unto Peter, get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me, for thou ſavonreſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men.] When Chriſt heard what Peter ſaid, and how he was ſtill attacked to the opinion of the ſcribes, he turned from him, to ſhew his averſion thereto, and told him that he was not only wrong in his own ſentiments, but devil-like endeavoured to perſuade him alſo to fall into the ſame condemnation, by diſregarding the promiſes made by the Lord our God, and embracing the vain and falſe inventions of ſinful men.

Ver. 28. —— There be ſome.] ſee John xxi. 22.

CHAP. XVII.

1 The transfiguration of Chriſt. 14 He healeth the lunatick, 22 foretelleth his own paſſion, 24 and payeth tribute.

AND after ſix days, Jeſus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart,

2 And was tranſfigured before them, and his face did ſhine as the ſun, and his raiment was white as the light.

3 And behold, there appeared unto them Moſes and Elias talking with him.

4 Then anſwered Peter, and ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias.

5 While he yet ſpake, behold a bright cloud overſhadowed them: and behold, a voice out of the cloud, which ſaid, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; hear ye him.

6 And when the diſciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were ſore afraid.

7 And Jeſus came and touched them, and ſaid, Ariſe, and be not afraid.

8 And when they had lift up their eyes, they ſaw no man ſave Jeſus only.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, Jeſus charged them, ſaying, Tell the viſion to no man, until the Son of man be riſen again from the dead.

10 And his diſciples aſked him, ſaying, Why then ſay the ſcribes, that Elias muſt firſt come?

11 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Elias truly ſhall firſt come, and reſtore all things:

12 But I ſay unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatſoever they liſted: like-wiſe ſhall alſo the Son of man ſuffer of them.

13 Then the diſciples underſtood that he ſpake unto them of John the Baptiſt.

14 ¶ And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man kneeling down to him, and ſaying,

15 Lord, have mercy on my ſon, for he is lunatick, and ſore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.

16 And I brought him to thy diſciples, and they could not cure him.

17 Then Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, O faithleſs and perverſe generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? bring him hither to me.

18 And Jeſus rebuked the devil, and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour.

19 Then came the diſciples to Jeſus apart, and ſaid, Why could not we caſt him out?

20 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Becauſe of your unbelief: for verily I ſay unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove; and nothing ſhall be impoſſible unto you.

21 Howbeit this kind goeth not out, but by prayer and faſting.

22 ¶ And while they abode in Galilee, Jeſus ſaid unto them, The Son of man ſhall be betrayed into the hands of men:

23 And they ſhall kill him, and the third day he ſhall be raiſed again: and they were exceeding ſorry.

24 ¶ And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute-money, came to Peter, and ſaid, Doth not your maſter pay tribute?

25 He ſaith, Yes. And when he was come into the houſe, Jeſus prevented him, ſaying, What thinkeſt thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take cuſtom or tribute? of their own children, or of ſtrangers?

26 Peter ſaith unto him, Of ſtrangers. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Then are the children free.

27 Notwithſtanding, leſt we ſhould offend them, go thou to the ſea, and caſt an hook, and take up the fiſh that firſt cometh up: and when thou haſt opened his mouth, thou ſhalt find a piece of money: that take, and give unto them for me and thee.

Ver. 1. After ſix days.] See Luke ix. 28.

Ver 2. Was transfigured.] i. e. His countenance and his clothes changed their colour, from what was natural, to ſuch a brightneſs as was never before ſeen upon Earth. See Mark ix. 2. and Luke ix. 29.

This wonderful change is well expreſſed by our Evangeliſt immediately following, who adds, "that his face did ſhine as the ſun, and his raiment was as white as the light." That is to ſay, there was this glorious appearance in his aſpect and clothes. A late ludicrous author, who endeavoured to burleſque all the miracles of our Saviour pretends, that there was neither reaſon nor uſe in this miracle, 1 Diſc. p. 42. But if he had impartially conſulted the context, he would ſoon have been convicted of his error. We have juſt read how, ch. xvi. 16, 18. that after their confeſſion of Jeſus being the Chriſt, the Son of the living God, Jeſus from that time forth began to ſhew his diſciples, how he was to ſuffer many things of the Jews, who at laſt put him to death; and that he ſhould riſe again from the dead, ver. 21. which I have remarked to be miſunderſtood by Peter, ver. 23, 24. After which Jeſus preaches to his diſciples the diſcouraging doctrines of ſelf-denial, of taking up the croſs and following him. So that their ſpirits ſeem'd ſo dejected, that Chriſt found it neceſſary to raiſe again their courage, and revive their faith and truſt in him in a powerful manner. And accordingly after ſix days trial, he took three of his principal Apoſtles with him, among whom was Peter, who ſeemed to be the moſt diſſatisfied, Matt. xvi. 23, 24. and not only convinced them by a voice from Heaven, that he was the true Son of God, and was to be heard, or ſubmitted to and obeyed, but gave them a miraculous ſpecimen of his future glory, which he knew might ballance his late melancholy account, they had received, of his approaching ſufferings and death. Tho' at the ſame time it was wiſely provided, that they ſhould hear his former account confirmed by Moſes and Elias, who talked with him of his deceaſe.

Upon hearing of which wonderful interlocution, the diſciples appear to renew their firſt zeal for their maſter, for Peter began preſently in his forward way, with this acknowledgement and requeſt; "Lord it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, one for Moſes, and one for Elias," ver. 4. ſuch a ſpeech ſeems to be the reſult of freſh ſpirit reaſſumed from the miracle, and the ſight of his glorified company, and conſequently the uſe of this miraculous appearance or transfiguration, was the ſupport of his diſponding diſciples, beſide the atteſtation given to Jeſus by the miniſtry of Moſes and Elias, and by God himſelf ſpeaking from the higheſt heaven. It was likewiſe emblamatical of the glorious ſtate of Chriſt, and indeed of all good and vertuous Chriſtians, after his and their reſurrection.

Ver. 4. —— One for Moſes and one for Elias.] It has been asked by the foreſaid author, whether Moſes and Elias appeared in their proper perſons? or, were mere apparitions? I anſwer, that according to the account thereof by Luke, it is moſt reaſonable to ſuppoſe they appeared in their proper perſons, for, behold there talked with him two men, which were Moſes and Elias, Luke ix. 30.

It has been enquired, why this miracle was not wrought before the multitude? Becauſe it was not deſigned for their uſe. And therefore when they were deſcending from the mountain, we read, that Jeſus forbade the diſciples to ſhew that viſion to any man till after his reſurrection, ver. 9. For, before, that moſt illuſtrious inſtance of his power, this glorification of him, which was not very ſuitable to his mean outward worldly circumſtances, would ſcarce have been credited by the Jews: but after his reſurrection, that great proof of his authority, when he was actually to enter into that glorious eſtate herein typified, the Moſaic teſtimony of three competent witneſſes would be received, with greater conviction.

The remainder of this chapter will be annotated in Mark ix. and Luke ix.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Chriſt warneth his diſciples to be humble and harmleſs: 7 To avoid offences, and not to deſpiſe the little ones: 15 Teacheth how we are to deal with our brethren, when they offend us: 21 And how oft to forgive them. 23 Which he ſetteth forth by a parable of the king, that took account of his ſervants, 32 And puniſhed him, who ſhewed no mercy on his fellow.

AT the ſame time came the diſciples unto Jeſus, ſaying, Who is the greateſt in the kingdom of heaven?

2 And Jeſus called a little child unto him, and ſet him in the midſt of them,

3 And ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye ſhall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4 Whoſoever therefore ſhall humble himſelf as this little child, the ſame is greateſt in the kingdom of heaven.

5 And whoſo ſhall receive one ſuch little child in my name, receiveth me.

6 But whoſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the ſea.

7 ¶ Wo unto the world becauſe of offences: for it muſt needs be that offences come: but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh.

8 Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and caſt them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet, to be caſt into everlaſting fire.

9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be caſt into hell-fire.

10 Take heed that ye deſpiſe not one of theſe little ones; for I ſay unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

11 For the Son of man is come to ſave that which was loſt.

12 How think ye? if a man have an hundred ſheep, and one of them be gone aſtray, doth not he leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and ſeeketh that which is gone aſtray?

13 And if ſo be that he find it, Verily I ſay unto you, he rejoiceth more of that ſheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not aſtray.

14 Even ſo it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh.

15 ¶ Moreover, if thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he ſhall hear thee, thou haſt gained thy brother.

16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word may be eſtabliſhed.

17 And if he ſhall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a publican.

18 Verily I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven.

19 Again I ſay unto you, that if two of you ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they ſhall aſk, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them.

21 ¶ Then came Peter to him, and ſaid, Lord, how oft ſhall my brother ſin againſt me, and I forgive him? till ſeven times?

22 Jeſus ſaith unto him, I ſay not unto thee, Until ſeven times: but, until ſeventy times ſeven.

23 ¶ Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king which would take account of his ſervants.

24 And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him which owed him ten thouſand talents.

25 But foraſmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be ſold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made.

26 The ſervant therefore fell down and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

27 Then the lord of that ſervant was moved with compaſſion, and looſed him, and forgave him the debt.

28 But the ſame ſervant went out, and found one of his fellow-ſervants, which owed him an hundred pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, ſaying, Pay me that thou oweſt.

29 And his fellow-ſervant fell down at his feet, and beſought him, ſaying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

30 And he would not: but went and caſt him into priſon, till he ſhould pay the debt.

31 So when his fellow-ſervants ſaw what was done, they were very ſorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done.

32 Then his lord, after that he had called him, ſaid unto him, O thou wicked ſervant, I forgave thee all that debt, becauſe thou deſiredſt me:

33 Shouldſt not thou alſo have had compaſſion on thy fellow-ſervant, even as I had pity on thee?

34 And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormenters, till he ſhould pay all that was due unto him.

35 So likewiſe ſhall my heavenly Father do alſo unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their treſpaſſes.

Ver. 1. —— Who is the greateſt in the kingdom of heaven?] We have read in the concluſion of the foregoing chapter, that Chriſt was come with his Apoſtles to Capernaum, ver. 24 But in the way, as they travelled to that city, they reaſoned and diſputed among themſelves, who of them ſhould be greateſt in the expected kingdom of the Meſſiah, Mark ix. 33. Wherefore, after they were come hither, and were in the houſe, Jeſus, who knew their thoughts, aſked them, what it was they diſputed about among themſelves, in the way, as they journeyed? ibid.

This ſo unexpected a queſtion, ſo openly rebuking their ambition, and vain affectation of ſuperiority daſhed them ſo much, that they held their peace, for the preſent; Mark ix. 34. But, as Matthew here obſerves, they were reſtleſs after dominion, and upon the firſt occaſion propounds the ſame queſtion, which they had canvaſſed on the way, in ſuch general terms, as it might not ſeem to be done with a deſign to reſtrain, or apply it to themſelves, ſaying; Who ſhall be the greateſt in the kingdom of heaven? or, in the kingdom of the Meſſiah? For that was the kingdom they meant, in which, notwithſtanding, they expected to find different degrees of honorary employments, and offices of truſt, credit and profit alſo, as they underſtood there were in earthly kingdoms. This is the reaſonable ground of the queſtion; but how ſuch a thing firſt began to be diſputed among them, is not ſo eaſy to determine: Yet the moſt natural ſuppoſition, is, that as our Lord had ſignalized, three of his diſciples above the reſt, to be eye-witneſſes of his glorious tranſfiguration in the mount, ch. xvii. 1, 2. Such a diſtinction might raiſe ſome emulation in the reſt, and might be fomented by the craft of Judas, whoſe view was his profit.

Ver. 3. —— Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye ſhall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.] Where it ought to be obſerved, that Chriſt does not reprove his diſciples for calling his kingdom, the kingdom of heaven, as it really is; this he admits, and therefore paſſes it in ſilence, and then agrues from that conceſſion: Ye ſay my kingdom is of Heaven, ye ſay well; but there can none enter into the kingdom of Heaven, who are either proud, ambitious, hateful, avaricious, or any ways hankering after the things of this world; therefore if ye expect to enter into my kingdom of Heaven, ye muſt alſo be converted from your ambitious thoughts of gaining ſuperiority over one another, and demean yourſelves in humility, ſimplicity, fear, innocency, docility, &c. Matt. ii. 25. Pſ. xiii. 1, 2. like as becometh little children to their elders and betters; for I ſay unto you once for all, if any man [among you] deſire to be firſt, the ſame ſhall be laſt of all, Mark ix. 39. See below, the notes on ver. 5.

From the premiſes it appears, that the Apoſtles, by their queſtion in ver. 1. were not as yet clear of the Phariſaical doctrine of the Meſſiah's temporal kingdom; and our Saviour's reply thereto, ver. 3. plainly forbids the expectation of any ſuch earthly kingdom, and to fix our hearts only upon that ſtate of happineſs, provided for the virtuous and good livers in the world to come.

Ver. 5. —— One ſuch little child.] i. e. Any perſon that, I have ſaid, ſhall humble himſelf for my ſake like a little child, ſee ver. 3. in the notes. For, here we are to underſtand a true Chriſtian, that ſhall have laid aſide all worldly pride, and for this cauſe is become abject in the ſight of the world, who is little in his own eyes, not highly conceited in himſelf, and of his own parts, attainments or worth; but poor in ſpirit, humble in heart, and low in his own thoughts, even ſuch a one as a little towardly and well-bred child repreſents.

Ver. 6. Whoſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones, &c.] Now, after that Chriſt had commended to his diſciples, humility and ſelf-denial in themſelves, and gentleneſs and tenderneſs in their carriage towards their brethren, how little or low ſoever they might be, or be thought by them to be; he in the text ſets forth the danger they would incur, if they ſhould give a juſt offence to any, even the very loweſt rank of believers, ſo as that ſuch an offence ſhould tend to cauſe the young or weak in faith to turn aſide, from the way of truth. Our Lord enforces this doctrine to the end of the 10th verſe.

Ver. 7. —— It muſt needs be that offences come.] They are inevitable by reaſon of the malice, weakneſs, inconſtancy, and other vices of men; and, by reaſon of God's providence, which ſuffereth them either for judgment or trial; and yet man's error ſhall not be thereby excuſable, becauſe he commits the evil with pleaſure, and wilfully.

Ver. 8. — Cut them off.] See Annotations upon Matt. v. 29.

Ver. 9. — Hell-fire.] See Annot. on Matt. v. 22.

Ver. 10. Take heed.] He urgeth the cauſe of offences, viz. ſelf-pride, and contempt of inferiors.

— In Heaven their Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven.] As if he had ſaid, have a care, leſt by deſpiſing theſe, in your eyes, little ones; but in God's eye great and precious ones, ye give occaſion to their Guardian-Angels, who are always attending on God, to complain to him of the injury ye do to them, and thereby draw down the diſpleaſure of God upon your ſelves.

—— Angel.] This word is borrowed from the Greek Ἄγγελος, which ſignifies a meſſenger, and anſwers to the Hebrew Maleac. Nothing is more frequent in Scripture than the miſſions, and apparitions of good and bad Angels. God ſent them to declare his will, and to correct, teach, and reprove, as well as to comfort. God gave the law to Moſes, and appeared to the old Patriarchs by the mediation of Angels, Acts vii. 30, 35. Gal. iii. 19. Heb. xiii. 2.

Before the captivity of Babylon, the Hebrews knew not the name of any Angel, at leaſt they did not record them. The Talmudiſts ſay, that they brought their preſent names from Babylon. Tobit is the firſt who has called an Angel by a proper name, that was Raphael, who conducted Tobias into Media, Tobit iii. 17. xi. 14. Sometime after Tobit, Daniel records the names of Michael, and Gabriel; Dan. x. 21. viii. 16. ix. 21. The ſecond book of Eſdras ſpeaks of an Angel called Uriel, 2 Eſd. iv. 36. Hence the Jewiſh cabaliſts have taken the liberty to invent names for the Angels, who, they ſay, were preceptors to the Patriarchs. Thus,

	1	Adam		1	Raziel
	2	Shem		2	Jephiel
	3	Abraham		3	Zedekiel
	4	Iſaac		4	Raphael
To	5	Jacob	They aſſign the Angel	5	Seliel
	6	Joſeph		6	Gabriel
	7	Moſes		7	Metatron or Metator
	8	Elias		8	Maluſhiel
	9	David		9	Cerviel

There are diſputes concerning the time when Angels were created; Origen, Bede, Auſtin and ſome others ſuppoſe, that they were created at the ſame time as the Heavens were made, and that Moſes included them under this name, Gen. i. 1. Baſil, Naziazen, and Ambroſe, &c. conjecture, that Moſes intended to repreſent them under the name of light, created on the firſt day; and Hillary, Jerom and others, aſſert, that they were created before the ſenſible world; agreeable to that of Job, where waſt thou when I laid the foundations of the earth, — and all the ſons of God ſhouted for joy? Job xxxviii. 4, 7 The Hebrews generally imagine, that God created them upon the ſecond day of the world, tho' we find in Pereſchith, Rabba, ſect. viii. p. 10. that ſome of them fix their creation on the firſt day. But our Dr. Hyde carries their creation further back a long time before the world; for whoſe reaſons you may conſult his book, de Relig. vet. Perſar. c. 3. p. 82.

As to their manner of exiſtence, the greateſt numbers of the fathers have aſſerted, that they are purely ſpiritual, which opinion is moſt generally received at this time; ſee Calmet's Diſſertation on Angels, before his Comment upon Luke.

The office of Angels is the next thing to be noted; and indeed what immediately regards our preſent endeavours of explaining the text before us. I ſay then, ſome have appropriated Angels to empires, nations, provinces, cities and particular perſons.

Michael is acknowledged to be the protector of the people of Iſrael: Michael your prince, ſaith the Angel Gabriel, ſpeaking to the Prophet Daniel, ch. x. 21. The ſame Angel Gabriel, according to the generality of interpreters, ſpeaks of the Angel who was protector of Perſia, when he ſays, that the prince of the kingdom of Perſia, withſtood him one and twenty days. Luke tells us, that a man of Macedonia appeared to Paul in the night, and ſaid to him, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," which is commonly underſtood of the Angel, who invited him to come and preach Jeſus Chriſt in the province, which was committed to his care. Laſtly, the Septuagint in Deuteronomy ſay, that God had ſet the bounds of the people according to the number of the Angels of Iſrael. So the Septuagint tranſlation reads us. But our Engliſh tranſlators think they read it more correctly by the children of Iſrael. See Deut. xxxii. 8. which by the fathers and Rabbins is ſuppoſed to mean the government of each particular country and nation, wherewith God had intruſted his Angels.

As to the Angel-guardians, they are as here, clearly deſcribed, in the Old Teſtament. Jacob ſpeaks of the Angel who had been his conſtant guide, in all his journeys, and delivered him out of all dangers, Gen. xlviii. 16. The Pſalmiſt in ſeveral places mentions Angels, as the protectors of the righteous, Pſ. xxxiii. 8. and xc. 11. according to the Vulg. And this was the common opinion of the Jews in our Saviour's time. When Peter being ſet at liberty came from priſon to the houſe, and knocked at the door, where the reſt of the diſciples were aſſembled; they that were within thought it had been his Angel, and not he; Acts xii. 15. So, as to the text before us, the fathers with one voice agree, that it ſpeaks of a Guardian-Angel, ſee alſo Heb. i. 14.

The Jews and very Heathens believed, that particular Angels were commiſſioned to attend us, and had the care of our conduct and protection. Heſiod, one of the moſt ancient Greek Poets ſays, in his aper. & dieſ. l. 1. v. 121. that there are good Angels upon earth, ſent by Jupiter for the protection of mankind, and to obſerve the good and evil which they practiſe, Plato in leg. l. x. ſays, that every one of us has two dæmons, or two genii, one inclining us to evil, and the other directing us to what is good. From whence you may gather the opinion of the Heathen world in reſpect to Angels.

As to the different degrees of Angels, and their exact number, as I believe, no certainty can be learned from Sacred Writ. I ſhan't abuſe my reader with the chimerical accounts of ſpeculative authors. And,

I ſhall add by way of caution, That no part of the premiſes can be any foundation for that falſe-worſhip given by ſome to Angels. For tho' Angels may be tutelary and guardian to places and people, it is by Divine Appointment; they are no more than meſſengers, or at the beſt, miniſters of God's pleaſure, and not executors of our will. What they do, is not their own will, nor man's will, but purely the will of God. And therefore is by no means to be feared, nor otherwiſe to be regarded by men, than creatures executing the will of their Creator upon ſome inferior being.

——Behold the face of my father which is in Heaven.] i. e. The Angels, who aſſiſt in the preſence of God, my Heavenly Father, and are, as it were, his houſhold and ordinary ſervants: For that is the meaning of ſeeing the face of a king; 1 Kings x. 8.

Ver. 11. For the ſon of man is come to ſave that which was loſt.] Diodati ſays, that Chriſt in theſe words renders another reaſon why thoſe poor believers ought to be honoured; becauſe God had made them partakers of his glorious ſalvation; Jam. ii. 5. Chriſt here ſhews, as he elſewhere plainly teſtifies, that he came to redeem ſinners, that it is not the whole, but the ſick that has need of a phyſician; and that he came not to call the righteous but ſinners to repentance. If there had been no ſin there had been no need of a Saviour. This is plain from the context in the following verſes by the example of the ſtray ſheep, ver. 12, 13, 14.

Ver. 15. Moreover, if thy brother treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone.] Our Bleſſed Lord having ſufficiently caution'd his diſciples againſt giving offence to the weaker ones in his flock, leſt ſuch ſhould preſume, under ſuch a protection, to injure others of the ſociety; and the injured, for fear of giving offence, ſhould let them go on therein to their own hurt, without giving them reproof for the ſame, he now proceeds to inſtruct them alſo after what manner, in ſuch a caſe the injured perſon ſhall deal with the injurer; to bring him to a ſenſe of the evil, which he hath done, that he may be recovered, and may make ſatiſfaction, and yet at the ſame time, may preſerve his reputation, and be brought to ſuch a ſenſe of that perſon's integrity and good nature, whom he has injured, as to hearken the more willingly unto him, and be perſuaded by him.

This was an enforcement of the Divine Law, given by the ſervant Moſes to the Hebrews, with whom Chriſt had to deal more particularly; for we read in Levit. xix. 17. "Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart;" and yet, "Thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour," and not ſuffer ſin to lie unreproved upon him.

——Treſpaſs againſt thee.] By perſonal offence, or by giving a ſcandal privately to thee; Luke xvii. 3.

——If he ſhall hear thee.] Or, thy juſt complaints, and confeſs his fault and amend it, giving glory to God, and promiſing repentance and converſion.

——Thou haſt gained thy brother.] i. e. Thou haſt brought him again to duty, and haſt inclined him to be a good brother to thee; James v. 20. But if thou faileſt in this method of correction. Then

Ver. 16.—Take with thee one or two more.] Agreeable to that law in Deut. xvii 6. and xix. 15 That the reproof may be of greater weight with the offender, when he ſees the perſon injured ſeconded with theſe witneſſes; and alſo becauſe that, if the offender be ſtubborn or contumacious, the relation, which the next verſe ſays, muſt be made thereof to the Church, may be the better teſtified.

Ver. 17.—Tell it unto the Church.] i. e. The aſſembly of thoſe that have the government of that part of the Chriſtian Church in their hands, whereunto the offender may belong, and whoſe buſineſs it is to provide for the order, peace and diſcipline thereof; 1 Cor. v. , 4. and 2 Cor. ii. 6. And this Chriſt ſpake agreeable to the then cuſtom of the Jews, who had their particular aſſemblies or conſiſtories for the inſpection and reforming of behaviour and manners.

——As an heathen man and a publican.] Or, as a prophane man, who, becauſe of his rebellion againſt God and hardneſs of heart, ought to be forbidden the communion of believers, as publicans and heathens were amongſt the Jews; ſee Matt. v. 46. Luke xv. 2.

——An heathen man.] See Gentile in the notes on ch. xii. 21.

——A publican.] To conceive right apprehenſions of this verſe, it muſt be neceſſary to know who a publican was in the days of Chriſt upon earth. The word publican is a derivative of the Latin publicanus, and properly ſignifies a farmer, or receiver of publick money, an officer of the revenue, a man employed in collecting ſuch impoſitions as are hateful to the people. But,

It is to be obſerved, that this office is of a Roman original, and that there were two ſorts of farmers amongſt the ancient Romans: Some were general farmers, who in every province had their deputies and under-farmers, who collected the revenues, and other profits of the empire, of which they gave account to the emperor, and conſequently were men of great conſideration in the government, ſo that Tully informs us, that amongſt this rank of men, were to be found the flower of the Roman knights, the ornament of the city; and the ſtrength of the commonwealth; Cic. orat. pro Planc. But the deputies, the under-farmers, the commiſſioners, the publicans of the lower order were looked upon as ſo many thieves and pick-pockets. So that Theocritus being asked, which he thought was the moſt cruel of all beaſts, ſaid, "that the bear and the lion excelled all the beaſts of the wilderneſs in cruelty; but that in the city, the publican and paraſite were the moſt cruel. So

Amongſt the Jews nothing was, or could be more odious than the name of a publican. For, as this nation in a ſpecial manner valued themſelves upon their freedom; John viii. 33. they could not, without the greateſt reluctancy, ſee the publicans in their country, rigorouſly exacting thoſe tributes and impoſitions that were laid on them by the Romans: And they looked upon ſuch of their own countrymen, that accepted of this employ from the Roman-governors, as no better than Heathens. 'Tis even ſaid, that they would not allow them to come into their temple, or ſynagogues, nor admit them to partake of their publick prayers, or of their offices of judicature, or even to allow them to give teſtimony in a cauſe before a court of juſtice; ſee Grotius on this place, and Lightfoot Hor. Heb. in Matt. And we are aſſured, that they would not except of their preſents at the temple, no more than they would of price of proſtitution, or of blood, or of any other unclean or unlawful thing.

Ver. 18. — Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven, &c.] See the Annotations on John xx. 23. And obſerve here, that by the terms of binding and looſing on earth is ſignified, that what judgment the Church of Chriſt, i. e. the miniſters and governors of the Church, proceeding in knowledge, uprightneſs and wiſdom, according to the duty of their office, (Matt. xvi. 19.) ſhould give by the direction and guidance of the Holy Spirit, ſhould be ratified and confirmed by God; and the party accordingly ſtand acquitted or condemned in the ſight of God. And then,

That neither the Church might be diſcouraged from giving judgment, nor offenders emboldened to contemn the righteous impartial judgment given, on account of the ſmall number of the Church, before whom they are brought, and from whom they have received ſentence, he adds, that extraordinary promiſe in the next verſe, "If two of you [my diſciples, or who ſhall ſucceed you in the government of my Church to the end of the world] ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing they [who are offended] ſhall ask [you to judge in my name, let the offender know, that he is not to deſpiſe your judgment, becauſe you on earth, are but few in number, for your judgment ſhall be ratified, and] it ſhall be done and executed for them of my father which is in Heaven." Becauſe, as he rightly ſubjoins

Ver. 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them.] The aſſembly which take upon them to judge others, muſt aſſemble by the authority and commiſſion, and calling upon Chriſt through faith; and then Chriſt will aſſiſt them with his grace and ſpirit.

Ver. 22.———Until ſeventy times ſeven.] This is a phraſe of ſpeech, importing, that there ſhould be no end of our forgiving an offending brother; in caſe he turns and hearkens to our complaints; ſee ver. 15. How cruel then, unſcriptural and antichriſtian, is that abominable court of the inquiſition, which in Popiſh countries, is inexecrable, and will never pardon the third offence, which is always puniſhed with fire and faggot.

This merciful temper of forgiving our brother, as often as he ſhall repent of his miſdeed, is further, and largely exemplified and enforced in the following parable, which is ſo obvious, as in my opinion, needs no explication, and reaches to the 35th verſe.

Ver. 35. So likewiſe ſhall my heavenly father do alſo unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their treſpaſſes.] This is by way of application of the foregoing parable to our practiſe. It is not enough to ſee and approve of the deeds of others, and blame the evil; but we muſt flee from the evil and learn to do well. We, if any have offended us, and are ſorry for it, muſt act like unto this good king, mentioned above, at ver. 23. We muſt be moved with compaſſion, and forgive him; ver. 27. even as we deſire to have our treſpaſſes forgiven by our heavenly father. For if we are not merciful to one another, how can we expect to find mercy from God, whom we offend every day? Therefore this text imports, that we muſt be merciful, even as our father which is in Heaven is merciful.

CHAP. XIX.

2 Chriſt healeth the ſick: 3 anſwereth the Phariſees concerning divorcement: 10 ſheweth when marriage is neceſſary: 13 receiveth little children: 16 inſtructeth the young man how to attain eternal life, 20 and how to be perfect: 23 telleth his diſciples how hard it is for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. 27 and promiſeth reward to theſe that forſake any thing, to follow him.

AND it came to paſs, that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe ſayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coaſts of Judea, beyond Jordan:

2 And great multitudes followed him, and he healed them there.

3 ¶ The Phariſees alſo came unto him, tempting him, and ſaying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cauſe?

4 And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female?

5 And ſaid, For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother, and ſhall cleave to his wife: and they twain ſhall be one fleſh.

6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one fleſh. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put aſunder.

7 They ſay unto him, Why did Moſes then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

8 He ſaith unto them, Moſes, becauſe of the hardneſs of your hearts, ſuffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not ſo.

9 And I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and ſhall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoſo marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery.

10 ¶ His diſciples ſay unto him, If the caſe of the man be ſo with his wife, it is not good to marry.

11 But he ſaid unto them, All men cannot receive this ſaying, ſave they to whom it is given.

12 For there are ſome eunuchs, which were ſo born from their mothers womb: and there are ſome eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themſelves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven ſake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

13 ¶ Then were there brought unto him little children, that he ſhould put his hands on them, and pray: and the diſciples rebuked them.

14 But Jeſus ſaid, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of ſuch is the kingdom of heaven.

15 And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.

16 ¶ And behold, one came and ſaid unto him, Good Maſter, what good thing ſhall I do that I may have eternal life?

17 And he ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

18 He ſaith unto him, Which? Jeſus ſaid, Thou ſhalt do no murder, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs, 19 Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf.

20 The young man ſaith unto him, All theſe things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?

21 Jeſus ſaid unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and ſell that thou haſt, and give to the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven: and come and follow me.

22 But when the young man heard that ſaying, he went away ſorrowful: for he had great poſſeſſions.

23 ¶ Then ſaid Jeſus unto his diſciples, Verily I ſay unto you, that a rich man ſhall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24 And again I ſay unto you, It is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25 When his diſciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, ſaying, Who then can be ſaved?

26 But Jeſus beheld them, and ſaid unto them, With men this is impoſſible, but with God all things are poſſible.

27 ¶ Then anſwered Peter, and ſaid unto him, Behold, we have forſaken all and followed thee; what ſhall we have therefore?

28 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

29 And every one that hath forſaken houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my names ſake, ſhall receive an hundred fold, and ſhall inherit everlaſting life.

30 But many that are firſt ſhall be laſt; and the laſt ſhall be firſt.

Ver. 2. — He healed them.] i. e. Thoſe that were ſick and impotent amongſt the multitude, ſee Matt. xii. 15.

Ver. 3. The Phariſees alſo came unto him tempting him.] To catch or calumniate him, either for being contrary to Moſes and the law of God, if he had abſolutely reproved divorces; or for favouring and authorizing laſciviouſneſs, diſloyalty, and inconſtancy of men, in caſe he ſhould approve of them.

—— Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cauſe?] Chriſt knowing the wicked intentions of the Phariſaical queſtioners; eluded their queſtion, by a pertinent interrogation, ſaying, what did Moſes command you? ſee Mark x. 3. ſee alſo the notes on Matt. i. 19.

Ver. 12. — There are ſome eunuchs, which were ſo born.] Such as by reaſon of natural deficiency and inability, are incapable of performing the procreative duty of marriage.

—— Some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men.] Who in their infancy, or childhood, were caſtrated by their parents, &c. A practiſe in our Saviour's time, very common in the eaſtern countries, and yet is retained in princes courts, who caſtrate ſuch young boys, as are appointed to attend as pages upon the royal women; and likewiſe, it is much practiſed in Italy, for raiſing good voices.

—— There be eunuchs which have made themſelves eunuchs for the kingdom of Heaven ſake.] This is not to be taken literally of a voluntary caſtration of the genitals, ſuch as the old writer and commentator Origen not only underſtood, but executed upon his own body, according to Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. l. 6. c. 7. But it directs us to ſuch an improvement of the gift of continency, by temperance, abſtinence, frequent faſting, and fervent prayer, as may give us power over our own natures, and make it eaſy to thoſe, who deſire to live a ſingle and chaſte life; that, being thereby the more retired from the great cares of a family, they may be the more aſſiduouſly exerciſed in Divine Contemplations and works of piety. Now,

As ta the meaning of the word eunuch, it comes from the Greek word Εὐνοῦχος, which properly is interpreted a guardian of the bed, and accordingly as hinted above, they were charged with the care of the beds and apartments of princeſſes in the courts of the eaſtern kings, who it is well known kept thoſe ladies in great confinement, remote from the company, and ſight of other men. But this is an unnatural practice to cut off the manhood, upon any ſuch account, and a crime of that nature, that God forbade it among the Iſraelites, even to cut the male beaſt, Levit. xxii. 24.

In Deuteronomy we read, that "he who hath that part cut off, or wounded, which is intended for the preſervation of the ſpecies, ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord," Deut. xxiii. 1. which words are differently explained. For, ſome hereby think, that God forbids eunuchs to marry with Iſraelites; others, that God forbids them to enter into his temple. Others again, that he excludes them from all offices in the magiſtracy. But it is more credible, that God debars them ſimply the poſſeſſion of ſome outward privileges belonging to the Iſraelites and people of the Lord. They were looked upon in the Jewiſh commonwealth as dry and uſeleſs wood; according to that of the Prophet, I am a dry tree, Iſa. lxvi. yet, notwithſtanding, they who faithfully obeyed the voice of the Lord God had their portions in the rewards and happineſs of the righteous, ſee Iſa. lvi. 4.

Ver. 13. Then were there brought unto him little children, &c.] See Mark x. 13.

Ver. 16. And behold, one came, and ſaid unto him, Good maſter, What ſhall I do that I may have eternal life?] The man in the text, by his queſtion, and the terms in which he accoſted Jeſus, ſhew, that he was aſſured that Chriſt was a teacher come from God that would not deceive him, and would teach him the way of truth: Accordingly Chriſt takes the opportunity to declare his divinity, ſaying,

Ver. 17.——Why calleſt thou me Good? there is none good but one, that is God] Here you may obſerve what advantage Chriſt took of the good man's ſincere addreſs, that he might do him the more good. The man had no ſooner ſaid, Good maſter! But Jeſus endeavoured to raiſe his mind to an higher conſideration of him, than that of a mere man, how good ſoever. He calmly confabulates, Why calleſt thou me Good? Doſt thou not learn from the law of Moſes, that there is none ſimply and abſtractly good, but one, who is the God in whoſe poſſeſſion is eternal life. As if he had ſaid, ſince there is none good, properly ſpeaking, but God alone, Why doſt thou call me good, and yet durſt not take me to be God: Thou muſt therefore either acknowledge me to be God, or not call me Good. The ſenſe wherein thou qualifieſt me to be good, is not that in which I ought to be acknowledged and honoured: Human and moral goodneſs cannot make me a law-giver to mens ſouls, as you deſire me to do, and according to that degree wherein you place your doctors: To attribute that title unto me in that ſenſe as you do, you ought to acknowledge me to be the true God, author of the law to which I ſend thee back. Therefore he ſays,

——If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.] Wherein the Lord does not remit him again to his own works, by which no man can be juſtified nor ſaved; Rom. iii. 20. Eph. ii. 8, 9. 2 Tim. i. 9. Tit. iii. 5. But to draw him again back to the ſervice of the living God from thoſe vain traditions in which the Phariſees repoſed moſt of their righteouſneſs and piety; Matt. xv. 2, &c. and to over-rule his preſumption, whereby he believed the law was eaſy for him to accompliſh, and to bring back his conſcience to a ſevere examination, according to the ſpiritual ſenſe of the law, by which man comes to the knowledge of his ſin; Rom. iii. 20. to learn by it to ſeek his ſalvation, not by the inventions, or any doctrines of men; but in God's favour through Chriſt; Rom. x. 4.

Ver. 24.——It is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle.] Chriſt having ſent away the young man ſorrowing, becauſe he had bid him, if he would be perfect, ſell his poſſeſſions, and give to the poor, ſaid to his diſciples, on that occaſion, that a rich man, truſting in his riches, (Mark x. 24.) ſhall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven or God; then to confirm his meaning, he adds, it is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man, that truſts in riches (Mark x. 24.) to enter into the kingdom of God. Where Obſerve, This is a proverbial expreſſion in uſe among the Hebrews, to expreſs a matter of the greateſt difficulty. So conſequently this text means no more than that it is with the greateſt difficulty, that a man, who is rich and has many poſſeſſions, can be perſuaded to part with them for God's ſake; but that it is too often found, that rich men will rather part with God, renounce their inheritance in Heaven, than part with their worldly treaſures.

The diſciples were exceedingly amazed at this ſaying, as it follows in the next verſe, and ſo have many more been, who ſet their heads to work, not, I think, how to underſtand, but rather to puzzle the reading of the text. The firſt that I meet with is one Theophylact, a Commentator of the eleventh century. This author pretended, that the Greek word, which we tranſlate camel, may alſo be properly, and in its natural ſenſe be rendred, a cable-rope for a ſhip's uſe: And, eſpecially of late, he has met with many admirers; but certainly they are very much to blame both in regard to the aſſertion, that the Greek word may as properly be rendred a cable-rope; as in reſpect of the compariſon made by it. For in the firſt place, the Greek word for a camel, as it ſtands in the text, is κάμηλος, or kamelos, with an eta, or long E in the middle ſyllable. Whereas the other word for a cable-rope, is written κάμιλος, or kamilos, with an Iota, or I in the middle ſyllable. Again, they who ſwallow the camel, and digeſt it into a cable-rope, forget that the deſign of the compariſon was, to render it impoſſible, humanly ſpeaking, and in the ordinary way and courſe of working. And therefore, when Chriſt himſelf, who beſt knew his own intention in ſpeaking it, declares, that with men it is impoſſible; don't you think our critical heads, that ſwallow the camel, are too officious to bend their wits, that they may find out a way or interpretation, to make that thing poſſible with men, which our Lord has expreſly told them is impoſſible.

Nor can I ſee any cauſe to infer from hence, That rich men cannot be ſaved. Becauſe, as all things are poſſible with God, and the impediment lying in rich men, truſting in their riches; he can take off thoſe rich men from confiding in, and relying on, their riches; and make them, who are rich in worldly poſſeſſions, poor in ſpirit, and rich in faith, as well as others, and then as capable of inheriting his kingdom as they.

Ver. 30. But many that are firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt ſhall be firſt.] Peter having heard that the way to Heaven was to part with poſſeſſions and riches for God's ſake, very forwardly, according to his temper, put in a plea for himſelf and brethren, that they might be intitled on thoſe conditions to treaſure in Heaven, ver. 27. Chriſt gave him a gracious reply, wherein he ſhew'd his acceptance of their deeds, and encouraged them in the perſeverance therein: And then, leſt they ſhould overvalue themſelves, concludes in the words of the text; But many, &c. Take no advantage, becauſe ye have been the firſt that followed me, and begun well, you muſt perſevere unto the end, leſt otherwiſe ye fall from your prerogatives; Gal. iii. 4. Rev. iii. 11.

Some have interpreted theſe words of the 30th verſe, to relate to the calling of the Gentiles; but I think with no manner of regard to the context, and therefore ſhan't take any notice of their forced interpretation.

CHAP. XX.

1 Chriſt by the ſimilitude of the labourers in the vineyard, ſheweth that God is debter unto no man: 17 Foretelleth his paſſion. 20 By anſwering the mother of Zebedees children, teacheth his diſciples to be lowly: 30 and giveth two blind men their ſight.

FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an houſholder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard.

2 And when he had agreed with the labourers for a peny a day, he ſent them into his vineyard.

3 And he went out about the third hour, and ſaw others ſtanding idle in the marketplace.

4 And ſaid unto them, Go ye alſo into the vineyard, and whatſoever is right, I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the ſixth and ninth hour, and did likewiſe.

6 And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others ſtanding idle, and ſaith unto them, Why ſtand ye here all the day idle?

7 They ſay unto him, Becauſe no man hath hired us. He ſaith unto them, Go ye alſo into the vineyard, and whatſoever is right, that ſhall ye receive.

8 So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard ſaith unto his ſteward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the laſt unto the firſt.

9 And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a peny.

10 But when the firſt came, they ſuppoſed that they ſhould have received more, and they likewiſe received every man a peny.

11 And when they had received it, they murmured againſt the good-man of the houſe.

12 Saying, Theſe laſt have wrought but one hour, and thou haſt made them equal unto us, which have born the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he anſwered one of them, and ſaid, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didſt not thou agree with me for a peny?

14 Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this laſt, even as unto thee.

15 Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? is thine eye evil becauſe I am good?

16 So the laſt ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt: for many be called, but few choſen.

17 ¶ And Jeſus going up to Jeruſalem, took the twelve diſciples apart in the way, and ſaid unto them,

18 Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be betrayed unto the chief prieſts, and unto the ſcribes, and they ſhall condemn him to death,

19 And ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles, to mock, and to ſcourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he ſhall riſe again.

20 ¶ Then came to him the mother of Zebedees children, with her ſons, worſhipping him, and deſiring a certain thing of him.

21 And he ſaid unto her, What wilt thou? ſhe ſaith unto him, Grant that theſe my two ſons may ſit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left in thy kingdom.

22 But Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Ye know not what ye aſk. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with? They ſay unto him, We are able.

23 And he ſaith unto them, Ye ſhall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with: but to ſit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

24 And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation againſt the two brethren.

25 But Jeſus called them unto him, and ſaid, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exerciſe dominion over them, and they that are great exerciſe authority upon them.

26 But it ſhall not be ſo among you: but whoſoever will be great among you, let him be your miniſter.

27 And whoſoever will be chief among you, let him be your ſervant.

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter, and to give his life a ranſom for many.

29 And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him.

30 ¶ And behold, two blind men, ſitting by the way-ſide, when they heard that Jeſus paſſed by, cried out, ſaying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou ſon of David.

31 And the multitude rebuked them becauſe they ſhould hold their peace: but they cried the more, ſaying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou ſon of David.

32 And Jeſus ſtood ſtill, and called them, and ſaid, What will ye that I ſhall do unto you?

33 They ſay unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.

34 So Jeſus had compaſſion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received ſight, and they followed him.

This chapter begins with a very inſtructive, pertinent, and intelligible parable, by which Chriſt intended to impreſs into the mind of his hearers, the true meaning and import of theſe words which he ſpoke laſt at the 30th verſe of the preceding chapter, which verſe in ſome copies is divided to beg this chapter; ſee Le Clerc.

Ver. 1. For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an houſholder, &c.] i. e. God behaves in the diſpoſal of his rewards, as a juſt and merciful man does in the common affairs of life: Who gives to every body their juſt demands, and where he ſees proper, relieves thoſe who deſerve his favour, in ſuch manner, and ſuch proportions as he pleaſes; never defrauding the labourer of his hire, but frequently giving him more than he can expect. This is plain from the following particulars. For — He went out early in the morning.] At which time he hired certain labourers to cultivate his vineyard for a penny a day: Here note, that a penny is but a certain, for an uncertain ſum. It is indifferent to us whether it was an Engliſh penny or any other piece of money; for all that we are intended to learn from hence is, that they who came laſt into the vineyard were paid the ſame wages as the firſt.

Ver. 3. — Third hour.] This was the method of reckoning time among the Hebrews; and this diviſion of time anſwers to our nine o'clock in the morning. Thoſe that were now ſent into the vineyard, remark, were not hired at a certain price as the firſt were, but the houſholder promiſed to give them what was right; ver. 4.

Ver. 5. — The ſixth and ninth hour.] According to the Hebrew account, which anſwers to our twelve at noon, and three in the afternoon. The houſholder agreed with thoſe hired at theſe hours for what was right.

Ver. 6. — Eleventh hour.] Or, at five o'clock in the afternoon. With theſe alſo he agreed for what was right.

Ver. 8. So when even was come.] The time for labourers to leave work.

Ver. 9. When they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.] Theſe were they who came laſt into the vineyard to labour, and had undertook the work upon their agreement, That they ſhould receive for their hire what their maſter ſhould think was right; ver. 7. And the lord of the vineyard ordered them a penny, which was the full ſum, which the firſt that had born the heat of the day, had bargained for. Which when they had obſerved, though they had agreed for that price; yet ſeeing others, who had in their eye done ſo little, ſo well paid, they conceived hopes that their wages would be advanced, and that they ſhould received more than agreed for. But when it came to their turn, they likewiſe received no more than a penny, according to their own agreement. So the laſt was made equal with the firſt, and the firſt was reduced upon the level with the laſt; ch. xix. 30. Becauſe, as it is added in Ver. 16.——For many be called, but few choſen.] In the premiſes we are taught, that every good gift and every perfect gift, which cometh from the Father of Light, depends upon God's mere free will and grace. And in this we learn, that though the Goſpel is preached to myriads of people, and all that hear of it are invited alike to embrace, and it is God's pleaſure, that all ſhould be ſaved and come to the knowledge of the truth: Yet the moſt will make a very ill uſe of their liberty of choice; and many utterly reject this invitation; and more, though they do embrace it, yet become never the better for it, by not leading their lives according to their holy profeſſion. And by this means, among the many that are called, there will be but few that will approve themſelves to God, as elect, or choice, and right good Chriſtians, and but few conſequently, that will enter into the eternal joy of their Lord; according to that other remarkable Scripture, "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." In a word, an external calling and profeſſion of the Goſpel, can be of little advantage to ſuch, who contemn or neglect the performance of its covenant, in which God hath called, or, if you pleaſe, elected all mankind to a ſtate of ſalvation; but there are but few that make a right choice in compariſon of the many that turn into the broad way of deſtruction. They are not all Chriſtians who are ſuch by outward character, and partake of a Chriſtian Communion; but only ſuch as profeſs the faith of Chriſt inwardly, and obey and ſerve him with all their heart, with faith and perſeverance, 1 Cor. iv. 7.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Chriſt rideth into Jeruſalem upon an aſs, 12 driveth the buyers and ſellers out of the temple, 17 curſeth the fig-tree, 23 putteth to ſilence the prieſts and elders, 28 and rebuketh them by the ſimilitude of the two ſons, 33 and the husbandmen, who ſlew ſuch as were ſent unto them.

AND when they drew nigh unto Jeruſalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then ſent Jeſus two diſciples,

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over-againſt you, and ſtraightway ye ſhall find an aſs tied, and a colt with her: looſe them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man ſay ought unto you, ye ſhall ſay, The Lord hath need of them; and ſtraightway he will ſend them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, ſaying,

5 Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and ſitting upon an aſs, and a colt the fole of an aſs.

6 And the diſciples went, and did as Jeſus commanded them,

7 And brought the aſs, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they ſet him thereon.

8 And a very great multitude ſpread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way.

9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, ſaying, Hoſanna to the ſon of David: Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Hoſanna in the higheſt.

10 And when he was come into Jeruſalem, all the city was moved, ſaying, Who is this?

11 And the multitude ſaid, This is Jeſus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

12 ¶ And Jeſus went into the temple of God, and caſt out all them that ſold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves,

13 And ſaid unto them, It is written, My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves.

14 And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he healed them.

15 And when the chief prieſts and ſcribes ſaw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and ſaying, Hoſannah to the ſon of David; they were ſore diſpleaſed,

16 And ſaid unto him, Heareſt thou what theſe ſay? And Jeſus ſaith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouths of babes and ſucklings thou haſt perfected praiſe?

17 ¶ And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany, and he lodged there.

18 Now in the morning, as he returned into the city, he hungred.

19 And when he ſaw a fig-tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and ſaid unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And preſently the fig-tree withered away.

20 And when the diſciples ſaw it, they marvelled, ſaying, How ſoon is the fig-tree withered away!

21 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye ſhall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree, but alſo if ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea; it ſhall be done.

22 And all things whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive.

23 ¶ And when he was come into the temple, the chief prieſts and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and ſaid, By what authority doſt thou theſe things? and who gave thee this authority?

24 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, I alſo will aſk you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in likewiſe will tell you by what authority I do theſe things.

25 The baptiſm of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, If we ſhall ſay, From heaven; he will ſay unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?

26 But if we ſhall ſay, Of men; we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet.

27 And they anſwered Jeſus and ſaid, We cannot tell. And he ſaid unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things.

28 ¶ But what think you? A certain man had two ſons, and he came to the firſt, and ſaid, Son, go work to day in my vineyard.

29 He anſwered and ſaid, I will not: but afterward he repented, and went.

30 And he came to the ſecond, and ſaid likewiſe. And he anſwered and ſaid, I go, ſir; and went not.

31 Whether of them twain did the will of his Father? They ſay unto him, The firſt. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

32 For John came unto you in the way of righteouſneſs, and ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him. And ye when ye had ſeen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

33 ¶ Hear another parable: There was a certain houſholder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-preſs in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he ſent his ſervants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it.

35 And the husbandmen took his ſervants, and beat one, and killed another, and ſtoned another.

36 Again, he ſent other ſervants, more than the firſt: and they did unto them likewiſe.

37 But laſt of all, he ſent unto them his ſon, ſaying, they will reverence my ſon.

38 But when the husbandmen ſaw the ſon, they ſaid among themſelves, This is the heir, come, let us kill him, and let us ſeize on his inheritance.

39 And they caught him, and caſt him out of the vineyard, and ſlew him.

40 When the Lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto thoſe husbandmen?

41 They ſay unto him, he will miſerably deſtroy thoſe wicked men, and will let his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which ſhall render him the fruits in their ſeaſons.

42 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Did ye never read in the ſcriptures, The ſtone which the builders erected, the ſame is become the head of the corner: this is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

43 Therefore ſay I unto you, The kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

44 And whoſoever ſhall fall on this ſtone, ſhall be broken: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall, it will grind him to powder.

45 And when the chief prieſts and Phariſees had heard his parables, they perceived that he ſpake of them.

46 But when they ſought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, becauſe they took him for a prophet.

Ver. 1.——Bethphage.] A ſmall village near Jeruſalem.

——The mount of Olives.] A little hill on the eaſtſide of Jeruſalem ſo called, planted with olive-trees, Zech. xiv. 4.

——When they drew nigh unto Jeruſalem, &c.] The twelve firſt verſes of this chapter being the ſame as we find in Luke xix 28, &c. I refer my reader to that Evangeliſt for an explanation.

Ver. 12. And Jeſus went into the temple of God, and caſt out all them that ſold and bought in the temple, &c.] This miracle, for ſo ſurely we may call it, that a man in the midſt of power did it confront, and openly, rebuke, condemn and reform the abuſes of a ſtubborn nation, &c. This miracle, I ſay, is objected againſt by two objections in point of Reaſon. 1ſt, It is hard, ſays the unbeliever, to conceive how any one, in the form of a man, and of a deſpiſed one too, with a whip in his hand, could execute ſuch a work upon a great multitude of people, who were none of his diſciples, nor had any regard for him. But,

We reply, that Jeſus performed this great work of reformation by virtue of his prophetic character; for he was conſidered by the people as a prophet; ſee ver. 11. And in conſequence of this, ſays Matthew, he entred with triumph into Jeruſalem, amidſt the loud Heſannas of an amazed multitude, which they gave him, as the ſon of David, or the Meſſiah; ſee ver. 9. And conſequently they could do no leſs than acknowledge him as a Prophet; and the multitude ſaid, this is Jeſus the Prophet of Nazareth of Galilee; ver. 11. Immediately after which, it is mentioned, that Jeſus went into the temple of God, and caſt out all thoſe that had prophaned it. And below, we are informed, that when the chief Phariſees were ſo irritated by his parables, as to ſeek to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, becauſe they took him for a Prophet; ver. 45, 46.

It is alſo mentioned by Mark on this very occaſion, that the ſcribes and Phariſees feared him, becauſe all the people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, Mark xi. 18. Luke tells us likewiſe, on occaſion of his foreſaid entrance into Jeruſalem previouſly, to his reformation of the temple, "that the whole multitude of the diſciples began to rejoice and praiſe God for all the mighty works which they had ſeen, ſaying, Bleſſed be the king that cometh in the name of the Lord." And he had no ſooner expelled the prophaners out of the temple, but "he continued to teach daily in the ſame place, and was heard by all the people with great attention;" Luke xix. 37, 38.—47, 48. Therefore it can't be admired, that ſince he was ſo univerſally known and acknowledged to be a teacher ſent from God, (John iii. 2) his authority in reforming the temple was not oppoſed by force. Moreover, it might be added, that a conſciouſneſs of the guilt, might in ſome ſort contribute to the ſubmiſſion of theſe prophane perſons; even in the ſame manner as we read, how the enemies of this ſame Jeſus were ſtruck backward with the ſame guilt, as well as by his Majeſtick Preſence, and fell to the ground when they came with clubs and ſtaves to apprehend him. Now we proceed to

The ſecond Reaſon. Why, ſays the infidel, was Jeſus ſo zealous againſt the prophanation of that houſe, which he himſelf came to deſtroy, and which he permitted to be ſo not long after?

It is anſwered, That the honour of God was herein concerned; for as the ſervice of the temple, which had been inſtituted by God himſelf, was not yet annulled by his authority: It was neceſſary to vindicate the relative holineſs of God's own houſe, which was ſtiled the temple of Gad and his father's houſe; and was ſtill therefore honoured by Jeſus as ſuch. And indeed,

It might be as reaſonably enquired, why Jeſus conformed to the legal ſervice of the temple, which was as yet eſtabliſhed, tho' to be ſoon evacuated by the more perfect ſacrifice of Chriſt himſelf, as why he vindicated the honour of God, that was prophaned in his own houſe; tho' that houſe was after ſome time to be finally abandoned and judicially to be deſtroyed; ſee Luke xix. 45, &c.

CHAP. XXII.

1 The parable of the marriage of the king's ſon. 9 The vocation of the Gentiles. 12 The puniſhment of him that wanted the wedding garment. 15 Tribute ought to be paid to Ceſar. 23 Chriſt confuteth the Sadducees for the reſurrection: 34 anſwereth the lawyer, which is the firſt and great commandment: 41 and poſeth the Phariſees about the Meſſias.

AND Jeſus anſwered and ſpake unto them again by parables, and ſaid,

2 The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his ſon,

3 And ſent forth his ſervants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come.

4 Again he ſent forth other ſervants, ſaying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen, and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

5 But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandiſe:

6 And the remnant took his ſervants, and entreated them ſpitefully, and ſlew them.

7 But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he ſent forth his armies, and deſtroyed thoſe murderers, and burnt up their city.

8 Then ſaith he to his ſervants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy.

9 Go ye therefore into the high-ways, and as many as ye ſhall find, bid to the marriage.

10 So thoſe ſervants went out into the high-ways, and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furniſhed with gueſts.

11 ¶ And when the king came in to ſee the gueſts, he ſaw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment:

12 And he ſaith unto him, Friend, how cameſt thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? And he was ſpeechleſs.

13 Then ſaid the king to the ſervants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and caſt him into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

14 For many are called, but few are choſen.

15 ¶ Then went the Phariſees, and took counſel how they might intangle him in his talk.

16 And they ſent out unto him their diſciples with the Herodians, ſaying, Maſter, we know that thou art true, and teacheſt the way of God in truth, neither careſt thou for any man: for thou regardeſt not the perſon of men.

17 Tell us therefore, What thinkeſt thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Ceſar, or not?

18 But Jeſus perceived their wickedneſs, and ſaid, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?

19 Shew me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a peny.

20 And he ſaith unto them, Whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription?

21 They ſay unto him, Ceſars. Then ſaith he unto them, Render therefore unto Ceſar, the things which are Ceſars: and unto God, the things that are Gods.

22 When they had heard theſe words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

23 ¶ The ſame day came to him the Sadducees, which ſay that there is no reſurrection, and asked him,

24 Saying, Maſter, Moſes ſaid, If a man die, having no children, his brother ſhall marry his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother.

25 Now there were with us ſeven brethren, and the firſt when he had married a wife, deceaſed, and having no iſſue, left his wife unto his brother.

26 Likewiſe the ſecond alſo, and the third, unto the ſeventh.

27 And laſt of all the woman died alſo.

28 Therefore in the reſurrection, whoſe wife ſhall ſhe be of the ſeven? for they all had her.

29 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the ſcriptures, nor the power of God.

30 For in the reſurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels of God in heaven.

31 But as touching the reſurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was ſpoken unto you, by God, ſaying, 32 I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

33 And when the multitude heard this, they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine.

34 ¶ But when the Phariſees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to ſilence, they were gathered together.

35 Then one of them which was a lawyer, asked him a queſtion, tempting him, and ſaying,

36 Maſter, which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the firſt and great commandment.

39 And the ſecond is like unto it, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf.

40 On theſe two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

41 ¶ While the Phariſees were gathered together, Jeſus asked them,

42 Saying, What think ye of Chriſt? whoſe ſon is he? They ſay unto him, The ſon of David.

43 He ſaith unto them, How then doth David in ſpirit call him Lord, ſaying, 44 The LORD ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footſtool?

45 If David then call him Lord, how is he his ſon?

46 And no man was able to anſwer him a word, neither durſt any man (from that day forth) ask him any more queſtions.

This chapter begins with a parable to reprove the hardned infidelity of the Jews, eſpecially of the Phariſees and prieſts, who ſought to lay hands on him, ch. xxi. 46. becauſe they obſtinately rejected the mercy of God to them in Chriſt Jeſus; and to rebuke them for their vile ingratitude to him for his peculiar care of them, who had firſt preached the Goſpel unto them. And this parable was likewiſe intended to ſhew God's great anger againſt them for their ſtubborneſs, and malicious treatment of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and how ſad the conſequence of it would be both in this world and in the next; and withal to declare God's purpoſe of receiving the Gentiles into the fold of Chriſt, upon their deſpiſing and rejecting that ineſtimable favour. And moreover, that whoever makes profeſſion of Chriſtianity, muſt live agreeably, and muſt be conformable to all its holy laws, or elſe their condition will be more deplorable than ever. This, I think, is the firſt intention of this parable. But it may be poſſible, that we may find many more fruitful inſtructions in it, when we come to conſider it more particularly in Luke xiv. 15.

Ver. 16. — Herodians.] See Mark xii. 16, &c. where, and in Luke xx. 20, &c. you will find the whole account as here recorded, to the end of the chapter.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Chriſt admoniſheth the people to follow the good doctrine, not the evil examples of the ſcribes and Phariſees. 5 His diſciples muſt beware of their ambition. 13 He denounceth eight woes againſt their hypocriſy and blindneſs, 34 and prophecieth of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

THEN ſpake Jeſus to the multitude, and to his diſciples,

2 Saying, The ſcribes and the Phariſees ſit in Moſes ſeat.

3 All therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do; but do not ye after their works; for they ſay, and do not.

4 For they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be born, and lay them on mens ſhoulders, but they themſelves will not move them with one of their fingers.

5 But all their works they do, for to be ſeen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments,

6 And love the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues,

7 And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.

8 But be not ye called, Rabbi: for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt, and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called maſters: for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt.

11 But he that is greateſt among you, ſhall be your ſervant.

12 And whoſoever ſhall exalt himſelf, ſhall be abaſed; and he that ſhall humble himſelf, ſhall be exalted.

13 ¶ But wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye ſhut up the kingdom of heaven aginſt men: for ye neither go in your ſelves, neither ſuffer ye them that are entring, to go in.

14 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye devour widows houſes, and for a pretence make long prayer; therefore ye ſhall receive the greater damnation.

15 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye compaſs ſea and land to make one proſelyte, and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than your ſelves.

16 Wo unto you, ye blind guides, which ſay, Whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the temple, it is nothing: but whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the gold of the temple, he is a debter.

17 Ye fools, and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that ſanctifieth the gold?

18 And whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the altar, it is nothing: but whoſoever ſweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty.

19 Ye fools, and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that ſanctifieth the gift?

20 Whoſo therefore ſhall ſwear by the altar, ſweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoſo ſhall ſwear by the temple, ſweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that ſhall ſwear by heaven, ſweareth by the throne of God, and by him that ſitteth thereon.

23 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye pay tithe of mint, and aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

24 Ye blind guides, which ſtrain at a gnat, and ſwallow a camel.

25 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye make clean the outſide of the cup, and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and exceſs.

26 Thou blind Phariſee, cleanſe firſt that which is within the cup and platter, that the outſide of them may be clean alſo.

27 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye are like unto whited ſepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead mens bones, and of all uncleanneſs.

28 Even ſo ye alſo outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocriſy and iniquity.

29 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; becauſe ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garniſh the ſepulchres of the righteous.

30 And ſay, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.

31 Wherefore ye be witneſſes unto your ſelves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets.

32 Fill ye up then the meaſure of your fathers.

33 Ye ſerpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye eſcape the damnation of hell?

34 ¶ Wherefore behold, I ſend unto you prophets, and wiſe-men, and ſcribes; and ſome of them ye ſhall kill and crucify, and ſome of them ſhall ye ſcourge in your ſynagogues, and perſecute them from city to city:

35 That upon you may come all the righteous blood ſhed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, ſon of Barachias, whom ye ſlew between the temple and the altar.

36 Verily I ſay unto you, All theſe things ſhall come upon this generation.

37 O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, thou that killeſt the prophets and ſtoneſt them which are ſent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

38 Behold, your houſe is left unto you deſolate.

39 For I ſay unto you, Ye ſhall not ſee me henceforth, till ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Ver. 2. — The ſcribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes ſeat.] They hold the degree and place of Doctors of the law, and are the ordinary expoſitors of thoſe precepts delivered at firſt by Moſes. Yet it is to be obſerved, that thoſe ſcribes and Phariſees had uſurped this ſeat or degree of expounders of the Moſaic law; for, from the beginning, it was not ſo. God at firſt made this a duty incumbent upon the prieſts and Levites; but as they decreaſed or grew remiſs in their office, theſe men, who loved the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, preſently intrigued themſelves into the Doctor's chair, or as it is here ſtiled the ſeat of Moſes, or the ſeat in which ſat the expounder of the law, delivered by Moſes.

Ver. 3. — Whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do.] This is to be underſtood with a reſtriction. As if he had ſaid, the law which they have to expound is good, and I command you to obſerve the precepts thereof to a tittle; for you muſt not reject that which is Holy, becauſe it is read by men that are obnoxious to the cenſure of the law.

—— But do not ye after their works.] i. e. Beware of thoſe doctrines which they add to the law, and by which they deſtroy the ſenſe thereof in their expoſitions. And here I ſhall add a uſeful obſervation of a late ingenious author in regard to this permiſſion of corrupt teachers in Moſes's ſeat.

Though, ſays he, under that weak and low miniſtration of the law (by Moſes) which made nothing perfect, Heb. vii. 19. this indulgence to corrupt teachers, was, through a ſort of neceſſity, then permitted (the teaching office then running much in a line;) yet under the higher and brighter diſpenſation of the Goſpel, which is the power of God to ſalvation, Rom. i. 16. wherein no man can lawfully take this office to himſelf; but he that is immediately called by God thereto, and is gifted, furniſhed and qualified by him for the due performance, and diſcharge thereof; it may by no means be allowed that Chriſtians are from hence obliged to hear a ſermon againſt drunkenneſs from the mouth of a drunkard; or, a diſcourſe againſt whoredom from a whoremonger; a declamation againſt covetouſneſs from a griping extortioner, and the like. For, ſince the Goſpel-miniſtry depends entirely upon the call, choice and emiſſion of Chriſt, and that holineſs is a characteriſtick, and as it were the Shibboleth, or diſtinguiſhing work of it, it cannot, without an impious reflection upon the wiſdom and purity of God, be ſuppoſed, that ſuch impure and vicious perſons are called, or appointed by him to that ſervice; but rather that they take it upon themſelves, for corrupt and ſelfiſh ends. Ellwood in Leo.

Ver. 5. —— Phylacteries.] After Chriſt had warned his diſciples not to follow the example, nor works, or vain traditions which the Phariſees added to the law; he adds, becauſe they do all their works to be ſeen by, or to have the praiſe of men. As for inſtance, ſays he, They make broad their Phylacteries.

Thoſe phylacteries were little ſcrolls or labels of parchment, in which the ten commandments and ſome other part of the law by Moſes were written. They uſed to bind theſe parchments to their arms and foreheads, that they might be thought more zealous obſervers of the law. A practice grounded on Deut. vi. 8. where the Lord by Moſes having enjoined the Iſraelites to keep the commandments, ſtatutes and judgments, which had been delivered to them, and to take all opportunities to inculcate them to their children by talking continually of them when they ſat in their houſes, when they walked in the way, when they lay down and roſe, and by writing them on the poſts and gates of their houſes, leſt they themſelves ſhould through forgetfulneſs omit to do this, he bids them bind them for a ſign or memorial upon their hands, and wear them as frontlets between their eyes; that being in ſight, they might not be out of mind.

Together with theſe phylacteries, they alſo wore, for the ſame end, borders or fringes at the bottom of their garments, in which were interwoven, thread, or ribbond of a blue colour. And becauſe they who did wear thoſe phylacteries, and fringes of the largeſt ſize, hoped to be accounted the moſt religious and devout; therefore did the Phariſees make their phylacteries roader than ordinary, and the fringes or borders of their garments larger; which being done in ſuperſtition and oſtentation, brought this reprimand from our Lord. For, otherwiſe, he himſelf, as all other Jews, did wear them in obſervance to the law, Numb. xv. 38. But the Phariſees who always ſtrove to excel every body in outward marks of their devotion, not only enlarged their fringes, but uſed to wear ſharp thorns in their fringes; that by the continual pricking of the thorns, whether they walked or ſat ſtill, they might be the more mindful of the commandments, ſee Godwyn's Moſes and Aaron lib. i. c. 10. yet, though this carried with it an air of mortification. Chriſt affirms, that

All they did was to be ſeen of men; and all they aimed at in ſuch an act of ſupererrogation, was to gain reſpect, and gifts from men. For which reaſon they affected to walk in long robes; emblems of gravity; and loved to be reſpectfully ſaluted in the market-places, and to ſit in the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, and to have the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, which they hoped would make the common people reverence them, and call them Rabbi, a title then in great eſteem, and therefore the more ſuitable to their ambition.

Ver. 8. Be not ye called Rabbi.] It was a cuſtom among the Jews to give the title of Rabbi*, Father, Guide, Maſter or Teacher, to their wiſe men, the fathers of tradition, or the men of reputed underſtanding in the law of Moſes. So that, by the word Rabbi, they underſtood ſuch a teacher, whom they ſtood bound to hearken to, depending on his dictates, and no ways disbelieving or departing from what he taught; according to that of R. Eliezer, "He who ſeparates from the ſchool of his Rabbi, or teacheth any thing which he hath not heard from his maſter, provokes the Divine Majeſty to depart from Iſrael." By ſuch inſinuations as theſe, the deſigning part of their learned men brought the people of the Jews into that falſe reſpect of their Rabbi, that he at laſt could take upon him to vent the greateſt abſurdities and falſhoods for eternal truths among the deluded ignorant hearers, whom they had the boldneſs to teach moſt blaſphemouſly, "that the words of the ſcribes were more amiable than the words of the Prophets, and more weighty; and the words of the Cabala, equal to the words of the law;" ſee Lightf. in Matt. xv. 2. which had their deſired effect; for in the days of Joſephus, "They who were of the ſect of the Phariſees, followed their guide, and thought it neceſſary to obſerve, and contend for whatſoever he would command;" Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. and 13. c. 8. tho' he taught his own inventions inſtead of the commandments of God; Matt. xv. 9. See John vii. 47, &c. Hence

It appears that Chriſt forbids his diſciples to be called Rabbi; to inſtruct us, that no man is to be called Father* *upon earth; ſo as that we ſhould yield an abſolute ſubjection to his will and pleaſure, or be abſolutely ſwayed and governed by it. That we ſhould call no man Guide, or Maſter upon earth, no fathers, no church, no councils, ſo as abſolutely to ſubmit ourſelves in the concernment of our eternal intereſts, to the conduct of their judgments, or give them dominion over our faith and conſcience; Chriſt being the ſole Guide and Teacher of his Church, commiſſioned by his father to reveal his will, and teach us what is needful to be known, believed or done, in order to ſalvation; and even his Apoſtles, being only to be looked upon as the miniſters and embaſſadors of Chriſt, and only to be credited as by their gifts; and by the miraculous powers derived from him they taught men thoſe things he had commanded, and by his ſpirit had revealed to them; Whitby. Finally, he commanded by theſe words, his diſciples, not to take upon them that name of Rabbi, nor deceive the people as the Rabbi's did.

Ver. 38. Behold your houſe is left unto you deſolate.] By that great deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation by the Roman army; at which time you, who now deſpiſe your Meſſiah, will be glad in that calamity to find him, to whom ye might flee and ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Chriſt foretelleth the deſtruction of the temple: 3 what and how great calamities ſhall be before it. 29 The ſigns of his coming to judgment: 36 And becauſe that day and hour is unknown, 42 we ought to watch like good ſervants, expecting every moment our maſter's coming.

AND Jeſus went out, and departed from the temple; and his diſciples came to him, for to ſhew him the buildings of the temple.

2 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, See ye not all theſe things? Verily I ſay unto you, There ſhall not be left here one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, the diſciples came unto him privately, ſaying, Tell us when ſhall theſe things be? and what ſhall be the ſign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?

4 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

5 For many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceive many.

6 And ye ſhall hear of wars, and rumours of wars: ſee that ye be not troubled: for all theſe things muſt come to paſs, but the end is not yet.

7 For nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom: and there ſhall be famines, and peſtilences, and earthquakes in divers places.

8 All theſe are the beginning of ſorrows.

9 Then ſhall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and ſhall kill you: and ye ſhall be hated of all nations for my names ſake.

10 And then ſhall many be offended, and ſhall betray one another, and ſhall hate one another.

11 And many falſe prophets ſhall riſe and ſhall deceive many.

12 And becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold.

13 But he that ſhall endure unto the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.

14 And this goſpel of the kingdom ſhall be preached in all the world, for a witneſs unto all nations, and then ſhall the end come.

15 When ye therefore ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, ſtand in the holy place (whoſo readeth, let him underſtand)

16 Then let them which be in Judea, flee into the mountains.

17 Let him which is on the houſe-top, not come down to take any thing out of his houſe:

18 Neither let him which is in the field, return back to take his clothes.

19 And wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days.

20 But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the ſabbath-day:

21 For then ſhall be great tribulation, ſuch as was not from the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever ſhall be.

22 And except thoſe days ſhould be ſhortned, there ſhould no fleſh be ſaved: but for the elects ſake thoſe days ſhall be ſhortned.

23 Then if any man ſhall ſay unto you, Lo, here is Chriſt, or there: believe it not.

24 For there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders, inſomuch that (if it were poſſible) they ſhall deceive the very elect.

25 Behold, I have told you before.

26 Wherefore, if they ſhall ſay unto you, Behold, he is in the deſert, go not forth: behold, he is in the ſecret chambers, believe it not.

27 For as the lightning cometh out of the eaſt, and ſhineth even unto the weſt: ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the Son of man be.

28 For whereſoever the carcaſe is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

29 ¶ Immediately after the tribulation of thoſe days, ſhall the ſun be darkned, and the moon ſhall not give her light, and the ſtars ſhall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens ſhall be ſhaken.

30 And then ſhall appear the ſign of the Son of man in heaven: and then ſhall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they ſhall ſee the ſon of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.

31 And he ſhall ſend his angels with a great ſound of a trumpet, and they ſhall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

32 Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that ſummer is nigh:

33 So likewiſe ye, when ye ſhall ſee all theſe things, know that it is near, even at the doors.

34 Verily I ſay unto you, This generation ſhall not paſs, till all theſe things be fulfilled.

35 Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, but my words ſhall not paſs away.

36 ¶ But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.

37 But as the days of Noe were, ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the Son of man be.

38 For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entred into the ark,

39 And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the Son of man be.

40 Then ſhall two be in the field, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left.

41 Two women ſhall be grinding at the mill, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left.

42 ¶ Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

43 But know this, that if the good-man of the houſe had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken up.

44 Therefore be ye alſo ready: for in ſuch an hour as you think not, the Son of cometh.

45 Who then is a faithful and wiſe ſervant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his houſhold, to give them meat in due ſeaſon?

46 Bleſſed is that ſervant, whom his Lord when he cometh, ſhall find ſo doing.

47 Verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall make him ruler over all his goods.

48 But and if that evil ſervant ſhall ſay in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming,

49 And ſhall begin to ſmite his fellow-ſervants, and to eat and drink with the drunken:

50 The Lord of that ſervant ſhall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of;

51 And ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

This chapter being the ſame as you ſhall find in Mark xiii. I ſhall defer annotating on it till we come there in the courſe of this work, when I ſhall obſerve the exact completion of the facts contained therein.

CHAP. XXV.

1 The parable of the ten virgins, 14 and of the talents 31 Alſo the deſcription of the laſt judgment.

THEN ſhall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

2 And five of them were wiſe, and five were fooliſh.

3 They that were fooliſh took their lamps, and took no oil with them:

4 But the wiſe took oil in their veſſels with their lamps.

5 While the bridegroom tarried, they all ſlumbred and ſlept.

6 And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.

7 Then all thoſe virgins aroſe, and trimmed their lamps.

8 And the fooliſh ſaid unto the wiſe, give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.

9 But the wiſe anſwered, ſaying, Not ſo; leſt there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that ſell, and buy for your ſelves.

10 And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage, and the door was ſhut.

11 Afterward came alſo the other virgins, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

12 But he anſwered, and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, I know you not.

13 Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

14 ¶ For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own ſervants, and delivered unto them his goods:

15 And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his ſeveral ability, and ſtraightway took his journey.

16 Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the ſame, and made them other five talents.

17 And likewiſe he that had received two, he alſo gained other two.

18 But he that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lords money.

19 After a long time the lord of thoſe ſervants cometh and reckoneth with them.

20 And ſo he that had received five talents, came and brought other five talents, ſaying, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beſides them five talents more.

21 His lord ſaid unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful ſervant; thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

22 He alſo that had received two talents, came and ſaid, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beſides them.

23 His lord ſaid unto him, Well done, good and faithful ſervant; thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

24 Then he which had received the one talent, came and ſaid, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou haſt not ſown, and gathering where thou haſt not ſtrawed:

25 And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou haſt that is thine.

26 His lord anſwered and ſaid unto him, Thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant, thou knoweſt that I reap where I ſowed not, and gather where I have not ſtrawed:

27 Thou oughteſt therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I ſhould have received mine own with uſury.

28 Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29 For unto every one that hath, ſhall be given, and he ſhall have abundance: but from him that hath not, ſhall be taken away even that which he hath.

30 And caſt ye the unprofitable ſervant into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

31 ¶ When the Son of man ſhall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then ſhall he ſit upon the throne of his glory.

32 And before him ſhall be gathered all nations; and he ſhall ſeparate them one from another, as a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats:

33 And he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

34 Then ſhall the king ſay unto them on his right hand, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

35 For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink: I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in:

36 Naked, and ye clothed me: I was ſick, and ye viſited me: I was in priſon, and ye came unto me.

37 Then ſhall the righteous anſwer him, ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirſty, and gave thee drink?

38 When ſaw we thee a ſtranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39 Or when ſaw we thee ſick, or in priſon, and came unto thee?

40 And the king ſhall anſwer and ſay unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, Inaſmuch as ye have done it unto one of the leaſt of theſe my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

41 Then ſhall he ſay alſo unto them on the left hand, Depart from me ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.

42 For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirſty, and ye gave me no drink:

43 I was a ſtranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: ſick, and in priſon, and ye viſited me not.

44 Then ſhall they alſo anſwer him, ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred, or athirſt, or a ſtranger, or naked, or ſick, or in priſon, and did not miniſter unto thee?

45 Then ſhall he anſwer them, ſaying, Verily I ſay unto you, Inaſmuch as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not to me.

46 And theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment: but the righteous into life eternal.

Ver. 1. Then ſhall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, &c.] This parable which contains thirteen verſes, was, as may be collected from the particle then, which refers to the times foretold in the foregoing chapter, deſigned in its firſt intention to urge the Jewiſh Chriſtians to be prepared with a watchful care againſt that time of ſorrows; and to be ſo wiſe as to provide for their ſafety, leſt that time ſhould ſurprize them habituated or engaged in wicked courſes; but that, living like faithful diſciples, in all obedience to his precepts and ſtrict obſervance of his doctrine and holy example, the providence of his wiſdom and power might watch over them, and Chriſt might ſecure them from periſhing in that dreadful deſtruction.

Again, I believe that it was likewiſe deſigned to repreſent the neceſſity of mens conſtant preparation for death and judgment, by a ſedulous care and watchfulneſs over themſelves, and diligent practice of all religious duties and obligations; becauſe it is very uncertain when God will ſummon any of us to leave this world, and appear before his juſt Tribunal, and his call may be very ſudden and unexpected; and becauſe the conſequence of not being ready, and not in a capacity to obey that call, will be inexpreſſibly miſerable. "Watch therefore, ſays our Lord, in the concluſion of this parable; for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh." Now

We muſt obſerve that this parable is an alluſion to a cuſtom among the Jews, who at the marriage of their friends were accuſtomed to attend upon the bridegroom to his chamber on the wedding-night with ſongs, and burning lamps in their hands. Theſe partook of the entertainment provided on that occaſion, and ſhut to the door after the bridegroom was entered, to keep out the intruding rabble; for they admitted none but ſuch as were ready to attend him at the hour he came, which was uncertain. And therefore I conceive, that

The ſenſe which our Lord couched under this repreſentation, is this: That it becomes every Chriſtian, with the utmoſt of his care, to be always ready and prepared by a holy life to attend for the call of Chriſt, whenever he ſhall pleaſe to ſummons him out of this world by death, in order to his final judgment; becauſe the time of that great ſummons is ſo very uncertain, and eternal happineſs or miſery reſpectively depends upon man's being prepared or not prepared for it. Now how aptly and movingly expreſſive this parable is of the ſenſe, will appear from the following interpretation thereof.

By the virgins are repreſented thoſe who profeſs to believe in, and to be the diſciples of the holy Jeſus; who like virgins, ought to be pure and ſpotleſs, innocent and modeſt, humble, ſober and temperate in all things, pious and devout, &c. for as a virgin who is not adorned with theſe good qualities, is diſgraced and deſpicable in the eyes of the good and virtuous; ſo the want of them in Chriſtians is alſo their greateſt diſhonour; expoſes them to the contempt of God and all good men; renders them unworthy of that holy name by which they are called, and defiles and ſtains thoſe ſouls, which Chriſt purified with his precious blood; that they might be his own peculiar people, zealous of good works..

Ver. 2. And five of them were wiſe, and five were fooliſh.] This repreſents the great difference there is among thoſe that in common profeſs the name of Chriſt. Some are vain and idle, careleſs and unthoughtful, taken up with the gaieties and follies of the world, laviſh of their reputation, and looſe in their converſation and behaviour, while others are ſo wiſe as to conſider the character they bare, and live as thoſe that profeſs holineſs, with care and circumſpection, wathfulneſs, and a diligent and attentive piety.

Ver. 3. —Lamps.] This metaphorically expreſſes the ſouls of Chriſtians, which are, or ought, to burn with holy fires of love and devotion to God and their Saviour, and make them as ſo many lighted lamps in this dark and benighted world; for ye are the light of the world; ſays our Lord to his diſciples; therefore, "Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven; Matt. v. 14. 16.

Ver. 5. —Bridegroom.] Repreſents our Saviour, the Divine Son of the heavenly King, as he is called in a former parable.

50 The Lord of that ſervant ſhall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of;

51 And ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

Ver. 5. — Bridegroom.] Repreſents our Saviour, the Divine Son of the heavenly King, as he is called in a former parable.

——— They all ſlumbered and ſlept.] This is an emblem of the inadvertency and frailty of even the beſt of men; becauſe this Divine Bridegroom delayeth his coming, we are all of us too apt to lay aſide the thoughts of it; we think but little upon death and judgment, as things a great way off, and for which there will be time enough to provide hereafter.

Ver. 6. And at midnight there was a cry made.] This very movingly repreſents how unexpectedly the Day of Judgment ſhall ſurprize the drowſy world, and how ſudden, for any thing we can tell, the time of our death may be; which is to us the fore-runner of it. Becauſe,

Midnight is a time of great ſilence, and deſtined to reſt and forgetfulneſs of the toils and troubles of the day; and then ſudden out-cries, and alarms, muſt be very frightful, and ſeize us with much horror and confuſion.

——— Go ye out to meet him.] By going out to meet this Divine Bride-groom, our Saviour, is ſignified our preparing againſt his calling us from this world by death, and providing againſt his advent to judgment; that is, by frequently contemplating our mortality, reflecting on the ſhortneſs and uncertainty of life, and therefore making the beſt uſe of our time while we have it, as not knowing how ſoon our breath may be required of us.

Ver. 8. — Oil.] i. e. The graces and virtues of Chriſtianity, which are the proper nouriſhment of the ſoul, which ſays Solomon, is the lamp of the Lord.

Ver. 8. And the fooliſh ſaid unto the wiſe give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.] In theſe words, Chriſt rebuketh the want of preparation among the careleſs, and inconſiderate, for this ſo great and ſudden a change; and repreſents the mighty conſternation, that muſt neceſſarily follow ſuch neglect, and the vain and inſignificant courſes they will take in that their ſurprize, to make up, if poſſible, their own defects, by borrowing of others, that have ſouls better furniſhed with piety than theirs. And,

Here I can't paſs over a proper obſervation, in regard to the Popiſh doctrines of merit and indulgences, by which they hold it poſſible, that one man can merit, and be freed from the guilt of his ſin, by the ſufferings, mortification, or ſuperabundant virtues of another. This is a deluding doctrine, but the real ſenſe of what is taught under the title of merit and indulgences, though condemned as fooliſh and vain, and indeed a certain means entirely to exclude thoſe that depend thereon from the kingdom of Heaven. For no man can make an agreement with God for another, as the Scripture expreſly teacheth, and indeed that is included in the anſwer made by the five wiſe virgins, as follows;

Ver. 9. — Not ſo, leaſt there be not enough for us, and you.] This anſwer ſhews, that it is utterly groundleſs, to expect at the Great Day of Retribution, when every man ſhall be rewarded, according to his own works, to fare the better for the ſanctity of others, and that every man hath enough to do to work out his own ſalvation, and muſt keep his lamp alive with his own oil, or muſt nouriſh his ſoul with his own virtue; for there was never, nor ever ſhall be any mere man, ſo holy and excellent in the ſight of God, but muſt return this ſame anſwer, as the wiſe virgins did, to ſuch as ſhould beg them to beſtow ſome of their virtues or merits upon them; for when man has done all in his power to ſerve God, and to ſave his ſoul, he has done no more than he is in duty bound; nay, all his works without God's grace would avail him nothing, for our deeds are but as filthy rags in the ſight of God. And,

Therefore, I add, if this be true, what will become of the Popiſh works of ſupererogation? If the beſt man in the world can have but as much as may ſuffice to ſecure their own ſalvation, through God's infinite mercy, and Chriſt's all-ſufficient merits, where can it be pretended, that there is any left for him to beſtow it upon others, who have not cultivated that grace offered to them in God's Holy Word and Sacraments. Yet, though this doctrine is ſo contrary to reaſon and Scripture, they will ſupport it; becauſe it fills their bags with riches, perſuading the dying ſinner, that the Church has great ſtore of other mens merits, in her treaſury, which he may purchaſe for a round ſum of money, to be expended in maſſes and indulgences, the great ſupport of a trading prieſthood. But Chriſt has guarded againſt this part of thei craft in the next verſe. For,

Ver. 10. — While they went to buy the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was ſhut.] Here by the ſudden coming of the bridegroom, while thoſe fooliſh virgins, went about ſo unlikely an employment, as then immediately to furniſh their lamps with oil, which before were unregarded and ſuffered to go out, and the door before they were provided, being ſhut, is lively repreſented the danger or invalidity, generally ſpeaking of a death-bed repentance, that it is almoſt too late to begin to be good, when the bridegroom comes, and thoſe that would enter with him into the marriage-chamber muſt be ready, and prepared by a previous courſe of holy living, and that for ſome conſiderable thing.

——— They that were ready went in with him to the marriage.] This is the great happineſs of the ſincerely good, who, by holy living, are ready and prepared for their departure hence into the world of ſpirits. For, as there was great preparation made to receive the bridegroom among the Jews, as noted above; ſo the joys of the higheſt Heavens, which are the marriage-chamber of this Divine Bridegroom, our Saviour, in the ſociety of innumerable ſaints, holy ſpirits and Angels, are prepared for thoſe that love our Lord Jeſus in ſincerity and truth, and by a conſtant holy life, are ready to leave theſe earthly habitations, and enter with him into that Holy Place, where they ſhall enjoy a moſt bliſsful eternity, for ever ſinging to the praiſe and honour of that glorious name, in which all the nations of the world are bleſſed, "praiſing God and ſaying, Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his Wife hath made herſelf ready; and bleſſed are they which are called to the marriage-ſupper of the lamb," Rev. xix. 7, 9.

Ver. 12. But he anſwered and ſaid, Verily, I ſay unto you, I know you not.] You have read, that after the bridegroom was entred with the wiſe virgins, that the door was ſhut, ver. 10. That no others might come in to partake of the joys of the marriage-feaſt. So that when the fooliſh virgins returned and ſaid from without to the bridegroom, Lord, Lord, open to us, ver. 11. he replied in the words of the text, I know you not, which gives us a true deſcription of the remedileſs condition of thoſe, whom death and judgment ſurprize unawares, and not prepared for it by a holy life. You ſee they may cry, Lord! Lord! long enough in the bitterneſs of their ſouls, and the anguiſh of their heart, and profeſs, that they believe in him, and are his diſciples, or called by his name, yea, that they have eat and drunk in his preſence, and that he hath taught in their ſtreets, &c. but nevertheleſs, except they can ſhew the teſtimonial of a conſtant perſevering piety, Chriſt will anſwer them, "I know ye not whence ye are, depart from me all ye that work iniquity."

Ver. 14. — A man travelling into a far country, who called his own ſervants, and delivered unto them his goods.] This parable ſhews, that Chriſt being about to leave this world, and to aſcend into Heaven, after he had finiſhed the great work of our redemption, called his own diſciples, and enabled them with ſufficient grace, and the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit, to perform that duty and ſervice, which he requires of them in his abſence.

Ver. 15. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his ſeveral ability, &c.] To inſtruct us, that God affords his grace according to mens natural capacity of ſerving him, and to the kind and degree of ſervice that he thereupon expects from them.

Ver. 16. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the ſame, and made them other five talents.] Which ſhews, that according to the meaſure of grace and ſupernatural aſſiſtance, that men have received, ſo ſhould their improvement be, and that faithful Chriſtians, will be careful to make ſuch improvement.

Ver. 18. But he that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his Lord's money.] Such is the inexcuſable ſloth and idleneſs of wicked men, who will not take ſo much pains as to improve, tho' but charged with one talent, in order for their ſalvation.

Ver. 19. — After a long time, the Lord of theſe Servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.] This points to the day of Judgment, when Chriſt will come at the end of the world to enquire into every man's works, to reward and puniſh as he finds juſt occaſion.

Ver. 21. — Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.] Here is expreſſed the reward of the righteous in the kingdom of heaven prepared for them ſince the foundation of the world.

Ver. 24. — Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, &c.] This whole ſpeech of the wicked and ſlothful ſervant is an emblem of thoſe thoughts and diſcourſes, which too many have of God and his religion, as if it were impoſſible to bare his yoke and keep his commandments, he, ſay they, exacting ſuch unreaſonable ſervice from us: But this is only to excuſe one wickedneſs by another, and ſhews the wretched ſhifts ill men are put to, when they have the modeſty to endeavour to palliate the great neglect of duty to God, as appears by the Lord's anſwer, ver. 26.

Ver. 26. — Thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant, thou knoweſt that I reap where I ſowed not, &c.] By which is repreſented the neceſſity of mens improving their talent for that very reaſon (were it true) which they, the wicked are apt to plead in excuſe, for their ſlothful and ſupine negligence. For to him that looks upon God as ſo auſtere a Being, there is more than ordinary obligation to improve what he hath committed to his truſt for that purpoſe, and becauſe man eſteems God as an hard and ſevere maſter; therefore to be idle and negligent in his ſervice, to argue ad hominem, is ridiculous; and a very prepoſterous courſe, looking, as if the offender had not a mind to reconcile himſelf to God, but to provoke and bring down the Divine wrath upon his diſobedient ſoul. On the contrary,

God is ſo very far from being an unreaſonable ſevere maſter, that he is a moſt indulgent parent, and commands nothing but what is very practicable, and highly conducive to the good and happineſs of his creatures. "For look, ſays the Pſalmiſt, how high the heaven is in compariſon of the earth, ſo great is alſo the goodneſs and mercy of God towards them that love him and keep his commands;" which ſhould create a filial love and reverence in us towards him, rather than a ſlaviſh dread. But nevertheleſs, he is not ſo unreaſonably fond, as to paſs by the provocations of obſtinate irreclaimable rebels, and to clear the impenitent and guilty, who have heinouſly offended him, and yet take no care to amend, and recover his favour. For, as it follows, though he does not reap where he did not ſow, nor gather where he did not ſtrew; yet he expects a due improvement of what he commits to our charge, and is ready likewiſe proportionably to reward our induſtry. Note alſo, When it is here ſaid, Thou knoweſt that I was an auſtere man reaping what I did not ſow: It does not grant, that the Lord was truly ſo, but it is an argument out of his own mouth to condemn the ſervant for his not acting ſuitable to his own hard conceptions of his maſter; Luke xix. 22. Nor do theſe words, Thou oughteſt to have put my money to the exchangers, ſhew that Chriſt approved of that horrid ſin of uſury; but only that he, who harboured ſuch a ſordid opinion of his maſter, ſhould have uſed his talent accordingly, that ſo he might have had his own with uſury, and the ſervant might not be blameable.

Ver. 28. Take therefore the talent from him, &c.] This verſe ſhews how God deals with the children of men: how he diſpenſes his grace: For, by this it appears, that he deprives thoſe of his grace, and the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit, who ſo much neglect it, and make no uſe of it to the great ends, for which it was given them, (viz.) his glory and their own happineſs; and making ſtill greater additions of his grace to ſuch as have well improved their former ſtock.

Ver. 30. Caſt therefore the unprofitable ſervant into outer darkneſs, &c.] This expreſſes the deplorable condition of the finally impenitent in the regions of eternal miſery and deſpair, who make no improvement of the talent committed to their charge; the deprivation of grace in this world, being a certain fore-runner of perdition in the other. It therefore nearly concerns every man to improve carefulle the talent he has received; becauſe "unto every one that hath ſhall be given, and he ſhall have abundance; but from him that hath not, ſhall be taken away even that which he hath."

Ver. 31. When therefore the Son of man ſhall come in his glory, and all the Holy Angels with him.] At the day of final judgment, compared with Matt. xvi. 27. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8, 9. Jud. xiv. 15. For he ſpeaks here of the time when he ſhall gather all nations before him; ver. 32. all ſheep and goats, i. e. good and bad men; ver. 33. all that ſhall receive a ſentence of bliſs or condemnation; ver. 34—41. and of the time when they that are the bleſſed of the Father, ſhall receive the kingdom prepared for them, and when the wicked ſhall go into everlaſting puniſhment; ver. 46. which are remarkable tokens of the final judgment.

Ver. 33. And he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.] The good men, or thoſe who were to receive ſentence of pardon or abſolution, to be placed on the right hand, according to a cuſtom in the Sanhedrim; and the guilty were ordered to the left ſide of the judge in the ſaid Jewiſh tribunal; to which Chriſt alludes in this place; ſee Maimonid. Tract. de Synedr. c. 1.

Ver. 45. Inaſmuch as ye have done it to one of the leaſt of my brethren, ye have done it to me.] For ſo cloſe is the union between Chriſt and his Church, or Members, that he looks upon the favours confered on them, as done to himſelf, and promiſes a reward for them accordingly; Matt. x. 42. And alſo threatens puniſhment to them who do neglect, and are injurious to them, as if they had been ſo to him. And therefore he ſpeaks to a perſecuting Saul thus, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me; Acts ix. 4. As if he had ſaid, ſo long as thou perſecuteſt the members of my Church, thou perſecuteſt me. Oh! how highly then ought we to eſteem and love him, who ſo eſteemed and loved us.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 The rulers conſpire againſt Chriſt. 6 The woman anointeth his head. 14 Judas ſelleth him. 17 Chriſt eateth the paſſover. 26 Inſtituteth his holy Supper. 36 Prayeth in the garden. 47 And being betrayed with a kiſs, 57 is carried to Caiaphas, 69 and denied of Peter.

AND it came to paſs, when Jeſus had finiſhed all theſe ſayings, he ſaid unto his diſciples,

2 Ye know that after two days is the feaſt of the paſſover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 Then aſſembled together the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes, and the elders of the people, upon the palace of the high-prieſt, who was called Caiaphas.

4 And conſulted that they might take Jeſus by ſubtilty, and kill him.

5 But they ſaid, Not on the feaſt day, leſt there be an uprore among the people.

6 ¶ Now when Jeſus was in Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the leper,

7 There came unto him a woman having an alabaſter-box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he ſat at meat.

8 But when his diſciples ſaw it, they had indignation, ſaying, To what purpoſe is this waſte?

9 For this ointment might have been ſold for much, and given to the poor.

10 When Jeſus underſtood it, he ſaid unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? for ſhe hath wrought a good work upon me.

11 For ye have the poor always with you, but me ye have not always.

12 For in that ſhe hath poured this ointment on my body, ſhe did it for my burial.

13 Verily I ſay unto you, Whereſoever this goſpel ſhall be preached in the whole world, there ſhall alſo this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

14 ¶ Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iſcariot, went unto the chief prieſts,

15 And ſaid unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of ſilver.

16 And from that time he ſought opportunity to betray him.

17 ¶ Now the firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, the diſciples came to Jeſus, ſaying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the paſſover?

18 And he ſaid, Go into the city to ſuch a man, and ſay unto him, The Maſter ſaith, My time is at hand, I will keep the paſſover at thy houſe with my diſciples.

19 And the diſciples did as Jeſus had appointed them, and they made ready the paſſover.

20 Now when the even was come, he ſat down with the twelve.

21 And as they did eat, he ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, that one of you ſhall betray me.

22 And they were exceeding ſorrowful, and began every one of them to ſay unto him, Lord, is it I?

23 And he anſwered and ſaid, He that dippeth his hand with me in the diſh, the ſame ſhall betray me.

24 The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but wo unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed: it had been good for that man, if he had not been born.

25 Then Judas, which betrayed him, anſwered, and ſaid, Maſter, is it I? He ſaid unto him, Thou haſt ſaid.

26 ¶ And as they were eating, Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed it, and brake it, and gave it to the diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat; this is my body.

27 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, ſaying, Drink ye all of it:

28 For this is my blood of the new teſtament, which is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins.

29 But I ſay unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Fathers kingdom.

30 And when they had ſung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

31 Then ſaith Jeſus unto them, All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night: for it is written, I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep of the flock ſhall be ſcattered abroad.

32 But after I am riſen again, I will go before you into Galilee.

33 Peter anſwered and ſaid unto him, Though all men ſhall be offended becauſe of thee, yet will I never be offended.

34 Jeſus ſaid unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, that this night before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice.

35 Peter ſaid unto him, Though I ſhould die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewiſe alſo ſaid all the diſciples.

36 ¶ Then cometh Jeſus with them unto a place called Gethſemane, and ſaith unto the diſciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37 And he took with him Peter, and the two ſons of Zebedee, and began to be ſorrowful, and very heavy.

38 Then ſaith he unto them, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.

39 And he went a little further, and fell on his face, and prayed, ſaying, O my Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me: nevertheleſs, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

40 And he cometh unto the diſciples, and findeth them aſleep, and ſaith unto Peter, What could ye not watch with me one hour?

41 Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the ſpirit indeed is willing, but the fleſh is weak.

42 He went away again the ſecond time, and prayed, ſaying, O my Father, if this cup may not paſs away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

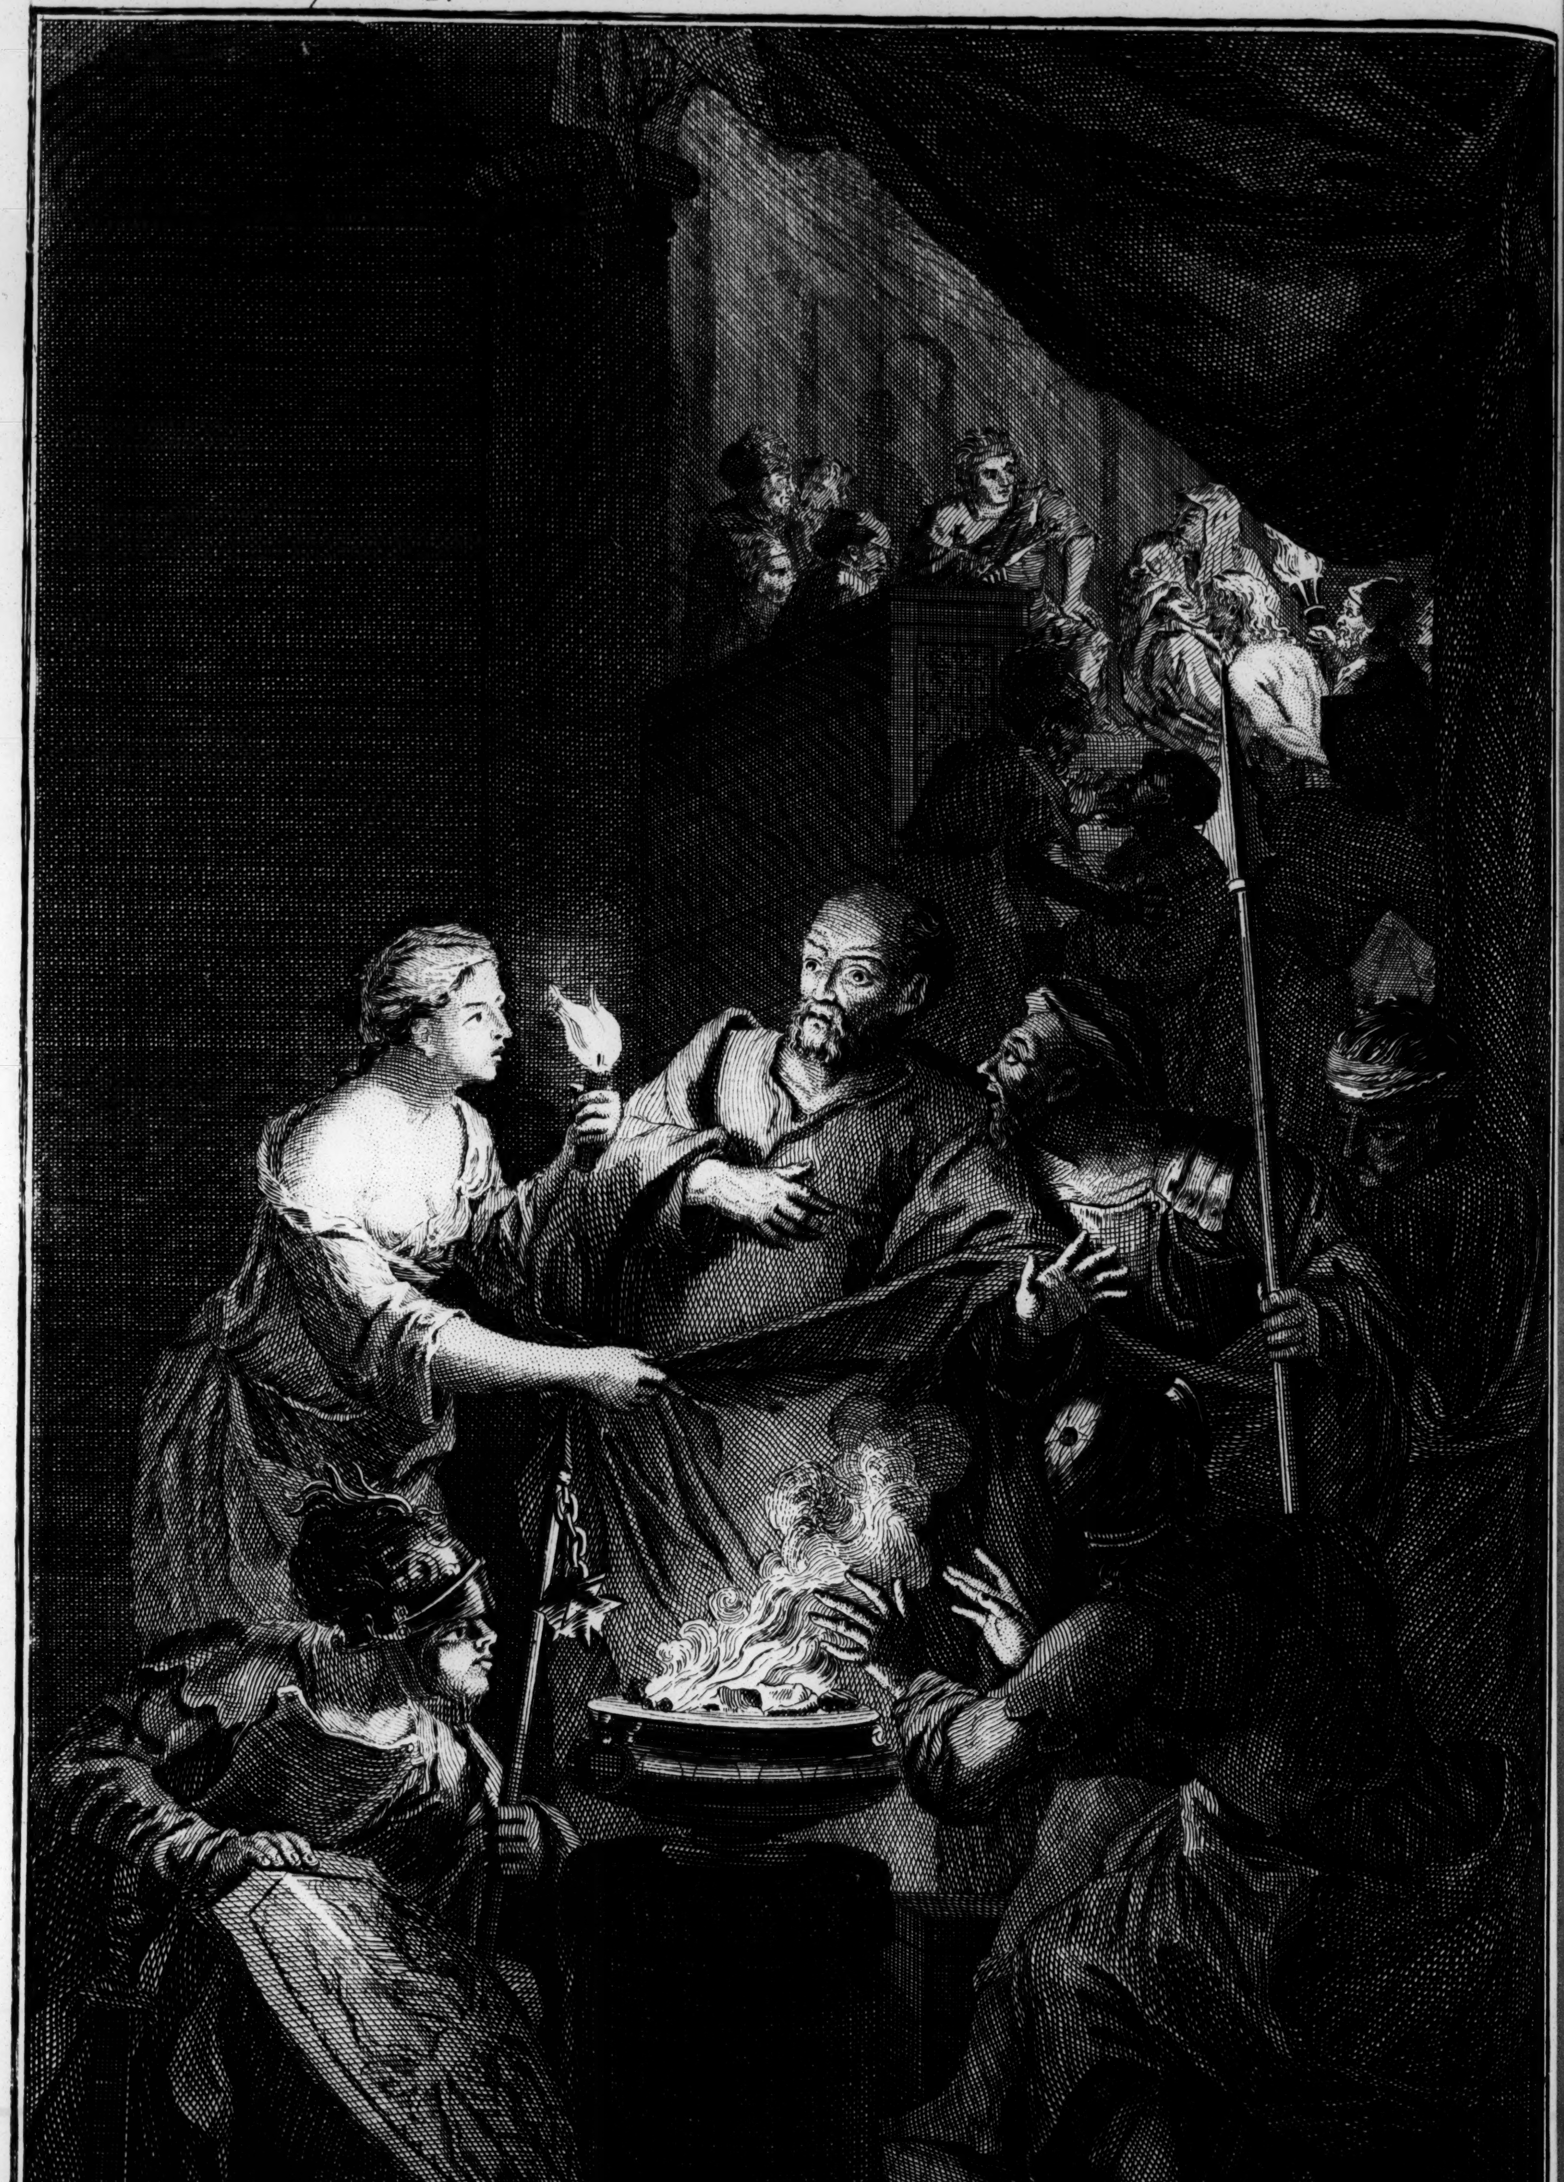
St. Matthew Chap. XXVI.



I. Basire sculp.

Peter denieth his Master.

43 And he came and found them aſleep again: for their eyes were heavy.

44 And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, ſaying the ſame words.

45 Then cometh he to his diſciples, and ſaith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your reſt; behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners.

46 Riſe, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

47 ¶ And while he yet ſpake, lo, Judas one of the twelve came, and with him a great multitude with ſwords and ſtaves from the chief prieſts and elders of the people.

48 Now he that betrayed him, gave them a ſign, ſaying, Whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, that ſame is he, hold him faſt.

49 And forthwith he came to Jeſus, and ſaid, Hail maſter; and kiſſed him.

50 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they and laid hands on Jeſus, and took him.

51 And behold, one of them which were with Jeſus, ſtretched out his hand, and drew his ſword, and ſtruck a ſervant of the high-prieſts, and ſmote off his ear.

52 Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Put up again thy ſword into his place: for all they that take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword.

53 Thinkeſt thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he ſhall preſently give me more than twelve legions of angels?

54 But how then ſhall the ſcriptures be fulfilled, that thus it muſt be?

55 In that ſame hour ſaid Jeſus to the multitudes, Are ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves for to take me? I ſat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

56 But all this was done, that the ſcriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled, Then all the diſciples forſook him, and fled.

57 ¶ And they that had laid hold on Jeſus, led him away to Caiaphas the high-prieſt, where the ſcribes and the elders were aſſembled.

58 But Peter followed him afar off, unto the high-prieſts palace, and went in, and ſat with the ſervants to ſee the end.

59 Now the chief prieſts and elders, and all the council, ſought falſe witneſs againſt Jeſus to put him to death,

60 But found none: yea, though many falſe witneſſes came, yet found they none. At the laſt came two falſe witneſſes,

61 And ſaid, This fellow ſaid, I am able to deſtroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days.

62 And the high-prieſt aroſe, and ſaid unto him, Anſwereſt thou nothing? what is it which theſe witneſs againſt thee?

63 But Jeſus held his peace. And the high-prieſt anſwered and ſaid unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt the Son of God.

64 Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thou haſt ſaid: nevertheleſs I ſay unto you, Hereafter ſhall ye ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

65 Then the high-prieſt rent his clothes, ſaying, He hath ſpoken blaſphemy; what further need have we of witneſſes? behold, now ye have heard his blaſphemy.

66 What think ye? They anſwered and ſaid, He is guilty of death.

67 Then did they ſpit in his face, and buffeted him, and others ſmote him with the palms of their hands.

68 Saying, Propheſy unto us, thou Chriſt, who is he that ſmote thee?

69 ¶ Now Peter ſat without in the palace: and a damſel came unto him, ſaying, Thou alſo waſt with Jeſus of Galilee.

70 But he denied before them all, ſaying, I know not what thou ſayeſt.

71 And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid ſaw him, and ſaid unto them that were there, This fellow was alſo with Jeſus of Nazareth.

72 And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man.

73 And after a while came unto him they that ſtood by, and ſaid to Peter, Surely thou alſo art one of them, for thy ſpeech bewrayeth thee.

74 Then began he to curſe and to ſwear, ſaying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew.

75 And Peter remembred the words of Jeſus, which ſaid unto him, Before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

CHAP. XXVII.

1 Chriſt is delivered bound to Pilate. 3 Judas hangeth himſelf. 19 Pilate admoniſhed of his wife, 24 waſheth his hands: 26 and looſeth Barabbas. 29 Chriſt is crowned with thorns, 34 crucified, 40 reviled, 50 dieth, and is buried: 66 His ſepulchre is ſealed, and watched.

WHEN the morning was come, all the chief prieſts, and elders of the people, took counſel againſt Jeſus to put him to death.

2 And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor.

3 ¶ Then Judas which had betrayed him, when he ſaw that he was condemned, repented himſelf, and brought again the thirty pieces of ſilver to the chief prieſts and elders,

4 Saying, I have ſinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they ſaid, What is that to us? ſee thou to that.

5 And he caſt down the pieces of ſilver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himſelf.

6 And the chief prieſts took the ſilver pieces, and ſaid, It is not lawful for to put them into the treaſury, becauſe it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counſel, and bought with them the potters field to bury ſtrangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood unto this day.

9 (Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet, ſaying, And they took the thirty pieces of ſilver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Iſrael did value:

10 And gave them for the potters field, as the Lord appointed me.)

11 And Jeſus ſtood before the governor; and the governor aſked him, ſaying, Art thou the king of the Jews? And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſayeſt.

12 And when he was accuſed of the chief prieſts and elders, he anſwered nothing.

13 Then ſaith Pilate unto him, Heareſt thou not how many things they witneſs againſt thee?

14 And he anſwered him to never a word, inſomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

15 Now at that feaſt the governor was wont to releaſe unto the people a priſoner, whom they would.

16 And they had then a notable priſoner called Barabbas.

17 Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate ſaid unto them, Whom will ye that I releaſe unto you? Barabbas, or Jeſus which is called Chriſt?

18 For he knew that for envy they had delivered him.

19 ¶ When he was ſet down on the judgment-ſeat, his wife ſent unto him, ſaying, Have thou nothing to do with that juſt man: for I have ſuffered many things this day in a dream becauſe of him.

20 But the chief prieſts and elders perſwaded the multitude that they ſhould aſk Barabbas, and deſtroy Jeſus.

21 The governor anſwered and ſaid unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I releaſe unto you? They ſaid, Barabbas.

22 Pilate ſaith unto them, What ſhall I do then with Jeſus which is called Chriſt? They all ſay unto him, Let him be crucified.

23 And the governor ſaid, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, ſaying, Let him be crucified.

24 ¶ When Pilate ſaw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and waſhed his hands before the multitude, ſaying, I am innocent of the blood of this juſt perſon: ſee ye to it.

25 Then anſwered all the people, and ſaid, His blood be on us, and on our children.

26 ¶ Then releaſed he Barabbas unto them: and when he had ſcourged Jeſus, he delivered him to be crucified.

27 Then the ſoldiers of the governor took Jeſus into the common hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of ſoldiers.

28 And they ſtripped him, and put on him a ſcarlet robe.

29 ¶ And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, ſaying, Hail King of the Jews.

30 And they ſpit upon him, and took the reed, and ſmote him on the head.

31 And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on and led him away to crucify him.

32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his croſs.

33 And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to ſay, a place of a ſcull,

34 ¶ They gave him vinegar to drink, mingled with gall: and when he had taſted thereof, he would not drink.

35 And they crucified him, and parted his garments, caſting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my veſture did they caſt lots.

36 And ſitting down, they watched him there:

37 And ſet up over his head his accuſation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

38 Then were there two thieves crucified with him: one on the right hand, and another on the left.

39 ¶ And they that paſſed by, reviled him, wagging their heads.

40 And ſaying, Thou that deſtroyeſt the temple, and buildeſt it in three days, ſave thy ſelf: if thou be the Son of God, come down from the croſs.

41 Likewiſe alſo the chief prieſts mocking him, with the ſcribes, and elders, ſaid,

42 He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave: if he be the King of Iſrael, let him now come down from the croſs, and we will believe him.

43 He truſted in God; let him deliver him now if he will have him: for he ſaid, I am the Son of God.

44 The thieves alſo which were crucified with him, caſt the ſame in his teeth.

45 Now from the ſixth hour there was darkneſs over all the land until the ninth hour.

46 And about the ninth hour, Jeſus cried, with a loud voice, ſaying, Eli, Eli, lama-ſabachthani? that is to ſay, My God, My God, why haſt thou forſaken me?

47 Some of them that ſtood there, when they heard that, ſaid, This man calleth for Elias.

48 And ſtraightway one of them ran, and took a ſpunge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

49 The reſt ſaid, Let be, let us ſee whether Elias will come to ſave him.

50 ¶ Jeſus, when he had cried again, with a loud voice, yielded up the ghoſt.

51 And behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent.

52 And the graves were opened, and many bodies of ſaints which ſlept, aroſe,

53 And came out of the graves after his reſurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.

54 Now when the centurion, and they that were with him watching Jeſus, ſaw the earth-quake, and thoſe things that were done, they feared greatly, ſaying, Truly this was the Son of God.

55 And many women were there (beholding afar off) which followed Jeſus from Galilee, miniſtring unto him.

56 Among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Joſes, and the mother of Zebedees children.

57 When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joſeph, who alſo himſelf was Jeſus diſciple:

58 He went to Pilate and begged the body of Jeſus: then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered.

59 And when Joſeph had taken the body, he wrapt it in a clean linen cloth,

60 And laid it in his own new tomb which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great ſtone to the door of the ſepulchre, and departed.

61 And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary ſitting over-againſt the ſepulchre.

62 ¶ Now the next day that followed the day of the preparation, the chief prieſts and Phariſees came together unto Pilate,

63 Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver ſaid, while he was yet alive, After three days I will riſe again.

64 Command therefore that the ſepulchre be made ſure until the third day, leſt his diſciples come by night, and ſteal him away, and ſay unto the people, He is riſen from the dead: ſo the laſt error ſhall be worſe than the firſt.

65 Pilate ſaid unto them, Ye have a watch, go your way, make it as ſure as you can.

66 So they went and made the ſepulchre ſure, ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch.

CHAP. xxvi. This chapter begins the great account of our Saviour's ſufferings, agony, and ignominious death, contained in this and the following chapter, (xxvii.) But, as it ſeems to be incoherent with the preceding context of the xxvth, and many paſſages omitted by Matthew in the current narration, which would give the reader a great light into the reaſons of many particulars, which otherwiſe ſeem abrupt in this Evangeliſt, I am perſuaded, that the pious reader will be glad to have theſe deficiencies ſupplied, which I will endeavour to do by tracing the whole hiſtory from the diſcourſe which Jeſus made to his diſciples in the xxvth chapter, and 31ſt verſe, to the end. Therefore,

Jeſus having ended his parabolical diſcourſe; Matt. xxv. 31, &c. He, as his cuſtom was, went from the mount of Olives to Bethany; xxvi. 6. where he ſupped with his diſciples; John xiii. 2. which being ended, and Jeſus ſenſible that his hour was now near come, that he ſhould depart out of this world unto the father, having loved his own that were in the world, he continued his love to them unto the end, ver. 1. of which he gave them an ample teſtimony by an example of his greateſt humility and condeſcenſion; for, though he knew that the father had given all things into his hand, and that he was come from God, and was going to God again, ver. 3. yet he took upon him the moſt ſervile office that could well be performed, when he aroſe from ſupper and laid aſide his upper and looſer garments, and, girding himſelf with a towel, waſhed the feet of his diſciples with a baſon of water. In which act it is not certain with which of the diſciples he began; though it is piouſly conjectured, that Judas was the man, that by this kind and lowly act of humility and tenderneſs, he might, if not recal him from his intended treaſon, yet, at leaſt, aggravate the guilt and horror of it to him, into whoſe heart the Devil had now already put it, to betray him, which he, who knows all things, could not but know.

When it came to Peter's turn, which ſome think was the next, becauſe none refuſed but he, the reſt being admoniſhed by the check he received, he, with a tone of admiration, ſaid, Doſt thou come to waſh my feet! John xiii. 6. Jeſus anſwered him, that he knew not as yet the intention of his doing this, but that he ſhould know it hereafter; ver. 7. Peter replied, alas! I can never conſent that thou, my Lord and Maſter, ſhould ſtoop ſo low as to waſh the feet of me, thy ſervant; ver. 8. Jeſus thereupon raiſing his diſcourſe, according to his uſual manner, from outward to inward, from carnal to ſpiritual things, tells him, that if he did not cleanſe and purify his heart and inward parts, he could have no part with him, ver. 7. At which, Peter finding his miſtake, readily cried out, not my feet only Lord; but my hands, and my head alſo; ver. 9. Then Chriſt alluding perhaps to the manner of bathing, wherein the perſon bathed, being waſhed all over, doth only waſh his feet in the ſlip, or entrance into the bath, that no duſt or ſoil may ſtick on them coming out, ſaid, "He that is waſhed, needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet; but is clean every-whit:" And ye are clean by this kind of waſhing, but not all "of you from the foul thoughts of betraying me; ver. 10. For he knew who ſhould betray him;" ver. 11.

The waſhing being over, and he, having put on his garments, being ſat down amongſt them, again ſaid, "Know ye what I have done unto you?" ver. 12. or, "for what reaſon I have waſhed your feet." Ye call me Maſter and Lord, and ye ſay well; for ſo I am (ver. 13.) your maſter in teaching and inſtructing you; and your Lord in redeeming and defending you: "If I then, your Lord and Maſter, have waſhed your feet; ye alſo ought to waſh one anothers feet;" ver. 14. "For, I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you;" ver. 15. For, ſince he, whom ye acknowledge to be your Lord and Maſter, do not diſdain to do this to you, ye, who are no more than his ſervants, and ſent by him, ſhould not think much to do the like one to another; ver. 16. Jeſus having thus enforced the love which one diſciple ſhould ſhew towards another, gives them this encouragement, that whoſo keepeth this commandment, or doth theſe things, ſhall be rewarded with happineſs; ver. 17. Yet at the ſame time he adds: "I ſpeak not of you all; for I know whom I have choſen; but that Scripture is fulfilled, which ſaith, he that eateth bread with me, hath liſt up his heart againſt me;" ver. 18. alluding to the treacherous counſel of Achitophel, who in his treachery to king David, the type of Jeſus, might himſelf paſs for a type of the traitor Judas.

I tell you of his treachery, ſaid Jeſus to his diſciples, before it comes, that when it is come to paſs, ye may not be ſtaggered by it; but may be the more confirmed in your belief that I am he, the Omniſcient God; ver. 19. And then, leſt this rebuke ſhould make them fear, that the treachery of one might redound to the ſhame and diſcredit of them all; he aſſures them that he would not only continue them in his ſervice, but would account the receiving of them, his meſſengers, as done unto himſelf; ver. 20. But,

Jeſus could no longer hide the ſenſe he had of his own danger, and the abhorrence he had conceived of the traitor's crime, and therefore ſaid, that "he was troubled in ſpirit; and teſtified, and ſaid, verily, verily, I ſay unto you, that one of you ſhall betray me;" ver. 21. At which they all, both innocent and guilty, were troubled and ſtartled; ver. 22. The innocent were ſurprized with amazement and trouble, at the mention of ſo horrible an intention. The guilty was no leſs ſurprized with amazement and trouble, to find that his traiterous thoughts ſhould be diſcovered before they were ready to be executed, or even thoroughly formed in his intention.

The charge being laid in ſuch general terms, ſo as not to be applied by any, but by the traitor himſelf; they all began to clear themſelves; yet obſerve, they did not proceed in this purgation after the manner of the world; they did not endeavour to clear themſelves by caſting by inſinuation upon one another, by ſaying, Lord, is it he? or ſuch a one? or ſuch a one? But every one, in his own name, except Judas, ſaid, as becomes Chriſtians, Lord, is it I? Mark xiv. 19. Matt. xxvi. 22. To whom our Lord anſwering ſtill in a general way, ſaid, One of you twelve, that dippeth his hand with me in the diſh, the ſame ſhall betray me;" ver. 23. "But wo unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed," &c. ver. 24. Yet Judas had the impudence after this ſevere ſentence to aſk, Maſter, is it I? ver. 25. Jeſus replied, ſoftly, or at leaſt, not to be underſtood by the reſt, Thou haſt ſaid, ver. 25. Upon which Peter, who ſat farther off, beckoned to John, leaning on his Maſter's boſom, or ſitting next to him, that he ſhould aſk Jeſus who it ſhould be of whom he ſpake; John xiii. 24. John therefore ſaid unto him ſoftly, who is it? ver. 25. Jeſus alſo ſpeaking ſoftly; ſaid, "It is he, to whom I ſhall give a ſop, when I have dipped it; and when he had dipped it, he gave it to Judas Iſcariot the ſon of Simon; ver. 26. with which ſop the Devil entred into Judas; not that the ſop gave Satan entrance; but that Judas, ſenſible of his own guilt, apprehending, that by the delivery of the ſop unto him, he was detected and diſcovered to all the Apoſtles, grew more imbittered and hardened in his mind, to carry on and go through with what he had before intended. The Devil had before, by wicked ſuggeſtions, put into his heart to betray his Lord, but now ſeeing his treaſonable deſigns found out, he opened his heart to the Devil, and Satan actually entered into him, whereby he was more hotly and vehemently ſtirred up by Satan, to put in execution the horrid wickedneſs he had contrived, and that he might looſe no time, as ſoon as he had received the ſop, he went immediatly out: ver. 27. And Jeſus, who knew the inſide of his heart and the evil deſign he was going about, called after him and ſaid, That thou doſt, do quickly, yet his diſciples underſtood not for what intent he ſpake unto Judas, each putting a favourable conſtruction on what they heard, ver. 28, 29.

The traitor being quite gone, Jeſus began to rejoice with his diſciples in a full aſſurance of that glory which his approaching death would quickly bring him to; John xiii. 31. And then compaſſionately conſidering the condition of his diſciples; and the great loſs they would be at, when he ſhould be taken from them, he ſpoke to them in the moſt tender and pleaſing compellation of little children, telling them that he had but a little time to be perſonally with them, ver 33. And that in his abſence they ſhould remember how he taught them a more perfect Love of one towards another, than was to be learned from the law: a love which riſes higher, and extends farther than the common degrees and meaſures of love among mankind; as mentioned in Matt. xix. 19. and v. 44. Even ſuch a love, as brought me down from my glory, made me deny my ſelf, and has expoſed me to hardſhips, contempt and ſufferings, and even to perſevere to death it ſelf for your ſakes. This is the example I leave you of perfect love, and thus I command you, my diſciples, to love one another; ver. 34. For this will be a badge and token, and as it were my own livery upon you; whereby all men will know, that ye are my diſciples, if ye have and exerciſe this love one to another; ver. 35.

Jeſus having ſaid at ver. 33. Whither I go ye cannot come? Peter brake in upon his diſcourſe, and with his accuſtomed boldneſs, asked him, Lord, Whither goeſt thou? Jeſus anſwered, I go whither thou canſt not follow me now: but for thy comfort and encouragement, I tell thee now, thou ſhalt follow me hereafter; ver. 36. But why, Lord, ſaid Peter, cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy ſake; ver. 37. Ah! ſaid Jeſus, wilt thou lay down thy life for my ſake? Alas! Man, thou knoweſt not yet what it is to lay down thy life: thy Will outgoes thy ſtrength, and thou art not ſenſible of thy own preſent inſufficiency. For I aſſure thee, that notwithſtanding this thy ſelf-confidence, the cock ſhall not crow this next morning twice; Mark xiv. 30. till thou haſt denied me thrice; ver. 38. Matt. xxvi. 34. This was an awakening and a diſturbing word to Peter, who ſtrove always to be the firſt in the Lord's cauſe, and therefore he ſaid unto Jeſus, "Though I ſhould die with thee, yet will I not deny thee;" and to this agreed all the diſciples; ver. 35.

Jeſus having thus endeavoured to prepare his diſciples to bare his departure from them with patience and magnanimity, and with a joyful expectation of a full accompliſhment of all his promiſes; in the mean time Judas was negotiating his treachery with the chief prieſts, ſcribes and elders of the people, and the captains of thoſe bands of ſoldiers, which were appointed for the guard of the temple, and to ſee the decrees of the Sanhedrim executed, aſſembled together in the houſe or palace of Caiaphas the high-prieſt for that year; conſulting how they might take Jeſus by ſubtilty, and kill him; Matt. xxvi. 3, 4. They rejoiced at the appearance of Judas, and much more at his propoſal; ver. 15. ſo it was agreed to give him thirty pieces of ſilver, a price at which the life of the meaneſt ſervant was ſet; Exod. xxi. 32. But they concluded among themſelves, that it was not fit to attempt it on the feaſt day of the paſſover; Mark xiv. 2. which was now but two days off; Matt. xxvi. 2. So from that time that Judas had agreed with them, they ſought opportunity to betray him; ver. 16.

The next day, which was the firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, when the paſſover was to be killed, Jeſus being asked by his diſciples, where he intended to keep that feaſt and eat the paſſover, ordered Peter and John, two of his diſciples, to go into the city, and tell a man, whom they ſhould ſee with a pitcher of water, that he intended to keep the paſſover at his houſe: and there, added he, make ready for us; Mark xiv. 13, 14, 15.

When the diſciples had found the man and made the chamber ready, they returned to give an account thereof, and were received with a conſolatory diſcourſe with their Maſter, who, probably obſerving in his diſciples, an unuſual ſadneſs, from the hint he had ſo lately given them, of his being like to be ſuddenly taken from them, and that by the treachery of one of them, ſaid, Let not your heart be troubled; John xiv. 1. Bare up your ſpirits that ye be not overwhelmed with grief and ſorrow, or deſpair, when the time of my departure ſhall come. For if ye but retain this faith, truſt and confidence that I am God, I both can and will, provide for, and take care of you, when I ſhall be perſonally gone from you; ib.

Jeſus, to convince them that he required nothing unreaſonable in this belief, ſays, in my houſe are many manſions, places of reſt, peace and ſafety, and I go to prepare a place or manſion there for you. And I will come again, and receive you unto my ſelf; that where I am, there ye may be alſo: And thus I have anſwered Peter's demand, for by this ye may know whither I go, and the way by which I go; ver. 2, 3, 4.

How clear ſoever this anſwer may ſeem for the purpoſe intended, to ſhew his diſciples that he was going to Heaven through perſecutions and death; Matt. xvi. 21. Luke ix. 22. they perhaps more dull than ordinary through grief and fear of loſing him; or, not eaſily letting go the pleaſing notion they had miſconceived of an outward and temporal kingdom for him, and conſequently for themſelves in his ſervice, hearing him now ſpeak of his father's houſe, in which were many manſions, and that he was going to prepare a place therein for them, and then to come and fetch them thither; could not underſtand any thing elſe, but ſome ſtately or ſtrong building, a royal palace, or impregnable tower or fortreſs, wherein their Maſter and they might be skreen'd from their enemies, and live together in peace and pleaſure. But they were all at a loſs where this deſireable palace could ſtand. Wherefore

Thomas, one of the twelve, in the name of them all, ſaid unto Jeſus, "Lord, we know not whither thou goeſt; and how then can we know the way?" John xiv. 5. To which our Lord, intent to improve their underſtanding, lets fall the diſcourſe of the place he was going to, and the way to it; and from the words of Thomas, takes occaſion to tell them which was the right, the ready, and indeed the only way for them to walk in, if they would come to his father; for he ſaid, I my ſelf am the way, the truth, and the life, the true way to eternal life, and no man cometh unto the father, but by me; ver. 6. or, except he follows me, walks in my ſteps, makes my life the example and pattern of his own; walks as I walk in holineſs and innocency; in obedience and ſubmiſſion to all the commands of God the Father; in ſelf-denial and patient-ſuffering for the truth, when called unto the teſtimony thereof as I now am. He muſt alſo believe in me; ver. 1. that I am truly God, as well as truly man; and that all my promiſes ſhall be truly and certainly made good and performed; he muſt finally ſeek life in me; unto whom my Father hath given to have life in my ſelf, as he hath life in himſelf; John v. 26. Then he gently corrects their ignorance, ſaying, if ye had known me rightly, or truly in my Divine Nature and Properties, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo. Yet he added a lenitive, leſt they ſhould be too much dejected; from henceforth ye know him and have ſeen him; John xiv. 7. as oft as ye ſee me; for I and the Father am one. Nevertheleſs,

They did not as yet underſtand, for Philip, another of the twelve, immediately replied, ſhew us the Father and we ſhall be ſatisfied, and trouble you with no more queſtions; ver. 8. which dulneſs and indifferency drew a more quick reply from Jeſus, who ſaid, have I been ſo long with you, and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip? I tell thee plainly, that whoever hath ſeen me with the ſpiritual eye, as the only begotten of the Father, hath ſeen the Father alſo; ver. 9. and "how ſayeſt thou then ſo ignorantly, ſhew us the Father; ib. Believeſt thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? How canſt thou chuſe but believe it? For the words that I ſpake unto you, I ſpeak not of my ſelf; but the Father, in whom I am, he ſpeaketh through me. Neither do I of my ſelf the works which ye have ſeen me do; but the Father who dwelleth in me, he doth the works by me, ſo if you cannot believe me upon my word; at leaſt believe me for the very words ſake, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, he that believeth with a true faith on me, the works that I do, ſhall he do alſo, and greater works than theſe ſhall he do; becauſe I go unto my Father, who, as he can do all things, ſo he will do any thing that I ſhall requeſt of him. Whatſoever therefore ye ſhall ask in my name, that I will do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son: by manifeſting his love to the Son, in granting whatſoever he deſireth of him. If therefore, I ſay, ye ſhall ask any thing in my name, I will do it; provided that you are not only ſorry for me in my ſufferings; but that you love me indeed, and heartily, which will be manifeſted by keeping my commandments; John xiv. 10——15. For, if you love me, keep my commandments; ver. 15. and that will engage me to pray the Father that he ſhall give you another comforter, who may abide with you for ever; even the ſpirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, i. e. in me while I am with you, and ſhall be, or dwell in you, when I am gone from you, and the Holy Ghoſt according to the Prophecy by Joel, ch. ii. 28. ſhall be plentifully poured forth upon you; ver. 16, 17. Therefore, Take it for granted, that I will not leave you comfortleſs, like orphans or friendleſs children, deſtitute of any to help you, defend, take care of, and to inſtruct you. For, in a ſhort time, I will return to you; and though in a while, the world ſhall ceaſe to ſee me; yet ye ſhall ſtill ſee me by the eye of faith, and ſhall know that I live; becauſe ye ſhall be kept alive by me; for, becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo, ver. 19. This ſpeech again gave riſe to another queſtion. For,

Judas the brother of James, willing to be farther informed in what manner they, his diſciples, might ſee him, when the world could not, asked him, "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifeſt thy ſelf unto us, and not unto the world?" ver. 22. Jeſus anſwered, that he is manifeſted to his diſciples in, and by his word, which was of manifeſtation the world was not then, at leaſt, capable of, ver. 23, 24.

Theſe things, added he, having this opportunity, I have ſpoken unto you before I go hence, ver. 25. But the comforter, which is the Holy Ghoſt, whom the Father will ſend in my name, he ſhall teach you all things neceſſary for you to know, as well for the inſtruction of others, as for your own defence, and though now you are ſo dull of apprehenſion, and forgetful of my inſtructions and explications, ſhall bring all things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid unto you at this, or at any other time, ver. 26. Then

Drawing to a cloſe of his preſent diſcourſe, he adds this word of comfort, Peace I leave with you. And that they might not miſtake what ſort of peace he meant, and ſo be diſappointed, and ſtarted, when troubles and ſufferings ſhould fall upon them, he explains it, by ſaying, my peace, inward peace; peace of mind; peace of conſcience; that peace that will bare up the ſpirit through and over all troubles, afflictions, temptations and dangers; that peace I give unto you; which as it is not the world's peace, ſo I give it you not as the world giveth, and taketh back in a moment; but my peace ſhall never depart from you, if ye do not depart from me, ver. 27. Therefore,

Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid, for as ye have heard me ſay unto you, I go away; ſo ye have alſo heard me ſay, I come again unto you. I indeed go away outwardly, as to my bodily preſence, and come again inwardly, in ſpirit. And therefore, if ye love me underſtandingly, and with true judgment, ye would rejoice, becauſe I ſaid, I go to my Father, for my Father in his paternal relation is greater than I, ver. 27, 28. And,

Now I have told you of my ſufferings and death before it come to paſs; that when it is come to paſs, ye may believe that I am God, one with my Father, and ſo may not be terrified or ſhaken in mind; but hereafter I will, or ſhall, not have opportunity to talk much with you; for Satan, the prince of this world, cometh to ſet and aſſault me, though he had nothing in me to work upon. But, added he, that the world may know that I love the Father, and am perfectly reſigned, in a ſubmiſſive obedience to all his commands, eſpecially that of laying down my life for the redemption of mankind, ariſe, let us go hence, and prepare for it.

Then going into the city, to the houſe appointed for his eating the paſſover in, when the hour of the evening was come for his eating the paſſover, (ſee Exod. xii. 6. and the notes on Matt. xiv. 15, and 23:) he ſat down with the twelve Apoſtles, Matt. xxvi. 20. Therefore, it is plain, that Judas was returned from his wicked company and engagement to wait an opportunity, how they, his accomplices, might take Jeſus in the abſence of the people. But,

Who, without amazement and horror, can think of the unparalelled impudence of Judas, who having but juſt before ſold his maſter to the murdering Jews, and, in all likelihood, having the price of him in his pocket, could have the face to come and ſit down with his maſter at the ſame table, and eat with him out of the ſame diſh. O deviliſh hardineſs! not to be equalled by any thing, but the inimitable patience, and tranſcendent goodneſs of our Bleſſed Lord, in ſuffering the perfidious traitor to ſit down with him at the ſame table, and to dip with him in the ſame diſh, without inflicting upon him ſome eminent puniſhment; who could as eaſily by a Divine ſtroke, have ſtruck him immediately dead, as he had before by his Divine Word, raiſed others from death to life. But

Our meek Lord, aſſoon as he was ſat down with the twelve, Luke xxii. 14, ſaid unto them without any note of diſtinction, with deſire have I deſired to eat this paſſover with you before I ſuffer, ver. 15. for I tell you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God, ver. 16. Then he took the cup and gave thanks, and ſaid, take this, and divide it among your ſelves; for I ſay unto you, I will not drink of this fruit of the vine, Matt. xxvi. 29. until the day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom, ib. or the kingdom of God, Luke xxii. 17. And he took bread and gave thanks, and brake it and gave unto them, ſaying, this is my body, which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me, ver. 19. Likewiſe alſo the cup after ſupper, ſaying, this cup is the New Teſtament in my Blood, which is ſhed for you, ver. 20. for many, Mark xiv. 24. for the remiſſion of ſins, Matt. xxvi. 28.

Supper being now over and the table drawn, they, after the manner of the Jews, ſung an hymn or ſong of praiſe and thankſgiving to God, Matt. xxvi. 30. Mark xiv. 26. After which it will be proper immediately to place that diſcourſe, which Luke records to have paſſed about this time, between our Lord and Peter, in which he advertiſed Simon Peter, to beware of yielding to the ſuggeſtions of Satan, and to repent forthwith, if he ſhould chance to be overcome by temptation; then he reminds him again of the denial which he had ſpoken of before, in John xiii. 36. Then,

Intending to give them a cloſe hint of the eminent danger, they muſt expect to meet with, in the general and extreme calamities and miſeries that were coming upon that nation; to encourage them to go on ſteadily in his ſervice, without fear or ſurprize, from the experience they had already had of his providential care of them, he asks them, when I ſent you without purſe and ſcript and ſhoes, Matt. x. 9. lacked ye any thing? They anſwered, nothing, Luke xxii. 35. But now replied he, your trial will be ſo great, that he that hath a purſe, will have need enough to take it, and his ſcript alſo; and he that hath no ſword will find more want of a ſword, than of his garment; for, as he continues, I ſay unto you, that this that is written, "and he was reckoned among the tranſgreſſors," (Iſa. liii. 12.) muſt yet be accompliſhed in me; for the things that have been foretold concerning me, are very near to have an end, ver. 36.

His diſciples here again miſapprehending the ſcope of this diſcourſe, ſaid, behold here are two ſwords, ver. 38. thinking that he had put them upon providing for his and their own defence. But he replied, it is enough; or I have experienced your ignorance long enough, I forewarn you by the metaphors of purſe, ſcript and ſword, to prepare for thoſe diſmal and diſtreſſing times, that ſhall enſue after my death, and ye ignorantly ſuppoſe I bid you provide outward or offenſive weapons.

Now Jeſus aroſe with his twelve diſciples, and it is probable that Judas left them about this time, underſtanding that they were going alone to the mount of Olives. When in the way it is conjectured, that he entertained the other eleven diſciples, with that very ſententious and excellent diſcourſe, which is recorded in the 15th and 16th chapters of John, full of Divine Inſtructions, fatherly admonitions, repeated exhortations to brotherly love, timely forewarnings of approaching dangers, trials and ſufferings, encouraging promiſes of Divine ſupport therein, and to the end, beſides many other ſweet conſolatory expreſſions, at the end of which he concluded, with that Heavenly prayer contained in the ſixteenth chapter of John, and this was near to the brook or valley of Cedron, John xviii. 1.

After this he begins again to ſhew them how little effect he expected in them from theſe admonitions and good inſtructions, he plainly tells them, all ye ſhall be offended, be ſurprized with fear, and forſake me, becauſe of my ſufferings this night, according to the Prophecy of Zechariah xiii. 7. (ſee the notes) yet, ſays he, when I am riſen again, I will, as a ſhepherd goes before his ſheep, go before you into Galilee, Mark xiv. 28. Peter hereupon renewed his proteſtations of fidelity, never to forſake him, Matt. xxvi. 33. To which Jeſus anſwered as he had done before, John xiii. 38. that he would not only forſake, but deny him, Matt. xxvi. 34. which wound Peter up to that height of zeal, that he with great vehemency proteſted, if I die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wiſe, ver. 35. To which all the reſt aſſented with the like declaration. Now

Jeſus was arrived at the garden of Gethſemane, or olive-preſs belonging to the mount of Olives. It was in this garden, where our Saviour prayed by himſelf, and beginning to be ſorrowful, and very heavy, he ſaid unto Peter, and John, my ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death, and falling on his face, prayed, that if it were poſſible the hour might paſs from him, Matt. xxvi. 36—40. Upon which there came an Angel from Heaven and ſtrengthened him, Luke xxii. 43.

Then it was that he returned from his place of ſolitary prayer to the foreſaid diſciples, whom he had ordered to pray, leſt they entred into temptation, Luke xxii. 40. and finding them aſleep, rebuked them gently, ver. 46. and turning to them all, repeated his cautionary counſel, watch ye and pray leſt ye enter into temptation, adding as a ſtrong motive thereunto, the ſpirit truly is ready and willing, but the fleſh is weak, Mark xiv. 38. Then Going from them a ſecond time, he prayed again much after the ſame manner as before; but with more earneſtneſs, by reaſon of the agony that was upon him, which forced from him great drops of blood to fall down like ſweat to the ground, Luke xxii. 44. Yet

Under all this agony, his entire reſignation of his own, to the will of his Father was ſo great, that he concluded, O my Father, if this cup may not paſs away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done, Matt. xxvi. 42. This he repeated a third time with the ſame ſubmiſſion, 44. And then,

The agony under which he had laboured, being taken off, he comes again to his diſciples, and letting them know how they had loſt their ſeaſon, and ſlept away their time, wherein they ſhould have watched and prayed with him, he tells them, that they may now ſleep on, and take their reſt, (if they could, for this he ſpoke ironically,) knowing that they would ſoon meet with that which would keep them awake. For, ſaid he, the hour is come, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners. Wherefore, added he, riſe up, let us go, lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand, ver. 45, 46.

The word was not well out of his mouth, before the traitor Judas came in ſight; who being one of the twelve, was well acquainted with this retirement of Jeſus, becauſe that was the uſual place whither he reſorted with his diſciples, ver. 47. He was attended by ſome of the upper rank of the prieſts, Phariſees and elders of the people, with the captains of the temple, and a band of Roman ſoldiers, beſides a great multitude of the mob or common people, bringing lanthorns and torches with them, and armed with ſwords, ſtaves, and other weapons.

The traitor advancing to kiſs Jeſus, which was a token to his attendants whom they ſhould ſeize, received this courteous queſtion from him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? In which Chriſt does not ſhew his ignorance of the traitor's deſign, but reproves him for the wickedneſs of his undertaking. But this wrought no remorſe upon Judas, he executed his agreement, and the multitude advanced, ver. 48, 49, 50. So that Peter drew his ſword, and cut off the ear of the high-prieſt's ſervant, Malchus, who, perhaps, was a buſy active fellow, and endeavoured to ingratiate himſelf with his maſter, by his apprehending of Jeſus, Luke xxii. 49 Matt. xxvi. 51. Mark xiv. 47. But Jeſus was ſo far from approving this officious act of Peter's zeal, that he bid him put up his ſword, &c. Matt. xxvi. 52. and then aſks him, The cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it? John xviii. 11. As much as to ſay, art thou ſo little ſenſible of the end of my coming into the world, and of the work that I have to do, before I go out of the world, that thou wouldſt oppoſe providence, and diſappoint the end of my coming? If that was my intention, I need not be obliged to thy aſſiſtance and ſword; for I would have thee know, that if I ſhould aſk, my Father would preſently deliver me out of this diſtreſs, by a ſufficient ſtrength and power, though it required twelve legions of Angels, Matt. xxvi. 53. But how then, added he, ſhall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it muſt be, ver. 54. Then, that he might to the very laſt continue as an example of doing good to our enemies, he touched Malchus's ear, and healed him; thereby acquainting Peter, that his will was not to fight with the ſword, and giving the multitude an evidence both of his Divine Goodneſs and Power, Luke xxii. 51. And knowing all things that ſhould come upon him, he ſtept forwards to thoſe that were come to apprehend him, and aſked them, whom ſeek ye? and they anſwering, Jeſus of Nazareth; replied, I am he, John xviii. 4, 5. This was a word with power, and ſhewed him to be a king indeed, Eccleſ. viii. 4. For he had no ſooner uttered theſe words, I am he, but they went backward, and fell to the ground, ver. 6.

Any but ſuch hardened wretches as theſe would have deſiſted from their wicked enterprize at ſuch a rebuke as this, which was enough to over-rule their envy, and to make them depart. But they, too much hardened in evil, egged on by the rulers of their nation, and headed by the traitor Judas, John xviii. 4. were ſo obſtinate as to riſe up, and advance again. Jeſus no wiſe ſtarted at their attempt, aſked them again, whom ſeek ye? they anſwered as before, Jeſus of Nazareth; what ſays ye, have I not told you before, that I am he? and you may take me, but let theſe my followers go their way, ver. 8. Becauſe I have ſaid to my Father, "of them which thou gaveſt me, have I loſt none,' John xvii. 12. Then,

He turning to the chief prieſts, elders of the people, &c. ſpoke to them with indignation concerning the manner of their coming to apprehend him like a thief with ſwords and ſtaves. I ſat daily with you in the temple, ſaid he, teaching, and ye did not ſtretch forth a hand againſt me, but this is the hour or time, in which the power of darkneſs is let looſe to work all iniquity againſt me, through you, Luke xxii. 52. Yet, they did not mind what he ſaid, for the band of ſoldiers, with their captain, and the officers of the Jews without more ado, took hold of Jeſus, and bound him; which ſo affected all his diſciples, that, though they had but juſt before engaged to ſtand by him, and live and die with him, forſook him and fled, John xviii. 12. Mark xiv. 51. It is feaſible to think, that in ſuch a guard there was no need to bind Jeſus; but this was done by the direction of Judas the traitor, who warned them to hold him faſt, Matt. xxvi. 48. and to lead him away ſafely, Mark xiv. 44. which intimated, that they could not be ſure of their priſoner unleſs they bound him. In this manner, forſaken by his diſciples, and bound like a thief in the midſt of his enemies, he was led at firſt to Annas the father-in-law to Caiaphas, who was the high-prieſt that year, John xviii. 13. And the ſame perſon, who had prophetically told the Jews, "that it was expedient one man ſhould die for the people, John xi. 50. What was done here is not certain from Scripture, only that Jeſus was ſent from him bound unto Caiaphas, John xviii. 24. where the chief prieſts, elders and the ſcribes, the whole body of the Jewiſh council, were all aſſembled, to try our Bleſſed Lord, who himſelf was come into the world, to free mankind from the bonds of ſin and eternal death.

It was to this palace of Caiaphas where Peter and another diſciple, I ſuppoſe John the Evangeliſt, followed their maſter at a great diſtance, in the midſt of love and fear: And this other diſciple being known to the high-prieſt, got admittance, and, ſeeing Peter ſhut out, deſired the woman, who, according to the cuſtom of the country, kept the door, to let him in, John xviii. 16. Peter having got leave, ſat down with the ſervants to warm himſelf at the fire, Matt. xxvi. 58. Mark xiv. 54. Now, Aſſoon as the council was ſat, and all things ready for the examination, the high-prieſt aſked Jeſus two general queſtions, Firſt, of his diſciples; why, or for what end or purpoſe, he gathered diſciples? John xviii. 19. thereby inſinuating a charge of a deſign in him to raiſe rebellion in the ſtate, at leaſt to diſturb the publick peace: Secondly, of his doctrine, ib. that he might, if he could, accuſe him of ſedition, or a breach of the law.

Our Bleſſed Saviour according to his wonted prudence and wiſdom, anſwered only to the ſecond queſtion, becauſe he knew that the firſt, depended on the veracity of the latter; for if his doctrine was true and right, no matter how many were gathered to it, if it was the doctrine of the Meſſias, it could be no ways accuſed of ſedition or hereſy, ſhould all Iſrael have embraced it, and followed him upon it. Wherefote he anſwered thus; whatever I have at any time delivered for doctrine, was ſpoke openly to the world. I ever taught in the ſynagogue, or in the temple, the common place whither the Jews reſort; and I have taught nothing in private, contrary to what I uſed to teach in publick; therefore I refer you to thoſe who have heard me, ver. 20, 21. Upon which, one of the officers taking this anſwer as a ſlight, ſtruck Jeſus with the palm of his hand, and ſaid, anſwereſt thou the high-prieſt ſo? ver. 22. Then Jeſus, by way of reproof for this abuſe and unjuſt uſage, ſaid to that over-officious officer, if I have ſpoken evil, bear witneſs of the evil, demonſtrate it, and convict me of it; but if I have ſpoken well, why ſmiteſt thou me? In which caſe, as an ingenious author well obſerves, this Divine pattern of meekneſs, did not turn the other cheek, which in other caſes he recommends, rather than to revenge the former injury, Matt. v. 39. But being thus abuſed in a court of judicature, before which he then ſtood arraigned for his life, and that eſpecially by an officer of the ſaid court; he uſed his natural and civil right to defend himſelf, and his own innocency, without offending the other, who had both by word and hand, ſo unjuſtly and illegally offended him.

Neither was there any indecency, or a ſhew of diſreſpect towards the high-prieſt in this our Lord's anſwer to him; for he fairly and directly referred himſelf for an account of his doctrine to thoſe, or any of them, who uſed to hear him teach in publick; as if he had ſaid, I deſire not to be adjudged by my own teſtimony, call thoſe, who can't be ſuſpected of any miſrepreſentation in my favour. So that we may collect from this place, that although all due reſpect is to be given to magiſtrates, yet it ſhould not be extended to the prejudice of a juſt and righteous cauſe. Therefore, ſays the good and learned Grotius, there is indeed a regard due to magiſtrates; but not ſuch a regard, as may take from the accuſed the liberty of defending themſelves. A magiſtrate is not to be affronted, nor ought he to inſult, or ſuffer his officers to inſult a priſoner brought before him.

When the high-prieſt and his council found they could not draw Jeſus to accuſe himſelf, they immediately ſought for falſe witneſſes, Matt. xxvi. 59. but found none, whoſe evidence would reach to take away his life, Mark xiv. 55. becauſe their teſtimonies, though bitter and envious enough, could not with any ſhew of truth be made appear to agree together, ver. 56. But at laſt, there came two falſe-witneſſes, whoſe evidence, lame as it was, and falſe, was approved on by the high-prieſt, who aroſe, and ſtanding up in the midſt of the aſſembly, fell again to interrogating Jeſus upon this evidence, Matt. xxvi. 61, 62. Mark xiv. 58, 60. But Jeſus knowing the invalidity of their evidence, and not regarding their accuſations, returned no anſwer. Then the high-prieſt asked him downright, "art thou the Chriſt the Son of the Bleſſed?" ver. 61. Jeſus held his peace, then ſays Matthew the high-prieſt in a moſt ſolemn manner to him, "I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt the Son of God?" Matt. xxvi. 63. To which Jeſus made an immediate and full reply, I am; Mark xiv. 62. and hereafter ye ſhall ſee me, [whom ye take to be] the Son of [a] man, ſitting at the right hand of the power of God, and coming in the clouds of Heaven," Luke xxii. 69. At which plain declaration, the high-prieſt cried out, he hath ſpoken blaſphemy, and then that he might affect the ſpectators, and make the ignorant people believe the truth of this accuſation, he rent his clothes, and ſaid, what need have we of any other witneſſes? For, behold, I have convicted him of blaſphemy out of his own mouth, Matt xxvi. 65. Then, as appealing to the reſt of the council, what think ye? ſaid he; whereupon, they all condemned him to be guilty of death, ver. 66.

The officers, ſoldiers and people, immediately look upon the priſoner as an out-law, and conſequently began to mock him, ſpit in his face; blindfolded him, and buffetted him with their double fiſts, and the very ſervants came, and did box and ſtrike him with the palms of their hands, and at the ſame time blaſphemouſly ſaid unto him, propheſy unto us, thou Chriſt, who it is that ſmote thee, Matt. xxvi. 67, 68. Luke xxii. 63, 64, 65. Mark xiv. 65.

While our Bleſſed Lord had thus made a good confeſſion, that he was the Son of God, before the high-prieſt and council; his ſervant Peter moſt ſhamefully denied him, before the high-prieſt's ſervants, and other by-ſtanders, John xviii. Luke xxii. 57. and then confirmed his denial of his maſter with an oath, Matt. xxvi. 72. But this did not ſkreen him, for a kinſman of Malchus, whoſe ear Peter had cut off, which gave him good occaſion to take notice of him, and to remember him, coming in as an occular evidence againſt him, ſaid, Did I not ſee thee in the garden of Gethſamene with him? John xviii. 26. And at laſt the by-ſtanders offered to convict him by his ſpeech or language, for, ſome of them ſaid, thy ſpeech bewrayeth thee, Matt. xxvi. 73. others agreed, that he was a Galilean, becauſe of his ſpeech, Mark xiv. 70. Yet, Peter could not be prevailed with to own himſelf a diſciple of Chriſt. He had, you read, at the firſt onſet, barely denied it. At the ſecond attack, he confirmed that former denial with an oath. But this third aſſault drove him to an higher pitch of obſtinate denial, for he began to curſe and ſwear, ſaying, I know not the man of whom ye ſpeak, Matt. xxvi. 74. Mark xiv. 71. And immediately the cock crew the ſecond time, ib.

Jeſus being now halled from the tribunal of the high-prieſt, to be, as noted above, abuſed by the people, &c. had an opportunity in the throng to caſt his compaſſionate and healing eye upon Peter, overſet with the weight of the preſent temptation, and had now more reaſon than ever to call upon the Lord, and ſay, ſave me or I periſh. For Satan had now got him into his ſieve, according to his deſire, as Chriſt had foretold, Luke xxii. 31. And therefore, unleſs he could now have felt the effect of his Lord's prayer, ib. Satan would have ſifted all the good out of him. But the merciful look of Jeſus, who, at the ſame time the cock crew the ſecond time, touched his heart within by his Divine Grace, awakened Peter from that drouſy fit of his lethargick ſoul, and put him in mind how Jeſus had told him before, "thou ſhalt or wilt deny me thrice, before the cock crows twice," whereupon Peter went out of the houſe, and wept bitterly, in a deep ſenſe of the heinouſneſs of his ſin. This bitter night being ended, at the break of day, the chief prieſts and the elders of the people, with the ſcribes and the whole council, commanded Jeſus to be brought before them again, and, not having power to put any one to death, John xviii. 31. which was the prerogative of the Roman governor, they ordered him to be bound, like a malefactor, and to be led to Pontius Pilate, that they might have ſentence of death paſt upon him,. Matt. xxvii. 1. Mark xv. 1. Luke xxiii. 1. Now,

Pontius Pilate, who was then the governor of Judea under the Roman Emperor Tiberias, reſided at the judgment-hall, or next adjoining to the Emperor's court, to which Jeſus was led early in the morning; but the hypocrite Jews would not enter into the judgment-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, and thereby made unfit to eat the paſſover. So that Pilate, the Roman Governor, in regard of the quality of the perſons, being ſome of the higheſt rank among the Jews, even the whole Sanhedrim, came forth to them, and asked them, "What accuſation bring you againſt this man?" John xviii. 28, 29. They in general replied, that he was adjudged by them to be a malefactor; ver. 30. and "had been found perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute unto Cæſar, alledging that he himſelf is Chriſt a King," Luke xxiii. 2. Which, though they were moſt falſe, drew not a word of defence from Jeſus; in ſo much that Pilate marvelled, and ſaid, "Heareſt thou not how many things they witneſs againſt thee?" Matt. xxvii. 13. Art thou the king of the Jews? Luke xxiii. 3. That Chriſt, or Meſſiah, they expect to be their King? Jeſus anſwered readily by way of conceſſion, Thou ſayeſt it? John xviii. 33. I profeſs my ſelf to be that Meſſiah promiſed to the Jewiſh nation; but I neither pervert the nation, nor forbid ſubjects to pay their tribute or taxes to their prince, for my kingdom it not of this world; ver. 34. My very condition proves ſo much; for if my kingdom were of this world, then would my ſervants fight, that I would not be delivered into the hands of theſe mercileſs Jews: Therefore my kingdom is not from hence; ver. 36. This diſcourſe continued with that good effect, as to make Pilate go out to the Jews, and plainly acknowledge to them that he found no fault at all in Jeſus; ver. 38. This ſo enraged the deſperate Jews, that they cried out the more fiercely, ſaying, He ſtirreth up the people to ſedition and rebellion, teaching throughout all Judea, from Galilee to this place; Luke xxiii. 5.

Pilate, it is thought, willing to be clear of ſuch a malicious proſecution, took hold of this outcry as a means to ſend Jeſus away to Herod, who was tetrarch of Galilee, and then at Jeruſalem; ver. 7. So Jeſus was led to his houſe, but would not anſwer a word to all his queſtions, and his enemies accuſations; ver. 8, 9, 10. therefore Herod with his guard, ſet him at nought; and having made himſelf ſport enough with him, he in mockery, put him on a gorgeous or very flaſhy robe, to make him look like a mock king, and in that dreſs ſent him back to Pilate, with his compliments for the favour; Luke xxiii. 12.

Jeſus now brought back to Pilate's judgment-ſeat, that Roman governor endeavoured again to ſet him at liberty; declaring, that for his own part he could not find any fault in him, to make him proceed to judgment; nor, ſays he, do I find that Herod has found any thing in him worthy of death; therefore I recommend him to your favour; let me releaſe him unto you according to the cuſtom of releaſing a priſoner at this your feaſt of paſſover; ver. 14, 15, 16. Pilate, who ſaw plainly that the Jews had brought Jeſus before him for mere envy, tried all means to releaſe him, and therefore not in the leaſt doubting but that he had found out an expedient, ſets up Barabbas, a noted robber, who for ſedition and murder in the city was committed to priſon; Luke xxiii. 19. as a competitor for liberty with Jeſus, and puts the queſtion, Whom will ye that I releaſe unto you? Barabbas, or Jeſus, who is called Chriſt? Matt. xxvii. 16, 17. The people, by advice from their rulers, cried out all at once, away with this man, and releaſe unto us Barabbas. And though Pilate ſaid much more to mollify their hardned hearts, they continued in their obſtinate envy to demand Jeſus to be crucified; ver. 20-22, 23.

So Pilate finding he could not prevail, and that a tumult was like to enſue, which might bring him into ſome diſpleaſure at court, ordered Jeſus to be ſcourged as a preparative to his crucifixion; it being the cuſtom of the Romans to ſcourge thoſe firſt, who were ſentenced to be crucified. From this time Jeſus was looked upon as a condemned perſon, and villified and abuſed at the pleaſure of the ſoldiers, who platted a crown of thorns, which, after he was whipped, they ſtuck upon his head; they clothed him in purple or ſcarlet, and made him hold a reed in his hand to mimic a ſcepter; then bowing the knee before him, they mocking, ſaid, Hail king of the Jews; and ſpitting on him took the reed out of his hand, and ſmote him on the head therewith; John xix. 1, 2, 3, 4. And though Pilate brought Jeſus forth again in this deplorable condition; ver. 5. and declared his innocency, ver. 6. yet at laſt he ſubmitted to the requeſt of the Jews, and notwithſtanding his great fear, that Jeſus was of a Deified extraction, and that ſuch ill treatment might draw upon himſelf the Divine Vengeance; ver. 9, 10, 11, 2. he gave ſentence that Chriſt ſhould be crucified; becauſe they ſuſpecting that Pilate had a mind to releaſe Jeſus, cried out, "If thou letteſt this man go, thou art not Cæſar's friend," ver. 12. But being alſo admoniſhed by his wife, not to paſs this ſentence; Matt. xxvii. 19. he, before he would paſs ſentence, took water, as an emblem of his innocence, and waſhing his hands therewith before the multitude, made the following proteſtation for the clearing of himſelf, I am innocent of ſhedding the blood of this juſt perſon, ſee ye to it, who have compelled me thereto, ver. 24. To which the people, deluded by their prieſts and elders, &c. anſwered with one voice, His blood be upon us, and upon our children, ver. 25. if there be any guilt in this ſentence, we imprecate it upon ourſelves. Thus Jeſus was delivered to be crucified. Which

When Judas beheld, he repented himſelf, or being touched with remorſe for what he had done; it is likely, he wiſhed that he had not done it; which threw him into a deſperate ſorrow of mind, that he carrying back the thirth pieces of ſilver to the chief prieſts and elders; and making an open confeſſion before them of his ſin in betraying innocent blood, went and hanged himſelf; Matt. xxvii. 3, 4, 5. with that violence, that the bough of the tree, on which he went to execute himſelf, brake, and let him fall to the earth in that forcible manner, that his body burſt aſunder; and his bowels guſhed out before he was quite dead; Acts i. 18. This was the miſerable and wretched end of that miſerable and wretched traitor Judas; who for a little filthy lucre, betray'd his Maſter, the Lord of liſe and glory, into the hands of his avowed enemies, to be crucified.

After ſentence of crucifixion, Jeſus was again arrayed in his own garments; Matt. xxvii. 31. Mark xv. 20. and compelled to carry his croſs to the place of execution; John xix. 17. Golgotha; Matt. xxvii. 33. which is Calvary; Luke xxiii. 33. But in the way meeting with one Simon a Cyrenian, whom perchance they obſerved weeping or worſhipping Jeſus (compare Mark xv. 21. with Rom. xvi. 13.) the ſoldiers forced him to aſſiſt Jeſus almoſt drooping in the midſt of their cruelties. And then it is reaſonable to fix the time of his turning to the great company of people and women, who followed him, bewailing and lamenting him, ſaying, "Daughters of Jeruſalem, weep not for me, but weep for your ſelves, and for your children; for behold, the days are coming in which they ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave ſuck," Luke xxiii. 27, 28. compared with Matt. xxiv. Mark xiii. Luke xxi.

Being at laſt arrived in the midſt of two notorious malefactors, whom the political magiſtrates had ordered with him to execution, that they might the more eaſily miſrepreſent him to the undiſcerning multitude, who are apt to judge of men by their company, he refuſed to drink of that cup of vinegar mingled with gall, which they offered him inſtead of wine, which was wont to be given to all malefactors before execution; ſee Godwyn's Moſes and Aaron, lib. 5. c. 6. When they ſaw he would not drink, they immediately ſtripped off his clothes, lift him upon the croſs, and nailed his hands and feet to the wood. But Jeſus ſaid not a word, only praying that his Father would forgive them; Luke xxiii. 34. confirming by his own practice the precept he had long before given to his diſciples; Matt. v. 44.

Jeſus being now raiſed up on the croſs between two thieves, Pilate ordered his title to be fixed above his head in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, which being the known languages, that all people might read and underſtand for what he was crucified. But the Jews continued to deride and mock him; Matt. xxvii. 39, 40, 41. Mark xv. 29, 30, 31. Luke xxiii 36, 37. inſomuch that one of the thieves which were hanged beſide him, railed on him; ver. 39. But the other check'd his fellow, acknowledged his own guilt, and bearing witneſs to the innocency of Jeſus, addreſſed himſelf to Jeſus with this ſhort, but expreſſive prayer, Lord, remember me when thou comeſt into thy Kingdom; ver. 40, 41, 42. To which profeſſion of Chriſt's Meſſiahſhip and Godhead, Jeſus replied, To day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe; ver. 43.

While Jeſus was thus hanging on the croſs, expoſed to the ſcorn and contempt of his enemies, the four ſoldiers, who were upon duty that day at the place of execution, took his garments as the perquiſites of their office, and dividing them into four parts, they caſt lots upon them, which part each ſoldier ſhould have. But becauſe his upper garment or coat being wove, without ſeam, and ſo could not be divided without ſpoiling it; they ſaid among themſelves, Let us not rent it, but caſt lots for it, whoſe it ſhall be: And ſo they did, which fulfilled the Scripture in its ultimate ſignification and extent, Pſ. xxii. 18. where the Prophet David bemoaning himſelf, and ſetting forth the eager deſire of his enemies to deſtroy him, ſaith, "they parted my garments among them, and caſt lots upon my veſture." And

About this time this memorable darkneſs began to ariſe and ſpread it ſelf; which for the time it laſted, turned the day into a kind of night; Matt. xxvii. 45. Mark xv. 33. Luke xxiii. 44. from the ſixth to the ninth hour, all over the land or earth, ib.

Among the many ſpectators, who came to this place of execution with various affections, were ſome of our Lord's friends and ſteady followers; as his mother and mother's ſiſter, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene, John xix. 25. and the mother of Zebedee's children; Matt. xxvii. 55. But not one of the twelve beſides John the Evangeliſt; theſe ſtood ſo near, that Jeſus, ſeeing his mother, and John ſtanding by her, could be heard charging John to take care of her; John xix. 25. And then drooping under the heavy weight of his ſufferings, he ſaid, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, Matt. xxvii. 46. Mark. xv. 34. and having received a cup of vinegar; John xix. 28. he added, it is finiſhed; Father into thy hands I commend my ſpirit; then bowing his head he gave up the ghoſt; Luke xxiii. 46.

Thus the Son of God incarnate, reſigned his Spirit to redeem mankind with the price of his own blood; and breath was no ſooner gone out of his body, than the veil of the temple was rent in twain, or in the midſt, from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake and the rocks rent, Matt. xxvii. 51. which, as it concludes the life of Chriſt, ſo I have complied with my promiſe at the beginning of this account of his Paſſion, to ſupply the omiſſions, and to illuſtate ſome paſſages of Matthew from the other Evangeliſts.

CHAP. xxvi. VER. 2.—The feaſt of the paſſover.] The word paſſover is derived from the Hebrew word paſcah, to paſs, to leap or to ſkip over. And this was the title given by the Jews to their feſtival, eſtabliſhed in commemoration of their paſſage and great delivery out of the land of Egypt, and out of the houſe of bondage, in the year of the world 2513, or 1487 years before Chriſt, and before the Vulgar Æra 1491, ſee Exod. xii. Becauſe the night before this delivery, the deſtroying angel, who put to death in every houſe the firſt-born of the Egyptians, paſſed over the dwellings of the Iſraelites, being warned ſo to do, by the ſprinkling of blood on their door-poſts, which was the blood of a lamb killed on purpoſe the evening before, and was therefore called the paſchal lamb.

This is what God ordained concerning the paſſover of the Jews. The month of the coming forth from Egypt, which is in Moſes called Abib, though ſince changed to the name of Niſan, was looked upon from this time, to be the firſt month of the ſacred or eccleſiaſtical year, and the fourteenth day of this month, between the two evenings, or between the ſun's decline and his ſetting; or rather, according to our manner of reckoning, between two o'clock in the afternoon, and ſix o'clock in the evening, at the equinox, they were to kill the paſchal lamb, and to abſtain from leavened bread. The day following being the fifteenth, counting from ſix o'clock of the foregoing evening, which concluded the fourteenth, was the grand feaſt of the paſſover here mentioned, which continued ſeven days. But it was only the firſt and ſeventh that were ſolemn.

The lamb that was killed ought to be without any defect, a male yeaned that year. If no lamb could be found, they might take a kid. So a lamb or a kid was killed in every family; and if the number of thoſe that lived in the houſe, were not ſufficient to eat a whole lamb, they might join two houſes together, always remembring to ſprinkle the blood thereof on the door-poſts, and lintel of every houſe, that the deſtroying angel might not enter therein. This lamb was to be eat in the ſame night that followed the ſacrifice, roaſted with the leavened bread, and a ſallad of wild lettice, or as the Hebrews word it, with bitter things, thereby intending muſtard, or any thing of like nature to give it a reliſh. It is not lawful to eat any part thereof raw, nor boiled in water, nor muſt a bone of it be broken, but it muſt be eat entire, head, feet, and bowels and all; and if any part remain to the day following, it ought to be thrown into the fire.

They that eat it were to be in the poſture of travellers, with belts about their middle, their ſhoes, or rather their boots on their feet, their ſtaves in their hands, and eating in a hurry. But this laſt part of the ceremony was but little obſerved, at leaſt it has been thought of no obligation, but only upon that night they came forth out of Egypt. For there was no bread to be eat, but unleavened, during the whole eight days of the paſſover; and whoſoever broke this command was threatned to be cut off from his people. They kept the firſt and laſt day of the feaſt, yet ſo, as that it was allowed to dreſs victuals, which was forbidden on the ſabbath-day.

The obligation of keeping the paſſover was ſo great, that a tranſgreſſion therein was condemned to death, Numb. ix. 13. But they, who through lawful impediment, as a journey, ſickneſs, or any uncleanneſs, voluntary or involuntary; for, thoſe that had been preſent at a funeral, or by any other accident had been defiled, were to defer the celebration of the paſſover, till the ſecond month of the eccleſiaſtical year, or to the fourteenth day of the month Iiar, which anſwers to the beginning of May. It was thus the Lord ordered Moſes, upon the enquiry of ſome Iſraelites, who had been obliged to pay their laſt offices to ſome of their relations, and, who being thus polluted, were not capable of partaking of the paſchal ſacrifice. We ſee an example of the execution of the law under Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxx. 2, 3, &c.

We may add to this ſecond law, concerning the ſuſpenſion of the paſſover, that the oriental Chriſtians, and eſpecially the Syrians, inſiſt, that on the year that Chriſt died, the feaſt was celebrated on the thirteenth day of the month Adar, being Saturday, and that it began at the concluſion of the Friday before, and that our Saviour foreſtalled it by a day, and celebrated it on the Friday, beginning from the evening of the Thurſday before, becauſe he was to ſuffer on the Friday, ſee d'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 349. Calviſius alſo places the ſame paſſover, on the Saturday the fourth of April, in the thirty-third year of the Vulgar Æra, the thirty-fifth of Jeſus Chriſt, which falls in the 344th of Alexandra. Hence,

It has become a famous queſtion among commentators, whether or no our Saviour kept the legal and Jewiſh paſſover, the laſt year of his life. Some have denied it, and thought that the ſupper, which he eat with his diſciples, on the Thurſday evening, when he inſtituted the ſacrament of his Body and Blood, was an ordinary meal, where there was no paſchal lamb eaten, ſee Calmet's Diſſ. before the Goſpel according to Matthew. Others have ſaid, that our Saviour had anticipated the paſſover, as you have read above. Some again advance, that the Galileans kept the paſſover on Thurſday, as Jeſus Chriſt did; but that the other Jews kept it on Friday. But the moſt general opinion ſuppoſes, that both Jeſus and the Jews kept it rightly on Thurſday evening.

Ver. 8. But when his diſciples ſaw it, they had indignation, ſaying, To what purpoſe is this waſte?] This was a covetous inſinuation of Judas only, John xii. 3, 6. and it is likely from this account of Matthew, that the reſt of the diſciples were by him brought to think, or ſay the ſame thing, by reaſon of the ſpacious pretence of charity, under which it was covered, Mark xiv. 5. But whether the diſciples, or not, agreed in the notion of its being a waſte, we are not to prefer their opinion before the infallible dictate of their Maſter, who aſſures us, that it was no waſte, but a good work, ver. 10. And to the pretence of Judas concerning the poor, he anſwers that by reaſon of his approaching death, this muſt be done ſhortly to him, or not at all, whereas they having the poor always with them, could never want objects of their charity; and that good work, which was to be done now, or never, was preferable to that for which they had perpetual occaſions.

Ver. 11. — But me ye have not always.] How then can the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation and of the real preſence be true? For, if we have him not always, neither can he, at the prieſt's option, be always preſent as to body, ſoul and Divinity, truly in the hoſt.

Ver. 15. — For thirty pieces of ſilver.] Theſe pieces, according to the beſt computations, were ſhekels, or three pounds fifteen ſhillings ſterling; a price paid for a man or maid-ſervant, when, being ſmitten by an ox, they died.

Ver. 17.———Where wilt thou that we prepare the paſſover?] See the note on ver. 2. and hereafter on the like paſſage in Mark xiv.

Ver. 24. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him, but wo to that man by whom he is betrayed, it were good for that man that he had not been born.] Hence, ſays Dr. Whitby, two things clearly follow; 1ſt, That the prediction of this event, that Jeſus ſhould thus ſuffer, and that by the treachery of Judas, did lay on Judas no antecedent neceſſity of doing this action, becauſe it did not leſſen the wo due to him for it, but only doth ſuppoſe in God a knowledge how the will of man, left to its own freedom, will determine or incline it ſelf; ſee his note upon Luke xxii. 22. Secondly, That Chriſt by ſaying, "it is good for that man that he had not been born," ſufficiently ſhews, this cannot be the portion of all men, except ſome few elect, as ſome men think, and as it follows from the ſuppoſal of an immutable decree, that ſuch perſons only ſhould be ſaved, and all others left under ſuch a preterition as will infallibly render it better for them never to have been born; and would have made this the condition of Judas, though he had not done this, provided he was none of God's elect.

Ver. 26. Jeſus took bread and brake it, &c.] This whole account of the inſtitution of the Lord's ſupper, I ſhall reſerve for a particular diſſertation at the end of the ſixth chapter of John.

Ver. 34.——Before the cock crow.] Twice; Mark xiv. 30. Where note, that Heathen authors, as Ammianus, Ariſtophanes and Juvenal, mention a double crowing of the cock: The firſt was about midnight, the ſecond at the fourth watch of the night, or about day-break; ſee Mark xiii. 35.

Ver. 41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.] See the note on Matt. vi. 13. And remark here, that Chriſt bids his diſciples pray, not that they might not enter into temptation, for that this ſhould befal them, they had before learned from his ſaying, "Satan hath deſired to ſift you as wheat;" Luke xxii. 31. but that they might not give place to it, or fall by it into ſin.

——The ſpirit is willing, but the fleſh is weak.] This was ſaid not to extenuate nor excuſe their ſin, if they ſhould give way to temptation; but to ſhew the greater neceſſity they were in, to pray and watch with all zeal and vigilance, againſt the attacks of Satan, the fleſh and the world.

Ver. 52. Put up thy ſword into its place, for, all that take the ſword ſhall periſh by the ſword.] Grotius gives us this note: Thou needeſt not uſe the ſword in my defence, or in my cauſe againſt the injuries of the Jews, for by God's ſentence and decree, they that take the ſword to ſhed the blood of the innocent, ſhall periſh by the ſword; and this the Jews, my perſecutors, will find by that tremendous vengeance, which the ſword of the Romans ſhall execute upon them for this fact.

Ver. 57. To Caiaphas.] See the note on Mark xiv. 53.

Ver. 59.——They ſought falſe witneſſes and found none.] See the note on Mark xiv. 55, 56.

Ver. 64——At the right hand of power.] i. e. The right hand of God, who by the Jews is called power; and to whom we Chriſtians aſcribe all power; ſaying, "for thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory, for ever."

Ver. 65. Then the high-prieſt rent his clothes.] An action expreſly forbidden in Levit. xxi. 10. Becauſe he was not to appear before God in the habit of a mourner, of which rent clothes were a ſign: But the Phariſees by their traditions had ſo qualified that precept, as to allow the high-prieſt to rend his clothes at the bottom, but not from the top to the breaſt; ſee Cunæus de Rep. l. 2. c. 3. Though others ſay, he only was forbidden ſo to do in the time of his miniſtry; for Jonathan the high-prieſt rent his clothes, 1 Macc. xi. 72. And in Joſephus we read twice in one chapter, that the high-prieſts rent their clothes; Joſeph. de Bell. Jud. l. ii. c. 26, 27.

Chap. xxvii. Ver. 9. Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the Prophet.] It is true there is no ſuch paſſage as here quoted, in the preſent book of Prophecies under the name of Jeremy: They are read indeed in the Prophet Zechariah. Therefore it is objected by the Jews, &c. that this is a falſe quotation. Now to wave many inventions of the learned to anſwer this objection, and to reconcile this Scripture with truth, I ſhall only obſerve, that Jerom expounding this place, poſitively affirms, That theſe very words were writ and read by him in a book, bearing the title of the Prophet Jeremy. And ſeeing we find, 2 Maccab. xi. 1—9. many words ſpoken by the Prophet Jeremy, which are not in the book of his Propheſy, why might not theſe words alſo have been ſpoken by him, and kept in memory, till the time of Zachary? Of whom, ſays Dr. Whitby, it is obſervable, that he loved to uſe the words of Jeremy: in ſo much that the Jews uſed to ſay, that the ſpirit of Jeremy was in Zechary, and ſo hath made but one Prophet.

Ver. 28.——A purple robe.] It is likely ſome old red coat belonging to one of the ſoldiers.

Ver. 52. And many bodies of the Saints which ſlept, aroſe.] This was according to an old opinion of the Jews, who believed, that when their Meſſiah came, there ſhould be a reſurrection of ſome pious man. By this example alſo, Chriſt would confirm his diſciples in his great promiſe, that he would raiſe all that believe in him to eternal life.

Ignatius ſaith, that theſe perſons which aroſe from the dead, were the Holy Prophets, who were his diſciples and expected him, and who are ſaid to enter into the kingdom of God, with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; Luke xiii. 28. But I rather adhere to the opinion of thoſe, who think they were ſome of theſe modern believers in Jeſus, ſuch as Old Simeon, Anna, &c. who died before his reſurrection: For it is obſervable from John, that Chriſt not only promiſed a reſurrection to all that believe in him at the laſt day; but alſo ſaid, the hour is coming, and now is, that the dead ſhall hear the voice of man; John v. 25.

Ver. 57.——Joſeph of Arimathea.] See the note on Mark xv. 43.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 Chriſt's reſurrection is declared by an Angel to the women. 9 He himſelf appeareth unto them. 11 The chief prieſts gave the ſoldiers money to ſay that he was ſtolen out of his ſepulchre. 16 Chriſt appeareth to his diſciples, 19 and ſendeth them to baptize and teach all nations.

IN the end of the ſabbath, as it began to dawn towards the firſt day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to ſee the ſepulchre.

2 And behold, there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord deſcended from heaven, and came and rolled back the ſtone from the door, and ſat upon it.

3 His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as ſnow.

4 And for fear of him the keepers did ſhake, and became as dead men.

5 And the angel anſwered and ſaid unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye ſeek Jeſus, which was crucified.

6 He is not here: for he is riſen, as he ſaid: come, ſee the place where the Lord lay.

7 And go quickly, and tell his diſciples that he is riſen from the dead; and behold, he goeth before you into Galilee, there ſhall ye ſee him, lo, I have told you.

8 And they departed quickly from the ſepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his diſciples word.

9 ¶ And as they went to tell his diſciples, behold, Jeſus met them, ſaying, All hail. And they came, and held him by the feet, and worſhipped him.

10 Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there ſhall they ſee me.

11 ¶ Now when they were going, behold, ſome of the watch came into the city, and ſhewed unto the chief prieſts all the things that were done.

12 And when they were aſſembled with the elders, and had taken counſel, they gave large money unto the ſoldiers,

13 Saying, Say ye, His diſciples came by night and ſtole him away while we ſlept.

14 And if this come to the governors ears, we will perſwade him, and ſecure you.

15 So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this ſaying is commonly reported among the Jews unto this day.

16 ¶ Then the eleven diſciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jeſus had appointed them.

17 And when they ſaw him, they worſhipped him: but ſome doubted.

18 And Jeſus came, and ſpake unto them, ſaying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

19 ¶ Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt:

20 Teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

CHAP. xxviii. Ver. 1. The firſt day.] The next day after the Jewiſh ſabbath, or the day we call from this account the Lord's-Day, becauſe he roſe this day from the dead, which proved him to be our Lord in power.

——— The other Mary.] She that is called in the preceding chapter, ver. 56, and 61, the mother of James and Joſes, the virgin's ſiſter.

Ver. 2. — There was a great earthquake.] Or, violent convulſion in the bowels of the earth, that the whole frame thereof ſhook.

——— The Angel of the Lord deſcended.] As the women were upon the way, the Lord riſing at that inſtant, and coming out of the monument, for by that time they were arrived at the ſepulchre he was gone; but the Angel, at whoſe ſight the watch were fled, remained, and told the women that the Lord was riſen, and they returned with the report thereof to Peter and John, John xx. 2.

Ver. 15. — Did as they were taught.] See ver. 12, 13. But does not this appear to be an infatuation from the juſt judgment of God, that they, being confounded, gave out ſuch a report, as contradicted their own account; for, how could they teſtify, that the body of Chriſt was ſtolen away by his diſciples, when, with the ſame breath they confeſs, that they were aſleep, ver. 13.

Ver. 16. — Into a mountain where Jeſus had appointed them.] This mountain is no where particularly deſcribed by the Evangeliſts, but is ſuppoſed to be that on which our Lord made that excellent ſermon to his diſciples, recorded in the 5th, 6th and 7th chapters of Matthew, not far from Capernaum.

Ver. 18. —— All power is given unto me in Heaven and in earth.] Now, as I by my ſufferings, have accompliſhed the end of my coming into the world, and glorified my Father, now alſo he will and does glorify me, in quality of the Mediator, between his juſtice and the ſins of mankind; for he has delivered unto me, who am perfect God and perfect man, by the perſonal union of my two natures, the univerſal kingdom of the world, and the ſpiritual kingdom over my Church, into whoſe glorious poſſeſſion and adminiſtration I now enter.

Ver. 19. Go ye therefore and teach all nations.] Publiſh this to all the world, gather together my ſubjects, the true believers, rule, govern, and diſtribute the effects of my kingdom unto them, and declare the judgments of my Goſpel.

——— All nations.] A comfortable miſſion, for here is no longer confinement of the Word of God to the Iſraelites or Jews; he expreſly commands his Goſpel to be made known unto all nations, to be propoſed for the acceptance, inſtruction and ſaving of all mankind, without any diſtinction of Jew and Gentile.

——— Baptizing them.] All thoſe to whom you preach ſo effectually, as to convert them into the way of truth, as if he had ſaid, this ſhall be a ſacrament of my grace towards them that believe, for the remiſſion and expiation of their ſins, and the regeneration to a new life, ſee Matt. iii. 6.

——— In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt.] i. e. To conſecrate them unto the only true God, revealed in the three perſons of the Holy Trinity, 1 John v. 7. by the adminiſtration of this baptiſm inſtituted by the power and authority of Chriſt.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE GOSPEL,

ACCORDING TO

St. MARK.

The INTRODUCTION.

Mark the Evangeliſt according to Papias, Irenæus, and the greateſt part of the Ancients, as well as Moderns, was the Diſciple, and Interpreter, or rather, Amanuenſis to Peter the Apoſtle, who converted him to the faith in Chriſt: Upon which account ſeveral of the Ancient Fathers declare their opinion, that this Evangeliſt is he of whom Peter ſpeaks in his firſt Epiſtle, v. 13. calling him his ſon in the ſpirit. Nevertheleſs, ſome have thought that he was one of the ſeventy Diſciples, before he adhered to the retinue of the chief of the Apoſtles; and others add more particularly, that Mark was one of thoſe who forſook our Saviour, at the time he ſaid, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you, John vi. 55. But after Peter had convinced him of his error, and brought him to a thorough repentance thereof, he became a new creature, and continued ſtedfaſt in the faith, always following this Apoſtle, under whoſe direction and inſpiration he writ this book of the Goſpel, which bears his name. But,

Becauſe we often in Sacred Hiſtory meet with the name of Mark among the diſciples and followers of the Apoſtles; it has been doubted, whether we ought in all places to take it for one and the ſame perſon, viz. John, who was ſo called among the Jews, but obtained the name of Mark among the Romans, Acts xv. 37. ſuch a diverſity of names being very frequent in thoſe days. Then it is queried, if there were divers called by this one name, who ſhould be the reputed author of this Goſpel? To which all the Ancients anſwer with agreement, that whether we underſtand one or more under that one name, we are to acknowledge him to be the writer of this Goſpel, whom Peter calls his ſon, 1 Ep. v. 13. But they differ about the reaſon of Peter's diſtinguiſhing him by this affectionate adoption; ſome, as I have noted before, think it was becauſe he had converted this Mark to the Chriſtian faith. Others perchance, with more probability, becauſe Peter had taken him for a coadjutor, and companion, in the work of preaching the Goſpel as an Evangeliſt, which was a degree of eccleſiaſtical office in the primitive and firſt age of the Chriſtian Church, founded upon a ſpecial calling from God, and accompanied with a meaſure of the gift and infallible aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, even the next below the degree of an Apoſtle. And as Paul, and other Apoſtles, after that the word of God increaſed and ſpread into diſtant nations, and certain cities and provinces were converted to the faith in Chriſt, by the preaching of the Apoſtles, they left and eſtabliſhed before their departure, ſome of theſe Evangeliſts to direct, confirm, continue and advance the eſtate of thoſe new Churches or nurſeries of Chriſtianity, by ſound doctrine, good rules, and by an ordinary and well-maintained government. So it is thought that Peter ſent Mark for the like purpoſes to the Church at Alexandria, and to all the Churches eſtabliſhed in Egypt, to govern them according to his Apoſtolical direction and inſtitution.

Several of the Moderns think that Mark was ſent by Peter, from Rome to Aquileia, where he continued two years and a half, and founded a Church; but this, with many other ſuch ſtories, are the inventions of Monkiſh dotage. It is thought, that it was in the year of Chriſt 49, which was the ninth of the emperor Claudius, when the Jews driven from Rome, Peter and Mark were obliged from thence alſo. But the firſt opinion, that Peter ſent Mark into Egypt, is the moſt received. In his way thither it is recorded, that he went down to Cyrene in Pentapolis, where he converted many to the Lord. Afterwards he departed for Alexandria in Egypt, where he met with Anienus, whom he baptized and ordained firſt Biſhop of that city. Under whoſe good example and doctrine the Chriſtians encreaſed ſo exceedingly, and lived in ſuch an exemplary manner, that Philo the Jew would have recorded them as a credit to his nation, by endeavouring to make his readers believe, that theſe primitive Chriſtians were Jews of better life and converſation. But,

Be that as it will, the number of Chriſtians encreaſing every day, the Pagans oppoſed themſelves to Mark, becauſe they perceived that he overthrew the worſhip of their gods: wherefore he thought it prudent to withdraw, till the tempeſt were blown over. So he returned to Cyrene, where he continued other two years before he came back to Alexandria; where to his great joy, he found the faithful well encreaſed, nurtured and eſtabliſhed in conſtant faith, and ſaving grace: And now it is that chronologers fix the time of his ſecond departure from the Church of Alexandria, ſome ſay, to Rome, where he was preſent at the execution of Peter and Paul in the ſixty-ſixth year of Chriſt. After which he returned again to Alexandria, where the heathens, provoked at the great number of miracles performed by him, and by the reproaches made them by the Chriſtians for worſhipping idols, took council, and ſought to put him to death; and after a long ſearch, found him in the execution of his miniſtry celebrating the Holy Synaxis, or adminiſtring the Lord's Supper to the faithful on the Lord's day, which happened on the twenty-fourth of April in the ſixty-eighth year of Chriſt. They put a rope about his neck and dragged him about the city the reſt of the day, ſaying, they muſt lead this ox to Bucoles, a rocky precipice near the ſea; but at evening they caſt him into the common dungeon, where, in the night, the Lord comforted him with angelical viſions, aſſuring him, that his name was written in the Book of Life, and giving him peace of mind, and courage to bear the helliſh cruelty of his blood-thirſty perſecutors patiently, who, on the morrow, brought him forth again, and dragged him through the ſtreets till he gave up his ſoul to God, and then they threw his body into the fire to be burnt.

As to the time when this Evangeliſt writ his book of the Goſpel, authors are very much divided. Some ſay, that Peter going to Rome, about the year of Chriſt forty-four, Mark accompanied him thither, where he writ this Goſpel at the requeſt of the brethren, who deſired that he would give them in writing what he had learned from Peter by word of mouth. Mark condeſcended and wrote this book that bears his name. Peter, being informed of it, commended and approved of his undertaking, inſomuch that he ordered it to be read in the aſſemblies of Believers as an authentick work. But ſome others mentioned by Chryſoſtom, ſay, that Mark writ this Goſpel at his reſidene in Egypt. And others again ſay, that Peter was dead before Mark undertook to publiſh this book of the Goſpel. But Tertullian and Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria aſſert, that Peter writ this Goſpel himſelf; tho' the author of the Synopſis imputed to Athanaſius, abſolutely determines, that this Goſpel was written by Mark and dictated to him by Peter; and this is the moſt received opinion. Yet all theſe different ſentiments are enough to prove, that the circumſtances of time and place are uncertain, ſo that we can't determine when and where Mark compoſed this book of the Goſpel. Now,

It ought to be obſerved, that as far as may be judged by comparing the Goſpels of Mark and Matthew, the former is an abridgment of the latter. Mark very often uſes the ſame terms, relates the ſame facts, and takes notice of the ſame circumſtances. And in this view there is no need to call in Peter to dictate his Goſpel to Mark. But Mark ſometimes adds new particulars, which give great light to Matthew's text. There are alſo two or three miracles in Mark i. 23. and i. v. ix. xvi. which are not to be found in Matthew. Yet what is moſt remarkable in our Evangeliſt is this, He follows Matthew in almoſt every thing elſe, but departs from his chronology or order of account, from ch. iv. 12. to ch. xiv. 13. of Matthew: For in theſe places, inſtead of following Matthew, he falls in with the order of time recorded by Luke and John, which has prevailed with chronologers to follow Luke, Mark and John, rather than Matthew.

Several ancient Hereticks, according to Irenæus received only the Goſpel by Mark; and many have rejected the twelve laſt verſes of this Goſpel, beginning at theſe words: Now when Jeſus was riſen early, &c. probably becauſe it appeared that in one place Mark was too oppoſite to Matthew; and related circumſtances in this latter part contrary to the other Evangeliſt; but the Ancient Fathers, the old oriental Verſions, and almoſt all the old copies, whether printed or manuſcript, Greek or Latin, read theſe twelve laſt verſes, and acknowledge them as genuine, as well as the reſt of Mark's Goſpel.

Authors alſo are very much divided as to the language in which this Goſpel was written; ſome aſſert that it was compoſed in Greek; others maintain a Latin original. The Ancients and moſt of the Moderns eſpouſe the firſt opinion, and the Greek, to this day, paſſes for the original of Mark; though ſome MSS. Greek copies of this Goſpel inſinuate, that it was writ in Latin, which opinion is backed with the authority of the Syriac and Arabic copies. If he wrote it at Rome this opinion might hold good, becauſe writ for the uſe of the Romans. Baronius, and our learned countryman Selden, have declared themſelves for the Latin, but are followed therein by very few. At Venice are ſhewn ſome few looſe ſheets pretended to be the original in Mark's own hand. If this were certain, and the MS. could be read, it would finally determine the diſpute; but it is very doubtful whether this be Mark's original writing, and it is ſo worn out by antiquity, that ſcarce one letter can be made out. The great Antiquarian Montfaucon, nevertheleſs, mentions it as the moſt ancient MS. he ever ſaw; ſays that it is writ in Latin; and upon Egyptian paper, much thinner and finer than common; and thinks it ought to be fixed at leaſt in the fourth century. In the year 1564 this MS. was depoſited in a cave, under a marſh-ground, the rough whereof is lower than the neighbouring ſea; ſo that the water drops perpetually on thoſe who have the curioſity to go thither, and this place has defaced it ſo as it cannot be read, which it could before.

CHAP. I.

1 The office of John the Baptiſt. 9 Jeſus is baptized, 12 tempted : 14 he preacheth : 16 calleth Peter, Andrew, James, and John : 23 healeth one that had a devil, 29 Peters mother-in-law, 32 many diſeaſed perſons : 41 and cleanſeth the leper.

THE beginning of the goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God,

2 As it is written in the prophets, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee.

3 The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight.

4 John did baptize in the wilderneſs, and preach the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins.

5 And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jeruſalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confeſſing their ſins.

6 And John was clothed with camels hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loyns : and he did eat locuſts and wild honey :

7 And preached, ſaying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to ſtoop down and unlooſe.

8 I indeed have baptized you with water : but he ſhall baptize you with the holy Ghoſt.

9 And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that Jeſus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

10 And ſtraightway coming up out of the water, he ſaw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove deſcending upon him.

11 And there came a voice from heaven, ſaying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

12 And immediately the Spirit driveth him into the wilderneſs.

13 And he was there in the wilderneſs forty days tempted of Satan, and was with the wild beaſts, and the angels miniſtred unto him.

14 Now after that John was put in priſon, Jeſus came into Galilee, preaching the goſpel of the kingdom of God,

15 And ſaying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand : repent ye and believe the goſpel.

16 Now as he walked by the ſea of Galilee, he ſaw Simon, and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the ſea : (for they were fiſhers)

17 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fiſhers of men.

18 And ſtraightway they forſook their nets, and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little further thence, he ſaw James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, who alſo were in the ſhip mending their nets.

20 And ſtraightway he called them : and they left their father Zebedee in the ſhip with the hired ſervants, and went after him.

21 And they went into Capernaum, and ſtraightway on the ſabbath-day he entred into the ſynagogue, and taught,

22 And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine : for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the ſcribes.

23 And there was in their ſynagogue a man with an unclean ſpirit, and he cried out,

24 Saying, Let us alone, what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? art thou come to deſtroy us? I know thee who thou art, the holy One of God.

25 And Jeſus rebuked him, ſaying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26 And when the unclean ſpirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27 And they were all amazed, inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves, ſaying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean ſpirits, and they do obey him.

28 And immediately his fame ſpread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29 And forthwith when they were come out of the ſynagogue, they entred into the houſe of Simon, and Andrew, with James and John.

30 But Simons wifes mother lay ſick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her.

31 And he came and took her by the hand, and lift her up ; and immediately the fever left her, and ſhe miniſtred unto them.

32 And at even when the ſun did ſet, they brought unto him all that were diſeaſed, and them that were poſſeſſed with devils.

Mark II. v.

33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34 And he healed many that were ſick of divers diſeaſes, and caſt out many devils, and ſuffered not the devils to ſpeak, becauſe they knew him.

35 And in the morning riſing up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a ſolitary place, and there prayed.

36 And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him.

37 And when they had found him, they ſaid unto him, All men ſeek for thee.

38 And he ſaid unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there alſo: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their ſynagogues throughout all Galilee, and caſt out devils.

40 And there came a leper to him, beſeeching him, and kneeling down to him, and ſaying unto him, If thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean.

41 And Jeſus moved with compaſſion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and ſaith unto him, I will, be thou clean.

42 And as ſoon as he had ſpoken, immediately the leproſy departed from him, and he was cleanſed.

43 And he ſtraitly charged him, and forthwith ſent him away;

44 And ſaith unto him, See thou ſay nothing to any man: but go thy way, ſhew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing thoſe things which Moſes commanded for a teſtimony unto them:

45 But he went out, and began to publiſh it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, inſomuch that Jeſus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in deſert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

Ver. 1. The beginning of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Agreeable to that ſaying of our Saviour, "the law and the Prophets were until John, from thence the kingdom of God, i. e. the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, is preached," Luke xvi. 16. Therefore Mark fixes the beginning of this Goſpel, properly at the time of John's preaching repentance, as the preparation to receive it, and faith in the Meſſiah, the ſubject thereof.

——— The Goſpel of Chriſt Jeſus, the Son of God.] Who was in the boſom of the Father, John i. 18. and came down from Heaven, John iii. 13. to reveal his Father's will unto us: Wherefore Mark takes notice of this his quality, to inſpire us the more with worthier thoughts of the Goſpel, as being the revelation of the Father's will, and of the author, as being ſo intimate with, and ſo nearly related to the Father.

Ver. 3. Prepare ye the way of the Lord, &c.] See this Scripture to verſe 34, in the notes upon Matt. iii. 3, &c. and iv. alſo in Luke iii. 16. and iv.

Ver. 34.— He healed many that were ſick, and caſt out devils.] This Scripture ought to be remarked in oppoſition to and conviction of thoſe, who pretend to allegorize the literal account of Demoniacks in Scripture; for here it is plain, that the Devils caſt out were not diſeaſes; as alſo may be made appear from chap. iii. 11, 15. v. 12. vi. 13.

CHAP. II.

1 Chriſt healeth one ſick of the palſy, 14 calleth Matthew from the receit of cuſtom, 15 eateth with publicans and ſinners, 18 excuſeth his diſciples for not faſting, 23 and for plucking the ears of corn on the ſabbath-day.

AND again he entred into Capernaum after ſome days, and it was noiſed that he was in the houſe.

2 And ſtraightway many were gathered together, inſomuch that there was no room to receive them, no not ſo much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them.

3 And they come unto him, bringing one ſick of the palſy, which was born of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto him for the preſs, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the ſick of the palſy lay.

5 When Jeſus ſaw their faith, he ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy, Son, thy ſins be forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the ſcribes ſitting there, and reaſoning in their hearts,

7 Why doth this man thus ſpeak blaſphemies? who can forgive ſins but God only?

8 And immediately, when Jeſus perceived in his ſpirit, that they ſo reaſoned within themſelves, he ſaid unto them, why reaſon ye theſe things in your hearts?

9 Whether is it eaſier to ſay to the ſick of the palſy, Thy ſins be forgiven thee: Or to ſay, Ariſe, and take up thy bed and walk?

10 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins (he ſaith to the ſick of the palſy)

11 I ſay unto thee, Ariſe, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine houſe.

12 And immediately he aroſe, took up the bed, and went forth before them all, inſomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, ſaying, We never ſaw it on this faſhion.

13 And he went forth again by the ſeaſide, and all the multitude reſorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 And as he paſſed by, he ſaw Levi the ſon of Alpheus ſitting at the receit of cuſtom, and ſaid unto him, Follow me. And he aroſe and followed him.

15 And it came to paſs, that as Jeſus ſat at meat in his houſe, many publicans and ſinners ſat alſo together with Jeſus and his diſciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

16 And when the ſcribes and Phariſees ſaw him eat with publicans and ſinners, they ſaid unto his diſciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and ſinners?

17 When Jeſus heard it, he ſaith unto them, They that are whole, have no need of a phyſician, but they that are ſick: I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance.

18 And the diſciples of John, and of the Phariſees, uſed to faſt; and they come, and ſay unto him, Why do the diſciples of John, and of the Phariſees faſt, but thy diſciples faſt not?

19 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them they cannot faſt.

20 But the days will come, when the bridegroom ſhall be taken away from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe days.

21 No man alſo ſeweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment: elſe the new piece that filled it up, taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worſe.

22 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles, elſe the new wine doth burſt the bottles; and the wine is ſpilled, and the bottles will be marred: but new wine muſt be put into new bottles.

23 And it came to paſs, that he went through the corn-fields on the ſabbath-day, and his diſciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

24 And the Phariſees ſaid unto him, Behold, why do they on the ſabbath-day that which is not lawful?

25 And he ſaid unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him?

26 How he went into the houſe of God in the days of Abiathar the high-prieſt, and did eat the ſhew-bread, which is not lawful to eat, but for the prieſts, and gave alſo to them which were with him?

27 And he ſaid unto them, The ſabbath was made for man, and not man for the ſabbath:

28 Therefore the Son of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath.

Ver. 4.—They uncovered the roof where he was.] Dr. Lightfoot commenting upon this place, ſhews, that there was a door in every roof by which the Jews were accuſtomed to go from the ὑπερῷον, or upper chamber upon the roof, to diſcourſe of the law and other religious things: This being known to the men, who brought the paralitick to be cured, but not being able to force through the crowd into the chamber, went up ſtairs, and not finding the door aforeſaid wide enough for the man's body to go down at, they widened it, by looſening ſome ſtones about it, and by that means let him down.

Ver. 26.——In the days of Abiathar the high-prieſt.] Here, ſays Dr. Whitby, we are not to underſtand by the high-prieſt, him ſtrictly ſo called, but one who was an eminent man of that order, for this is the import of the original ἐπὶ 'Αβιάθαρ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως.

What more occurs in this chapter that wants explaining, is already done in their parallel places in Matthew, or hereafter on Luke and John.

CHAP. III.

1 Chriſt healeth the withered hand, 10 and many other infirmities: 11 rebuketh the unclean ſpirits: 13 chooſeth his twelve apoſtles: 22 convinceth the blaſphemy of caſting out devils by Beelzebub: 31 and ſheweth who are his brother, ſiſter, and mother.

AND he entred again into the ſynagogue, and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

2 And they watched him, whether he would heal him on the ſabbath-day, that they might accuſe him.

3 And he ſaith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.

4 And he ſaith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the ſabbath-days, or to do evil? to ſave life, or to kill? but they held their peace.

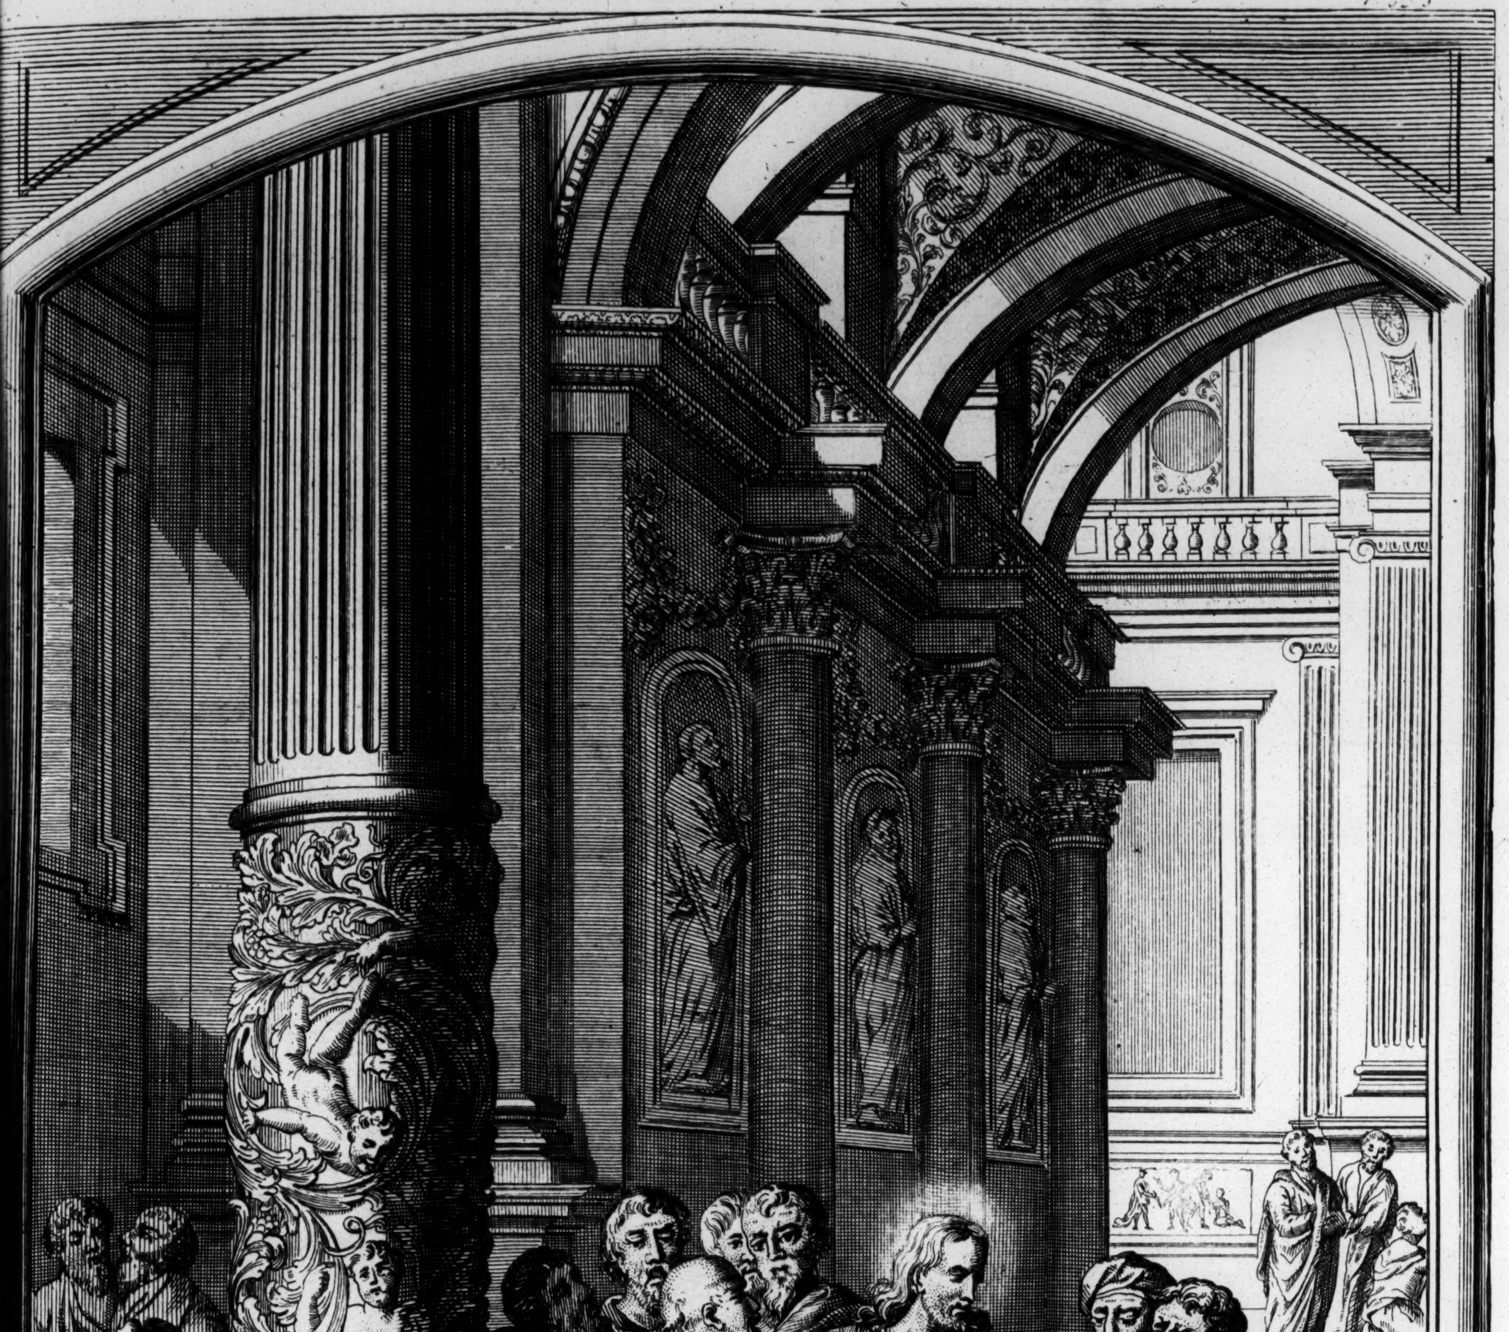
5 And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts, he ſaith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he ſtretched it out: and his hand was reſtored whole as the other.

6 And the Phariſees went forth, and ſtraightway took counſel with the Herodians againſt him, how they might deſtroy him.

7 But Jeſus withdrew himſelf with his diſciples to the ſea: and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea,

8 And from Jeruſalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan, and they went about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9 And



The Wither'd Hand healed.

9 And he ſpake to his diſciples, that a ſmall ſhip ſhould wait on him, becauſe of the multitude, leſt they ſhould throng him.

10 For he had healed many, inſomuch, that they preſſed upon him, for to touch him, as many as had plagues.

11 And unclean ſpirits, when they ſaw him, fell down before him, and cried, ſaying, Thou art the Son of God.

12 And he ſtraitly charged them, that they ſhould not make him known.

13 And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him.

14 And he ordained twelve, that they ſhould be with him, and that he might ſend them forth to preach:

15 And to have power to heal ſickneſſes, and to caſt out devils.

16 And Simon he ſirnamed Peter.

17 And James the ſon of Zebedee, and John the brother of James (and he ſirnamed them Boanerges, which is, the ſons of thunder)

18 And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James, the ſon of Alpheus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite.

19 And Judas Iſcariot, which alſo betrayed him: and they went into an houſe.

20 And the multitude cometh together again, ſo that they could not ſo much as eat bread.

21 And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they ſaid, He is beſide himelf.

22 ¶ And the ſcribes which came down from Jeruſalem, ſaid, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils caſteth he out devils.

23 And he called them unto him, and ſaid unto them in parables, How can Satan caſt out Satan?

24 And if a kingdom be divided againſt it ſelf, that kingdom cannot ſtand.

25 And if a houſe be divided againſt it ſelf, that houſe cannot ſtand.

26 And if Satan riſe up againſt himſelf, and be divided, he cannot ſtand, but hath an end.

27 No man can enter into a ſtrong mans houſe, and ſpoil his goods, except he will firſt bind the ſtrong man, and then he will ſpoil his houſe.

28 Verily I ſay unto you, All ſins ſhall be forgiven unto the ſons of men, and blaſphemies wherewith ſoever they ſhall blaſpheme:

29 But he that ſhall blaſpheme againſt the holy Ghoſt, hath never forgiveneſs, but is in danger of eternal damnation:

30 Becauſe they ſaid, He hath an unclean ſpirit.

31 ¶ There came then his brethren and his mother, and ſtanding without, ſent unto him, calling him.

32 And the multitude ſat about him, and they ſaid unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without ſeek for thee.

33 And he anſwered them, ſaying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

34 And he looked round about on them which ſat about him, and ſaid, Behold, my mother and my brethren.

35 For whoſoever ſhall do the will of God, the ſame is my brother, and my ſiſter, and mother.

Ver. 5. And looking upon them with anger.] Not with a deſire of revenge, for he could neither do nor think any evil, which a revengeful anger ſuppoſes: But our Saviour was angry with the Phariſees for the hardneſs of their hearts, he was inwardly concerned at this with a deſire to do them good, to remove the injury or evil from them; ſee Matt. v. 22.

Ver. 7.——Withdrew himſelf with his diſciples to the ſea.] Becauſe the hardned Jews would not repent at his preaching, &c. but conſulted how to deſtroy him; ver. 5, 6. And thus he generally did in the like caſes, to give place to their wrath, and to ſecure himſelf from their malice; ſee Matt. xii. 15. John viii. 59. Whence we learn not only, that in ſuch caſes it is lawful thus to conſult our ſafety, but that when men are ſo perverſe, we by concealing the truth, do not betray it, but rather do comply with our Lord's command, "not to caſt pearl before ſwine;" Matt. vii. 6.

Ver. 17.—And he ſirnamed them Boanerges, which is, the ſons of thunder.] Our Lord, who knew all thoughts, hearts, and all futurity, ſeems to have named theſe two from a foreſight of their zeal and heat of temper; ſee Luke ix. 54. See alſo Dr. Lightfoot and Grotius on this place.

Ver. 21. And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him; for they ſaid, he is beſides himſelf] Theſe words at firſt ſight in our tranſlation ſeem to advance, that the friends of our Lord were perſuaded, that he acted like a madman, or as we ſay, like one beſides himſelf; for theſe are ſynonimous terms; and that therefore they went out to ſecure him, leſt he ſhould do ſome harm: but the original will direct you to quite another ſenſe, for ἔλεγον γάρ ὅτι ἐξέστη is properly rendred as it is found in other parts of Scripture, they ſaid he is faint, or like to ſwoon; ſee Gen. xlv. 26, 27. Joſh. ii. 11. Iſa. vii. 2. and xxxiii. 3. in all which places the word ἐξέστη is conſtrued fainty. Therefore the text ſhould read thus, His friends hearing of the great pains he took in preaching, &c. went out to deſire or perſuade him to come home and refreſh himſelf, becauſe they were afraid he ſhould fall into a deliquium, or ſwoon, by ſpending his ſpirits: for it is abſurd to ſuppoſe, that Chriſt either in his geſtures, or actions, ſhewed any ſymptoms of a diſtracted mind.

CHAP. IV.

1 The parable of the ſower, 14 and the meaning thereof. 21 We muſt communicate the light of our knowledge to others. 26 The parable of the ſeed growing ſecretly, 30 and of the muſtard-ſeed. 35 Chriſt ſtilleth the tempeſt on the ſea.

AND he began again to teach by the ſea-ſide: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, ſo that he entred into a ſhip, and ſat in the ſea, and the whole multitude was by the ſea, on the land.

2 And he taught them many things by parables, and ſaid unto them in his doctrine,

3 Hearken, behold, there went out a ſower to ſow:

4 And it came to paſs as he ſowed, ſome fell by the way-ſide, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5 And ſome fell on ſtony ground, where it had not much earth, and immediately it ſprang up, becauſe it had no depth of earth.

6 But when the ſun was up, it was ſcorched, and becauſe it had no root, it withered away.

7 And ſome fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8 And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that ſpring up and increaſed, and brought forth ſome thirty, and ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred.

9 And he ſaid unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve, asked of him the parable.

11 And he ſaid unto them, Unto you it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all theſe things are done in parables:

12 That ſeeing they may ſee, and not perceive, and hearing they may hear, and not underſtand; leſt at any time they ſhould be converted, and their ſins ſhould be forgiven them.

13 And he ſaid unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will you know all parables?

14 ¶ The ſower ſoweth the word.

15 And theſe are they by the way-ſide, where the word is ſown, but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was ſown in their hearts.

16 And theſe are they likewiſe which are ſown on ſtony ground, who when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladneſs:

17 And have no root in themſelves, and ſo endure but for a time: afterward when affliction or perſecution ariſeth for the words ſake, immediately they are offended.

18 And theſe are they which are ſown among thorns: ſuch as hear the word,

19 And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulneſs of riches, and the luſts of other things entring in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20 And theſe are they which are ſown on good ground, ſuch as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, ſome thirty-fold, ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred.

21 ¶ And he ſaid unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a buſhel, or under a bed? and not to be ſet on a candleſtick?

22 For there is nothing hid which ſhall not be manifeſted: neither was any thing kept ſecret, but that it ſhould come abroad.

23 If any man have ears to hear, let him ear.

24 And he ſaid unto them, Take heed what you hear: with what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you: and unto you that hear ſhall more be given.

25 For he that hath, to him ſhall be given: and he that hath not, from him ſhall be taken even that which he hath.

26 ¶ And he ſaid, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man ſhould caſt ſeed into the ground,

27 And ſhould ſleep, and riſe night and day, and the ſeed ſhould ſpring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

28 For the earth bringeth forth fruit of her ſelf, firſt the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29 But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the ſickle, becauſe the harveſt is come.

30 ¶ And he ſaid, Whereunto ſhall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what compariſon ſhall we compare it?

31 It is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, which when it is ſown in the earth, is leſs than all the ſeeds that be in the earth.

32 But when it is ſown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and ſhooteth out great branches, ſo that the fowls of the air may lodge under the ſhadow of it.

33 And with many ſuch parables ſpake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it.

34 But without a parable ſpake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his diſciples.

35 And the ſame day when the even was come, he ſaith unto them, Let us paſs over unto the other ſide.

36 And when they had ſent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ſhip, and there were alſo with him other little ſhips.

37 And there aroſe a great ſtorm of wind, and the waves beat into the ſhip, ſo that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ſhip, aſleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and ſay unto him, Maſter, careſt thou not that we periſh?

39 And he aroſe and rebuked the wind, and ſaid unto the ſea, Peace, be ſtill: and the wind ceaſed, and there was a great calm.

40 And he ſaid unto them, Why are ye ſo fearful? how is it that you have no faith?

41 And they feared exceedingly, and ſaid one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the ſea obey him?

CHAP. V.

1 Chriſt delivering the poſſeſſed of the legion of devils, 13 They enter into the ſwine. 25 He healeth the woman of the bloody iſſue, 35 and raiſeth from death Jairus his daughter.

AND they came over unto the other ſide of the ſea, into the country of the Gadarenes.

2 And when he was come out of the ſhip, immediately there met him out of the tombs, a man with an unclean ſpirit,

3 Who had his dwelling among the tombs, and no man could bind him, no not with chains:

4 Becauſe that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked aſunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5 And always night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himſelf with ſtones.

6 But when he ſaw Jeſus afar off, he ran and worſhipped him,

7 And cried with a loud voice, and ſaid, What have I to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of the moſt high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8 (For he ſaid unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean ſpirit)

9 And he asked him, What is thy name? And he anſwered, ſaying, My name is Legion: for we are many.

10 And he beſought him much, that he would not ſend them away out of the country.

11 Now there was there nigh unto the mountains a great herd of ſwine feeding.

12 And all the devils beſought him, ſaying, Send us into the ſwine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jeſus gave them leave. And the unclean ſpirits went out, and entred into the ſwine, and the herd ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea (they were about two thouſand) and were choked in the ſea.

14 And they that fed the ſwine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to ſee what it was that was done.

15 And they come to Jeſus, and ſee him that was poſſeſſed with the devil, and had the legion, ſitting and clothed, and in his right mind, and they were afraid.

16 And they that ſaw it, told them how it befel to him that was poſſeſſed with the devil, and alſo concerning the ſwine.

17 And they began to pray him to depart out of their coaſts.

18 And when he was come into the ſhip, he that had been poſſeſſed with the devil, prayed him that he might be with him.

19 Howbeit, Jeſus ſuffered him not, but ſaith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compaſſion on thee.

20 And he departed, and began to publiſh in Decapolis, how great things Jeſus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

21 And when Jeſus was paſſed over again by ſhip unto the other ſide, much people gathered unto him, and he was nigh unto the ſea.

22 And behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the ſynagogue, Jairus by name, and when he ſaw him, he fell at his feet,

23 And beſought him greatly, ſaying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death, I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that ſhe may be healed, and ſhe ſhall live.

24 And Jeſus went with him, and much people followed him, and thronged him.

25 And a certain woman which had an iſſue of blood twelve years,

26 And had ſuffered many things of many phyſicians, and had ſpent all that ſhe had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worſe,

27 When ſhe had heard of Jeſus, came in the preſs behind, and touched his garment.

28 For ſhe ſaid, If I may touch but his clothes, I ſhall be whole.

29 And ſtraightway the fountain of her blood was dried up: and ſhe felt in her body that ſhe was healed of that plague.

30 And Jeſus immediately knowing in himſelf that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the preſs, and ſaid, Who touched my clothes?

31 And his diſciples ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt the multitude thronging thee, and ſayeſt thou, Who touched me?

32 And he looked round about to ſee her that had done this thing.

33 But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth.

34 And he ſaid unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

35 While he yet ſpake, there came from the ruler of the ſynagogues houſe, certain which ſaid, Thy daughter is dead, why troubleſt thou the Maſter any further?

36 As ſoon as Jeſus heard the word that was ſpoken, he ſaith unto the ruler of the ſynagogue, Be not afraid, only believe.

37 And he ſuffered no man to follow him, ſave Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38 And he cometh to the houſe of the ruler of the ſynagogue, and ſeeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly.

39 And when he was come in, he ſaith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damſel is not dead, but ſleepeth.

40 And they laughed him to ſcorn: but when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damſel, and them that were with him, and entreth in where the damſel was lying.

41 And he took the damſel by the hand, and ſaid unto her, Talitha cumi, which is, being interpreted, Damſel (I ſay unto thee) ariſe.

42 And ſtraightway the damſel aroſe, and walked; for ſhe was of the age of twelve years: and they were aſtoniſhed with a great aſtoniſhment.

43 And he charged them ſtraitly that no man ſhould know it: and commanded that ſomething ſhould be given her to eat.

Ver. 1.——Gadarenes.] The ſame country which Matthew calls Gergeſenes; Matt. viii. 28.

Ver. 2. And when he was come out of the ſhip, immediately there met him out of the tombs, a man with an unclean ſpirit.——Ver. 6. When he ſaw Jeſus he——Ver. 7. Cried with a loud voice, and ſaid, I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.——Ver. 9. My name is Legion, for we are many.——Ver. 12. Send us into the ſwine.——Ver. 13. Jeſus gave them leave. And the unclean ſpirits went out and entred into the ſwine, and the herd of about two thouſand, ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea, and were choked.] This is the ſubſtance of that great miracle which I promiſed in Matthew, to reſcue from the miſinterpretations of unbelievers. It has been very rudely attacked by the author of thoſe ludicrous diſcourſes on our Saviour's miracles, who, to invalidate its truths, objects (ſee Woolſton's 1ſt Diſc. p. 31.) "That ſuch a diſpoſſeſſion can be no proof of Jeſus's Divine Authority, ſince it is no more than what falſe teachers, workers of iniquity, and even ſome artiſts among the Jews have before done." 2. "That it is not credible, there was any herd of ſwine in that country." 3. "That Jeſus's permiſſion of the Devils to enter into the herd of ſwine to their deſtruction, is inconſiſtent with goodneſs and juſtice."

As to the pretenſions of falſe teachers and workers of iniquity, I believe my readers may find a full and ſatisfactory anſwer in my Diſſertation upon Miracles after the eighth chapter of Matthew; and therefore I ſhall only here obſerve further, that the workers of iniquity referred to by our Saviour, who are ſaid to have caſt out Devils; ſee Matt. vii. 22, 23. are ſuch as are likewiſe ſaid to have done ſo in the name of Jeſus; and conſequently are not to be urged againſt him, as acting by his authority, tho' they were immoral men, and therefore ſo far from being known, i. e. approved by Chriſt, that they will finally be condemned by him.

As to the practice of exorciſing evil ſpirits by the Jews in our Saviour's time, it is indeed ſomewhat dubious; I mean by thoſe Jews, who derived no authority from him, nor acted in his name. For, when our Lord ſays (ſee Matt. xii. 2. and Luke xi. 19.) "By whom do your ſons, or children, caſt them out? Therefore they ſhall be your judges:" The ſons, or children here ſpoken of, according to Auſtin and other Fathers, may refer to thoſe, their ſons, who had followed him and become his diſciples, and particularly to the Seventy, who received a commiſſion from Jeſus to caſt out Devils; from whom the ſceptical Jews might every where receive that ſatisfaction, which they refuſed to receive from himſelf; as not only caſting out Devils himſelf, but transferring that power to others, even to ſuch as they knew were their own ſons and children: As likewiſe he might refer them to that perſon (as poſſibly to others that might do the ſame) who caſt out Devils in the name of Jeſus, though he did not follow nor attend on Jeſus; ſee Luke ix. 49. Which ſolution of the caſe receives ſome confirmation from the accounts given by the ſeveral Evangeliſts, of the extreme ſurprize and wonder of the Jews, that were eye-witneſſes of the ſeveral diſpoſſeſſions of evil ſpirits by our Lord, which aſtoniſhment of them, is not capable of any natural explication, on ſuppoſition that the diſpoſſeſſion of Devils was an uſual practice among the Jews in our Saviour's time, independently of his authority. So Matthew remarks, that "when a Devil was caſt out, the dumb ſpake; and the multitudes marvelled, ſaying, it was never ſo ſeen in Iſrael;" Matt. ix. 33. And again the ſame Evangeliſt records, that Jeſus "having healed one that was poſſeſſed with a Devil, blind, and dumb, all the people were amazed, and ſaid, is not this the ſon of David?" Matt. xii. 23. And Mark takes particular notice, That "when Jeſus had caſt an unclean ſpirit out of one, who acknowledged him to be the holy One of God, they [the ſpectators] were all amazed, inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves, ſaying, What thing is this? What new doctrine is this? For with authority commandeth he even the unclean ſpirits, and they do obey him;" ch. i. 27, 28. The very ſame account of the great amazement of the Jews is likewiſe given by the Evangeliſt Luke (in ch. iv. 36. ix. 43. x. 17.) on ſeveral like occaſions; and he adds, that the ſeventy diſciples returned with joy, ſaying, Lord, even the Devils are ſubject unto us through thy name. John, indeed, mentions no diſpoſſeſſions of evil ſpirits by Jeſus, they having been ſo minutely recorded by the three other Evangeliſts, to whom his Goſpel is chiefly a ſupplement of things omitted by them. Now,

From theſe authorities of the Goſpels, it ought to be obſerved, that when it was acknowledged by the Jews, "that it was never ſo ſeen [before] in Iſrael;" that this ſubjection of Devils was a new doctrine; "that this authority of Jeſus in commanding effectually the unclean ſpirits, was an unknown thing in Judea;" and again, "that whole multitudes were ſo aſtoniſhed, as to confeſs it te be a diſtinguiſhing character of the Meſſiah, and to be convinced by it (among other reaſons) that Jeſus was the Meſſiah; it is not eaſy for any one that pays a due veneration to the Divine Authority of the Goſpels, to perſuade himſelf that the caſting out of Devils was before our Saviour cuſtomary among the Jews, or was then practiſed by any of their artiſts, as the foreſaid prophane author ſtiles them. It is alſo clear, that not merely the people conſidered our Lord's diſpoſſeſſion of Devils as a new thing, but the very ſubtle and malicious Phariſees are not found to derogate from thoſe facts, as if they were things uſually practiſed among them, and that conſequently could not give Jeſus any peculiar authority. But the newneſs of this miraculous power being known to all the Jews, they had no other way to evade the force of the argument in favour of Jeſus, drawn from his authoritative diſpoſſeſſion of evil ſpirits, than vainly to pretend, "that he caſt out Devils by Beelzebub the prince of the Devils." The blaſphemous abſurdity of which ſuppoſition was unanſwerably expoſed by our Lord, as neceſſarily inferring that Beelzebub would engage in a confederacy againſt himſelf, and oppoſe the moſt important intereſts of his own kingdom of darkneſs; ſee Matt. ix. 34. xii. 24. But,

Though it ſhould be allowed that ſome diſpoſſeſſions of evil ſpirits were wrought by the Jews before our Lord exerted that power among them; yet it can't be thence reaſonably concluded, "that the diſpoſſeſſions wrought by Jeſus could be no proof of his Divine Authority." For, thoſe diſpoſſeſſions that are ſuppoſed to have been performed by the Jews, before thoſe that were done by our Lord, were not performed by ſuch as Mr. Woolſton diſtinguiſhes by the title of ſome artiſts among the Jews; as if they were owing to ſome ſkill in magick: But if they were wrought at all by the Jews, they were done by the religious invocation of the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob. And it is only of ſuch invocations of the true God, that Juſtin, in his Dialogue againſt Trypho the Jew, and Irenæus (lib. 2. c. 5.) ſpeak on this occaſion. For as for Joſephus's account of their exorciſms (ſee Matt. xii. 24, &c.) as derived from Solomon, it is too full of ludicrous ceremonies to be regarded. But as Juſtin Martyr very dubiouſly ſpeaks on this head, with an "if any of you (Jews) do exorciſe Devils in the name of the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, perhaps they will obey you;" ſo if the fact though rarely wrought, were granted to be true, and that in order to keep up ſome ſenſe of the government of the inviſible, as well as viſible world by the Supreme God; yet the conſequence would not be, as pretended by ſcoffers, "that the diſpoſſeſſions of evil ſpirits by our Saviour were no proof of his Divine Authority. Again, the Jewiſh exorciſms, if real facts, were rather confirmations, and proofs a fortiori, of our Saviour's authority as derived from God. For, if ſuch diſpoſſeſſions were really made among the Jews by the invocation of the name of the true and living God, they were likewiſe very conſiſtently made by Jeſus, who confeſſed that his power in performing theſe diſpoſſeſſions, and other miraculous works, was originally derived from God his Father: And, therefore, ſince his Father and he are one, all his miraculous works were founded on Divine Authority. To which truth we are farther prompted, when we recollect, that the diſpoſſeſſions of evil ſpirits performed by our Lord, were not only the immediate effects of one commanding word, by which he extorted the plaineſt acknowledgments of his divinity from all manner of evil ſpirits, not only thoſe of the inferior, but of the ſuperior kind, that were diſpoſſeſſed by him with greater efficacy, and in greater numbers than was ever known before; but he likewiſe communicated the ſame power to others of caſting out Devils in his own name, and thereby evinced that he was that Meſſiah whom he profeſſed himſelf to be. For, ſuch diſpoſſeſſions were not only made by himſelf perſonally, but by others in his name, as they are ſuppoſed to have been before performed in the name of the true God. And conſequently the pretenſions of Jeſus to the Meſſiah-ſhip and Divine Authority, were not only otherwiſe well ſupported, but received ſome ſort of confirmation from the ſaid ſuppoſition. And indeed,

Even upon this laſt ſuppoſition, it is moſt evident, that our Lord did not caſt out Devils by Beelzebub the prince of the Devils, as the Phariſees ſuggeſted, when they granted that he did actually caſt out Devils. For, beſides that our Lord expoſed with great advantage the forementioned abſurdity of ſuppoſing the prince of the Devils to divide and deſtroy his own kingdom, he farther ſhewed the weakneſs of that calumny, by appealing to the Jews themſelves:" "If I by Beelzebub, ſays he, caſt out Devils, by whom do your children caſt them out? Therefore they ſhall be your judges;" Matt. xii. 27. i. e. uſe the ſame equity in my caſe as ye do in that of your own ſons, [here ſuppoſed different from thoſe that were our Lord's diſciples, and were as ſuch ſpoken of before on the other ſuppoſition] who are ſaid to exorciſe Devils in the name of the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and whom therefore you do not believe to act by the power of Beelzebub. You ought therefore to believe that I alſo act by the power of the true God, and not in confederacy with evil ſpirits, or with their prince, whoſe kingdom is directly oppoſite to that of God. The kingdom of God therefore, and not that of Beelzebub, is erected by me among you: And the finger of God is ſignally diſplayed, not only by my doctrines, as inconſiſtent with the intereſts of Beelzebub, but by my diſpoſſeſſions of all manner of evil ſpirits in the name and by the authority of the living and true God. This is the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which I am now introducing, which was foretold by Daniel, and the other ancient Prophets; and is founded on the ruins of the kingdom of Beelzebub, whoſe works I came to deſtroy. ——— So that upon either ſuppoſition, whether the Jews did, or did not exorciſe evil ſpirits effectually before our Saviour exerted that power, his Divine Authority is equally vindicated and proved. Now,

2. As to the objection, "that it is not credible, there was any herd of ſwine in that country." I anſwer; It is true, that the uſe of ſwine was expreſly forbid to the Hebrews by their law, Levit. xi. 7. Deut. xiv. 8. From whence they conceived ſuch a deteſtation of this animal, that they would not ſo much as pronounce its name; but inſtead of it, ſaid, that beaſt, that thing, much leſs can it be ſuppoſed, that they kept ſwine. Yet don't think that therefore this account of an herd of ſwine kept in the country of Gadara, or of the Gadarenes, is a fiction or incredible; for it is very creditable, that ſwine were both kept and eat in the country of Gadara, which was part of the Decapolis, or the region of ten cities of Greeks intermixed with the Jews; it was the metropolis of Perea in Cœleſyria, and moreover, it was not a Jewiſh, but a Greek city; ſee Reland. Paleſt. part 2. So that conſequently both that place, and the adjacent country round about it may fairly be allowed to abound with ſwine. See this more largely proved from Strabo and Joſephus, by that learned and judicious critick Caſaubon, in his Exercit. 13. in Baron. Annal. p. 301. edit. Lond. 1614.

3. As to the latter part of the charge, "That ſuch a permiſſion of the Devils to enter into the herd of ſwine, to their deſtruction, is inconſiſtent with goodneſs and juſtice." It is anſwered, That as the miracles of our Lord, in general, were very uſeful and beneficial to mankind, ſo, it is certain, three inſtances occur out of about thirty different ſorts of them, that were, no doubt, for peculiar reaſons of Divine Providence, of the punitive and vindictive kind; viz. "That of driving the ſellers and buyers out of the temple, tho' without any injury done to their goods." "That of curſing the barren fig-tree, which ſhall be vindicated in its proper place; and "this miraculous permiſſion now under our immediate conſideration." But to reduce the argument into a narrow compaſs. They were either Jews or Gentiles, that were proprietors of theſe ſwine that ran into the ſea, and were drowned, in conſequence of the permiſſion given to the evil ſpirits to enter into them. Then, if the ſwine belonged to the Jews that were intermixed with the Greeks or Grecian Gentiles, thoſe Jews were juſtly puniſhed, for their ſordid covetouſneſs, that prevailed ſo far as to induce them to break their own laws and conſtitutions: But ſuppoſing that theſe ſwine were the property of ſome apoſtate Jews, with whom, as Grotius informs us, the country of Gadara abounded, it muſt be granted, that they were moſt juſtly puniſhed for their apoſtacy. On the contrary, ſuppoſe that theſe ſwine belonged to ſome of the Gentiles, it will be reaſonable to believe, that they were guilty of ſome great and enormous ſin, which brought this loſs to them: Neither is that an improbable conjecture, which ſuppoſeth this affliction to be ſent to cure them, by an argument peculiarly adapted to them, of their idolatrous worſhip of Dæmons; over whom Jeſus ſo clearly demonſtrated his ſuperiority, both in caſting out of one man a whole legion of them, and likewiſe by their frank acknowledgment that they abſolutely depended on his Divine Permiſſion. So that this very permiſſion ſeems, in the intention of it, to have been uſeful and beneficial for the end of the work, tho' it was of the terrifying and punitive kind. For, our Saviour hereby not only ſhewed the implacable hatred of thoſe Dæmons or evil ſpirits, whom they worſhipped, to mankind; but likewiſe his own inexpreſſible love to all men, by ſubduing the power, and reſtraining the malice of their inviſible enemies, and to themſelves in particular, by caſting out of one of their Dæmoniacks ſuch a multitude of Devils, and obliging them to leave their miſerable country. And if the people of that country were not of a temper capable of being gained to the Goſpel by ſo great an act of love and compaſſion, it was not improper to terrify thoſe, who deſerved to be puniſhed not only for their former ſins, but for their preſent perverſeneſs and obſtinate infidelity; becauſe it can't be ſuppoſed but that they muſt have frequently heard of the miracles which Jeſus ſo often and openly performed on the other ſide of the Lake of Tiberias, and now were eye-witneſſes to a very great one wrought in the cure of the two wretched Dæmoniacks among themſelves. So that even this permiſſion from Jeſus to the evil ſpirits, was amply compenſated by caſting a whole legion of Devils out of one perſon, that is, by ſuffering about three of them to enter into each hog, inſtead of about ſix thouſand of them keeping poſſeſſion of one man. And,

This diſpoſſeſſion of thoſe evil ſpirits, and the permiſſion given them in conſequence thereof, were arguments of great force to ſhew the power of Jeſus, over ſo numerous a legion of them, and thereby to convince the Gadarenes, if they had made a right application of this miracle, of the truth of the Goſpel, and of the madneſs of their own worſhip of ſuch impure ſpirits, as were both caſt out of men at the command of Jeſus, and could not enter even into that hated creature, a ſwine, without his permiſſion. The goodneſs, therefore, as well as juſtice of our Lord are fully exhibited in the diſpoſſeſſion of ſo many tyrannical ſpirits lodged in one man, unto whom great things are truly ſaid to have been done by God, Luke viii. 39. and likewiſe by this attempt of Jeſus, the Son of God, to rouze and awaken the thoughtleſs, or rather wicked Gadarenes, to a true ſenſe of his power and doctrine, by a loſs ſo eaſily borne, and which probably was ſhared among ſeveral proprietors of that herd of ſwine; who may be conſidered as a ſort of contributors to the ſacrifice of them, and devoted to the deliverance of their country from evil ſpirits. To which, let it be obſerved, how few the vindictive inſtances of Jeſus's miraculous power, are compared with the many terrible ones of the meek legiſlator Moſes, and the other ancient Prophets performed upon multitudes of men, and not upon mere ſwine, or an inſenſible fig-tree. Let it be remembred, that Jeſus was not only acknowledged by the Jewiſh multitudes to be a great Prophet, and conſequently to be admitted upon a level in power with other former Prophets of their nation; but was alſo confeſſed by the very Devils, which he caſt out of men to be the Son of God moſt High, Mark v. 7. Luke viii. 28. and likewiſe was, and is believed by all true Chriſtians, to be the Sovereign Proprietor of all the works of the creation, and who, therefore, can transfer right without any imputation of injury, and who probably puniſhed the Gadarenes for their abominable ſin and idolatry, with much leſs ſeverity than their iniquities deſerved, with a view at the ſame time to promote their converſion and eternal welfare. See Biſhop Smallbrooke's Vindication, &c. Vol. 1. page 190, &c.

Ver. 21. And when Jeſus was paſſed over again by ſhip, &c.] From Gadara, ſee Matt. ix. 1. and Luke viii. 40.

Ver. 22. And behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the ſynagogue, Jairus by name.] He was among the Jews ſtiled the ruler of the ſynagogue, who had the care of the ſynagogue, not much differing from our Churchwarden, or overſeer of the poor, &c.

Ver. 23. — My little daughter lieth at the point of death.] This is a very different account from what is given by the father, of his daughter's caſe in Matthew, for there it is ſaid, my daughter is even now dead. This diſagreement of the evangelical account in this matter, has been attempted in various ſhapes to be reconciled, but, I think, with little ſucceſs, except that diſtinction which muſt neceſſarily be made between the time that Jairus came to Jeſus, to petition him for the cure of his daughter, and is here, and again by Luke viii. 48. particularly taken notice of firſt; and the time when the ſervants of the ruler came to him, yet preſſing Jeſus to go to his houſe, and told him, that his daughter was now dead; as it follows, at ver. 35. So that Matthew only gives us the latter part of this account, and therefore the Evangeliſts are in no wiſe to be accuſed of a contradiction in terms. I will give you the opinion of the learned Maldonate.

I am perſuaded, that the ruler of the ſynagogue did not at the ſame time ſpeak thoſe words which Matthew hath recorded together, as ſaid at one time, "My daughter is even now dead, but come and lay thy hand upon her, and ſhe ſhall live," Matt. ix. 18. but theſe words, come, and lay thy hand upon her, were ſpoken before he knew of her death; and having heard of her death, it is more probable, that he either asked, or intended ſo to do, that Jeſus would not trouble himſelf to go along with him, his daughter being dead; ſee below, ver. 35. and Luke viii. 49. which alſo may be collected from the comfortable words of Jeſus at the time that the news of her death arrived; for then ſaid Chriſt to the Father, Be not afraid, only believe, Mark v. 36. and ſhe ſhall be made whole, Luke viii. 50. which intimates, that the Father was now ready to lay aſide all expectations of relief from Chriſt, ſhe being now dead; it is not credible that a Jew, and he a ruler of the ſynagogue, and, may be a Sadducee, could be ſo credulous and believing that Chriſt, was able to raiſe his daughter from the dead, though it is highly probable, that the many cures which he had heard, and perchance ſeen done upon his neighbours by Jeſus, convinced him, that he could cure all diſeaſes, and raiſe up his diſeaſed daughter from her ſick-bed.

Ver. 25. And a certain woman which had an iſſue of blood twelve years, &c.] This miraculous cure of the woman, which had an iſſue of blood twelve years, has ſuffered the ſame fate with that of the cure of the Demoniack, out of which Jeſus caſt a legion of Devils. And I hope to reſcue it from the miſinterpretation of thoſe ſcoffers, who are ſo daring to fly in the face of the Deity, by denying his works. Therefore,

I ſhall premiſe, and deſire my readers, when they meet with any cure performed miraculouſly by Jeſus, that they will diſtinguiſh between thoſe that are naturally curable, and thoſe that are naturally incurable; for though ſome diſeaſes cured by Jeſus were naturally curable, yet his cure thereof was miraculous, becauſe performed in ſuch a manner, as could not be performed by any human art. Among thoſe that were naturally incurable, we reckon the reſtoration of the withered hand, and giving ſight to one born blind: and among thoſe which were ſuppoſed to be naturally curable, are thoſe inſtantaneous and ſudden cures of ſome diſtempers, as they were the immediate effects of a mere word ſpoken by him with regard to the ſick, either preſent or abſent, or of the ſlighteſt touch of his hand or garment. Now,

This diſtribution comprehends all the miraculous cures by our Lord; and thoſe of each ſort are equally miraculous. For, though ſome celebrated and pious Phyſicians, as Ader, Mercurialis and Bartholine, &c. give it as their opinion, that all the bodily diſeaſes cured by our Lord, were really incurable by art, notwithſtanding the reſpect that is juſtly due to their judgment in phyſick, I don't apprehend, that the exigency of the caſe in diſpute requires ſo unlimited an aſſertion. It is certain, indeed, in general, that moſt of the diſeaſes cured by our Lord, were incurable in their own nature by art. But to avoid a vain diſpute about curable and incurable diſeaſes, and the juſt limits of them, tho' it ſhould be ſuppoſed, that ſome few of the numerous diſeaſes performed by our Lord, might poſſibly in their own nature, have been curable by a long courſe of proper remedies, and a ſlow and gradual proceſs in the practice of phyſick, agreeably to the peculiar ſymptoms of the reſpective diſeaſes; yet ſuch a ſuppoſition does by no means derogate from the miraculous cures of thoſe very diſeaſes by Jeſus, as the manner of their cures, was both immediate and laſting, without any proper means uſed, or any regard had to the criſis of thoſe diſtempers. So that, tho' in thoſe caſes, the cure of a curable diſeaſe was not ſupernatural as to the ſubject-matter, it was nevertheleſs moſt evidently ſo, as to the manner of the cure, and as attended with an immediate effect. Therefore ſuch as blame the account of theſe miraculous cures by the Evangeliſts as inaccurate, ſhould remember that the Evangeliſts write accurately as hiſtorians, and that it is unreaſonable to expect that they ſhould deſcribe, with the accuracy of profeſſed phyſicians or ſurgeons, the nature and ſymptoms of the ſeveral diſeaſes they have recorded to have been cured by Jeſus. Yet let me tell them, that their narrations of Chriſt's miraculous cures are ſo delivered, as to be ſufficient to convince all rational and unprejudiced perſons, that his cures of all thoſe diſeaſes were ſupernatural, either as to the ſubject-matter, or the manner of them. Conſequently,

In regard to the miraculous cure in the text, as to the nature of this woman's diſeaſe, it is agreed on by the Evangeliſts, who have thought proper to mention it, that it was an iſſue of blood which ſhe had laboured under for the ſpace of twelve years, Matt. ix. 20. and in procuring relief therefrom, "ſhe had ſuffered many things of many phyſicians, and had ſpent all that ſhe had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worſe;" Mark v. 26. Luke himſelf, a phyſician, uſes theſe memorable words on this occaſion, "She had ſpent all her living upon phyſicians, neither could ſhe be healed of any," Luke viii. 43. Whatever therefore was the nature of this diſeaſe, it is moſt clear from the account given of it by Mark and Luke, that it was ſo very inveterate and obſtinate, as to be incurable by the ſenative art of phyſick, ſome harſh and uncommon courſes of which ſeem to have been practiſed on her from what is ſaid, that "ſhe ſuffered many things of many phyſicians," and that alſo at ſo great an expence, that whatever her circumſtances were, (which ſeem to have been conſiderable from her having conſulted many Phyſicians, at leaſt it would have been ſo at this time in our nation) ſhe was reduced thereby to poverty. Whence we may evidently conclude, that her diſtemper was a chronical and confirm'd diſeaſe. But whereas this account of the diſeaſe merely from the Evangeliſts may be objected againſt as partial, I ſhall produce the ſentiments of ſome eminent phyſicians concerning the nature of this diſeaſe, who muſt be allowed competent judges of matters of this kind.

It is indeed confeſſed, that the original words uſed by the Evangeliſts on this occaſion, for the hemorrhage, or iſſue of blood, are too general to aſcertain to us the particular diſeaſe ſhe ſo long laboured under, and to determine critically what part of her was chiefly affected. Yet, though this nicety was either thought unneceſſary, or perhaps was owing to the modeſty of the Evangelical Penmen, it is moſt probable, and generally accepted, that this diſeaſe was of the menſtruous kind, and was an immoderate and very frequent diſcharge of blood from the hyſterical veſſels, according to the great Bartholine, who expreſſes himſelf in theſe terms, "There was a continual flux of blood from the hyſterical parts, and nature being by length of time accuſtomed to a diſcharge that way, and the woman's ſtrength and vigour being daily impared and broke, the diſtemper became incurable." He alſo cites Mercurialis to the ſame effect. See Bartholine de morbis biblicis. And yet I can't avoid tranſcribing the opinion of the famous and learned phyſician Ader. "It is, ſays he, as certain that the recovery of the health of the woman, who put her faith in Chriſt, was to be deemed incurable, as that the hiſtory of her is true. — All circumſtances concur ſufficiently to excuſe both the art of phyſick, and the profeſſors thereof, though they gave her up as incurable; — for ſhe laboured under that troubleſome and odious diſeaſe, called the hyſterical iſſue of blood — which increaſes and grows worſe by remedies, till at laſt no hopes can be expected from their application." See Ader de morbis evangel. apud Critic. Sacr. p. 3685. tom. 9. London. To whom let us add, that honour to the faculty, and the Engliſh nation. Dr. Friend, who in his hiſtory of Phyſick (Part I. page 222, &c.) obſerves, that "Luke is more particular in reciting all the miracles of our Saviour in relation to healing, than the other Evangeliſts are. —— The reading the Greek authors, while he ſtudied phyſick, ſays he, made his language without diſpute, more exact. —— In ſetting down the cure of the woman, who laboured under an iſſue of blood, his language is both more ſimple and more correct, as well as more phyſical. —— Tho' he mentions the particulars mentioned by Mark, yet he gives them quite another turn, and ſoftens the paſſage very much in regard to his faculty, and inſtead of relating how much ſhe ſuffered by the ſeveral Phyſicians, or how ſhe grew worſe upon her remedies, he ſays only, that her diſtemper was above the reach of any of them to remove it, for that is the import of the original οὐκ ἴσχυσεν ἀπ' οὐδενὸς θεραπευθῆναι. And thus I have ſhewn from undoubted authority, that the Evangelical account of this diſtemper, is ſufficient to convince any unprejudiced perſon, that it is accurate, and proves the cure thereof to be miraculous, even in reſpect of the ſubject-matter. However, to proceed and obviate all objections,

It is objected, that this iſſue of blood was cured by the power of the woman's imagination; which is nothing elſe but the old Plea of Pompanatious, the Atheiſt, revived and publiſhed, though with leſs decency, by Woolſton. But this is a vain and uſeleſs refuge of them both. For how can mere fancy be ſuppoſed to change the fixed nature of things? If this were poſſible, it might be reaſonably expected, that this woman muſt have received great benefit from ſome or other of thoſe many phyſicians ſhe had conſulted; ſince it is not probable that ſhe would have ſpent all her living upon them, and ſuffered many things, or gone through ſevere courſes of phyſick, as preſcribed by them, if ſhe had not formed a very good opinion, at leaſt, of ſome of them, and fancied with a ſtrong perſuaſion, that ſhe might have recovered her health by their advice. This is Reaſon; and let us now examine in fact what ſhare imagination can have in any cure whatever: And it will be found, that all the work of fancy towards the performing a bodily cure, is to entertain a good opinion of our phyſician, of his skill in phyſick, and fidelity in preſcription, and poſſibly of his friendſhip too, and thence to be pleaſed with great hopes of the ſucceſs of his endeavours and preſcriptions. But, though this opinion ſhould be allowed in the outmoſt extent or latitude of a patient's affections, it is utterly incredible that the beſt opinion or moſt ſanguine hopes could be powerful enough to remove a chronical diſtemper, ſo habitually rooted in nature for twelve years together, as to have in vain exhauſted the whole art of phiſick, and baffled the attempts of all phyſicians. Yet,

Let it be carefully remarked, that this woman was cured by faith. This was always neceſſary in the patient cured by Jeſus, inſomuch that Matthew records, how "he did not many miracles there, [at Nazareth,] becauſe of their unbelief, Matt. xiii. 58. See alſo Mark vi. 5, 6. But this act of faith was not a mere fancy; it was a real perſuaſion that Jeſus was a true Prophet, and the true Meſſiah, whom they expected to heal all their infirmities; and they that had not this faith in them, might fancy for ever, and yet would want that peculiar condition, which qualified them for their reſpective cures, and thereby could not be proper objects of his mercy. Faith therefore, is not to be confounded with imagination or fancy; for the former is a rational aſcent to the Meſſiah-ſhip of Jeſus, which he aſſerted and proved by his works and doctrine, and the latter is nothing but an extraordinary opinion ſuppoſed to be formed of him, or of any other perſon, though without any juſt foundation. So that

The woman that was cured, as having the qualification of faith required by Jeſus, was healed by his power cooperating with her performance of that very condition; and therefore not againſt Jeſus's will and knowledge; for, ſuch a faith was agreeable to his declared Will; and his enquiry about the perſon that had touched him, was not a token of ignorance, but only in order to demonſtrate openly to the people, by the confeſſion of the woman herſelf, the cure, which was ſo ſecretly performed upon her. And indeed, Jeſus ſhewed a Divine Knowledge, by diſtinguiſhing the effect of the ſanative touch, from the numerous ordinary touches of the crowd that preſſed him about. And that there could be no artifice uſed, appears very clearly from the woman's accidentally hearing of Jeſus as he was occaſionally travelling towards Jairus's houſe; and likewiſe from the cure's being wrought upon her in conſequence of her coming behind him, and ſecretly touching, not his perſon, but only the hem of his garment. Moreover, it was impracticable to uſe any artifice in this caſe, ſince, as has been ſhewn, the mere imagination of a ſanative virtue in Jeſus, without a real exertion of ſuch a virtue, was incapable of actually healing her, and in this aſſertion I am ſupported by the concurring teſtimonies of thoſe eminent phyſicians, Dr. Harle, Bartholine and Fienus: For Dr. Harle writes thus on this very miracle, "What ſanative virtue this was that reſided in the body of the holy Jeſus, and how exerted, and when it was; how he perceived it, or how he was affected by it, is more than we know, becauſe not revealed; but here could be no manner of colluſion. She came behind him, and touched him, ſo that none of the company could perceive it, but all were ready to excuſe the fact, from the crowding of the people, as if it had been accidental, or forced; but that could not eſcape omniſcience," &c. ſee his Eſſay, p. 22. And as to the force of imagination, Bartholine anſwers in a parallel caſe of the incurable confirm'd palſy; Matt. viii. 6—13. Where, after he has made all fair allowances to the ſtrength of imagination, he ſays, "the nature of faith, or truſt [in Jeſus] of the centurion [who petitioned for the cure of his ſervant] is altogether unlike, and bears no proportion to that of imagination, becauſe, the remedy uſed is ſo very ſtupendous. No truſt or confidence whatſoever, either in the phyſician or the phyſick, in deſperate and chronical diſtempers, can avail to ſuch a degree as to reſtore that vigorous warmth [of the nerves] that is extinct, &c. Again Fienus, an eminent phyſician of the laſt century, who wrote an entire treatiſe of the ſtrength of imagination, ſupports with ſeveral reaſons, "that the fanſy or imagination, cannot, of itſelf, cure any diſeaſes, not "even ſuch as are more plain and ſimple, ſuch as the hectick, or dropſy." See Fienus de viribus imaginationis, p. 194, 195. L. Bat. 1635. Therefore,

It remains evident upon the whole, that the Evangeliſts have ſufficiently deſcribed the nature of this woman's diſeaſe, and the manner of its cure to evince the miraculouſneſs of the recovery of her health.

Ver. 39.—The damſel is not dead, but ſleepeth.] i. e. In regard to me and my Divine Power, this damſel, tho' ſhe is dead in your eyes and belief, is like unto one that ſleepeth: For I will raiſe her up to life again with my mere word, as eaſily as one may be awakened from ſleep; ſee ver. 41.

Ver. 41.———I ſay unto thee.] He commanded the ſoul of the deceaſed damſel to return into her body; becauſe "he hath the keys of hell and of death;" Rev. i. 18. He killeth and maketh alive; he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up;" 1 Sam. ii. 6.

Ver. 43.—He charged them ſtraitly that no man ſhould know it.] See the Annotations on Matt. viii. 4.

CHAP. VI.

1 Chriſt is contemned of his countrymen. 7 He giveth the twelve power over unclean ſpirits. 14 Divers opinions of Chriſt. 18 John Baptiſt is beheaded, 29 and buried. 30 The Apoſtles return from preaching. 34 The miracle of five loaves, and two fiſhes. 48 Chriſt walketh on the ſea. 53 And healeth all that touch him.

AND he went out from thence, and came into his own country, and his diſciples follow him.

2 And when the ſabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the ſynagogue: and many hearing him were aſtoniſhed, ſaying, From whence hath this man theſe things? and what wiſdom is this which is given unto him, that even ſuch mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3 Is not this the carpenter, the ſon of Mary, the brother of James and Joſes, and of Juda and Simon? and are not his ſiſters here with us? and they were offended at him.

4 But Jeſus ſaid unto them, A prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own houſe.

5 And he could there do no mighty work, ſave that he laid his hands upon a few ſick folk, and healed them.

6 And he marvelled becauſe of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages, teaching.

7 ¶ And he calleth unto him the twelve, and began to ſend them forth by two and two, and gave them power over unclean ſpirits.

8 And commanded them that they ſhould take nothing for their journey, ſave a ſtaff only: no ſcrip, no bread, no money in their purſe:

9 But be ſhod with ſandals: and not put on two coats.

10 And he ſaid unto them, In what place ſoever ye enter into an houſe, there abide till ye depart from that place.

11 And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, ſhake off the duſt under your feet, for a teſtimony againſt them. Verily I ſay unto you, It ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city.

12 And they went out and preached that men ſhould repent.

13 And they caſt out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them.

14 And king Herod heard of him (for his name was ſpread abroad) and he ſaid, that John the Baptiſt was riſen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do ſhew forth themſelves in him.

15 Others ſaid, That it is Elias. And others ſaid, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.

16 But when Herod heard thereof, he ſaid, It is John whom I beheaded, he is riſen from the dead.

17 For Herod himſelf had ſent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in priſon for Herodias ſake, his brother Philips wife; for he had married her.

18 For John had ſaid unto Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brothers wife.

19 Therefore Herodias had a quarrel againſt him, and would have killed him, but ſhe could not.

20 For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a juſt man, and an holy, and obſerved him, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.

21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birth-day made a ſupper to his lords, high captains, and chief eſtates of Galilee:

22 And when the daughter of the ſaid Herodias came in, and danced, and pleaſed Herod, and them that ſat with him, the king ſaid unto the damſel, Aſk of me whatſoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he ſware unto her, Whatſoever thou ſhalt aſk of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And ſhe went forth, and ſaid unto her mother, What ſhall I aſk? And ſhe ſaid, The head of John the Baptiſt.

25 And ſhe came in ſtraightway with haſte unto the king, and aſked, ſaying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger, the head of John the Baptiſt.

26 And the king was exceeding ſorry, yet for his oaths ſake, and for their ſakes which ſat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately the king ſent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went, and beheaded him in the priſon.

28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damſel: and the damſel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his diſciples heard of it, they came and took up his corps, and laid it in a tomb.

30 And the apoſtles gathered themſelves together unto Jeſus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.

31 And he ſaid unto them, Come ye your ſelves apart into a deſert place, and reſt a while: for there were many coming, and going, and they had no leiſure ſo much as to eat.

32 And they departed into a deſert place by ſhip privately.

33 And the people ſaw them departing, and many knew him, and ran a foot thither out of all cities, and out-went them, and came together unto him.

34 And Jeſus, when he came out, ſaw much people, and was moved with compaſſion toward them, becauſe they were as ſheep not having a ſhepherd: and he began to teach them many things.

35 And when the day was now far ſpent, his diſciples came unto him, and ſaid, This is a deſert place, and now the time is far paſſed:

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themſelves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

37 He anſwered and ſaid unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they ſay unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred peny-worth of bread, and give them to eat?

38 He ſaith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and ſee. And when they knew, they ſay, Five, and two fiſhes.

39 And he commanded them to make all ſit down by companies upon the green graſs.

40 And they ſat down in ranks by hundreds, and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fiſhes, he looked up to heaven, and bleſſed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his diſciples to ſet before them; and the two fiſhes divided he among them all.

42 And they did all eat and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fiſhes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves, were about five thouſand men.

45 And ſtraightway he conſtrained his diſciples to get into the ſhip, and to go to the other ſide before unto Bethſaida, while he ſent away the people.

46 And when he had ſent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray.

47 And when even was come, the ſhip was in the midſt of the ſea, and he alone on the land.

48 And he ſaw them toiling in rowing: (for the wind was contrary to them) and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the ſea, and would have paſſed by them.

49 But when they ſaw him walking upon the ſea, they ſuppoſed it had been a ſpirit, and cried out.

50 (For they all ſaw him, and were troubled) And immediately he talked with them, and ſaith unto them, Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid.

51 And he went up unto them into the ſhip, and the wind ceaſed: and they were ſore amazed in themſelves beyond meaſure, and wondred.

52 For they conſidered not the miracle of the loaves, for their heart was hardned.

53 And when they had paſſed over, they came into the land of Genneſaret, and drew to the ſhore.

54 And when they were come out of the ſhip, ſtraightway they knew him,

55 And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds thoſe that were ſick, where they heard he was.

56 And whitherſoever he entred, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the ſick in the ſtreets, and beſought him that they might touch, if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched him, were made whole.

Ver. 3. Is not this the carpenter the ſon of Mary, &c.] Hence it may probably be collected, that Chriſt, while he was in his father Joſeph's houſe, before he came out to be baptized of John, uſed Joſeph's trade of a carpenter. See Matt. xiii. 55.

— The brother, &c.] See Matt. xiii. 55.

— Offended at him.] See Matt. xiii. 57. and xi. 6.

Ver. 5. And he could do there no mighty works, &c.] Not for want of any power in himſelf, but becauſe of the indiſpoſition of the unbelieving people, ver. 6. which diſpoſition of faith, according to God's appointment, is requiſite in him that draweth near unto God to deſire or receive any benefit from his hands; as the ſeed ought to be ſown before we may expect any harveſt, ſee Mark ix. 23. and v. 25. towards the end.

Ver. 7. And he calleth unto him the twelve, and began to ſend them forth by two and two, &c.] This account of the Miſſion of the Apoſtles by Chriſt is already explained in Matthew x. 1, &c.

Ver. 13. And they —— anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them.] This text miſinterpteted has been laid as a foundation of a ſacrament in the church of Rome. But if the inventers of that extreme unction, as they call it, had but obſerved, that this act of anointing with oil was not commanded by Chriſt, when he gave his commiſſion to, and ſent out his diſciples to preach, teach, and work miracles, as the context preceding informs us, they, if not blinded with an ambitious ſenſe of innovation, muſt acknowledge, that their ſacrament of extreme unction, was not hereby inſtituted by Chriſt; but that the anointing with oil was merely accidental to the Miſſion of the Apoſtles, they making uſe of ſuch a Jewiſh ceremony to repreſent their own great deſire of doing good, and the efficacy which the Goſpel of Chriſt, they preached, would have over their ſouls, by raiſing them from the lethargy of ſin to a ſtate of ſalvation, or ſpiritual health, which ſhould make them live with God to all eternity. See this at large in James v. 14. where I purpoſe to confute the Papiſt doctrine raiſed from this text.

Ver. 15. Others ſaid that he is a Prophet, or as one of the Prophets.] See Matt. xvi. 14. Luke vii. 16. ix. 19. John iv. 19. and ix. 17. and Matt. xiv. 5.

CHAP. VII.

1 The Phariſees find fault at the diſciples for eating with unwaſhen hands. 8 They break the commandment of God, by the traditions of men, 14 Meat defileth not the man. 24 He healeth the Syrophenician woman's daughter of an unclean ſpirit, 31 and one that was deaf, and ſtammered in his ſpeech.

THEN came together unto him the Phariſees, and certain of the ſcribes, which came from Jeruſalem.

2 And when they ſaw ſome of his diſciples eat bread with defiled (that is to ſay, with unwaſhen) hands, they found fault.

3 For the Phariſees, and all the Jews, except they waſh their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market, except they waſh, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the waſhing of cups and pots, braſen veſſels, and of tables.

5 Then the Phariſees and ſcribes asked him, Why walk not thy diſciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwaſhen hands?

6 He anſwered and ſaid unto them, Well hath Eſaias propheſied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7 Howbeit, in vain do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

8 For laying aſide the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the waſhing of pots and cups: and many other ſuch like things ye do.

9 And he ſaid unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For Moſes ſaid, Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Whoſo curſeth father or mother, let him die the death.

11 But ye ſay, If a man ſhall ſay to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to ſay, a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me: he ſhall be free.

12 And ye ſuffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother:

13 Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many ſuch like things do ye.

14 ¶ And when he had called all the people unto him, he ſaid unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and underſtand.

15 There is nothing from without a man that entring into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, thoſe are they that defile the man.

16 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 And when he was entred into the houſe from the people, his diſciples asked him concerning the parable.

18 And he ſaith unto them, Are ye ſo without underſtanding alſo? Do ye not perceive, that whatſoever thing from without entreth into the man, it cannot defile him,

19 Becauſe it entreth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats?

20 And he ſaid, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man.

21 For from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

22 Thefts, covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, deceit, laſciviouſneſs, an evil eye, blaſphemy, pride, fooliſhneſs:

23 All theſe evil things come from within, and defile the man.

24 ¶ And from thence he aroſe and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entred into an houſe, and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid.

25 For a certain woman whoſe young daughter had an unclean ſpirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet:

26 (The woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation) and ſhe beſought him that he would caſt forth the devil out of her daughter.

27 But Jeſus ſaid unto her, Let the children firſt be filled: for it is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it unto the dogs.

28 And ſhe anſwered and ſaid unto him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the childrens crumbs.

29 And he ſaid unto her, For this ſaying, go thy way, the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30 And when ſhe was come to her houſe, ſhe found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

31 ¶ And again departing from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the ſea of Galilee, through the midſt of the coaſts of Decapolis.

32 And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his ſpeech: and they beſeech him to put his hand upon him.

33 And he took him aſide from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he ſpit, and touched his tongue.

34 And looking up to heaven, he ſighed, and ſaith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened.

35 And ſtraightway his ears were opened, and the ſtring of his tongue was looſed, and he ſpake plain.

36 And he charged them that they ſhould tell no man: but the more he charged them, ſo much the more a great deal they publiſhed it,

37 And were beyond meaſure aſtoniſhed, ſaying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to ſpeak,

Ver. 1. Then came together to him the Phariſees, and certain of the ſcribes which came from Jeruſalem.] See this whole chapter annotated in Matthew xv. 1, &c.

Ver. 33. He put his fingers into his ears, and he ſpit, and touched his tongue.] Chriſt often uſes viſible ſigns, to repreſent that divine inviſible virtue which he had in him, and would exert upon a believing ſubject. Thus, becauſe deaf perſons ſeem to have their ears cloſed, he puts his fingers into the man's ears, to intimate, that by his power he would open them; and becauſe the tongue of the deaf ſeems to be tied, or through drought to cleave to the palate, Chriſt touches his tongue, and moiſtens it with ſpittle, to intimate, that he would looſe, and give free motion to his tongue. The Jews were great obſervers of outward ſigns; and therefore Chriſt the more frequently made uſe of them, not as neceſſary in themſelves, but through choice, to engage the attention of the by-ſtanders the more to what he ſaid and did. Thus alſo we may obſerve, that the Jews at this very time deſired Chriſt to lay his hands upon the man he cured, becauſe they had read in the 2 Book of Kings, ch. v. ver. 11. that the ancient Prophets laid their hands on thoſe they healed.

Ver. 36. And he charged them that they ſhould tell no man, &c.] See the annotations on Matt. viii. 4.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Chriſt feedeth the people miraculouſly: 10 refuſeth to give a ſign to the Phariſees: 14 admoniſheth his diſciples to beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the leaven of Herod: 22 giveth a blind man his ſight: 27 acknowledgeth that he is the Chriſt, who ſhould ſuffer and riſe again: 34 and exhorteth to patience in perſecution for the profeſſion of the goſpel.

IN thoſe days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jeſus called his diſciples unto him, and ſaith unto them,

2 I have compaſſion on the multitude, becauſe they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat:

3 And if I ſend them away faſting to their own houſes, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

4 And his diſciples anſwered him, From whence can a man ſatisfy theſe men with bread here in the wilderneſs?

5 And he asked them how many loaves have ye? and they ſaid, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people to ſit down on the ground: and he took the ſeven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his diſciples to ſet before them: and they did ſet them before the people.

7 And they had a few ſmall fiſhes: and he bleſſed, and commanded to ſet them alſo before them.

8 So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left, ſeven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thouſand; and he ſent them away.

10 ¶ And ſtraightway he entred into a ſhip, with his diſciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

11 And the Phariſees came forth, and began to queſtion with him, ſeeking of him a ſign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And he ſighed deeply in his ſpirit, and ſaith, Why doth this generation ſeek after a ſign? Verily I ſay unto you, There ſhall no ſign be given to this generation.

13 And he left them, and entring into the ſhip again, departed to the other ſide.

14 ¶ Now the diſciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ſhip with them more than one loaf.

15 And he charged them, ſaying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the leaven of Herod.

16 And they reaſoned among themſelves, ſaying, It is becauſe we have no bread.

17 And when Jeſus knew it, he ſaith unto them, Why reaſon ye, becauſe ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither underſtand? have ye your heart yet hardned?

18 Having eyes, ſee ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember?

19 When I brake the five loaves among five thouſand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They ſay unto him, Twelve.

20 And when the ſeven among four thouſand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they ſaid, Seven.

21 And he ſaid unto them, How is it that ye do not underſtand?

22 ¶ And he cometh to Bethſaida, and they bring a blind man unto him, and beſought him to touch him.

23 And he took the blind man by the hand, and lead him out of the town; and when he had ſpit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he ſaw ought.

24 And he looked up, and ſaid, I ſee men as trees walking.

25 After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was reſtored, and ſaw every man clearly.

26 And he ſent him away to his houſe, ſaying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

27 ¶ And Jeſus went out, and his diſciples, into the towns of Ceſarea Philippi: and by the way he asked his diſciples, ſaying unto them, Whom do men ſay that I am?

28 And they anſwered, John the Baptiſt: but ſome ſay, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.

29 And he ſaith unto them, But whom ſay ye that I am? And Peter anſwereth and ſaith unto him, Thou art the Chriſt.

30 And he charged them that they ſhould tell no man of him.

31 And he began to teach them, that the Son of man muſt ſuffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief prieſts and ſcribes, and be killed, and after three days riſen again.

32 And he ſpake that ſaying openly. And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him.

33 But when he had turned about, and looked on his diſciples, he rebuked Peter, ſaying, Get thee behind me, Satan: for thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

34 ¶ And when he had called the people unto him, with his diſciples alſo, he ſaid unto them, Whoſoever will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me.

35 For whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it; but whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my ſake, and the goſpels, the ſame ſhall ſave it.

36 For what ſhall it profit a man, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul?

37 Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?

38 Whoſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed when he cometh in the glory of his father with the holy angels.

Ver. 1. In thoſe days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, &c.] See Matt. xv. 27, &c.

Ver. 10. And ſtraightway he entered into a ſhip with his diſciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.] This is a parallel Scripture to Matt. xv. 39. though Matthew inſtead of Dalmanutha, writes Magdala, which in the Syriac, Arabic, and ſeveral old Greek copies is read Magedan. The queſtion is, where Magedan and Dalmanutha were ſituated. Brochard, in his deſcription of the Holy Land (ch. iii.) gives it as his opinion, that Magedan or Medan, was one of the two ſources of the river Jordan, called Dan, at the foot of mount Libanus. And, as Reland in his Paleſtine teſtifies, it is certain, that great numbers of Saracens, Arabians and Parthians, invited by the agreeableneſs of the ſituation, and conveniency of trade, kept a fair and dwelt in the country adjacent to the lake Phiala, which is the true ſource of Jordan; for which reaſon that place was called Medan in Arabic, which is interpreted a fair; which is agreeable to the account we read of this place in Hegeſippus, p. 108. Now as to the derivation or formation of Dalmanutha, it is ſaid, that of Medan, or as Hegeſippus writes it, Meldan, may be formed Delmana, or Delmanata, or Delmanutha, and if this be right, Medan, Magedan, Maldan, Delmana, Delmanuta or Delmanutha, will be the ſame place; and we muſt here underſtand, that Jeſus Chriſt having paſſed over the ſea or lake of Tiberias, advanced towards the ſources of Jordan, and went to Medan.

Ver. 11. And the Phariſees came forth, and began to queſtion with him, ſeeking of him a ſign from heaven.] See this Scripture to ver. 22. expounded in Matt. xvi. 1, &c.

Ver. 22. And he cometh to Bethſaida.] This was the town of Peter, Andrew and Philip, and as Chryſoſtome adds, of James and John; which the great and judicious antiquarian Brochard, in his deſcription of the Holy Land lays out in this manner: “Bethſaida, ſays he, the city of Peter, Andrew, and Philip, is ſituate on the north-ſide of the ſea of Galilee, in the very corner whence it begins to twine, three leagues from Nephthali.

—— And beſought him to touch him.] See the reaſon of this requeſt in ch. vii. ver. 32. in the notes.

Ver. 23 —— And when he had ſpit on his eyes, &c.] See the annotations on Mark vii. 33.

Ver. 24. —— I ſee men as trees walking.] i. e. I can ſee, but imperfectly; I ſee ſomething walking, but I can't tell whether it be a man or a tree.

Ver. 26. —— Nor tell it to any in the town.] The reaſon is aſſigned in the notes on Matt. viii. 4.

What remains of this chapter is explained in our commentaries on Matt. xvi. 13, &c.

Ver. 31. —— The Son of man muſt ſuffer many things, &c.] This was added to convince his diſciples that he was not come to eſtabliſh a temporal kingdom upon earth. And therefore he ſhews them at the 35th verſe, how they muſt expect to be rewarded.

Ver. 35. —— Whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my ſake, and the Goſpels, the ſame ſhall ſave it.] i. e. If wicked men ſhall kill your body, yet if you do but perſevere in the truth of my Goſpel, inſtead of a temporal preferment, I promiſe you an eternal crown; for whoſoever dies in defending my cauſe, ſhall live for ever with me in my Father's kingdom. And

Ver. 38. Whoſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me.] Shall not embrace nor hold faſt my Goſpel, but in time of perſecution ſhall diſſemble with God, and forſake his aſſemblies, or deny his Holy Word, ſhall be excluded from the inheritance of the Saints and caſt into outer darkneſs at the great day of univerſal judgment.

CHAP. IX.

2 Jeſus is transfigured: 11 He inſtructeth his diſciples concerning the coming of Elias: 14 caſteth forth a dumb and deaf ſpirit: 30 foretelleth his death and reſurrection: 33 exhorteth his diſciples to humility: 38 bidding them not to prohibit ſuch as be not againſt them, nor to give offence to any of the faithful.

AND he ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that there be ſome of them that ſtand here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they have ſeen the kingdom of God come with power.

2 ¶ And after ſix days, Jeſus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themſelves: and he was transfigured before them.

3 And his raiment became ſhining, exceeding white as ſnow; ſo as no fuller on earth can white them.

4 And there appeared unto them Elias, with Moſes: and they were talking with Jeſus.

5 And Peter anſwered and ſaid to Jeſus, Maſter, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias.

6 For he wiſt not what to ſay, for they were ſore afraid.

7 And there was a cloud that overſhadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, ſaying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.

8 And ſuddenly when they had looked round about, they ſaw no man any more, ſave Jeſus only with themſelves.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what things they had ſeen, till the Son of man were riſen from the dead.

10 And they kept that ſaying with themſelves, queſtioning one with another what the riſing from the dead ſhould mean.

11 ¶ And they asked him, ſaying, Why ſay the ſcribes that Elias muſt firſt come?

12 And he anſwered and told them, Elias verily cometh firſt, and reſtoreth all things, and how it is written of the Son of man, that he muſt ſuffer many things, and be ſet at nought.

13 But I ſay unto you, that Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatſoever they liſted, as it is written of him.

14 ¶ And when he came to his diſciples, he ſaw a great multitude about them, and the ſcribes queſtioning with them.

15 And ſtraightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him, ſaluted him.

16 And he asked the ſcribes, What queſtion ye with them?

17 And one of the multitude anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, I have brought unto thee my ſon, which hath a dumb ſpirit:

18 And whereſoever he taketh him, he teareth him; and he fometh, and gnaſheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I ſpake to thy diſciples, that they ſhould caſt him out, and they could not.

19 He anſwered him, and ſaith, O faithleſs generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? bring him unto me.

20 And they brought him unto him: and when he ſaw him, ſtraightway the ſpirit tare him, and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foming.

21 And he asked his father, How long is it ago ſince this came unto him? And he ſaid, Of a child.

22 And oft-times it hath caſt him into the fire, and into the waters to deſtroy him: but if thou canſt do any thing, have compaſſion on us, and help us.

23 Jeſus ſaid unto him, If thou canſt believe, all things are poſſible to him that believeth.

24 And ſtraightway the father of the child cried out, and ſaid with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.

25 When Jeſus ſaw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul ſpirit, ſaying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf ſpirit, I charge thee, Come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26 And the ſpirit cried, and rent him ſore, and came out of him; and he was as one dead, inſomuch that many ſaid, He is dead.

27 But Jeſus took him by the hand, and lifted him up, and he aroſe.

28 And when he was come into the houſe, his diſciples asked him privately, Why could not we caſt him out?

29 And he ſaid unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and faſting.

30 ¶ And they departed thence, and paſſed through Galilee; and he would not that any man ſhould know it.

31 For he taught his diſciples, and ſaid unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they ſhall kill him, and after that he is killed, he ſhall riſe the third day.

32 But they underſtood not that ſaying, and were afraid to ask him.

33 ¶ And he came to Capernaum, and being in the houſe, he asked them, What was it that ye diſputed among your ſelves, by the way?

34 But they held their peace: for by the way they had diſputed among themſelves, who ſhould be the greateſt.

35 And he ſat down and called the twelve, and ſaith unto them, If any man deſire to be firſt, the ſame ſhall be laſt of all, and ſervant of all.

36 And he took a child, and ſet him in the midſt of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he ſaid unto them,

37 Whoſoever ſhall receive one of ſuch children in my name, receiveth me: and whoſoever ſhall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that ſent me.

38 ¶ And John anſwered him, ſaying, Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbad him, becauſe he followeth not us.

39 But Jeſus ſaid, Forbid him not: for there is no man which ſhall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly ſpeak evil of me.

40 For he that is not againſt us, is on our part.

41 For whoſoever ſhall give you a cup of water to drink, in my name, becauſe ye belong to Chriſt, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall not loſe his reward.

42 And whoſoever ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and he were caſt into the ſea.

43 And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands, to go into hell, into the fire that never ſhall be quenched:

44 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

45 And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet, to be caſt into hell, into the fire that never ſhall be quenched:

46 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

47 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be caſt into hell-fire:

48 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

49 For every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, and every ſacrifice ſhall be ſalted with ſalt.

50 Salt is good: but if the ſalt have loſt his ſaltneſs, wherewith will you ſeaſon it? Have ſalt in your ſelves, and have peace one with another.

Ver. 1. —— There be ſome of them that ſtand here which ſhall not taſte of death, till they have ſeen the kingdom of God come with power.] How this verſe comes to be miſplaced from the context in the concluſion of the preceding chapter, I can't learn, but there it ought to ſtand as the 39th verſe, and ſhall be explained hereafter in John xxi. 22.

Ver. 2. After ſix days.] To this, Matthew's text agrees, but Luke has it about eight days after, Luke ix. 28. ὡσεὶ ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ. So that to reconcile this ſeeming diſagreement, it will be neceſſary to obſerve, that Matthew and Mark only computed the intermediate days, between that on which Chriſt made this diſcourſe, and the day he went up into the mountain, which were ſix days complete; but Luke willing to be more exact in the accouut of time, includes both the day of the diſcourſe, and that on which he aſcended into the mount, ὡσεὶ ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ, for the word ὡσεὶ in the original always, when a ſum is mentioned, gives us to underſtand, that the number there mentioned is not exact, and wanteth ſomething to make it complete; e. g. Luke ſays, that Chriſt was ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, i. e. beginning to be thirty, or near upon thirty years of age. Again, we read in ſeveral places of the New Teſtament that it was ὡσεὶ ὥρα ἕκτη, i. e. inclining to, or about the ſixth hour, Matt. xiv. 21. Luke i. 56. xxii. 59. John iv. 6. xix. 14. Acts ii. 41. iv. 4. v. 36. x. 3.

— Into an high mountain, &c.] See Matt. xvii. 1, &c.

Ver. 4.—There appeared to them Elias with Moſes, and they were talking with Jeſus.] It has been thought, or at leaſt taught by ſome, that Moſes and Elias were not truly there, not ſeen by the diſciples, but only that they had an appearance of them in their fancy or imagination; but what is added by Luke ix. 31. that theſe two talked with him; and ſpake of his deceaſe or exit, which he [Jeſus] was to accompliſh at Jeruſalem; puts it out of all doubt, eſpecially if it be remarked, that all this was done whilſt theſe diſciples were aſleep, and had ſeen nothing; but being awaked, they ſaw two men ſtanding with them, Luke ix. 30, &c. talking with Jeſus, which talk informed the diſciples, who they were. Moreover Luke does not ſtile this appearance ὅραμα, a viſion; which, when it is repreſented to the Phanſie, happeneth rather to men in a ſleep than after they awake, (ſee the notes on Iſa. i.) but he calls it ὀπτασία, a repreſentation of the thing to the eyes. But,

It is again objected, How can this be ſince Moſes and Elias had been a long time taken from the earth? Dr. Whitby anſwers, It is probable, that God might have preſerved the bodies of both theſe men for this end or purpoſe; for the body of Elias was carried up into Heaven, 2 Kings ii. 11. The body of Moſes, ſays Joſephus, in the fourth book and eighth chapter of his Antiquities, was not found, it diſappeared, and the Jews have a tradition that he aſcended and miniſtred to God in the Heavens; ſee Whitby on Matt. xvii. 3.

Ver. 9. —— He charged them that they ſhould tell no man what things they had ſeen.] Not to his diſciples, who were not preſent, leſt they ſhould be troubled, becauſe they were not admitted to ſee it; nor to thoſe multitude of believers, which now followed him, leſt they, weak in faith, ſhould be ſcandalized at his future ſufferings, after having heard of ſo glorious a transfiguration.

Ver. 10. And they kept that ſaying with themſelves, queſtioning one with another what the riſing from the dead ſhould mean.] Jeſus in the preceding verſe having commanded Peter, James and John, to keep his transfiguration a ſecret till the Son of Man [or the Meſſiah] was riſen from the dead; they, not thinking ſuch a reſurrection reconcileable with their received tradition, "That the Meſſiah, the ſon of David, ſhould not die," John xii. 34. began to reaſon the matter among themſelves, as if they might argue, "It is ſaid, that the ſon of David ſhould reign over the houſe of Jacob for ever, and of his kindom there ſhould be no end, Luke i. 33. but Chriſt ſhall abide for ever; John xii. 34. what means this ſaying, "that the Son of Man ſhall riſe from the dead?" They could not underſtand this ſaying, and it was hid from them that they perceived it not, Luke ix. 45. See alſo Mark ix. 31, 32. Luke xviii. 34. xxiv. 21. and Matt. xvii. 23. ſo that their queſtion concerning the riſing from the dead, was only in reſpect to the death of the Meſſiah, they did not deny the doctrine of the reſurrection of the ſame body at the Day of Judgment, the Phariſees believed that, Acts xxiv. 15. and was confeſſed by Martha, John xi. 24. beſides the Old Teſtament records the reſurrection of a particular perſon from the dead, and they had ſeen an example of it with their own eyes at the gates of the city of Naim.

Ver. 11. And they asked him, ſaying, Why ſay the ſcribes that Elias muſt firſt come.] As if they ſhould have ſaid, if thou art indeed the King Meſſiah, and the Son of God, and has ſo far accompliſhed thy office, as to talk of a death which thou muſt ſuffer at Jeruſalem, why is not Elias come to anoint thee and to preach of thee? According to the tradition of the ſcribes. See Lightfoot in Matt. xvii. 10. and Trypho.

Ver. 12. And he anſwered and told them, Elias verily cometh firſt, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xvii. 10, &c.

Ver. 23. —If thou canſt believe this.] viz. That I can help thee.

Ver. 38. We ſaw a man caſting out devils in thy name, and we forbad him, becauſe he follows not us.] This man is ſuppoſed to be a diſciple of John, who did this miracle through the faith which he had in Chriſt, whom he expected ſhortly to come. See the notes on Matt. xii. 27.

Ver. 41. For whoſoever ſhall give you a cup of cold water in my name, &c.] i. e. Even the leaſt ſervice done to me, by helping any one for my names ſake, ſhall be rewarded, and much more the labour which this man ſhews in divulging the honour of my name, and thereby aſſiſting me to beat down the kingdom of Satan.

Ver. 43. —Than having two hands to be caſt into Hell, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.] This was a familiar expreſſion among the Jews, taken from Iſa. lxvi. 24. where, by Hell, or Gehenna, is repreſented the place where they believed the wicked were to be tormented for ever, by fire. See the Jeruſalem Targum on Gen. xv. 17. and other places, and Judith xvi. 17. Whence we may probably collect,

That admit the worm is tropically to be underſtood of the ſting of conſcience, yet the body ſhall certainly burn in fire properly ſo called. See Matt. iii. 10, 12. xiii. 50. John xv. 6. Matt. x. 28. xxv. 45. 2 Theſſ. i. 8. Jude 7. 2 Peter iii. 10. And that this puniſhment of the wicked ſhall be eternal; and is conſiſtent with Divine Juſtice and Goodneſs, as ſhall be made appear hereafter.

CHAP. X.

2 Chriſt diſputeth with the Phariſees touching divorcement: 13 bleſſeth the children that are brought unto him: 17 reſolveth a rich man how he may inherit life everlaſting: 23 telleth his diſciples of the danger of riches: 28 promiſeth rewards to them that forſake any thing for the goſpel: 32 foretelleth his death and reſurrection: 35 biddeth the two ambitious ſuiters to think rather of ſuffering with him: 46 and reſtoreth to Bartimeus his ſight.

AND he aroſe from thence, and cometh into the coaſts of Judea by the farther ſide of Jordan: and the people reſort unto him again; and as he was wont, he taught them again.

2 ¶ And the Phariſees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.

3 And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, What did Moſes command you?

4 And they ſaid, Moſes ſuffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

5 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, For the hardneſs of your heart, he wrote you this precept.

6 But from the beginning of the creation, God made them male and female.

7 For this cauſe ſhall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife;

8 And they twain ſhall be one fleſh: ſo then they are no more twain, but one fleſh.

9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put aſunder.

10 And in the houſe his diſciples asked him again of the ſame matter.

11 And he ſaith unto them, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery againſt her.

12 And if a woman ſhall put away her husband, and be married to another, ſhe committeth adultery.

13 ¶ And they brought young children to him, that he ſhould touch them; and his diſciples rebuked thoſe that brought them.

14 But when Jeſus ſaw it, he was much diſpleaſed, and ſaid unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of ſuch is the kingdom of God.

15 Verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he ſhall not enter therein.

16 And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and bleſſed them.

17 ¶ And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good maſter, what ſhall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

18 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good, but one, that is God.

19 Thou knoweſt the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not ſteal, Do not bear falſe witneſs, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

20 And he anſwered and ſaid unto him, Maſter, all theſe have I obſerved from my youth.

21 Then Jeſus beholding him, loved him, and ſaid unto him, One thing thou lackeſt: go thy way, ſell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor; and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven; and come, take up the croſs, and follow me.

22 And he was ſad at that ſaying, and went away grieved: for he had great poſſeſſions.

23 ¶ And Jeſus looked round about, and ſaith unto his diſciples, How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

24 And the diſciples were aſtoniſhed at his words. But Jeſus anſwereth again, and ſaith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that truſt in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were aſtoniſhed out of meaſure, ſaying among themſelves, Who then can be ſaved?

27 And Jeſus looking upon them, ſaith, With men it is impoſſible, but not with God: for with God all things are poſſible.

28 ¶ Then Peter began to ſay unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee.

29 And Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, There is no man hath left houſe, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wiſe, or children, or lands for my ſake and the goſpels,

30 But he ſhall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with perſecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

31 But many that are firſt, ſhall be laſt: and the laſt firſt.

32 ¶ And they were in the way going up to Jeruſalem: and Jeſus went before them; and they were amazed, and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things ſhould happen unto him,

33 Saying, Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be delivered unto the chief prieſts, and unto the ſcribes: and they ſhall condemn him to death, and ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles:

34 And they ſhall mock him, and ſhall ſcourge him, and ſhall ſpit upon him, and ſhall kill him: and the third day he ſhall riſe again.

35 ¶ And James and John the ſons of Zebedee come unto him, ſaying, Maſter, we would that thou ſhouldſt do for us whatſoever we ſhall deſire.

36 And he ſaid unto them, What would ye that I ſhould do for you?

37 They ſaid unto him, Grant unto us that we may ſit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand in thy glory.

38 But Jeſus ſaid unto them, Ye know not what ye aſk: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with?

39 And they ſaid unto him, We can. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Ye ſhall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptiſm that I am baptized withal ſhall ye be baptized:

40 But to ſit on my right hand and on my left hand, is not mine to give, but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

41 And when the ten heard it, they began to be much diſpleaſed with James and John.

42 But Jeſus called them to him, and ſaith unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exerciſe lordſhip over them: and their great ones exerciſe authority upon them.

43 But ſo ſhall it not be among you: but whoſoever will be great among you, ſhall be your miniſter:

44 And whoſoever of you will be the chiefeſt, ſhall be ſervant of all.

45 For even the Son of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter, and to give his life a ranſom for many.

46 ¶ And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his diſciples, and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus the ſon of Timeus, ſat by the highway-ſide, begging.

47 And when he heard that it was Jeſus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and ſay, Jeſus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And many charged him that he ſhould hold his peace: but he cried the more a greal deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49 And Jeſus ſtood ſtill, and commanded him to be called: and they call the blind man, ſaying unto him, Be of good comfort, riſe; he calleth thee.

50 And he caſting away his garment, roſe, and came to Jeſus.

51 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, What wilt thou that I ſhould do unto thee? The blind man ſaid unto him, Lord, that I might receive my ſight.

52 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his ſight, and followed Jeſus in the way.

Ver. 1. And he aroſe from thence.] From the houſe of Peter, which was at Capernaum, for here he had been ever ſince he entered, as the Evangeliſt mentions, at ch. ix. ver. 33.

Ver. 4 — Moſes ſuffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.] This was the allegation of the Jews, concerning the legality of a man's putting away his wife. Now you ſhall read what Moſes actually tolerated, "When a man, ſays he, hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to paſs that ſhe find no favour in his eyes, becauſe he hath found ſome uncleanneſs in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and ſend her out of his houſe. And when ſhe is departed out of his houſe, ſhe may go and be another man's wife. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and ſendeth her out of his houſe; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife, her former husband which ſent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that ſhe is defiled, for that is an abomination before the Lord," Deut. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c. This was the toleration which Chriſt acknowledges, was given by Moſes, on account of the ſtubbornneſs and hardneſs of the Jewiſh hearts. Now,

This permiſſion in the law of Moſes, had many interpretations, during the exiſtence of the Jewiſh œconomy. For, the ſchool of Shammah, who lived a little before our Saviour's manifeſtation, taught, that a man could not lawfully be divorced from his wife, unleſs he had found her guilty of ſome really infamous action, contrary to the rules of virtue. But the ſchool of Hillel, who was diſciple to Shammah, defended the quite oppoſite opinion; for, tranſlating the text thus, if he hath found any thing in her, or an uncleanneſs, they taught, that the leaſt reaſons, if he did not like her cokery, or met with another woman he fancied more than his wife, were ſufficient to authorize a man to put her away. This Hillel was ſucceeded by one Akiba, another famous Rabbin, who was ſtill more indulgent to men, affirming that a men might lawfully put away his wife, if ſhe was not agreeable to her husband; which, ſaid he, is the import of the text of Moſes; if ſhe find no favour in his eyes, or, if he find any uncleanneſs in her; for ſo he falſely read the law, to make it countenance his own wicked intentions, which poſſeſſed the men with ſuch a wrong notion of their abſolute power over their wives, that in proceſs of time, Joſephus and Philo, the Jewiſh Hiſtorians record, that divorces were, in their time, become very common, upon frivolous pretences. And, according to the account of Leo of Modena, the Jews to this day, hold that wicked principle, "If a woman gives her husband no occaſion of complaint, he may put her away to pleaſe his own humour; ſee his Ceremon. Jud. part 4. c. 6. Therefore,

Our Bleſſed Lord, ſeeing how the law by Moſes was deſtroyed by thoſe falſe comments and inventions of the Jewiſh Schools, has determined the meaning of thoſe words, "find no favour in his eyes, becauſe he hath found ſome uncleanneſs in her," by the ſin of adultery, which is the uncleanneſs; to which alone Chriſt has limited the permiſſion of divorce. "It hath been ſaid by them of old time, ſays he, whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery, and whoſoever ſhall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery," Matt. v. 31, 32. Words which have been interpreted many different ways. Some by adultery and fornication, have underſtood all ſorts of great crimes, ſuch as idolatry, infidelity, &c. which are ſometimes in Scripture included under the name of fornication. Others again have limited the meaning of this word to the ſingle crime of real adultery and infidelity; tho' both theſe interpretations are confuted by that of the Apoſtle Paul to the Corinthians, who interpreting this very doctrine to thoſe, who were converted to Chriſtianity, ſays, Not the Lord, but I, ſpeak; if any brother hath a wife, that believeth not, and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband, that believeth not, and if he be pleaſed to dwell with her, let her not leave him, 1 Cor. vii. 12, &c. Therefore we are to underſtand, as Paul, and almoſt all other good interpreters from him to this time, have interpreted our Saviour's words in their ſtrict and vigorous meaning.

The next thing to be noted in this law of divorces, is to know, whether perſons ſeparated by divorce, are at full liberty to marry again? The law of Moſes gives no direction in this particular; it only permits the woman put away to marry; tho' by forbidding the ſaid husband, that hath divorced his wife, to marry her again, it ſeems directly to prohibit his marrying not only her, but any other, ſo long as ſhe is alive; which I take to be the interpretation thereof by Chriſt himſelf, below at ver. 11, 12. otherwiſe they muſt be taken in flat contradiction to the law, which he came not to deſtroy, but to fulfil. Yet Calmet ſays, that the laws of the firſt Chriſtian Emperors did allow it; and Tertullian in his Monogamy, and the 4th Book againſt Marcion, declares it as his opinion, "that the bond of marriage is diſſolved by adultery, and that the woman who is put away, may marry another man." Origen ſays, that in his time, ſome Biſhops gave licences for ſuch marriages; and ſeveral councils, particularly of the Gallican Church are cited, which ſuppoſe, or authorize the ſame cuſtom, Concil. Arelat. 1. can. 10. Concil. Aurelian. 2. c. 11. Vermer. c. 5, 6, 11, 17, 20. Compendienſ. c. 1*6*. Synod. Hibern. S. Patricii An. 314. c. 1*6*. But,

Tho' theſe things have been ſometimes practiſed, they have been almoſt always condemned; accordingly the Council of Elvira, (c. 8, 9.) owns, diſapproves and condemns this abuſe; the canons aſcribed to the Apoſtles, expreſly enjoin, "that no man, who has put away his wife, ſhall marry another in his former wife's life-time, can. 48. The decretal epiſtles of Siricius, Innocent the Firſt, Leo, Stephen and Zachary, do abſolutely preſcribe theſe marriages, and treat them as adulteries. And all good Chriſtians have conſtantly believed and taught, in conſequence of this Goſpel we are explaining, that the bond of marriage ſtill ſubſiſts, notwithſtanding the moſt legal divorce. See Calmet's Diſſertation on Divorces, prefixed to his Comment upon Deuteronomy.

The next thing to be conſidered is, the reaſon of this law of divorce by Moſes. It is thought with the greateſt probability, that divorces were in uſe among the Hebrews, before the promulgation of the law; as for example, Abraham diſmiſſed Hagar, by reaſon of her inſolence, and at the requeſt of Sarah. A practiſe learned from the Heathen nations, as ſo Moſes, as Chriſt ſays, permitted that cuſtom to continue with ſome reſtrictions, as explained above, by reaſon only of the hardneſs of their hearts; becauſe they were accuſtomed to this abuſe, and to hinder and prevent greater evils. And to convince his hearers of this truth, he refers them to the original law of God's Ordinance, which muſt not be broke, ver. 6, 7, 8. compared with Gen. l. 27. ii. 24. Beſides,

We don't find one example of a divorce in all the books of the Old Teſtament ſince Moſes; and the Jews themſelves tell us, that David was not permitted to divorce any of his wives, to marry Abiſhag. The Levite's young wife, who was diſhonoured at Gibeah, had forſaken her husband, and never would have returned, if he had not gone in purſuit of her, Judges xv. 2. See alſo xix. 2, 3. But the Prophet Malachi commends Abraham for not divorcing Sarah, though ſhe was barren; and inveighs againſt the Jews, who had abandoned and deſpiſed the wife of their youth, Mal. ii. 15. and Micah reproaches them with having caſt out their wives from their pleaſant houſes, and taken away the glory of God from their children for ever, Micah ii. 9.

Ver. 12. And if a woman ſhall put away her husband, &c.] This was not permitted by the Moſaical Law of divorces, recited in the preceding note; it was an addition by the ſcribes, and contrary to all modeſty, and honeſty, yet was in practiſe in the days of Chriſt, by the Jews, in imitation of the Grecians and Romans. The firſt inſtance of a woman's divorcing her husband, that we can find in hiſtory, was Salome the ſiſter of Herod the Great, ſee Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 15. c. 11. After this Herodias, who is mentioned in the Goſpel, Matt. xiv. 3. Mark vi. 17. did alſo diſmiſs her husband in the ſame way, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 7. The three ſiſters of young Agrippa, who was the firſt king of Chalcis, and afterwards of the Trachonitis and Batancea, uſed the privilege of divorcing their husbands. So Berenice, the eldeſt, had not been married long to Polemo king of Pontus, before ſhe put him away, and was followed in example by her ſiſter Mariamne, who quitted Archelaus, her firſt husband to marry Demetrius, Alabarch, or chief among the Jews in Alexandria. Finally, Druſilla the Third, forſook Aziz king of Emeſa, to marry Felix, governor of Judea.

Ver. 13. They brought young children to him, that he ſhould touch them.] i. e. That he ſhould put his hands on them, and pray, ſo this text is expounded from Matthew, xix. 13. which imports, that he, who had power to cure all diſeaſes, to caſt out devils and raiſe the dead, might bleſs their ſmall children, and to pray to God, to endue them with heavenly virtues; agreeable to an ancient cuſtom among the Hebrews, whoſe elders, that were eſteem'd above their brethren, were accuſtomed to lay their hands on the younger, as you may read in Geneſis xlviii. 14, 15.

——And his diſciples rebuked thoſe that brought them.] This is not to be groſsly underſtood, that the diſciples of Chriſt condemned them for bringing their children for a bleſſing; but, Chriſt being now much ſpent and fatigued in his diſputes with the Phariſees, they had a mind to have him retire from the increaſing throng; ſee the note on Mark iii. 21.

Ver. 15.———Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, ſhall not enter therein.] i. e. Whoſoever ſhall not embrace the Goſpel, and be born of water and the Holy Ghoſt, ſo that they are become new babes in Chriſt, as theſe little children are whom I bleſs, cannot enter into the kingdom of God; ſee John iii. 3.

The following to the 32d verſe are explained in Matt. xix. except

Ver. 30. But he ſhall receive an hundred fold, &c.] i. e. Infinite more and better things, according to that of Paul, who has ſaid, "I reckon, that the ſufferings of this preſent time, are not worthy to be compared with the glory that ſhall be revealed in us;" Rom. viii. 18. Therefore the Evangeliſts, both Matthew, and Mark, have ſet down an hundred fold, as an indefinite number, which is alſo proved from a parallel Scripture in Luke, which has not an hundred fold, but only manifold more; Luke xviii. 30.

——Now in this time, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mother, and children, and lands, &c.] i. e. Now in this time, ye ſhall be ſupported in the midſt of a perverſe generation by my ſpirit, who am all things to you; for don't you remember how I told you before, that 'whoſoever ſhall do the will of my Father which is in Heaven, the ſame is my brother, and ſiſter, and mother;' Matt. xii. 50.

Ver. 32. And they were in the way going up to Jeruſalem.] This imports either that Jeruſalem was ſituate on a mountain, or that the Hebrew word hhalah, which is here tranſlated, going up, may properly be rendred ſimply, going to; Le Clerc on the place.

————And Jeſus went before them; and they were amazed, and as they followed, they were afraid.] Jeſus having frequently told his diſciples, "That he muſt ſuffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief prieſts and ſcribes, and be killed;" Mark viii. 31. They called theſe things to mind in their way to Jeruſalem, knowing that muſt be the place where their Lord muſt be delivered into the hands of men, becauſe the high-prieſts, &c. reſorted and inhabited there: therefore they were amazed to ſee his reſolution to face his enemies, and at the ſame time they followed him in fear of undergoing the ſame difficulties and ſufferings he had foretold ſhould befal him at Jeruſalem; as it follows in the two next verſes.

Ver. 35. And James and John the ſons of Zebee come unto him, ſaying, Maſter, we would that thou ſhouldſt do for us whatſoever we ſhall deſire.] This paſſage in Matthew xx. 20. introduces the mother of theſe ſons, praying the favour, here mentioned, of Jeſus; but this Evangeliſt only takes notice of the ſons of James and John; becauſe the mother was no more than paſſive, acting barely by their perſuaſions in this requeſt, they were the principals, and are therefore only recorded by Mark, who has ſtudied brevity in all his narrations.

Ver. 42.———Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exerciſe lordſhip over them, &c.] Who, though they in duty are bound to acknowledge themſelves to be God's ſervants, and only ruling by his permiſſion, for the good and profit of their people, exerciſe their tyranny, as if there were no God in the world, and moſt preſumptuouſly uſurp to themſelves that abſolute power over their fellow-creature, which is peculiar to the Creator; ſee 1 Sam. viii. 11. Or, who exerciſe a ſhadow of ſovereignty in the falſe figure and appearance of the world, even ſuch as ye thirſt after; which is not in truth, and therefore ought not to be deſired by you, becauſe thereby you will be excluded from the kingdom of God, in which, if you can follow me in the regeneration with meekneſs, humility, &c. each of you ſhall ſit on thrones to judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

Ver. 43.———Shall be your miniſter.] Or, more properly, ἔϛαι διάκονος ὑμῶν, i. e. Let him be your miniſter.

Ver. 46. And they came to Jericho.] A city in the land of Benjamin, about ſeven leagues from Jeruſalem, and two from Jordan, called by Moſes, the city of Palm-trees, by reaſon of the great number of ſuch trees growing in the plains of Jerico; ſee Joſh. xviii. 21. and Deut. xxxiv. 3.

——As he went out of Jericho with his diſciples, &c.] To ſome adjacent private place, as his cuſtom was, to pray and to inſtruct them; which interpretation ſolves the difficulty which ſome find to reconcile this paſſage with the parallel text in Matthew, who ſpeaks of two blind men: For, if Jeſus, as it is probable, ſtaid ſome time at Jericho, going oit out of the city, and coming in again in the evening, as we read he uſed to do elſewhere, he might at one time cure only one blind man, as here is recorded, and at another time two, and at other times more, amongſt whom Mark choſe to ſpeak of this Bartimeus as moſt noted, and known to all that country.

———Bartimeus.] This is not a proper name, but a Hebrew word, ſignifying, as the Evangeliſt immediately interprets it, the ſon of Timeus.

Ver. 47.———Thou ſon of David.] i. e. The Meſſiah, as I have frequently obſerved in the Goſpel according to Matthew.

Ver. 52.——Thy faith hath made thee whole.] How this faith is diſtinguiſhed from imagination or fancy, is already noted abvove in the Annotations on ch. v. 25, &c. Now I add, that faith in the New Teſtament is defined by the Apoſtle Paul, to conſiſt in a firm and aſſured expectation of things hoped for; "faith, ſays he, is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen," which things not ſeen, are the being of a God, and the rewards of a life to come, Heb. xi. 6. which is a very wide account from that modern enthuſiaſtical notion of faith, which ſome, under the Goſpel, pretend, is no more than a confident reliance upon the merits of Chriſt, to do all that for us, which, on the contrary, he has expreſly commanded us to do for ourſelves. When we have done our outmoſt endeavours to comply with the commandments of God, tho' we can't pretend at the beſt to be perfect, then it is our duty and comfort to flee to, and rely on, the merits and the interceſſion of Chriſt, to obtain acceptance before God of our imperfect, though ſincere endeavours; yet this is not what the Scripture uſually calls faith, which is ſtrictly that firm belief of things at preſent not ſeen, that conviction upon the mind of the truth of the promiſes and threatnings of God, made known in the Goſpel; of the certain reality of the rewards and puniſhments of the life to come, which enables a man, in oppoſition to all the temptations of a corrupt world, to obey God in expectation of an inviſible reward hereafter. ———This is that faith which in Scripture is always repreſented as a moral virtue, and the principal, or root of all others. Becauſe it is an act, not of the underſtanding only, but alſo and chiefly of the will, ſo to conſider impartially, to approve and embrace the doctrine of the Goſpel, as to make it the great rule of our life and actions.———By this faith it is that we muſt be juſtified; and by this it is, that the Antients before Chriſt obtained a good report, and hoped for a better reſurrection; Heb. xi.

It is true, that this is not the only ſenſe of the word, faith, in Scripture; neither does it anſwer to the faith of the blind man in the text. Therefore I ſhall reduce all the various ſignifications thereof, as uſed in different places in the Scripture, to theſe following heads. And Thereſore,

1. The word faith in ſome places, ſignifies that earneſt truſt and confidence in the power of God, to which, in the Apoſtles time was annexed the gift of working miracles. Thus we read in Matt. xvii. 20. "If ye have faith (ſaith our Lord to his Apoſtles) as a grain of muſtard-ſeed," i. e. if ye have that truſt in God, that particular kind of faith or dependance on him; that aſſured reliance on his power, without doubt or wavering, required of you, my diſciples, particularly at this time; if you have this faith, though never ſo ſmall in compariſon, anſwerable in any meaſure to your preſent office and advantages; "ye ſhall ſay to this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove."——This was a faith required of the Apoſtles at that particular time, and of them only.

2. The word, faith, in other paſſages denotes, or ſignifies, the duty of veracity, faithfulneſs or truth. Thus again, Matthew xxiii. 23. "Ye have omitted the weightier matters of the law; judgment, mercy, and faith;" i. e. fidelity, truth, or faithfulneſs in the diſcharge of that truſt repoſed in them; or in any men like them. Analagous to which it is alſo uſed ſometimes for the truſt itſelf, or the thing committed to our charge. Thus the Apoſtle ſays to the Romans: "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us; whether prophecy let us prophecy according to the proportion of faith," i. e. according to the nature and degree of the gift, or truſt repoſed in us, ſo let every one of us diſcharge his reſpective duty of propheſying, or miniſtring, &c. Rom. xii. 6, &c.

3. Another, and a much more uſual ſignification of the word faith, is to denote the whole Goſpel of Chriſt, or the Chriſtian Religion, in oppoſition to the ritual works of the law of Moſes.——Thus, Acts vi. 7. "The number of the diſciples, multiplied in Jeruſalem greatly, and a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith, i. e. embraced the Goſpel. Again, Rom. iii. 28. "A man is juſtified by faith without the deeds of the law;" where, by faith, is to be underſtood the conditions of the Goſpel. And, Rom. x. 8. "The word of faith which we preach," i. e. the doctrine of the Goſpel. Which is indeed the conſtant ſignification of the word, faith, generally in all the Epiſtles, and the Acts. And the reaſon is obvious, why the Goſpel ſhould be characterized by that name; becauſe the great motives and promiſes of the Goſpel are the inviſible things of a future ſtate, which are only to be diſcerned by the eye of faith.

4. Faith, wherever we meet with it commended by Chriſt, and found in the heart of ſome perſon cured by him, of any diſeaſe or infirmity, is a firm perſuaſion and conviction of conſcience, raiſed from hearing his doctrine, and ſeeing or hearing of the mighty works of Jeſus Chriſt, that he is the Meſſiah, the ſon of David, and expectation of Iſrael; and this is the faith; not only of the blind man in the text, as is expreſly declared by his own mouth in ver. 47, 48. but of all thoſe to whom Chriſt hath ſaid, thy faith hath made thee whole, or to that effect; ſee Grotius on this place.

5. and laſtly, In other places of Scripture, the word faith, ſignifies plainly and literally, and in its moſt natural ſenſe, a firm belief and perſuaſion, that there is a God, who ſhall reward every one according to their works, as he hath promiſed; ſee above, at the beginning of this note.

CHAP. XI.

1 Chriſt rideth with triumph into Jeruſalem: 12 curſeth the fruitleſs leafy tree: 15 purgeth the temple: 20 exhorteth his diſciples to ſtedfaſtneſs of faith, and to forgive their enemies: 27 and defendeth the lawfulneſs of his actions, by the witneſs of John, who was a man ſent of God.

AND when they came nigh to Jeruſalem, unto Bethphage, and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples,

2 And ſaith unto them, Go your way into the village over-againſt you; and as ſoon as ye be entred into it, ye ſhall find a colt tied, whereon man never ſat; looſe him, and bring him.

3 And if any man ſay unto you, Why do ye this? ſay ye that the Lord hath need of him; and ſtraightway he will ſend him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met: and they looſe him.

5 And certain of them that ſtood there, ſaid unto them, What do ye looſing the colt?

6 And they ſaid unto them even as Jeſus had commanded: and they let them go.

7 And they brought the colt to Jeſus, and caſt their garments on him; and he ſat upon him.

8 And many ſpread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, ſaying, Hoſanna, bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

10 Bleſſed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hoſanna in the higheſt.

11 And Jeſus entred into Jeruſalem, and into the temple: and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the even-tide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

12 ¶ And on the morrow when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry.

13 And ſeeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet.

14 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his diſciples heard it.

15 ¶ And they came to Jeruſalem: and Jeſus went into the temple, and began to caſt out them that ſold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves;

16 And would not ſuffer that any man ſhould carry any veſſels through the temple.

17 And he taught, ſaying unto them, Is it not written, my houſe ſhall be called of all nations the houſe of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves.

18 And the ſcribes and chief prieſts heard it, and ſought how they might deſtroy him: for they feared him, becauſe all the people was aſtoniſhed at his doctrine.

19 And when even was come, he went out of the city.

20 ¶ And in the morning as they paſſed by, they ſaw the fig-tree dried up from the roots.

21 And Peter calling to remembrance, ſaith unto him, Maſter, behold, the fig-tree which thou curſedſt, is withered away.

22 And Jeſus anſwering ſaith unto them, Have faith in God.

23 For verily I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea, and ſhall not doubt in his heart, but ſhall believe that thoſe things which he ſaith ſhall come to paſs, he ſhall have whatſoever he ſaith.

24 Therefore I ſay unto you, What things ſoever ye deſire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye ſhall have them.

25 And when ye ſtand, praying, forgive, if ye have ought againſt any: that your Father alſo which is in heaven may forgive you your treſpaſſes.

26 But if you do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven, forgive your treſpaſſes.

27 ¶ And they come again to Jeruſalem, and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief prieſts and the ſcribes, and the elders,

28 And ſay unto him, By what authority doſt thou theſe things? and who gave thee this authority to do theſe things?

29 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, I will alſo aſk of you one queſtion, and anſwer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do theſe things.

30 The baptiſm of John, was it from heaven, or of men? anſwer me.

31 And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, if we ſhall ſay, From heaven, he will ſay, Why then did ye not believe him?

32 But if we ſhall ſay, Of men, they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

33 And they anſwered and ſaid unto Jeſus, We cannot tell. And Jeſus anſwering ſaith unto them, Neither do I tell you by what authority I do theſe things.

Ver. 2.—— Upon which no man ever ſat.] Becauſe, as Grotius obſerves rightly, it was cuſtomary, among not only the Jews, but the Heathens alſo, to chuſe ſuch animals, for Sacred uſes as had never been employed in the uſe of man. For inſtance, the Philiſtines return the ark in a cart drawn by heifers never put into the yoke before, 1 Sam. vi. 7. The Heathens ſacrificed to Minerva, injuges boves, oxen never put into the yoke. See Virgil Æn. vi. 36. Macrobius, Saturn. lib. iii. c. 5. and Turnebius, lib. xviii. c. 2. So our Saviour, who was a Sacred Perſon, and moreover intended by that action to fulfil the prophecy of Zachary, ix. 9. which the Jews (Sanhedrim c. x. in Gemara) apply to the Meſſiah, choſe the colt of an aſs never rid on before, to ride into Jeruſalem.

Ver. 10. Bleſſed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord.] i. e. Let the kingdom, which our father David promiſed ſhould be eſtabliſhed among us for ever, be happily begun and flouriſh; let proſperity deſcend from Heaven upon our King Meſſiah, and upon his kingdom, which is to have no end.

Ver. 13. And ſeeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon, and when he was come to it, he found nothing but leaves, for the time of figs was not yet.] They that cavil with Chriſtianity commonly harp upon this ſtring; what, ſay they, Did Chriſt do according to the character of the Meſſiah, when he curſed the fig-tree becauſe it did not bear fruit before the time of figs? It is anſwered, that Chriſt did not expect fruit out of ſeaſon, for it is evident, that the Evangeliſt ſpeaks of a ſort of fig-tree that then had actually leaves upon it, and thoſe likewiſe ſo well grown, as at a diſtance might induce a traveller or any paſſenger to believe, or hope, to find ſome fruit among them, or what need of thoſe explanatory words, "for the time of figs was not yet?" It is alſo clear that this was a particular ſort of fig-tree by another diſtinction in the text, that it had leaves on it, which ſuppoſes, that thoſe fig-trees which bore fruit did not yet bear leaves; and it was this ſight of leaves that brought Jeſus to ſee if haply he might find any thing on it, i. e. ſome fruit, which ſo many large leaves promiſed. There was then an high probability, modeſtly expreſſed by the word haply, that this flouriſhing tree had on it both fruit and leaves together. Moreover, the very ſeaſon of the year, which was about four days before the Jewiſh paſſover, which happened on the 14th day of Niſan, or March, ſhews there could not be the leaſt proſpect or expectation of figs in the ordinary courſe of nature, 'till about five months after, in that country, and conſequently they argue very abſurdly, who take hold of theſe words of Mark, that the time of figs was not yet, to argue that Jeſus expected ordinary figs, which with the ſame breath the Evangeliſt acknowledges were not then in being. For Mark deſigned that remark for a key to the whole tranſaction, and not as relating only to the immediate preceding paſſage, he found nothing but leaves, as ſome have unreaſonably imagined. Yet,

It is not denied but that Jeſus expected to find fruit on this tree, becauſe he might ſuppoſe it was of that ſort which the Jews called Benath Shuach, which, ſays Lightfoot, was of an early kind and never wanted leaves, and ſeldom was without fruit. See Talmud. in Matt. p. 226, 227. and in Hor. Heb. For according to their accounts, it bore fruit every year, but that fruit was not fully ripe before the third year; ſo that every year one might ſee three different ſorts of fruit, viz. of the preſent year, and of the two foregoing years. There were alſo, ſay they, another ſort, which brought forth ripe fruit in two years; ſo that the fruit of ſome of them hung on, and were ripe in winter: And conſequently, though the time of ordinary figs was not, yet Jeſus might expect other ſorts of figs on one of that kind of fig-trees which then bore leaves, which he ſaw afar off, and which gave him a reaſonable proſpect of fruit. And Therefore ſince his expectation was diſappointed, this muſt have been a tree of one of the forementioned ſorts, which uſually had fruit on them at that ſeaſon and all ſeaſons of the year, though the fruit of the ordinary fig-trees could not have been expected to be ripe ſo early.

This καιρὸς σύκων, i. e. the ordinary time of figs cannot therefore poſſibly be given for a reaſon why Jeſus found no figs on this flouriſhing tree, but is a very good one for going to this tree only, as not being one of the ordinary ſorts of fig-trees, but one of thoſe that are deſcribed by the talmudical writers, as quoted above from Lightfoot, who muſt be preſumed to be well apprized of the nature of the fruit-trees of Judea. But they that chooſe further ſatisfaction as to their account of theſe different ſorts of fig-trees may conſult Pliny's natural Hiſt. lib. xiii. c. 8. and lib. xvi. c. 26. with Harduin's notes in uſum Delphini tom. 3. p. 195, 196. Par, 1685. And Theophraſtus, hiſtor. plant. lib. iv. c. 2. Beſides, we have the teſtimony of that Arch-Apoſtate the Emperor Julian in our favour, who has aſſured us in his Epiſtol. 24. p. 144. Paris, "that there is a ſort of fig-tree at Damaſcus in Syria (a favourite city of Julian, and in the neighbourhood of Judea) the fruit of which, both old and young, grows together, and laſts beyond the year; and that the uninterrupted ſucceſſion of fruit on the ſame tree, which was part of Homer's deſcription of the poetical garden of Alcinous, was verified in the fig-tree at Damaſcus." And this he mentions by way of diſtinguiſhing that ſort from ordinary fig-trees, which as he adds, commonly bear their ripe fruit in Autumn, agreeable to our account above. Now, after this famous record, I find no reaſon to produce further evidence of our aſſertion, though I have in readineſs thoſe that are more modern, ſuch as the famous Baumgarten, who travelled into Paleſtine, and Syria, &c. Anno Domini 1507. and found ripe fruits, and flowers growing on the ſame tree, near Jericho in December, and abundance of ripe fruits at Beroot or Berytus in Syria, in the month of January. And the eminent naturaliſt Tournefort aſſures us, that ſome ſorts of figs grow in the Archipelago in winter, ſpring and ſummer; but that the garden-figs are not ripe there, till the end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September. Therefore,

I conclude from theſe authorities, that Jeſus might reaſonably expect to find ſome ſort of figs on the tree flouriſhing with leaves, which he ſaw at a diſtance though the ordinary ſeaſon of figs was not yet come. Now,

The reaſon of this action may be ſuppoſed to be, that Jeſus hereby intended to give a freſh ſpecimen of his own Almighty Power to his diſciples at a critical juncture; and to convince them of the power of prayer, when attended with an extraordinary faith: And theſe reaſons may be made good from the context. Moreover, it may be admitted, that he purpoſed to ſhew by the vindictive type of drying up the barren fig-tree, but a little before his own death, that he would ſignally puniſh the Jews for their hypocriſy, and particularly, for that moſt wicked act they were now about to perform in putting himſelf to death, and therefore that he would deſtroy their city and polity, as he actually did the barren fig-tree, which looked beautiful to the eye, and deceived many, having no fruit on it. Again,

As to the inſinuation, that this act of Jeſus was unjuſt, he having no right to the tree, nor even to the fruit, if he had found any on it; and that his blaſting of the tree by a curſe, was injurious to the proprietor thereof: What I have noted concerning the ſwine, which were choked in the ſea, as you may read in the vth chapter of this Goſpel, anticipates an anſwer to this objection. And therefore I ſhall only recollect on this occaſion, that here Jeſus acted with the authority of a Prophet; and in vindication of this action of Jeſus, and of the liberty he took in this affair, with regard to an inſenſible vegetable, a barren fig-tree, let any one that acknowledges the authority of any of the ancient Prophets, conſider the incomparable greater liberty, as to the perſons of men and their effects uſed by them, and even by Moſes himſelf, in conſequence of that authority which was delegated to them by God, the Supreme Proprietor of all things. And, in regard to ſuch as are true Chriſtians, Jeſus muſt be alſo acknowledged by them to be the Supreme Proprietor, and conſequently to have a right paramount both to the ſuppoſed fruit and tree. And as for others, who are neither Jews nor Chriſtians, nor even Mahometans, the latter of whom confeſs the Prophetical Authority of Jeſus; if they are ingenuous adverſaries, might receive full ſatisfaction, by recollecting, in caſe the ſuppoſed fruit had any proprietor, ſuch a liberty of eating it, ſeems to have been indulged in parity of reaſon, by the law of Moſes in that nation; ſee Deut. xxiii. 24, 25. Or, that indeed both the ſuppoſed fruit and tree, were moſt probably things of common right, and were no particular or private property. For, this fig-tree is ſaid to have been ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ, in, or by the way, i. e. a thing of common right, or in a common ground, as diſtinct from thoſe in orchards and gardens, which had a proper owner; which diſtinction is to be defended from the Talmudiſts, ſee Lightfoot's Hor. Heb. & Talmud in Matt. The expected fruit then would have been that of an uncultivated tree in a mere hedge-row, uſually as common and as plentiful, as apples growing by the highway in Kent, or rather Herefordſhire.

In a word, what was this tree more than a barren fig-tree, worthleſs and contemptible even to a proverb, that deſerved to be cut down as an incumbrance of the ground, and therefore equally to wither away, and be dried up from the roots. For, indeed, how innocent ſoever ſome perſons may repreſent this tree, it deſerved its fate, if it were only in order to prevent the farther deluſion of other travellers. But above all, ſince it ſerved ſo great an end, as I have hinted before, to be a type of the approaching deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, on ſuppoſition of their want of fruit meet for repentance, and their perſiſting in their wicked deſign, under a mask of Godlineſs, to deſtroy Jeſus himſelf, it was juſtly ſacrificed to the publick good, as a warning to the Jews to avoid the like deſtruction by the curſe of God, and his Holy Prophet Jeſus. Strange! ſays a learned Biſhop, that ſuch a tree as this, ſhould not be thought juſtly deſtroyed, the deſtruction whereof, if it had been duly improved by a national repentance, and the ſentence were not irreverſible, might not only have ſaved all the other fruit-trees round about Jeruſalem, in the days of its ſiege (ſee Joſephus's account thereof) but the proprietors of them all from a total exciſion!

It is again objected, that this blaſting of the fig-tree by a curſe, was an act of paſſion and revenge on the faultleſs tree, and therefore was unbecoming of the meek and Holy Jeſus. To which it is anſwered briefly, that as this was an action deſigned to be typical or figurative of the deſtruction of the Jews, this was, and ought to be conſidered, not as a curſe, but a ſolemn ſentence, deliberately pronounced, and therefore without any ſuch perturbation of mind, as we call paſſion, and much more without any revenge on an inſenſible tree, which was therefore as incapable of ſuffering, by ſuch a reſentment, as Jeſus, for other good reaſons, was, of exerting it. There was conſequently nothing done in this caſe, that miſbecame the character of the meek and Holy Jeſus, who acted herein as a merciful judge, with regard to the criminal Jews, tho' in order to their repentance, he transferred at preſent the puniſhment due to men, and poſſibly to the very proprietor of the tree (if it had any) on a ſenſeleſs fig-tree, by way of type and repreſentation. Now beat out of this ſophiſm,

It is then blamed as an unneceſſary act. —— But ſince the Scripture is ſilent as to Jeſus's refreſhment at Bethany, it muſt be ſuppoſed, that he was really hungry, tho' we know not what accident occaſioned it at that time in particular; for he had all the infirmities of human nature. And tho' he made it his meat and drink to do the will of God his Father, yet his exhauſted ſpirits were neceſſarily to be repaired by food. He could, indeed, have ſupplied his want of food in as miraculous a manner, as he provided for many others; but where human means could be uſed, he reſerved his miracles for matters of a more important nature, than thoſe merely of the body.

Laſtly, it may be doubted, ſays Woolſton, by Jews and Infidels, whether this was really a miraculous act, ſince there was a poſſibility of fraud in it, and in particular the carpenter's ax, might ſecretly have been laid to the root of this tree, and have cauſed it to wither. 3d Diſ. p. 15.

It is anſwered, (waving all argument ad hominem with the author) that if his Jews and Infidels pretend to any rational ſuſpicions, they ought to recollect on this occaſion, that Jeſus's twelve diſciples attended him to, and at

Bethany, and back again from thence, and were preſent at this whole tranſaction, viz. the imprecation of the fig-tree, and the ſubſequent withering away of it, ver. 11, 12. Moreover, the curſe was pronounced in their hearing, ver. 14. It is alſo plain, that the ſaid diſciples came to Jeruſalem with him, and returned the next evening with him to Bethany; and that on the morrow morning, as they paſſed by, in their return to Jeruſalem, they ſaw the fig-tree dried up from the roots; ſee ver. 15, 19, 20. Upon this we are told by Matthew (xxi. 20.) that Peter, and the other diſciples that ſtill attended Jeſus, took notice of that wonderful event unto him, and ſaid, How ſoon is the fig-tree which thou curſedſt withered away? i. e. the fig-tree, which upon the imprecation the day before, immediately began to wither, Matt. xxi. 19, 20. was now actually withered away, or, as Mark more emphatically expreſſes it, was dried up from the roots, ver. 20. which ſurely implies ſomewhat more than the mere withering of the leaves, as it is vainly ſuggeſted by the foreſaid Caviller, ib. and that too as the conſequence of an imaginary ſtroke of the carpenter's ax at the root of it. But as no ſuch ſtroke could be given without the knowledge of Jeſus's twelve diſciples, ſo the ſuppoſed effect of ſuch a ſtroke, which was the withering of the leaves, cannot with any propriety be ſtiled the ſame as the withering away of the whole tree, and much leſs the drying up of the tree from the roots.

From this whole deduction, it is very evident that the twelve Apoſtles did perſonally accompany Jeſus from the very beginning to the very end of this miraculous tranſaction; and, conſequently, it muſt be granted, that here are twelve eye-witneſſes of the whole miracle. And did time ſuffice, or were it needful, it could be proved that they were ſo many credible witneſſes, not willing to be deceived themſelves, nor to deceive others; but I ſhall at preſent only obſerve, that had there been any fraud uſed in this action, Judas, one of the twelve, who was the traitor, and wicked enough to betray his innocent Maſter to be put to death; would have ſcreen'd his own villany by turning evidence when witneſſes were ſought to take away the life of Jeſus, and none could be found, and aſſerted that he was an impoſtor, and engaged the power of God, a pretended miracle, to countenance his deſigns and to delude the people, and as this traitor did not deny the fact, I hope his evidence here will be allowed by all opponents to the Chriſtian account of this miracle.

Ver. 15. — Jeſus went into the temple and began to caſt out them that ſold and bought in the temple, &c.] Where Chriſt does not ſeem to forbid abſolutely this practiſe of buying and ſelling, or permutation in the temple; it being almoſt neceſſary for them who lived far from Jeruſalem, to bring up money to purchaſe ſacrifices and oblations there, rather than to bring them ſo long a journey, and ſuitable in equity to the law of Moſes concerning tythes, Deut. xiv. 24, 25, 26. But he condemns the avarice of the prieſts, who, when theſe things were bought before by them in the ſhambles and markets of Jeruſalem, had for their ſordid gain, introduced this merchandize into the houſe of God, and that this was done in honour of that Sacred Place, is evident from the words of the next verſe; (ſee the note below.)

The money-changers, ſat there not only about the payment of the half ſhekel to the ſanctuary, but chiefly for the return of money from remote places, for this payment was made even by the Jews in their ſeveral diſperſions, that ſo they, who came to Jeruſalem to worſhip, paying it to merchants at home, might have it ſafe from thieves, and be eaſed of the trouble of carriage, at Jeruſalem. Thus theſe money-changers may be compared to the bankers of our time, to whom bills of exchange and letters of credit are generally directed for travellers to apply to upon a journey, or voyage; ſee the notes below on ver. 17.

Ver. 16. And he would not ſuffer that any man ſhould carry any veſſel through the temple.] By this, Chriſt approved of that received doctrine of the Jews, "who as Joſephus records (Contr. App. p. 1066.) held that it was not lawful to carry any veſſel into the temple, becauſe it is written in the law of the Lord," Thou ſhalt reverence my ſanctuary, Levit. xix. 30.

Ver. 17. — My houſe ſhall be called of all nations, an houſe of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves.] That the houſe of God, or his temple, ſhould be called a houſe of prayer for all people was propheſied by Iſaiah lvi. 7. and lx. 7. i. e. an houſe dedicated to the worſhip of the Living God, who made Heaven and earth, of which worſhip, prayer was eſteemed an eminent part, witneſs Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple; which ſuppoſes God's people ſhould continually pray in, or towards that houſe; and that they continued to do ſo at the time of offering incenſe, we can ſupport from Luke i. 10. It was to the temple that the Phariſee and publican went up to pray, Luke xviii. 10. and it was thither alſo that the heathen proſelites went to pray, whoſe place was called, the court of the Gentiles; and this admiſſion made it an houſe of prayer for all nations. But you, prieſts, ſaith Chriſt, by turning this Holy Place inſtituted for God's worſhip, into a place of unjuſt gain, unjuſt, becauſe got by exactions, tending to the loſs and damage of the people, have given juſt occaſion to apply to you thoſe words of Jeremiah, "My houſe is become a den of robbers in your eyes," Jer. vii. 11. You making a gain of that ſervice, which you ought freely to attend upon, becauſe the tythes of the people, and a part of their offerings for that very end, that you with conſcience and good example may attend upon, and edify thoſe that come into the temple on thoſe good occaſions. But for the better underſtanding of this text and its context,

Let it be obſerved, that there were three courts in the temple; one proper to the prieſts, where the altar of incenſe ſtood; another, into which the clean Jews and proſelytes of juſtice, who had embraced circumciſion and the whole law of Moſes, entered; and a third, which was called the court of the Gentiles, becauſe the unclean Jew, and the proſelyte Gentile, who owned the true God, were permitted to come and worſhip. Now there was a low wall of partition between this third court and the ſecond, with this inſcription on it,

Μὴ δεῖν ʼαλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τȣ̃ ἁγίȣ παριέναι:

Which is thus made Engliſh,

No alien muſt enter into this holy place.

Where Joſephus by adding, for the ſecond court was called holy; Joſeph. Jewiſh War lib. vi. c. 13. ſeems to intimate, that the court of the Gentiles was not eſteemed an holy, but prophane place; and therefore it was into this court, and no further, that they brought ſheep and doves to ſell, and hence it appears how oppoſitely our Saviour argues, the houſe for all nations was God's houſe, and therefore that muſt be kept Sacred, and not to be polluted upon any pretence; ſee Maldonate in Matt. xxi. 12.

CHAP. XII.

1 In a parable of the vineyard let out to unthankful huſbandmen, Chriſt foretelleth the reprobation of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles: 13 He avoideth the ſnare of the Phariſees and Herodians about paying tribute to Ceſar: 18 convinceth the error of the Sadducees, who denied the reſurrection: 28 reſolveth the ſcribe who queſtioned of the firſt commandment: 35 refuteth the opinion that the ſcribes held of Chriſt: 38 bidding the people to beware of their ambition and hypocriſy: 41 and commendeth the poor widow for her two mites, above all.

AND he began to ſpeak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and ſet an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to huſbandmen, and went into a far country.

This καιρὸς σύκων, i. e. the ordinary time of figs cannot therefore poſſibly be given for a reaſon why Jeſus found no figs on this flouriſhing tree, but is a very good one for going to this tree only, as not being one of the ordinary ſorts of fig-trees, but one of thoſe that are deſcribed by the talmudical writers, as quoted above from Lightfoot, who muſt be preſumed to be well apprized of the nature of the fruit-trees of Judea. But they that chooſe further ſatisfaction as to their account of theſe different ſorts of fig-trees may conſult Pliny's natural Hiſt. lib. xiii. c. 8. and lib. xvi. c. 26. with Harduin's notes in uſum Delphini tom. 3. p. 195, 196. Par, 1685. And Theophraſtus, hiſtor. plant. lib. iv. c. 2. Beſides, we have the teſtimony of that Arch-Apoſtate the Emperor Julian in our favour, who has aſſured us in his Epiſtol. 24. p. 144. Paris, "that there is a ſort of fig-tree at Damaſcus in Syria (a favourite city of Julian, and in the neighbourhood of Judea) the fruit of which, both old and young, grows together, and laſts beyond the year; and that the uninterrupted ſucceſſion of fruit on the ſame tree, which was part of Homer's deſcription of the poetical garden of Alcinous, was verified in the fig-tree at Damaſcus." And this he mentions by way of diſtinguiſhing that ſort from ordinary fig-trees, which as he adds, commonly bear their ripe fruit in Autumn, agreeable to our account above. Now, after this famous record, I find no reaſon to produce further evidence of our aſſertion, though I have in readineſs thoſe that are more modern, ſuch as the famous Baumgarten, who travelled into Paleſtine, and Syria, &c. Anno Domini 1507. and found ripe fruits, and flowers growing on the ſame tree, near Jericho in December, and abundance of ripe fruits at Beroot or Berytus in Syria, in the month of January. And the eminent naturaliſt Tournefort aſſures us, that ſome ſorts of figs grow in the Archipelago in winter, ſpring and ſummer; but that the garden-figs are not ripe there, till the end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September. Therefore,

I conclude from theſe authorities, that Jeſus might reaſonably expect to find ſome ſort of figs on the tree flouriſhing with leaves, which he ſaw at a diſtance though the ordinary ſeaſon of figs was not yet come. Now,

The reaſon of this action may be ſuppoſed to be, that Jeſus hereby intended to give a freſh ſpecimen of his own Almighty Power to his diſciples at a critical juncture; and to convince them of the power of prayer, when attended with an extraordinary faith: And theſe reaſons may be made good from the context. Moreover, it may be admitted, that he purpoſed to ſhew by the vindictive type of drying up the barren fig-tree, but a little before his own death, that he would ſignally puniſh the Jews for their hypocriſy, and particularly, for that moſt wicked act they were now about to perform in putting himſelf to death, and therefore that he would deſtroy their city and polity, as he actually did the barren fig-tree, which looked beautiful to the eye, and deceived many, having no fruit on it. Again,

As to the inſinuation, that this act of Jeſus was unjuſt, he having no right to the tree, nor even to the fruit, if he had found any on it; and that his blaſting of the tree by a curſe, was injurious to the proprietor thereof: What I have noted concerning the ſwine, which were choked in the ſea, as you may read in the vth chapter of this Goſpel, anticipates an anſwer to this objection. And therefore I ſhall only recollect on this occaſion, that here Jeſus acted with the authority of a Prophet; and in vindication of this action of Jeſus, and of the liberty he took in this affair, with regard to an inſenſible vegetable, a barren fig-tree, let any one that acknowledges the authority of any of the ancient Prophets, conſider the incomparable greater liberty, as to the perſons of men and their effects uſed by them, and even by Moſes himſelf, in conſequence of that authority which was delegated to them by God, the Supreme Proprietor of all things. And, in regard to ſuch as are true Chriſtians, Jeſus muſt be alſo acknowledged by them to be the Supreme Proprietor, and conſequently to have a right paramount both to the ſuppoſed fruit and tree. And as for others, who are neither Jews nor Chriſtians, nor even Mahometans, the latter of whom confeſs the Prophetical Authority of Jeſus; if they are ingenuous adverſaries, might receive full ſatisfaction, by recollecting, in caſe the ſuppoſed fruit had any proprietor, ſuch a liberty of eating it, ſeems to have been indulged in parity of reaſon, by the law of Moſes in that nation; ſee Deut. xxiii. 24, 25. Or, that indeed both the ſuppoſed fruit and tree, were moſt probably things of common right, and were no particular or private property. For, this fig-tree is ſaid to have been ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδȣ̃, in, or by the way, i. e. a thing of common right, or in a common ground, as diſtinct from thoſe in orchards and gardens, which had a proper owner; which diſtinction is to be defended from the Talmudiſts, ſee Lightfoot's Hor. Heb. & Talmud in Matt. The expected fruit then would have been that of an uncultivated tree in a mere hedge-row, uſually as common and as plentiful, as apples growing by the highway in Kent, or rather Herefordſhire.

In a word, what was this tree more than a barren fig-tree, worthleſs and contemptible even to a proverb, that deſerved to be cut down as an incumbrance of the ground, and therefore equally to wither away, and be dried up from the roots. For, indeed, how innocent ſoever ſome perſons may repreſent this tree, it deſerved its fate, if it were only in order to prevent the farther deluſion of other travellers. But above all, ſince it ſerved ſo great an end, as I have hinted before, to be a type of the approaching deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, on ſuppoſition of their want of fruit meet for repentance, and their perſiſting in their wicked deſign, under a mask of Godlineſs, to deſtroy Jeſus himſelf, it was juſtly ſacrificed to the publick good, as a warning to the Jews to avoid the like deſtruction by the curſe of God, and his Holy Prophet Jeſus. Strange! ſays a learned Biſhop, that ſuch a tree as this, ſhould not be thought juſtly deſtroyed, the deſtruction whereof, if it had been duly improved by a national repentance, and the ſentence were not irreverſible, might not only have ſaved all the other fruit-trees round about Jeruſalem, in the days of its ſiege (ſee Joſephus's account thereof) but the proprietors of them all from a total exciſion!

It is again objected, that this blaſting of the fig-tree by a curſe, was an act of paſſion and revenge on the faultleſs tree, and therefore was unbecoming of the meek and Holy Jeſus. To which it is anſwered briefly, that as this was an action deſigned to be typical or figurative of the deſtruction of the Jews, this was, and ought to be conſidered, not as a curſe, but a ſolemn ſentence, deliberately pronounced, and therefore without any ſuch perturbation of mind, as we call paſſion, and much more without any revenge on an inſenſible tree, which was therefore as incapable of ſuffering, by ſuch a reſentment, as Jeſus, for other good reaſons, was, of exerting it. There was conſequently nothing done in this caſe, that miſbecame the character of the meek and Holy Jeſus, who acted herein as a merciful judge, with regard to the criminal Jews, tho' in order to their repentance, he transferred at preſent the puniſhment due to men, and poſſibly to the very proprietor of the tree (if it had any) on a ſenſeleſs fig-tree, by way of type and repreſentation. Now beat out of this ſophiſm,

It is then blamed as an unneceſſary act. —— But ſince the Scripture is ſilent as to Jeſus's refreſhment at Bethany, it muſt be ſuppoſed, that he was really hungry, tho' we know not what accident occaſioned it at that time in particular; for he had all the infirmities of human nature. And tho' he made it his meat and drink to do the will of God his Father, yet his exhauſted ſpirits were neceſſarily to be repaired by food. He could, indeed, have ſupplied his want of food in as miraculous a manner, as he provided for many others; but where human means could be uſed, he reſerved his miracles for matters of a more important nature, than thoſe merely of the body.

Laſtly, it may be doubted, ſays Woolſton, by Jews and Infidels, whether this was really a miraculous act, ſince there was a poſſibility of fraud in it, and in particular the carpenter's ax, might ſecretly have been laid to the root of this tree, and have cauſed it to wither. 3d Diſ. p. 15.

It is anſwered, (waving all argument ad hominem with the author) that if his Jews and Infidels pretend to any rational ſuſpicions, they ought to recollect on this occaſion, that Jeſus's twelve diſciples attended him to, and at

Bethany, and back again from thence, and were preſent at this whole tranſaction, viz. the imprecation of the fig-tree, and the ſubſequent withering away of it, ver. 11, 12. Moreover, the curſe was pronounced in their hearing, ver. 14. It is alſo plain, that the ſaid diſciples came to Jeruſalem with him, and returned the next evening with him to Bethany; and that on the morrow morning, as they paſſed by, in their return to Jeruſalem, they ſaw the fig-tree dried up from the roots; ſee ver. 15, 19, 20. Upon this we are told by Matthew (xxi. 20.) that Peter, and the other diſciples that ſtill attended Jeſus, took notice of that wonderful event unto him, and ſaid, How ſoon is the fig-tree which thou curſedſt withered away? i. e. the fig-tree, which upon the imprecation the day before, immediately began to wither, Matt. xxi. 19, 20. was now actually withered away, or, as Mark more emphatically expreſſes it, was dried up from the roots, ver. 20. which ſurely implies ſomewhat more than the mere withering of the leaves, as it is vainly ſuggeſted by the foreſaid Caviller, ib. and that too as the conſequence of an imaginary ſtroke of the carpenter's ax at the root of it. But as no ſuch ſtroke could be given without the knowledge of Jeſus's twelve diſciples, ſo the ſuppoſed effect of ſuch a ſtroke, which was the withering of the leaves, cannot with any propriety be ſtiled the ſame as the withering away of the whole tree, and much leſs the drying up of the tree from the roots.

From this whole deduction, it is very evident that the twelve Apoſtles did perſonally accompany Jeſus from the very beginning to the very end of this miraculous tranſaction; and, conſequently, it muſt be granted, that here are twelve eye-witneſſes of the whole miracle. And did time ſuffice, or were it needful, it could be proved that they were ſo many credible witneſſes, not willing to be deceived themſelves, nor to deceive others; but I ſhall at preſent only obſerve, that had there been any fraud uſed in this action, Judas, one of the twelve, who was the traitor, and wicked enough to betray his innocent Maſter to be put to death; would have ſcreen'd his own villany by turning evidence when witneſſes were ſought to take away the life of Jeſus, and none could be found, and aſſerted that he was an impoſtor, and engaged the power of God, a pretended miracle, to countenance his deſigns and to delude the people, and as this traitor did not deny the fact, I hope his evidence here will be allowed by all opponents to the Chriſtian account of this miracle.

Ver. 15.—Jeſus went into the temple and began to caſt out them that ſold and bought in the temple, &c.] Where Chriſt does not ſeem to forbid abſolutely this practiſe of buying and ſelling, or permutation in the temple; it being almoſt neceſſary for them who lived far from Jeruſalem, to bring up money to purchaſe ſacrifices and oblations there, rather than to bring them ſo long a journey, and ſuitable in equity to the law of Moſes concerning tythes, Deut. xiv. 24, 25, 26. The money-changers, ſat there not only about the payment of the half ſhekel to the ſanctuary, but chiefly for the return of money from remote places, for this payment was made even by the Jews in their ſeveral diſperſions, that ſo they, who came to Jeruſalem to worſhip, paying it to merchants at home, might have it ſafe from thieves, and be eaſed of the trouble of carriage, at Jeruſalem. Thus theſe money-changers may be compared to the bankers of our time, to whom bills of exchange and letters of credit are generally directed for travellers to apply to upon a journey, or voyage; ſee the notes below on ver. 17.

Ver. 16. And he would not ſuffer that any man ſhould carry any veſſel through the temple.] By this, Chriſt approved of that received doctrine of the Jews, "who as Joſephus records (Contr. App. p. 1066.) held that it was not lawful to carry any veſſel into the temple, becauſe it is written in the law of the Lord," Thou ſhalt reverence my ſanctuary, Levit. xix. 30.

Ver. 17.—My houſe ſhall be called of all nations, an houſe of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves.] That the houſe of God, or his temple, ſhould be called a houſe of prayer for all people was propheſied by Iſaiah lvi. 7. and lx. 7. i. e. an houſe dedicated to the worſhip of the Living God, who made Heaven and earth, of which worſhip, prayer was eſteemed an eminent part, witneſs Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple; which ſuppoſes God's people ſhould continually pray in, or towards that houſe; and that they continued to do ſo at the time of offering incenſe, we can ſupport from Luke i. 10. CHAP. XII.

1 In a parable of the vineyard let out to unthankful huſbandmen, Chriſt foretelleth the reprobation of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles: 13 He avoideth the ſnare of the Phariſees and Herodians about paying tribute to Ceſar: 18 convinceth the error of the Sadducees, who denied the reſurrection: 28 reſolveth the ſcribe who queſtioned of the firſt commandment: 35 refuteth the opinion that the ſcribes held of Chriſt: 38 bidding the people to beware of their ambition and hypocriſy: 41 and commendeth the poor widow for her two mites, above all.

AND he began to ſpeak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and ſet an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to huſbandmen, and went into a far country.

2 And at the ſeaſon he ſent to the huſbandmen a ſervant, that he might receive from the huſbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard.

3 And they caught him, and beat him, and ſent him away empty.

4 And again, he ſent unto them another ſervant, and at him they caſt ſtones, and wounded him in the head, and ſent him away ſhamefully handled.

5 And again, he ſent another; and him they killed: and many others, beating ſome, and killing ſome.

6 Having yet therefore one ſon, his well-beloved, he ſent him alſo laſt unto them, ſaying, They will reverence my ſon.

7 But thoſe huſbandmen ſaid amongſt themſelves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance ſhall be ours.

8 And they took him, and killed him, and caſt him out of the vineyard.

9 What ſhall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? he will come and deſtroy the huſbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

10 And have ye not read this ſcripture? The ſtone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner.

11 This was the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

12 And they ſought to lay hold on him, but feared the people; for they knew that he had ſpoken the parable againſt them: and they left him, and went their way.

13 ¶ And they ſent unto him certain of the Phariſees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.

14 And when they were come, they ſay unto him, Maſter, we know that thou art true, and careſt for no man: for thou regardeſt not the perſon of men, but teacheſt the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Ceſar, or not?

15 Shall we give, or ſhall we not give? But he knowing their hypocriſy, ſaid unto them, Why tempt ye me? bring me a peny that I may ſee it.

16 And they brought it: and he ſaith unto them, Whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription? and they ſaid unto him, Ceſars.

17 And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, Render to Ceſar the things that are Ceſars, and to God the things that are Gods. And they marvelled at him.

18 ¶ Then come unto him the Sadducees, which ſay there is no reſurrection; and they asked him, ſaying,

19 Maſter, Moſes wrote unto us, If a mans brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother.

20 Now there were ſeven brethren: and the firſt took a wife, and dying left no ſeed.

21 And the ſecond took her, and died, neither left he any ſeed: and the third likewiſe.

22 And the ſeven had her, and left no ſeed: laſt of all the woman died alſo.

23 In the reſurrection therefore, when they ſhall riſe, whoſe wife ſhall ſhe be of them? for the ſeven had her to wife.

24 And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, Do ye not therefore err, becauſe ye know not the ſcriptures, neither the power of God?

25 For when they ſhall riſe from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage: but are as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead, that they riſe: have ye not read in the book of Moſes, how in the buſh God ſpake unto him, ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob?

27 He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err.

28 ¶ And one of the ſcribes came, and having heard them reaſoning together, and perceiving that he had anſwered them well, asked him, Which is the firſt commandment of all?

29 And Jeſus anſwered him, The firſt of all the commandments is, Hear, O Iſrael, The Lord our God is one Lord;

30 And thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy ſtrength: this is the firſt commandment.

31 And the ſecond is like, namely this, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: there is none other commandment greater than theſe.

32 And the ſcribe ſaid unto him, Well, Maſter, thou haſt ſaid the truth: for there is one God, and there is none other but he.

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the underſtanding, and with all the ſoul, and with all the ſtrength, and to love his neighbour as himſelf, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and ſacrifices.

34 And when Jeſus ſaw that he anſwered diſcreetly, he ſaid unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durſt aſk him any queſtion.

35 ¶ And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, while he taught in the temple, How ſay the ſcribes that Jeſus is the ſon of David?

36 For David himſelf ſaid by the holy Ghoſt, The LORD ſaid to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footſtool.

37 David therefore himſelf calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his ſon? And the common people heard him gladly.

38 ¶ And he ſaid unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the ſcribes which love to go in long clothing, and love ſalutations in the market-places,

39 And the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, and the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts:

40 Which devour widows houſes, and for a pretence make long prayers: theſe ſhall receive greater damnation.

41 ¶ And Jeſus ſat over-againſt the treaſury, and beheld how the people caſt money into the treaſury: and many that were rich caſt in much.

42 And there came a certain poor widow, and ſhe threw in two mites, which make a farthing.

43 And he called unto him his diſciples, and ſaith unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that this poor widow hath caſt more in, than all they which have caſt into the treaſury.

44 For all they did caſt in of their abundance: but ſhe of her want did caſt in all that ſhe had, even all her living.

Ver. 1. And he began to ſpeak unto them by parables.] Thus Mark, who hath here only preſerved one, ſhews that he on purpoſe paſſes over other parables, ſpoken by Jeſus; which are diſtinctly recorded by Matthew, xxi. 28. and xxii. 1.

——A certain man planted a vineyard, and ſet an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, &c.] This parable, which includes the firſt twelve verſes of this chapter, ought to be interpreted in this manner, The certain man is God the Father; the vineyard is the world, which God created, according to Athanaſius, or, the Church of God, whoſe members ought to labour diligently to attain the happy end of their Creation, and this is the common and moſt received interpretation of the word vineyard in this place, founded upon that familiar and metaphorical expreſſion in the Book of Pſalms, Thou haſt brought a vine out of Egypt: thou haſt caſt out the Heathen and planted it; Pſ. lxxx. 8. in Iſaiah, My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill; v. 1. in Jeremiah, I had planted thee a noble vineyard, &c. ii. 21. For, as Auſtin obſerves, God is repreſented in Scripture, to have planted a vineyard, and when he gave the law, becauſe thereby he may in ſome manner be ſaid to have planted right notions of himſelf in the minds of men; ſee his Ser. de verbis Dom. 59. The ſetting an hedge, placing a wine-fat, and building a tower, imports that God had taken all neceſſary care to defend and to propagate the faith of his Church, according to that of the Prophet, "What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it;" Iſa. v. 4. And here it is to be obſerved, that Chriſt ſpeaks in very proper terms; for they, who plant a vineyard; firſt hedge it about to keep out robbers, and beaſts of prey; then they build a wine-fat, or wine-preſs, to hold and ſqueeze the juice out of the grapes, and then a tower, or rather, a watch-houſe, for the conveniency of thoſe, who are appointed to watch the fruit. As for the many allegorical alluſions which Origen and others have invented from theſe particulars, I ſhan't trouble my readers with their enumeration.

——Let it out to husbandmen.] Where, by husbandmen, many authors underſtand only the ſcribes and Phariſees, and the prieſts, but thoſe expoſitors have not well remarked, how poſitively the whole nation of Jews are hereby intended, as be eaſily and plainly collected from the parallel Scripture in Matthew xxi 43. where we read that Chriſt concluded this parable with theſe remarkable words to all the people; "Therefore I ſay unto you, the kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you; and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." And God is repreſented as letting his vineyard out to theſe men, becauſe he promiſes the certain reward of eternal life to as many as labour with faith and good works in his Church.

Ver. 2.——A ſervant.] This ſervant, and the others that follow at ver. 4. and 5. are univerſally underſtood of the Prophets, whom God in ancient times ſent to declare his will to the Jewiſh nation; for, as the Apoſtle writes to the Hebrews, "God at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the Prophets;" Heb. i. 1. And if any one ſeems ignorant how ſome of them were beat, ſtoned, wounded and killed, let him read the eleventh chapter of Paul to the Hebrews, and the Commentaries of Hierom on this place.

Ver. 6. — One ſon his well-beloved.] Chriſt himſelf, the well-beloved Son of God, ſee Mark ix. 7. and other places. And thus it was underſtood by the Apoſtles, for God hath in theſe laſt days ſpoken unto us by his Son, &c. Heb. i. 2.

Ver. 9. — He will come and deſtroy the husbandmen, &c.] So Luke ſays likewiſe, relating theſe words as ſpoken by Chriſt, but Matthew plainly aſcribes them to the prieſts whom Jeſus was ſpeaking to, in this manner: Chr. "When therefore the Lord of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto thoſe husbandmen? Pr. They ſay unto him, He will miſerably deſtroy thoſe wicked men," &c. xxi. 40, 41. Thus the prieſts condemn themſelves, but Luke, on the contrary ſays, that they anſwered with abhorrence and in the negative; for when they heard it, they ſaid, God forbid, xx. 16. To reconcile this Scripture, therefore, we are to obſerve, that at firſt the prieſts anſwered Jeſus as Matthew writes, then Chriſt, like to Naaman with David, explained and applied his meaning to themſelves, as it follows in the 10th and 11th verſes of this chapter, Luke xx. 17. Matt. xxi. 42. And then, "when they knew that Chriſt had ſpoken this parable againſt them," ver. 12. they ſaid, God forbid. And this muſt be the interpretation, otherwiſe there can be no room or connection for their ſaying, God forbid.

Ver. 10. Have ye not read this Scripture? &c.] This is by way of confirmation of his parable, upbraiding, at the ſame time, their ignorance in the law, although they boaſted themſelves in the great knowledge thereof.

— The ſtone.] Here Chriſt changes the metaphor, calling himſelf, who above was the beloved Son, ver 6. the ſtone, which is a uſual metaphor in the Scriptures. Thus we read, " Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a ſtone, a tried ſtone, a precious corner-ſtone," &c. Iſa. xxviii. 16. ſee alſo Daniel ii. 34. and Zech. ii. 9. Becauſe, as Paul writes to the Corinthians, " other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt," 1 Cor. iv. 11. " Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner-ſtone," Eph. ii. 20.

— Builders.] Interpreters are not agreed of whom Chriſt and David ſpake by the word builders; ſome apply it only to the prieſts, as if they were the maſter-builders of the ancient ſynagogue, who built it up, or taught therein, underſtanding the ſame thing by building, as teaching; according to that of Jeremy the Prophet i. 10. and Paul the Apoſtle, Rom. xv. 20. and 1 Cor. iii. 10. v. 10. Gal. ii. 18. and Eph. ii. 20. Moreover, that remarkable text of Peter ſeems to put it out of all doubt, where we read, this [Jeſus] is the ſtone ſet at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner, Acts iv. 11. compared with the context from ver. 5. Yet there are other commentators as ſtrenuous to interpret this Scripture of the whole nation of the Jews in general, becauſe they were all guilty of the blood of Jeſus.

—The head of the corner.] Jeſus is thus ſtiled the chief ſtone in the corner of the building, firſt, Becauſe he is that moſt ſtrong ſtone which ſupports and compacts the whole building; ſee Eph. ii. 20. Secondly, Becauſe he is a ſtone of offence to many, even as the corner-ſtones of a building ſtanding out from the reſt of the building, are an offence to thoſe who careleſly run againſt them; ſee 1 Epiſt. of Peter ii. 7, 8. and Rom. ix. 32, 33. Thirdly, Becauſe he in his perſon unites both Jew and Gentile in his worſhip, breaking down the middle wall of partition; Eph. ii. 14.

Ver. 11. This was the Lord's doing.] To ſhew that ſuch a change could not be effected by any human council, but that it is the Lord alone, who could plant the believing Gentiles upon the ſtock of the unbelieving Jews; ſee Paul to the Rom. xi.

—And it is marvellous in our eyes.] viz. Of the Jews, to ſee themſelves rejected from the favour of God, and his grace transferred to the Gentiles. And indeed, this was a wonder that Peter the Apoſtle could not underſtand, till it was in a particular manner interpreted to him by a ſheet let down from Heaven, filled with all kinds of animals; ſee Acts x. 14.

Ver. 13. And they ſent unto him certain of the Phariſees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.] From this frequent mention of Phariſees and Sadducees in the Goſpels and Acts of the Apoſtles, it is natural to conclude, that they were the prevailing ſects among the Jews, as was alſo that of the Herodians at the time of our Saviour's miniſtry. I have already given you a large account of the two former ſects: Yet, I have ſome things to add of that conſequence to be known, concerning them, and, as this chapter gives me a fair opportunity, I ſhall give a ſhort recapitulation of what has been noted, and ſubjoin thoſe particulars concerning the Jewiſh ſects worth your obſervation.

The Phariſees, according to Joſephus, were eſteemed the moſt religious, and moſt exact and ſkilful in explaining the laws among the Jews, in which he concurs with Paul's declaration: " After the ſtraiteſt ſect of our religion, I lived a Phariſee;" Acts xxvi. 5. Mark writes that " the Phariſees and all the Jews, except they waſh, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders: and many other things there be which they have received to hold;" Mark viii. 3, 4. Joſephus agrees, that " the Phariſees have delivered to the people many inſtitutions as received from the Fathers, which are not written in the law of Moſes; ſo that the multitude was with the Phariſees." Thus we may obſerve in the proſecution of our Saviour before Pilate, the common people were much at the devotion of the Phariſees, " who had ſuch an influence, ſays Joſephus, over the multitude, that if they gave out any thing againſt a king, or an high-prieſt, they were credited."

Hence we may account for their affecting the direction of publick affairs; to abuſe the credulity of the people, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]uted holy or religious; for as the Evangeliſts record, they " loved ſalutations in the market-places, and the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, and the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, devoured widows houſes, and for a pretence made long prayers;" ſee below, ver. 38—40. Matt. xxiii. 14. Luke xx. 46, 47. And therefore,

Joſephus allows, that they ſometimes made an ill uſe of the eſteem they were in for piety, as in the caſe of Alexandria, the widow of Alexander Janneus, " who being a religious woman during her regency in Judea, thought the Phariſees might be her beſt counſellors, but they abuſed her ſimplicity, and, tho' ſhe was on other accounts a woman of very good capacity, got the management of all things into their own hands, condemned or acquitted, puniſhed or rewarded men, according to their own pleaſure; ſo that, tho' ſhe governed others, ſhe herſelf was governed by the Phariſees; de Bello Jud. lib. 1. c. 5. ſect. 2.

The Phariſees and Sadducees are plainly repreſented in the Goſpels, as differing very much from each other, and in a manner, holding oppoſite opinions; and Joſephus confirms this repreſentation, calling the Sadducees, " a ſect oppoſite to that of the Phariſees;" Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 10. ſect. 6. Yet they ſometimes agreed in one and the ſame deſign againſt our Saviour. For, " the Phariſees alſo with the Sadducees, came, and tempting him, deſired him that he would ſhew them a ſign from Heaven;" Matt. xvi. 1. At other times they attacked him ſeparately, and endeavoured to enſnare, or puzzle him with queries ſuitable to their own particular ſchemes, as this chapter below affords you examples, even as you've read before in Matt. xxii. 23--34. And we have one memorable inſtance, wherein their diſagreeing principles drove them into very different meaſures, and occaſioned a downright quarrel. It is this " Paul was called before the council at Jeruſalem, and when he perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees, he cried out in the council, men and brethren, I am a Phariſee, — of the hope and reſurrection of the dead, I am called in queſtion. And when he had ſo ſaid, there aroſe a diſſention between them — for the Sadducees ſay, that there is no reſurrection, neither angel nor ſpirit, but the Phariſees confeſs both, &c." Acts xxiii. 6. — 10. which account of their tenets, or of ſome of their moſt diſtinguiſhing doctrines, is thus confirmed by Joſephus, " It is, ſays he, their [the Phariſees] belief, that there is an immortal power in ſouls, and that under the earth there are rewards and puniſhments for thoſe, who in this life have practiſed virtue or vice, and that to theſe [ſouls] there is appointed an eternal priſon, but that to the former [virtuous ſouls] there is a power of reviving given," Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 1. § 3. edit. per Hudſon. Again in another place he adds, " They believe every ſoul to be immortal, but that the ſoul of the good only paſſes into another body, and the ſoul of the wicked is puniſhed with eternal puniſhment," de Bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 8. § 14. But it is the opinion of the Sadducees, that ſouls periſh with their bodies, Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 1. § 4. for they deny the continuance of ſouls, and the puniſhments and rewards of Hades," or Hell, de Bello as before.

Grotius and Le Clerc are of opinion, that Joſephus in this account of the Phariſees has endeavoured to accommodate their ſentiments to thoſe of ſome of the Greek philoſophers; and that he here repreſents them as believing ſomething very much like the Pythagorean tranſmigration of ſouls. And there ſeem to be in the New Teſtament the traces of ſome ſuch ſentiments, particularly in ſome of the inſtances mentioned; Matt. xvi. 14 " And they [the diſciples of Jeſus] ſaid, ſome ſay, that thou art John the Baptiſt, ſome Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the Prophets!"—Again it is ſaid, " his diſciples asked him, ſaying, Maſter, who did ſin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind? John ix. 2. But it is the opinion of others, that the above account of the phariſaical doctrine of Joſephus is altogether inconſiſtent with the notion of a Pythagorean tranſmigration, and that they import the belief of a proper reſurrection. I believe that the Phariſees were divided among themſelves, and had different ſentiments concerning the ſtate of the dead; and I think it can't be diſputed, that they had not amongſt them all, that exact notion of a future ſtate and reſurrection, which our Lord and his Apoſtles after him, taught; for Paul ſaith, that Jeſus Chriſt had brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel; 2 Tim. i. 10.

i. 10.—However, be this as it will, Paul's notions we are certain, directly contradicted thoſe of the Sadducees, and favour and confirm, not to ſay, improve thoſe of the Phariſees; as is evident from the foreſaid account out of Joſephus, who was a Phariſee, and has further illuſtrated their doctrine by his own following ſentiments.

The city of Joſapata, where Joſephus commanded, was not taken, and he and ſome others had hid themſelves in a cave. He propoſed to ſurrender to Veſpaſian; the reſt of his fellows reſolved to kill themſelves, and threatned to execute him firſt if he refuſed to yield to their reſolution. Then amongſt other topicks of perſuaſion, he reaſoned with them in this manner. "We all have mortal bodies formed of corruptible matter: But the ſoul which is houſed in our bodies is immortal; being a portion of God. What! know ye not that they who depart out of life according to the law of nature, and return to God the debt they have received from him, when it is the will of him that gave it, have eternal praiſe, durable manſions and generations: and that pure and obedient ſouls remain, having received an holy place in heaven, from whence after the revolution of ages, they ſhall be again houſed in pure bodies. But the ſouls of thoſe who have laid violent hands upon themſelves, ſhall be lodged in the darkeſt Hades;" de Bello Jud. lib. 3. c. 7. "and if I miſtake not, ſays a learned and ingenious author, Paul's figures in the 2 Cor. v. 1, 2. have a reſemblance with theſe of Joſephus; for we know that if our earthly houſe of this tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a building God, an houſe not made with hands eternal in the heavens, &c."

The Phariſees are ſaid in the Goſpels to faſt oft; Matt. ix. 14. and Joſephus expeſies himſelf thus: "They [the Phariſees] practiſe great temperance, and never indulge themſelves in a luxurious way of life," Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 1. ſect. 3. and this was as much as could be reaſonably expected from him, it not being proper to tell all the world, that they faſted twice in a week; Luke xviii. 12. from ſunſet to ſun-ſet on the next day; ſee Buxt. Synag. Jud. c. 30. for the Romans had always made a jeſt of this practice, as may be gathered from their Poet Martial; lib. iv. Epig. 4.

I don't remember that it is any where ſaid expreſly by the Evangeliſts, that the Sadducees rejected the tradition of the elders; but as theſe were the great authorities of the Phariſees, to whom they always ſeem to have been oppoſite: I can't think but that it may be eaſily proved conſequentially from ſeveral parts of the New Teſtament; and Joſephus plainly declares, that the Sadducees were not very fond of theſe traditions: "the Phariſees, ſays he, have delivered to the people many inſtitutions, as received from the fathers, which are not written in the laws of Moſes. Wherefore the Sadducees reject theſe things, ſaying, that thoſe things are binding which are written; but that the things received by tradition from the fathers, need not to be obſerved. And about theſe things there have happened many diſputes and contentions. For, they pretend to obſerve nothing beſides the laws, and it is with them a virtue to contradict the maſter of wiſdom, [i. e. the Phariſees] and wrangle with them about the ſcience they teach; Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 10. ſect. 6. and xviii. c. 1. ſect. 4. But Notwithſtanding this diſagreement, and almoſt oppoſition of theſe two ſects to each other, Luke repreſents them united in that adminiſtration of affairs, which was allowed the Jewiſh nation by the Romans, to whom they were then ſubject; ſaying, that the members of the council, before which Paul was brought, "were the one part Sadducees, and the other Phariſees;" Acts xxiii. 6. and we have before this, mention made of a council, in which there was a good number of Sadducees: "Then the high-prieſt roſe up, and all they that were with him, (which is the ſect of the Sadducees") v. 7. Neither is there any reaſon to ſuſpect Luke of a miſtake in this account, becauſe the Sadducees in proportion to their numbers, were, as Joſephus teſtifies, admitted into an equal ſhare of the publick offices and adminiſtration with the Phariſees: for, "this opinion (ſays he, ſpeaking of the Sadducees) is embraced only by a few; but then they are ſome of the chief men for dignity. Nevertheleſs, they can do but little; for when they are in the magiſtracy, they generally fall into the meaſures of the Phariſees, (tho' unwillingly and out of pure neceſſity) becauſe they would not otherwiſe be endured by the multitude;" ibid. And it is alſo an obſervation of his, "That they are the moſt cruel of all the Jews in their judicial ſentences; Antiq. xx. c. 8. which I think may be made appear alſo from ſome inſtances in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where the Phariſees were for the milder ſentence, and had a majority. Moreover,

The high-prieſts themſelves were ſometimes Sadducees, John Hyreanus, prince and high-prieſt of the Jews, who died in the year 107. before the Chriſtian Æra (ſee Prideaux's connect. p ii. b. iv.) forſook the Phariſees upon a diſguſt, and turned Sadducee; "he abrogated the inſtitution which the Phariſees had preſcribed to the people, and puniſhed thoſe that obſerved them. Hence the multitude conceived an averſion for him and his ſons.—But having ſuppreſſed this diſturbance, he afterwards lived very happily; and having adminiſtred the government in an excellent manner one and thirty years, he died, leaving five ſons behind him;" Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 10. ſect. 6, 7. But this was not the only inſtance; for, as Page in his Criticks upon Baronius and Baſnage, An. P. E. obſerve, Ceſar having heard of the death of Teſtus, ſent Albinus Prefect into Judea, and the king (Agrippa the younger) took away the high-prieſthood from Joſeph, and gave the ſucceſſion of that office to Ananus the younger, who was fierce and haughty in his behaviour, and the moſt bold and daring of all men; and of the ſect of the Sadducees; ibid. lib. xx. c. 8. ſect. 1.

There is alſo frequent mention in the Goſpels of a ſet of men called Scribes and Lawyers. They are often joined with the chief prieſts, elders and Phariſees; and the ſcribes are ſometimes put for the Phariſees; ſee below at ver. 38. They ſeem to have been men of ſkill and learning, and to have had a particuluar difference paid to them upon that account. Matthew ſays, "And when he had gathered all the chief prieſts and ſcribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Chriſt ſhould be born; ch. ii. 4. for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the ſcribes;" ch. vii. 39. which may be thus explained from Joſephus's ſaying: "Whilſt he (Herod) lay under theſe diſorders, (in his laſt ſickneſs) there happened a tumult among the people, who went to hear the two famous Sophiſts, or Rabbies, Judas the ſon of Sariphaeus, and Matthias the ſon of Margalothus; men who had the moſt perſuaſive eloquence of any among the Jews, and were eminent interpreters of the laws, and were dear to the people, becauſe they taught the youth; ſee de Bello Jud. lib. i. c. 33. compared with Antiq. lib. xvii. c. 6. ſect. 2. But Whether there be any difference between lawyers and ſcribes, or whether they are words perfectly ſynonymous, I won't pretend at preſent to determine. Yet, it may be conjectured, that the lawyers were chiefly employed in the ſchools, and the ſcribes more uſually harangued the people in publick in the ſynagogue. Now,

As for the Herodians, they are a ſet of people not mentioned above four times in the Goſpel, and it will be hard to aſcertain their peculiar tenets; neither can I think it neceſſary to detain you with a long recital of all the conjectures, which learned men have left us concerning them.—They might be a ſubdiviſion, or branch of one of the forementioned ſects, of Phariſees or Sadducees; or if they were a diſtinct ſect from the reſt, it might be a character thar ſubſiſted but for a ſhort time, at leaſt under that name. But hear what our learned Countryman Dean Prideaux ſays on this ſubject: "There is, ſays he, a ſect among the Jews called Herodians, taking its riſe from Herod the king of Judea, called Herod the Great, but for what reaſon, that is the queſtion: Some ſay it was, becauſe they held that Herod was the Meſſiah; ſo Tertullian, ſo Epiphanius, ſo Hierom, ſo Chryſoſtom, ſo Theophylact, and ſo ſeveral others of the ancients held. But it is very improbable that any Jews ſhould in the time of our Saviour's miniſtry, above thirty years after the death of Herod, hold him to have been the Meſſiah, when they had found no one of thoſe particulars, which they expected from the Meſſiah, performed by him, but rather every thing quite the contrary. Others hold that they were called Herodians, becauſe they conſtituted a ſodality erected in honour of Herod, in the ſame manner as there were ſodalities at Rome, called, Auguſtales, Adrianales, Antonini, conſtituted in the honour of Auguſtus, Adrian, and Antoninus, and the like of other Roman emperors after their death. And this is the opinion of Scaliger and his admirers; but none of theſe ſodalities [or religious ſocieties] at Rome, having been inſtituted till long after the death of Herod, none ſuch could have been inſtituted in honour of Herod in imitation of them. For, the earlieſt of theſe ſodalities, and the firſt of this kind, that we any where meet with, were the ſodales Auguſtales; but theſe not being inſtituted till after Auguſtus's death, which happened ſeveral years after Herod's, this could give no pattern or foundation for the like to be inſtituted in honour of Herod, either in his life-time, or upon his death, ſince he died many years before. By what is mentioned of theſe Herodians in the Goſpels, they ſeem plainly to have been a ſect among the Jews, differing from the reſt in ſome points of their law and religion. For, they are there named with the Phariſees, and in contradiſtinction from them, and therefore muſt have been a ſect in the ſame manner as the Phariſees were. And they are alſo ſaid to have a peculiar leaven, as the Phariſees had, that is, ſome falſe and evil tenets, which ſoured and corrupted the whole lump, with which it was mingled: and therefore Chriſt equally warned his diſciples againſt both. And ſince he calleth it, the leaven of Herod, Mark viii. 3. this argues that Herod was the author of it, that is, of theſe evil tenets, which conſtituted this ſect, and diſtinguiſhed it from the other ſects of the Jews, and that his followers imbibing thoſe tenets from him, were for this reaſon called Herodians. And theſe being chiefly of his courtiers, and the officers and ſervants of his palace, and thoſe that were deſcended from them, hence the Syriac Verſion, where-ever the word Herodians occurs in the original, renders it the domeſticks of Herod. And that Verſion being made very early for the uſe of the Church of Antioch, the authors of it were neareſt thoſe times, in which this ſect had its beginning, and therefore had the beſt means of knowing who they were.

"Thus far therefore having ſhewn, that theſe Herodians were a ſect of the Jews, that had its original from Herod the Great, it is next to be enquired into, what were the tenets whereby it was diſtinguiſhed.— The only way to find this out is to examine, in what particulars the founder of it differed from the reſt of the Jews. For, no doubt, the ſame were the particulars, in which thoſe his followers differed from them alſo, and thereby conſtituted this ſect, and they will appear to have been theſe two following. —— The firſt, in ſubjecting himſelf, and his people, to the dominion of the Romans; and ſecondly, in complying with them in many of their Heathen uſages. For, Herod held both theſe particulars lawful, and accordingly practiſed them. And, therefore, theſe I take to be the tenets and opinions, in which theſe Herodians, his followers, differed from the other Jews, and thereby conſtituted this ſect, which from him was called by that name. It being ſaid, Deut. xvii. 15. One from among thy brethren, ſhalt thou ſet king over thee, which is not thy brother, gave riſe to an opinion, which was generally embraced by the Phariſees, that it was not lawful to ſubmit to the Roman emperor, or pay taxes unto him; but Herod, and his followers, underſtanding the text to exclude only a voluntary choice, and not a neceſſary ſubmiſſion, where force hath overpowered choice, were of a contrary opinion, and held it lawful in this caſe both to ſubmit to the Roman emperor, and alſo pay taxes to him. And, therefore, the Phariſees and Herodians being of opinion in this matter, quite contrary to each other, thoſe that laid ſnares for Chriſt, and ſought an occaſion againſt him, ſent (as we read in the context) the diſciples of both theſe ſects, at the ſame time together, to propoſe this captious queſtion, Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæſar, or no? ver. 16. thinking which way ſoever he ſhould anſwer, to bring him into danger. For, ſhould he anſwer in the negative, the Herodians were there ready to accuſe him of being an enemy to Cæſar; and ſhould he anſwer in the affirmative, the Phariſees were as ready, on the other hand, to accuſe him to the people, and excite them againſt him, as an enemy to their rights, they having poſſeſſed them with their notion, againſt paying taxes to any foreign power. But, Chriſt knowing their wicked intentions, gave ſuch an anſwer as baffled the malice and contrivance of them both, ver. 17. However, the anſwer implying a juſtification of the doctrine of the Herodians in that point, that could not be the leaven of Herod, which Chriſt warned his diſciples to avoid; and therefore, that muſt be their ſecond tenet, that it was lawful, when forced and overpowered by ſuperiors, to comply with them in idolatrous and wrong practices of religion. This Herod did, and he ſeems to have framed this ſect of purpoſe to juſtify him herein. For, Joſephus tells us, (Antiq. xv. 12.) that to ingratiate himſelf with Auguſtus, and the great men of Rome, he in many things acted contrary to the law and religion of the Jews, building temples, and erecting images in them for idolatrous worſhip, and for this he excuſed himſelf to the Jews, telling them, that he did not do it willingly, but as commanded and forced to it by powers, whom he was neceſſitated to obey, thinking this ſufficient to excuſe him from guilt. And for this reaſon we find him ſometimes called an half Jew, and ſuch half Jews, I conceive, were the Herodians, his followers, profeſſing the Jewiſh religion, and at the ſame time on occaſions, complying with the idolatrous Heathen, and becoming occaſional conformiſts to them. —— The Sadducees did moſtly come into the opinions of this ſect, and therefore they are (commonly) reckoned one and the ſame with them. For, the ſame perſons, who, in one of the Goſpels are called Herodians, are called Sadducees in another; ſee Matt. xvi. 6. compared with Mark viii. 15. But this ſect is no more heard of, and is vaniſhed ſoon after our Saviour's time; ſee Connect. P. ii. Book v. at the end.

Ver. 18. Then come unto him the Sadducees.] Read the preceding note, and the note on Matt. iii. 7.

Ver. 25.— But are as the Angels which are in Heaven.] Not in all things, but in regard of matrimony; as the Angels who are in Heaven don't marry, nor propagate their kind, neither ſhall the Bleſſed Spirits, which arrive at that manſion of bliſs.

Ver. 26.— I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob?] i. e. I am he, who made the covenant with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, to propagate their poſterity, which I will preſerve, becauſe they are yet alive, and intercede with me daily, that I may deliver their children from the Egyptian bondage. For, covenants are wont to be kept with the living, and not with the dead, becauſe they are made with the living, and not with the dead, ſee Maldonate in Loc.

Ver. 27. He is not a God of the dead, but the God of the living.] Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob were dead, it is true, but not after that manner, as the Sadducees, to whom Chriſt anſwered, ſay, people die, ſo as both their body and ſoul ſhall be extinct. For, in that ſenſe we underſtand death, to be the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body to live for ever, God is the God not only of the living upon earth, but of the dead alſo, who live in Heaven; ſee Rom. xiv. 7, 8, 9.

Ver. 29. And Jeſus anſwered him, the firſt of all the commandments is, Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord.] This is neceſſary to be known, that we may worſhip him alone in oppoſition to all gods, and own that he alone is God, who is the maker of Heaven and earth. And here it ſhould be noted, that our Lord ſpoke to a man that knew no diſtinction of opinions, but that of Jew and Heathen, and imports therefore, that tho' the Heathens worſhipped many falſe gods, the Jews ought to worſhip only the one living God.

Ver. 37. Whence is he then his ſon?] See the notes on Matt. i. 1, &c.

Ver. 38.— Beware of the ſcribes.] i. e. The Phariſees and their leaven, or evil doctrines.

Ver. 40. Which devour widows houſes.] i. e. Their ſubſtance; the queſtion is therefore, in what manner, they obtained ſuch an aſcendant. Some think it was in the manner Romiſh prieſts now a-days practice, by perſuading them, their followers, to yield up their riches for the ſupport of their craft, and to pray their ſouls out of purgatory, or for the ſouls of their deceaſed friends. Or, under a pretence of viſiting and comforting them in affliction, would hang upon them till they had exhauſted all their living in feaſtings, prepared for their reception by the deceived widows. Or, becauſe, the widows being deceived by their hypocritical ſanctity, ſpared no coſt to buy their prayers, to which they, the Phariſees and ſcribes were addicted, as much as the Popiſh prieſts are to ſell their maſſes, and this may be well collected from the following words, and for a pretence make long prayers, i. e. for a pretence of ſanctity, and to bring into captivity ſilly women.

Ver. 44. — Even all her living.] Or, all the money ſhe had to live upon that day; ſee Whitby on the place.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Chriſt foretelleth the deſtruction of the temple: 9 the perſecutions for the goſpel: 10 that the goſpel muſt be preached to all nations: 14 that great calamities ſhall happen to the Jews: 24 and the manner of his coming to judgment. 32 The hour whereof being known to none, every man is to watch and pray, that we be not found unprovided, when he cometh to each one particularly by death.

AND as he went out of the temple, one of his diſciples ſaith unto him, Maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones, and what buildings are here.

2 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, Seeſt thou theſe great buildings? there ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down.

3 And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, over againſt the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew aſked him privately,

4 Tell us, when ſhall theſe things be? and what ſhall be the ſign when all theſe things ſhall be fulfilled?

5 And Jeſus anſwering them, began to ſay, Take heed leſt any man deceive you.

6 For many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceive many.

7 And when ye ſhall hear of wars, and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for ſuch things muſt needs be; but the end ſhall not be yet.

8 For nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom: and there ſhall be earthquakes in divers places, and there ſhall be famines, and troubles: theſe are the beginnings of ſorrows.

9 ¶ But take heed to your ſelves: for they ſhall deliver you up to councils; and in the ſynagogues ye ſhall be beaten, and ye ſhall be brought before rulers and kings for my ſake, for a teſtimony againſt them.

10 And the goſpel muſt firſt be publiſhed among all nations.

11 But when they ſhall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye ſhall ſpeak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatſoever ſhall be given you in that hour, that ſpeak ye: for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the holy Ghoſt.

12 Now the brother ſhall betray the brother to death, and the father the ſon: and children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and ſhall cauſe them to be put to death.

13 And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake: but he that ſhall endure unto the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.

14 ¶ But when ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, ſtanding where it ought not, (let him that readeth, underſtand) then let them that be in Judea, flee to the mountains:

15 And let him that is on the houſe-top, not go down into the houſe, neither enter therein to take any thing out of his houſe.

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17 But wo to them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days.

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

19 For in thoſe days ſhall be affliction, ſuch as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created, unto this time, neither ſhall be.

20 And except that the Lord had ſhortned thoſe days, no fleſh ſhould be ſaved: but for the elects ſake, whom he hath choſen, he hath ſhortned the days.

21 And then if any man ſhall ſay to you, Lo, here is Chriſt, or lo, he is there: believe him not.

22 For falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets ſhall riſe, and ſhall ſhew ſigns and wonders, to ſeduce, if it were poſſible, even the elect.

23 But take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things.

24 ¶ But in thoſe days after that tribulation, the ſun ſhall be darkned, and the moon ſhall not give her light:

25 And the ſtars of heaven ſhall fall, and the powers that are in heaven ſhall be ſhaken.

26 And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds, with great power and glory.

27 And then ſhall he ſend his angels, and ſhall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermoſt part of the earth to the uttermoſt part of heaven.

28 Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When her branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that ſummer is near:

29 So ye in like manner, when ye ſhall ſee theſe things come to paſs, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30 Verily I ſay unto you, that this generation ſhall not paſs, till all theſe things be done.

31 Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away: but my words ſhall not paſs away.

32 ¶ But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.

33 Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

34 For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his houſe, and gave authority to his ſervants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 Watch ye therefore (for ye know not when the maſter of the houſe cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning)

36 Leſt coming ſuddenly, he find you ſleeping.

37 And what I ſay unto you, I ſay unto all, Watch.

Ver. 1. — One of his diſciples ſaith unto him.] Matthew in his parallel Scripture writes, and his diſciples, &c. So that, as it is generally interpreted, all his diſciples had been admiring the ſtrength and beauty of the temple, and as Matthew has it, "came [in a body] to him, to ſhew him the buildings of the temple," Matt. xxiv. 1. but only one of them ſpoke, and as Mark here notes, "ſaith [in the name of them all] unto him, Maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones, and what buildings are here." Juſt as at other times, when Peter ſpake in the name of all the diſciples, and confeſſed, that Jeſus was the Chriſt the Son of God, Matt. xvi. 16.

——See what manner of ſtones, and what buildings are here.] As for the reaſon of this obſervation by the diſciples, we muſt turn back to Matthew, xxiii. 37, 38. compared with Mark xi. 17. and Luke xix. 41, &c. For they being full of compaſſion for their Holy City and Temple, and ſcarcely believing that ſo deſpicable a perſon as Jeſus appeared to be, ſo uncapable of executing ſuch a ſurprizing deſtruction, as they muſt neceſſarily collect from thoſe, and many ſuch like Scriptures, took this opportunity when they were coming out of the temple to aſk, how, or in what manner ſuch a building ſhould be deſtroyed, or, as the words may be properly interpreted, how it was poſſible for ſo ſtrong a building to be left deſolate, or thrown down to the ground, Matt. xxiii. 38. And in this ſuppoſition, I am warranted from a like caſe; for the diſciples, having by the way diſputed, which of them ſhould be greateſt in the kingdom of Heaven, i. e. of the Meſſiah; they did not aſk a plain queſtion, as applicable to themſelves, but as Matthew relates it, The diſciples came unto Jeſus, ſaying, who is the greateſt in the kingdom of Heaven? Matt. xviii. 1. They ſuppoſed, that Jeſus would have anſwered to this general queſtion, by particularizing ſome of their own ſociety. So in the text, when they ſaid, ſee what manner of ſtones and what buildings are here, it was interrogatively, ſee ver. 4. with an expectation, that Chriſt would reply in ſuch terms, as might inform them in what particular manner, or when thoſe buildings of the temple ſhould be caſt down and deſtroyed. And, accordingly, Jeſus knowing their thoughts, gave them a proper anſwer, as you may read below, at ver. 2, 4, &c.

The temple, of whoſe ſtones and buildings it is here ſpoken of, is not that builded by Solomon, nor the ſecond temple built after the captivity; but it is that of which the famous Jewiſh hiſtorian Joſephus gives the following account, from which you may both learn the cauſe and the magnificence of the building. —— "Herod, ſays he, in the eighteenth year of his reign engaged in a moſt noble undertaking to build a temple to God, both more extenſive and loftier than that ſtanding, at his own private expence, ſuppoſing that ſuch an action would be eſteemed the moſt glorious of all his deeds, and eternize his name to all future ages, could he be only bleſſed with life enough to ſee it finiſhed. But the people's inclinations did not ſo perfectly quadrate with his own ambition, as he at firſt expected; for they apprehended, that he was not in a capacity to accompliſh ſo great a work. Herod endeavoured to remove their jealouſy, with a pompous harangue, and when he found that thereby the vaſt expence of the propoſed undertaking, encreaſed their doubts, he again ſtrove to raiſe their minds, to a ſure expectation of his ability, by poſitively promiſing not to pull down one ſtone from the preſent temple, till he had prepared all the materials, &c. for that he intended to build. And, accordingly, he employed a thouſand carts to carry ſtones, and ten thouſand skilful workmen; then he bought robes for a thouſand prieſts, and gave orders for hewing the ſtones, and cutting the wood. Thus having all things in readineſs, he gave orders for pulling down the old temple. And,

Having removed the foundation of the old temple, he erected a new one, an hundred cubits long, and an hundred and twenty high. The ſtones were marble, each five and twenty cubits long, eight cubits deep, and about twelve in breadth. The middle part overtopped the reſt of the fabrick, and the royal portico, and was ſo very high, as to be plainly ſeen at the diſtance of many furlongs in the country. The doors which led to the temple, (or the inward gate) with their portals and poſts, were carried up to an equal height with the temple, and adorned with beautiful figures of divers colours, intermixed with flowers and pillars of wonderful art. But theſe were no more than, as it were, a baſis to a golden vine, whoſe far-expanded branches, loaded with large cluſters of artificial grapes, ran under the corniſh of the wall, ſo much like nature, as to ſtrike the inſpector's eye with ſurprize and admiration, at the extent and exquiſite workmanſhip thereof. Yet, the expence of thoſe magnificent portico's, which were ſo proportionably erected all round the (outſide) of the temple, far exceeded the coſt of the former ones; inſomuch that it may be ſaid, this was the moſt beautiful temple that ever was built. Theſe two exquiſite works, were ſupported by a prodigious ſtrong wall, even ſuch as never was heard of before, which, according to the direction given by God to Solomon, began at the very bottom of a rocky and high hill, incloſed with a deep ditch, whoſe vaſt ſtones were ſodered together with lead, till it roſe to a prodigious height, and depth, in a ſquare form; ſo that the full bigneſs of the ſtones, which within were cramped with iron bars, and without appeared in their full extent and beauty. This durable work equalled the top of the hill, which, by filling up all the cavities within the wall, and taking away all the riſing ground above the level, made it an even plain of four furlongs in circumference, or in the ſquare. Within this was another ſtone wall, with a double portico of equal length with it, to the eaſt facing all the gates of the temple, which filled up the middle of all, and was adorned with the ſpoils taken from the barbarous nations, which Herod dedicated to it, and placed as an addition, thoſe conquered by himſelf, in his expedition againſt the Arabs.

The north-ſide of this encloſure was well fortified by a ſtrong quadrangular tower, deſigned for the ſecurity and protection of the temple, and was called by Herod, Antonia, in honour and gratitude to Anthony his former benefactor and general of the Romans, &c. ſee Joſephus's Antiquities, xv. 11.

Ver. 2. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid to him, ſeeſt thou theſe great buildings? There ſhall not be left one ſtone of them upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down.] This is Chriſt's prediction, and the exact completion thereof moves the truth of his prophetick office, and of the Chriſtian Faith, and therefore I ſhall be the more particular in the explication thereof. Now,

It is not ſo much as diſputed that the temple we have juſt deſcribed was utterly deſtroyed not long after the death of Chriſt. For, what better witneſs can be demanded hereof, than the authority of a Jew? and who is of greater authority, or can ſpeak more fully to our purpoſe, than Joſephus, a Jewiſh hiſtorian, and an eye-witneſs of Jeruſalem's and the temple's deſtruction? His words are as follow.

"Titus, (the Roman general) gave order that the battering rams ſhould be brought and ſet over againſt the weſtern edifice of the inner temple. — Other Romans undermined the foundations of the northern-gate: and after a world of pains removed the outermoſt ſtones; yet theſe attempts proved unſucceſsful, ſo that Titus gave orders to ſet the gates on fire, which melting the ſilver, that covered them, quickly carried the flames to the wood that was within; whence it ſpread itſelf all on a ſudden, and caught hold of the cloiſters, which ſtruck the deſcendants with ſuch a pannick, that they ſtood like idle ſpectators, without endeavouring to quench it, yet it did no more damage than burning the cloiſters, in two days time, when it was quenched by the Romans, to make way for their legions to advance with orders to take, but not to deſtroy the temple, till Titus fearing his moderation for a deſpairing people, would turn to his own loſs, reſolved to ſtorm the temple, the next day, early in the morning with his whole army; and to encamp round about the Holy Houſe. But as for that houſe, God had for certain, ſays Joſephus, long ago doomed it to the fire. And now that fatal day was come, according to the revolution of ages; even the tenth day of the month Lous, upon which day of the month, it was formerly burnt by the king of Babylon. And remark, that theſe flames took their riſe from the Jews themſelves, being occaſioned by them. For being purſued in their retreat from the inner-court, as far as the Holy Houſe itſelf, one of the ſoldiers, without ſtaying for any orders, and without any concern or dread upon him at ſo great an action; and being hurried on, by a certain Divine Fury, ſnatch'd a parcel of the materials on fire in the inner-court, ſet fire to a golden window, through which there was a paſſage to the rooms that were adjacent to the north-ſide of the Holy Houſe. As ſoon as Titus heard thereof, he gave orders to have it quenched, but to no purpoſe; for his ſoldiers were reſolved to die, or utterly deſtroy this Holy Place; and did all in their power to ſpread the flames, which thereupon preſently burſt out from within the Holy Houſe itſelf.

Now, ſays Joſephus, although any one would juſtly lament the deſtruction of ſuch a work as this was; ſince it was the moſt admirable of all the works that we have ſeen, or heard of, both for its curious ſtructure, and its magnitude, and alſo for the vaſt wealth beſtowed upon it, as well as for the glorious reputation it had for its holineſs, yet might ſuch a one comfort himſelf with this thought, that it was providence that decreed it ſo to be; ſee Joſephus of the Jewiſh War, Book vi. c. 4.

While the Holy Houſe was on fire, every thing was plundered that came to hand, and ten thouſand of the priſoners were ſlain, without pity or reſpect for age or dignity. The flame ſpreading very wide, and made an echo together with the groans of thoſe that were ſlain; a noiſe, than which nothing can be imagined greater or more terrible. For, not only the conquerors and the conquered encreaſed it, with their diſcord ſounds, but thoſe that were worn away by famine, and whoſe mouths were almoſt cloſed for want of uſe, when they ſaw the fire conſuming the Holy Houſe, broke forth again into groans and outcries, even beyond their ſtrength.——Yet was the miſery itſelf more terrible than this diſorder; for, one would have thought that the hill itſelf on which the temple ſtood, was ſeething hot.—— Nor did the ground appear for the dead bodies which lay on it. — And now, the Romans, judging that it was in vain to ſpare what was round about the Holy Houſe, burnt all thoſe Holy Places, as alſo the remains of the cloiſters and the gates, but two, one on the eaſt, and the other on the ſouth-ſide; and they were burnt afterwards. They alſo burnt down the treaſury-chambers, where had been repoſited an immenſe quantity of money, garments, and other precious goods. Then the furious ſoldiers ſet fire to a cloiſter, where 6000 women, children, &c. were burnt, or otherwiſe deſtroyed; which deſtruction was the effect of a falſe prophecy, by one, who made a publick declaration in the city, that very day, that "God commanded them to get up upon the temple; and that there they ſhould receive miraculous ſigns of their deliverance." And this was one of the many falſe prophets, [ſpoken of, or foretold by Chriſt, that ſhould ariſe, and were] ſuborned by the tyrants to impoſe on the people by falſe prymiſes of deliverance, to keep them from deſerting, and to animate their deſpairing ſouls.

Thus were the miſerable people perſuaded by theſe deceivers, and ſuch as belied God himſelf; but did not attend nor give credit to the ſigns that were ſo evident, and did ſo plainly foretel their future deſolation. But like men infatuated, without either eyes to ſee, or minds to conſider, did not regard the denunciations that God made to them. For there was ſeen a ſtar, like a ſword, hovering over the city, and another comet, which appeared a whole year; there was alſo ſeen a light on the eighth day of the month Niſan, and at the ninth hour of the night about the altar, like unto the light of the day, for half an hour; and at the ſame time an heifer, as ſhe was led by the high-prieſt, to be ſacrificed, brought forth a lamb, in the midſt of the temple; the gate of the inner-court of the temple, which required the ſtrength of twenty men to ſhut it, opened on its own accord, which the men of learning underſtood to denote, that the ſecurity of their Holy Houſe was diſſolved, and that the gate was opened for the reception of their enemies. Moreover, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem ſaw, before ſun-ſetting, the phænomenon of chariots and armed men in the air, as it were ſurrounding a city; and a voice was heard in the temple by night at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, ſaying, let us move hence. But what is more terrible, one Jeſus, an huſbandman, about four years before the war began, or there was any proſpect thereof, in the feaſt of the tabernacles, began to cry out ſuddenly, "A voice from the eaſt; a voice from the weſt; a voice from the four winds; a voice againſt Jeruſalem, and againſt the Holy Houſe; a voice againſt the bride-grooms and the brides; and a voice againſt this whole people." The poor man was apprehended and whipt for his honeſty, but at every ſtroke he cry'd, "Wo, wo to Jeruſalem;" and this was his conſtant tone and anſwer to all men, and on all occaſions, after he was let looſe to his own liberty, continuing it for ſeven years and five months, without ever being hoarſe or tired therewith, until the very time that he ſaw his preſage in earneſt fulfilled by the ſiege; when it ceaſed. For as he was going round about upon the wall, he cried out with his outmoſt force, "Wo, woe to the city again, and to the people, and to the Holy Houſe." And juſt as he added at the laſt, "Woe to myſelf alſo," there came a ſtone out of one of the engines, and ſmote him, and killed him immediately. And as he was repeating the ſame words, he yielded up the ghoſt; ſee Joſephus ibid. c. v.

Now, as ſoon as the army had no more people to ſlay, or to plunder, becauſe there remained none to be the objects of their fury; Cæſar gave orders that they ſhould entirely demoliſh the city and temple, except ſome of the city-towers, and the weſt wall thereof. But as for the wall it was thoroughly laid even with the ground, by thoſe that dug it up to the foundation, that there was left nothing to make thoſe that came thither, believe it had ever been inhabited; thus far Joſephus ibid, and lib. vii. c. 1. agreeable to whom,

We read in the Jewiſh Talmud and Maimonides, that Turnus or Tenentius Rufus, captain of Titus's army, did with a plowſhare tare up the foundations of the temple, and thereby did ſignally fulfil the prophecy of Micah iii. 12. and eſpecially that under our conſideration, by Jeſus Chriſt. And after him a great many years, when Julian the Apoſtate, had given the Jews leave to rebuild their temple, in oppoſition to Chriſtianity, they, with their own hands, dug up the old foundations, in order to lay new ones; but when this was done, God ſent fire out of the earth which killed the workmen; ſo the Jews themſelves, in an extraordinary manner, fulfilled Chriſt's prediction; ſee Ammianus Marcellinus, Theodoret, &c.

Ver. 3. And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, over-againſt the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew asked him privately.] Here it is remarked, that, altho' Matthew in his account of this queſtion ſays in the general, that the diſciples came, &c. without mentioning their names, Mark interprets that Scripture and tells us, how many of the diſciples, and who they were that came privately to ask this queſtion, ſo as the multitude might not hear; becauſe it was a dangerous ſpeech to diſcourſe of the deſtruction of the temple, as we are well aſſured in the accuſation of the Proto-martyr Stephen, whoſe falſe accuſers ſaid, This man ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt this Holy Place and the law; for, we have heard him ſay, that this Jeſus of Nazareth, ſhall deſtroy this place, Acts vi. 13, 14.

Ver. 4. — When ſhall theſe things be?] i. e The deſtruction of Jeruſalem and of the temple, when may we expect it?

—— And what ſhall be the ſign, when all theſe things ſhall be fulfilled?] The Evangeliſts have related many wonderful works, of various kinds, performed by our Bleſſed Saviour; and in ſome places they ſay, he wrought ſigns. Thus John xx. 30. "And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples:" And Peter tells the Jews, that Jeſus was a man approved of God among them by miracles, and wonders and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of them, Acts ii. 22. But yet, they aſſure us, that the Jews, notwithſtanding this, would often ask him for a ſign, as in Matt. xii. 38. xvi. 1. and again, "they ſaid unto him, what ſign ſheweſt thou then, that we may ſee and believe?" John vi. 30. The ſign they wanted or demanded, muſt needs therefore, have been of a different kind from any of thoſe, which Jeſus had given them. And the Apoſtle Paul, a good while after this, ſays, the Jews require a ſign, 1 Cor. i. 22. Now what ſign this was they wanted, appears from Joſephus, (Antiq. xx. 7. § 6. to be ſome ſign of liberty, and of temporal deliverance. And what ſhall we ſay of this demand of the diſciples? It is certain, that they had ſo imbibed the Jewiſh expectation of a Powerful Meſſiah, who ſhould deliver Iſrael from their ſubjection, that they frequently ſtaggered at the declaration of Jeſus, concerning his ſufferings and death. Therefore, who can doubt, but that the ſign here demanded by them, to convince them of ſo ſurprizing an event, as the deſtruction of their temple, was to be a ſign of power, a ſign, by which he, Chriſt, muſt ſatisfy them that he was inveſted with ſuch a power, as could deſtroy that temple, in which God had ſaid, that he dwelt for ever. Conſequently this queſtion, ſavoured very much of the Jewiſh incredulity; and this may be eaſily collected from his anſwer, as follows:

Ver. 5. — Take heed leſt any man deceive you.] You do greatly err in your opinion, to ask me for a ſign of liberty, or temporal deliverance, or a ſign of power, as if I were an earthly king; and I give you this caution, take you heed, that ye be not drawn away with the multitude, who will follow any falſe prophet, that ſhall promiſe them liberty, or a temporal deliverance, as from God, when he is no better than an impoſtor, and an inſtrument of Satan.

Ver. 6. — Many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, [the Meſſiah] and ſhall deceive many.] So there were many pretended believers, who after Jeſus, pretended to promiſe deliverance and liberty, to the tributary and dejected Jews. For, Joſephus writes, that many deceivers and impoſtors, under a pretence of Divine Inſpiration, aiming at innovations and changes, perſuaded the people into diſtraction, and drew them into the wilderneſs, where, they aſſured them, God would ſhew them ſigns of liberty; de Bell. Jud. lib. 2. c. 13. § 4. Or, they ſaid, that they would there ſhew them manifeſt wonders and ſigns, which would be wrought by the power of God; Antiq. xx. 7. § 6. Compare this with Acts v. 36. and viii. 10. Therefore Chriſt Jeſus, the righteous, forewarned his diſciples againſt being deceived, by theſe impoſtors, and their ſigns.

Ver. 7. —— For ſuch things muſt needs be.] Not abſolutely; but as the effect of human hatred, and the decree by which God had reſolved to puniſh the Jews, the like expreſſion of muſt needs be, is found in Matt. xviii. 7. and 1 Cor. xi. 9.

—— But the end.] Of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, is not, or muſt not be yet ſuppoſed to be come.

Ver. 8. For, nation ſhall riſe againſt nation.] They that deſire to underſtand this text, and to ſee it proved, muſt conſult Joſephus's Antiquities, book xx. c. 7, 8 and 15. and his Jewiſh Wars, book ii. c. 11, 12, 14, 19, 20, 21, and 25. and Hegeſippus, book ii. c. 11, 14, 16, 17. for it would be too long to tranſcribe their prolix accounts thereof.

——Theſe are the beginning of ſorrows.] Or, the earneſt of worſer evils, which are to follow. This is a metaphor taken from a woman in travail, who in the beginning of her labour feels but a few, or leſſer pains of the approaching birth, in compariſon of the exceſſive tortures ſhe ſuffers in the act of bearing, when the child paſſes the neck of the womb. A metaphor of common uſe in the Scriptures, as you may ſee in Pſ. xlviii. 5, 6. and Iſaiah xiii. 7, 8. xxi. 3. Jeremiah iv. 31. vi. 24. xiii. 21. xxii. 23. xxx. 6. xlviii. 41. and xlix. 22, 24. Ezekiel xxx. 16. Hoſea xiii. 13. and Micah iv. 9, 10.

Ver. 9.——They ſhall deliver you up to councils, &c.] This is teſtified in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and all their cotemporary hiſtories. But for the better explication of this and the 11th, 12th, and 13th verſes, I ſhall obſerve, that "At Theſſalonica, the Jews, which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and gathered a company, and ſet all the city in an uproar, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon, and ſought to bring them [Paul and Silas] out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jaſon, and certain of the brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, theſe that have turned the world upſide down, are come hither alſo. Whom Jaſon hath received, and theſe all do contrary to the decrees of Ceſar, ſaying, that there is another king, one Jeſus," Acts xvii. 5—9.

When Paul preached at Corinth, the Jews commenced a warm proſecution againſt him, with one accord, "and brought him to the Judgment-ſeat of Gallio, the deputy of Achaia, ſaying, this fellow perſuadeth men to worſhip God contrary to the law," Acts xviii. 11, &c. And "Demetrius the ſilver-ſmith, at Epheſus, and his fellow-workmen, made a ſpeech to the people in behalf of themſelves, and their goddeſs, inſomuch that the whole city was filled with confuſion; and, having caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus, Paul's companions in travel, they ruſhed with one accord into the theatre;" Acts xix. 24, &c. ſee alſo Acts xvi. 16, &c. 1 Theſſ. ii. 14, &c. And again, the Jews finding Paul in the temple at Jeruſalem, ſeize him with an intention to kill him; Acts xxii. Nor did this hatred end in the Apoſtolick age, for hearken to the teſtimonies of other hiſtorical paſſages.

Juſtin Martyr in his Dialogue with Trypho, a Jew, about the 140th year of the Chriſtian Æra, ſays, that in his time, the Jews curſed in their ſynagogues all that believed in Chriſt. This is all you can do. You have not now the power of killing us your ſelves, becauſe others have the government of things. But this you have done, when ever you have been able. Nor have any other people ſhewed ſo much enmity againſt us and Chriſt, as you, who have been likewiſe the authors of all thoſe prejudices, which others have conceived againſt that righteous perſon, and us his followers. For, after that you had crucified that one unblameable and righteous man, (by whoſe ſtripes they are healed who go to the father through him) when you knew, that he was riſen from the dead and aſcended up into Heaven, according as the Prophecies had foretold he ſhould; you were ſo far from repenting of your evil deeds, that you ſent out from Jeruſalem choſen men into all the world, giving out the ſect of the Chriſtians is Atheiſtical, and ſaying all thoſe things of us, which they who know us not, ſtill continue to ſay of us.

I know that it may be objected, that in all theſe caſes the Roman governors moderated the matter, and ſkreen'd the Chriſtian-priſoners ——It is anſwered, that though it be true, that the Romans were maſters of the world, and governed by moderate maxims, and ſo far ſkreen'd the Chriſtian-priſoners, as not to condemn them to death for their doctrine, as oppoſite to the Jews; yet the firſt Chriſtians were expoſed to many hardſhips and ſufferings brought upon them by the Jews. There was an heavy perſecution in Judea, which probably laſted many years after our Saviour's aſcenſion. The Jews had a right to call men before their council, could excommunicate men out of their ſynagogues, ſcourge and beat them; they could bring men before the Roman governor, and proſecute for capital crimes; and doubtleſs their envy raiſed and exerted all their power againſt the believers, and even to do, or attempt at things out of their civil right. Moreover, Herod Agrippa reigned three years king of Judea, and he, out of his own averſion to Chriſtianity, and as a means to pleaſe the Jews, was an inveterate enemy of the followers of Jeſus; ſee Acts xii And though afterwards the government was executed by Roman Procurators, yet the Jewiſh influence moſt commonly byaſſed the Heathen Judge in their favour againſt Chriſtianity.

The Chriſtians out of Judea, where ever they made a conſiderable congregation, by converting the Heathens from their falſe worſhip to the living God, were inſulted by the common people, with whom the inferior magiſtrates ſometimes concurred; ſee Acts xiv. 19. xvi. 22. xvii. 5—13. xviii. 14. xix. 33 xvi. 1—3. Again,

The Jews can't be ſuppoſed to be inconſiderable enemies. The malicious, however unfurniſhed, will always find ſome weapons; and rage makes men, for a time at leaſt, ſtrong and terrible. We ſee a great deal of enmity againſt the firſt Chriſtians in the Jewiſh ſpeeches and proceedings againſt them, raiſed from that diſdain of a Meſſiah, who inſtead of ſubduing the whole world to them, had caſt them off, and invited the Gentiles to partake of the privileges of God, without any covenant of circumciſion, or other rites of their law. Thus,

The Jewiſh people were of that peculiar temper, diſpoſition, and principles, that though the Roman governor had taken the firſt Chriſtians into their ſpecial protection, they could not have ſecured them from all injuries. For, the Jews at that time, not only ſcorned ſubjection and obedience to others, and affected liberty and independence; but as I have juſt obſerved, they expected dominion over all mankind; as both the Sacred Authority of the New Teſtament, and the creditable teſtimony of Joſephus, the Jew, affirm. For, as Peter obſerves, "they deſpiſe governments, preſumptous are they, ſelf-willed: They are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities;" 2 Pet. ii 10. Jude 8. And this made it neceſſary for the firſt preachers of Chriſtianity ſo often and expreſly to warn their Proſelytes from Judaiſm, not to follow the bad example of their own countrymen, but "to ſubmit themſelves unto every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake;' 1 Pet. ii. 13. and iv. 15. in which laſt text, Peter not only forbids the Jews to meddle in private affairs; but he chiefly exhorts them not to give way to a buſy governing temper, that led them into a very offenſive conduct; becauſe he reckons theſe buſy bodies with criminals, who in thoſe places, could be puniſhed only by Roman judges. So that the Jew's diſdain of other men, and their thirſt after dominion, (ſee Baſnage Ann. Polit Eccl.) ran ſo high at laſt, that they put the people of the ſeveral countries in which they lived, and the whole Roman Empire into a fright. They were hated before, but now they were become terrible, and gave Nero a great deal of concern, otherwiſe he would never have appointed Veſpaſian, the moſt experienc'd and ſucceſsful commander at that time, general in the war, for he had an averſion to his perſon, Antiq. xx. 1. and Wars ii. 18. ſect. 2. And in another place Joſephus ſays expreſly, that the expectations they had of ſome one from their country, who would obtain the empire of the world, was the great inducement to their war againſt the Romans. Then if the Romans were not able to preſerve the Heathen people from all the injuries offered by the Jews, (as it is certain they were not; ſee the Wars ii. 18.) much leſs could they ſecure the Chriſtians, the greateſt object of their envy. And, if the Jews thought themſelves able to contend with, and overturn the Roman Empire; it cannot be ſuppoſed unlikely, that they ſhould attempt to deſtroy a Chriſtian, without asking the Romans leave, when they would not do it for them. Therefore,

Theſe diſcouragements and ſufferings the firſt Chriſtians (as Chriſt here foretels) met with, and underwent whippings in the ſynagogues, excommunications from the ordinary places of God's worſhip, beatings in public markets, tumults, ſome (Acts xiv. 19.) that endangered, others, (vii. 54-60.) that coſt them their lives, during the reign of Herod Agrippa, impriſonment and death; in the reſt of this period, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, from the time of Chriſt's miniſtry, troubleſome proſecutions, before the heathen governours in Judea, and other parts, the ſevereſt reproaches, and dangerous conſpiracies and lyings in wait of the Jews in all parts; among the heathen the ſcorn and ridicule of the great and witty, inſults of the common people, and abuſes of inferior magiſtrates; laſtly, perils from falſe brethren. Yet,

It may be, I think, reaſonably ſuppoſed, that the ſufferings of the followers of Jeſus (in the ſpace of time we are now deſcribing) were not equal with thoſe, which they were afterwards expoſed to, when the Roman emperors treated them as public enemies, authorized their officers every where to puniſh them, and countenanced the common people in thoſe illegal abuſes and outrages they were diſpoſed to of themſelves; much leſs did they equal the torments, which good men have undergone, ſince men of the moſt exquiſite malice and ſubtilty, in ſeveral ages, have improved perſecution into a ſcience, and devoted themſelves to this work as their ſolemn buſineſs and profeſſion, till at length they have completed this worſt of all inventions, and with a dexterity truly diabolical, have at once increaſed the fatigue of the ſufferer, and abated the horror and compaſſion of all heedleſs and inconſiderable ſpectators.

Ver. 13.—He that ſhall endure unto the end.] Of theſe ſufferings and perſecutions, without denying Chriſt, but ſhall rather undergo every thing than depart a tittle from his commands.

Ver. 14—The abomination of deſolation.] i. e. The Roman armies encompaſſing Jeruſalem, ſee Luke xxi. 20. they are called the abomination for the ſame reaſon as the idols were ſo called in 1 Kings xi. 5. becauſe theſe armies carried the eagles and images of their gods in their enſigns; ſee Tertul. apolog. ch. xvi. and Chriſt adds the word deſolation, to ſhew that the deſolation of the city of Jeruſalem was then near. This word is uſed in three places in Daniel, ix. 27. xi. 31. xii. 11.

— Spoken of by Daniel the Prophet.] Theſe words may be underſtood to be a prophecy of Daniel concerning this identical abomination deſcribed in the laſt note; or it may be interpreted as in other parts we have ſhewn in the ſame manner as theſe words, "Then was fulfilled the prophecy ſpoken," Matt. ii. 17. or, "That it might be fufilled which was ſpoken by the Prophet;" ver. 15. or, "Thus it is written by the Prophet;" ver. 5. namely, That this deſolation and abomination ſhould reſemble that ſpoken of by the Prophet Daniel. Now if we underſtand our Saviour to ſpeak here by reference to ix. 27. of Daniel, he muſt be underſtood to ſpeak of the actual accompliſhment of that Prophecy, becauſe in that text the Prophet particularizes the ruin or deſolation of Jeruſalem, on account of their rejecting the Meſſiah; but if it be ſuppoſed that Chriſt only introduces this paſſage concerning the abomination of Daniel, by way of example, then this text is no more than an alluſion, which is not very probable; for I think that all circumſtances prove the contrary; ſo we read it in Le Clerc on Matt. xxiv.

——— Where it ought not.] i. e. In the Holy Place of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 15 which was the houſe of the living God, and not built for idols.

—— Then.] When ye ſhall hear of Wars, &c. as above of ver. 7. &c. for this particle refers to all the preceding verſes from ver. 7.

——— Let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains.] Theſe words with the following Scripture to ver. 17. import no more than an admonition for them to avoid with all expedition, and even to neglect what is neceſſary for life, to eſcape ſo horrible and ſudden an evil, as this is foretold to be.

Ver. 15. — Houſe-top.] The Jews and eaſtern people were accuſtomed to build their houſes flat at the top, for the conveniency of walking and ſupping thereon. So when here we read that they who are on the houſe-top muſt not go down, it is to be underſtood, that wherever they are, and ſee this deſolation coming, they muſt lay aſide all formality and conveniency, and flee to the place of ſafeto with all expedition.

Ver. 17. But wo to them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days.] This text has received many and divers interpretations. Origen thinks that it was ſpoken on account of the cruelty of the Roman ſoldiers, who are herein foretold to be ſo barbarous or ſavage, neither to ſpare women with child, nor ſucking babes; the like of which we read in 2 Kings viii. 12. compared with xv. 16. and Amos i. 13. Theophylact underſtands it more particularly to be a phophecy of that terrible and inhuman practice of women eating their own children in the ſiege of Jeruſalem; ſee Joſephus's Wars, lib xvii. c. 8. But Hillary, Chryſoſtom, our countryman Bede, &c. interpret it thus: "Wo to them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck," becauſe they being loaded with the incumbrance of their babes can't fly from the danger ſo faſt as others; ſee Maldonate on Matt. xxiv. 19.

Ver. 19. —— Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.] Matthew adds, nor on the ſabbath-day, xxiv. 20. Becauſe theſe times are very improper to flee away in: for, in the winter the days are ſhort, the element rainy, and the roads dirty. And the law forbade any one to travel above a mile on the ſabbath-day.

Ver. 21. — Lo here is Chriſt.] i. e. The Meſſiah, whom the Jewiſh nation expected to deliver them from being tributary and ſubject to the Romans.

Ver. 22. For falſe chriſts, and falſe prophets ſhall riſe.] Of whom ſee Joſephus, Jewiſh Wars, Book vii. And here let it be obſerved, that this was a very proper and well adapted admonition of our Saviour, both as to time and ſubſtance; for, the Jewiſh nation about this time, had very general expectations of the coming of a Meſſiah; and they had formed of him, an idea of a powerful and victorious temporal prince. This was the great ſtumbling-block to which the Jews at the ſight of a poor Meſſiah, as Jeſus appeared to be, and the rock of offence, on which his own diſciples had often like to have ſplit. Therefore, as a particular relation of this prejudice, will very much ſerve for the better underſtanding of the context. Let it be obſerved, Firſt, That the Jews had very general expectations of the Meſſiah; ſee John i. 19—24. Luke iii. 15. ii. 25, 26. John iv. 25.

Secondly, That not only the obſtinate Jews, but the diſciples of Jeſus expected ſuch a Meſſiah, as ſhould be a powerful temporal prince; ſee Luke ix. 46. Matt. xx. 21. —— The common people, whenever they had formed a great idea of Jeſus, from what he ſaid or performed, continually betrayed expectations of his aſſuming ſome external marks of royalty, and very forwardly offer him their ſervice; ſee John vi. 14, 15. This was the intentions of thoſe acclamations which they made, and of that ſolemn ſtate, with which they attended him at laſt in Jeruſalem; the circumſtances of which are related by all the four Evangeliſts; ſee Matt. xxi. 8, 9. and John xii. 13. This is farther evident from the many impoſtors, which aroſe about this time in Judea; all which, according to Joſephus, gained many followers. For, he ſays, "That which principally encouraged them to the war, was an ambitious oracle, found likewiſe in the Sacred Writings, that about that time, ſome one from their country, ſhould obtain the empire of the world. This they underſtood to belong to themſelves. And many of the wiſe-men were miſtaken in their judgment of it. For the oracle intended Veſpaſian's government, who was proclaimed emperor in Judea." Wars, book vi. c. 5. — The ſame thing is mentioned by Suetonius, in his life of Veſpaſian, and Tacitus, hiſt. v. 13. two Heathen hiſtorians, to which may be added the words of Celſus, cited by Origen, (Contr. Celſ. lib. i. p. 61. ed. Cant. 4to. and lib. ii. p. 78. and Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. c. ii. towards the end.

—— And ſhall ſhew ſigns and wonders.] See our Diſſertation on miracles, after the eighth chapter of Matthew.

—— If it were poſſible.] This is an abſolute negative, and imports the ſame, as if Chriſt had ſaid, it is impoſſible. But note, that the ſeduction here ſpoken of, is not to be interpreted of the many errors, which all men are daily and hourly falling into, but of the final treſpaſs and tranſgreſſion, in which it can't be ſuppoſed that the elect can die; for ſuch a ſuppoſition would infallibly deſtroy the very notion of the elect, who tho' they ſin, return to God, and repent of their error before they die.

Ver. 24. — In thoſe days.] Here Chriſt paſſes from his prediction and ſigns of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the Jewiſh nation, to the final ſubverſion of the world; for, the ſaid deſtruction of Jeruſalem was, as it were, a kind of type and repreſentation of the deſolation and end of the world.

— After that tribulation.] Of the Jews, in the total overthrow of their government, nation, city and temple.

— The ſun ſhall be darkned.] As it was in the day and hour of his, our Saviour's crucifixion, when he yielded up the ghoſt.

Ver. 25. — The ſtars of Heaven ſhall fall.] i. e. Their light ſhall depart, and they ſhall be no more ſeen, becauſe the ſun from whence they had their brightneſs, is darkned.

—— And the powers that are in Heaven ſhall be ſhaken.] Theſe powers, according to the beſt ancient Commentators, are the Angels in Heaven, who ſhall wonder and tremble with fear, at what they ſee coming to paſs.

Ver. 26. And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man, &c.] Or, as Matthew has it, the ſign of the Son of man, which ſign is particularized by Mark in this place; viz. his power [of life and death eternal] and glorious appearance in the clouds, ſurrounded by his Holy Angels; of which ſign Chriſt had told his diſciples before; ſee alſo Acts i. 9, 11. And this manner of his coming demonſtrated his Deity; Pſ. l. 3. and civ. 3.

Ver. 27. — Then ſhall he ſend his Angels.] When he is ſeated on the clouds of Heaven, inveſted with power, and environed with glory, he will give further proof of his Divinity, by ſending forth his Angels, which is an act proper to God alone, Pſ. civ. 4.

Ver. 28. Learn a parable.] Hearken to this compariſon or alluſion.

Ver. 30.—This generation ſhall not paſs.] Never was there a text of more various interpretation than this; and yet in my opinion leſs, generally, clearly expounded, tho' the truth of the whole context depends on the certainty thereof; for could the adverſary prove, that the time (which is the ſign required by the diſciples above, at ver. 4.) fixed for the accompliſhment of his prediction, is to be diſproved, or that all thoſe things, which he told them ſhould come to paſs within the compaſs of ſuch a period, were not fulfilled 'till long after the expiration of that time, they muſt gain their point. Therefore obſerve, Did this text import, as ſome have inadverdently granted, that we are to underſtand by theſe words, That all, who were then living, ſhould not be dead before they had ſeen thoſe things in the context. Or, there are ſome at this day living, who ſhall be witneſſes of the evils, which are foretold by me; but theſe interpreters certainly neglect the context, and forget that Chriſt is not here talking of the deſtruction or deſolation, particularly deſcribed in the former part of this chapter, with its particular ſigns to ver. 23. where he concludes that account with theſe remarkable words: "Take ye heed, behold I have foretold you all things;" And then paſſes from that to a more terrible deſolation, even ſuch a one as ſhall concern, not the Jews only, but all mankind, which he introduces very diſtinctly, ſaying, But in thoſe days after that tribulation; ver. 24. deſcribed before: So that it is plain that the words in the text, This generation ſhall not paſs, cannot denote the time for the accompliſhment of thoſe things which were to precede the deſtruction of the temple, &c. And therefore Chryſoſtom, Theophylact, Euthymius, &c. underſtood this generation to be the generation of the faithful, even the Church of Chriſt, which ſhould endure, nothwithſtanding all adverſities and perſecutions, to the end of the world, and that the gates of hell ſhould not prevail againſt it. But Hierom comes nearer the truth, and by this generation underſtands the race of all mankind, as if it were ſaid, all theſe things you have heard me ſpeak of, ſhall come to paſs before the deſtruction of. all mankind, Yet, ſays the ſagacious Maldonate, with whom I muſt in reaſon agree, in this place the word generation ſtands for the whole frame of nature, ſo that the ſenſe of the text will be, "This world ſhall not paſs, till all thoſe things which Chriſt had foretold ſhould be accompliſhed," as may be evidently collected from the words of the next verſe, Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, i. e. This generation or this creation of the Heaven and of the Earth ſhall paſs away or periſh, but my words, which have declared ſo many wonderful future events, ſhall not paſs away, they ſhall certainly be fulfilled in their due ſeaſon; they will not deceive you.

Ver 32. Of that day] Of Judgment; See ver. 27.

——— Neither the Son, but the Father.] Chriſt a little before his aſcention explains this difficulty, when he was asked by his diſciples, "ſaying, Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael. And he ſaid unto them, it is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, which the father hath put in his own power, Acts i. 6, 7. Therefore, when the Arian endeavours to ſhew from this text the inferiority of the Son to the Father, let it be anſwered, that it does not deſcribe a ſubjection of perſons, or an inferiority of the Son to the Father in degree and perſonality, but only ſhews that the offices of the Father and of the Son are diſtinct, which proves for the Chriſtian Faith, a diſtinction of perſons in the unity of the God-head.

CHAP. XIV.

1 A conſpiracy againſt Chriſt. 3 Precious ointment is poured on his head by a woman. 10 Judas ſelleth his maſter for money. 12 Chriſt himſelf foretelleth how he ſhall be betrayed of one of his diſciples: 22 after the paſſover prepared, and eaten, inſtituteth his ſupper: 26 declareth aforehand the flight of all his diſciples, and Peter's denial. 43 Judas betrayeth him with a kiſs: 46 He is apprehended in the garden, 53 Falſly accuſed, and impiouſly condemned of the Jews council: 65 ſhamefully abuſed by them: 66 and thrice denied of Peter.

AFter two days, was the feaſt of the paſſover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes ſought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2 But they ſaid, Not on the feaſt-day, leſt there be an uprore of the people.

3 ¶ And being in Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the leper, as he ſat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaſter-box of ointment of ſpikenard, very precious; and ſhe brake the box, and poured it on his head.

4 And there were ſome that had indignation within themſelves, and ſaid, Why was this waſte of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been ſold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured againſt her.

6 And Jeſus ſaid, Let her alone, why trouble ye her? ſhe hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For ye have the poor with you always, and whenſoever ye will, ye may do them good: but me ye have not always.

8 She hath done what ſhe could: ſhe is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I ſay unto you, Whereſoever this goſpel ſhall be preached throughout the whole world, this alſo that ſhe hath done, ſhall be ſpoken of, for a memorial of her.

10 ¶ And Judas Iſcariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief prieſts, to betray him unto them.

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promiſed to give him money. And he ſought how he might conveniently betray him.

12 ¶ And the firſt day of unleavened bread, when they killed the paſſover, his diſciples ſaid unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayeſt eat the paſſover?

13 And he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples, and ſaith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there ſhall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14 And whereſoever he ſhall go in, ſay ye to the good-man of the houſe, The Maſter ſaith, Where is the gueſt-chamber, where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples?

15 And he will ſhew you a large upper-room furniſhed and prepared: there make ready for us.

16 And his diſciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had ſaid unto them: and they made ready the paſſover.

17 And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 And as they ſat, and did eat, Jeſus ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, One of you, which eateth with me, ſhall betray me.

19 And they began to be ſorrowful, and to ſay unto him one by one, Is it I? and another ſaid, Is it I?

20 And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the diſh.

21 The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but wo to that man by whom the ſon of man is betrayed: good were it for that man if he had never been born.

22 ¶ And as they did eat, Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed, and brake it, and gave to them, and ſaid, Take, eat: this is my body.

23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24 And he ſaid unto them, This is my blood of the new teſtament, which is ſhed for many.

25 Verily I ſay unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

26 ¶ And when they had ſung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

27 And Jeſus ſaith unto them, All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night: for it is written, I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered.

28 But after that I am riſen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29 But Peter ſaid unto him, Although all ſhall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jeſus ſaith unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice.

31 But he ſpake the more vehemently, If I ſhould die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wiſe. Likewiſe alſo ſaid they all.

32 And they came to a place which was named Gethſemane: and he ſaith to his diſciples, Sit ye here, while I ſhall pray.

33 And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be ſore amazed, and to be very heavy,

34 And ſaith unto them, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.

35 And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed, that if it were poſſible the hour might paſs from him.

36 And he ſaid, Abba, Father, all things are poſſible unto thee, take away this cup from me: nevertheleſs, not what I will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them ſleeping, and ſaith unto Peter, Simon, ſleepeſt thou? couldſt not thou watch one hour?

38 Watch ye and pray, leſt ye enter into temptation: the ſpirit truly is ready, but the fleſh is weak.

39 And again he went away, and prayed, and ſpake the ſame words.

40 And when he returned, he found them aſleep again (for their eyes were heavy) neither wiſt they what to anſwer him.

41 And he cometh the third time, and ſaith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your reſt: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners.

42 Riſe up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

43 ¶ And immediately, while he yet ſpake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude, with ſwords and ſtaves, from the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes, and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him, had given them a token, ſaying, Whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, that ſame is he; take him, and lead him away ſafely.

45 And aſſoon as he was come, he goeth ſtraightway to him, and ſaith, Maſter, maſter; and kiſſed him.

46 ¶ And they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that ſtood by drew a ſword, and ſmote a ſervant of the high-prieſt, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Are ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and with ſtaves to take me?

49 I was daily with you in the temple, teaching, but ye took me not: but the ſcriptures muſt be fulfilled.

50 And they all forſook him, and fled.

51 And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth caſt about his naked body; and the young man laid hold on him.

52 And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

53 ¶ And they led Jeſus away to the high-prieſt: and with him were aſſembled all the chief prieſts, and the elders, and the ſcribes.

54 And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high-prieſt: and he ſat with the ſervants, and warmed himſelf at the fire.

55 And the chief prieſts, and all the council ſought for witneſs againſt Jeſus to put him to death; and found none.

56 For many bear falſe witneſs againſt him, but their witneſs agreed not together.

57 And there aroſe certain, and bare falſe witneſs againſt him, ſaying,

58 We heard him ſay, I will deſtroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

59 But neither ſo did their witneſs agree together.

60 And the high-prieſt ſtood up in the mids, and asked Jeſus, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou nothing? what is it which theſe witneſs againſt thee?

61 But he held his peace, and anſwered nothing. Again the high-prieſt asked him, and ſaid unto him, Art thou the Chriſt, the Son of the Bleſſed?

62 And Jeſus ſaid, I am: and ye ſhall ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high-prieſt rent his clothes, and ſaith, What need we any further witneſſes?

64 Ye have heard the blaſphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And ſome began to ſpit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to ſay unto him, Prophecy: and the ſervants did ſtrike him with the palms of their hands.

66 ¶ And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high-prieſt.

67 And when ſhe ſaw Peter warming himſelf, ſhe looked upon him, and ſaid, And thou alſo waſt with Jeſus of Nazareth.

68 But he denied, ſaying, I know not, neither underſtand I what thou ſayeſt. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69 And a maid ſaw him again, and began to ſay to them that ſtood by, This is one of them.

70 And he denied it again. And a little after, they that ſtood by ſaid again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy ſpeech agreeth thereto.

71 But he began to curſe and to ſwear, ſaying, I know not this man of whom ye ſpeak.

72 And the ſecond time the cock crew, And Peter called to mind the word that Jeſus ſaid unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.

CHAP. XV.

1 Jeſus brought bound and accuſed before Pilate. 15 Upon the clamour of the common people, the murderer Barabbas is looſed, and Jeſus delivered up to be crucified: 17 He is crowned with thorns, 19 ſpit on, and mocked: 21 fainteth in bearing his croſs: 27 hangeth between two thieves: 29 ſuffereth the triumphing reproaches of the Jews: 39 but confeſſed by the centurion to be the Son of God: 43 and is honourably buried by Joſeph.

AND ſtraightway in the morning the chief prieſts held a conſultation with the elders and ſcribes, and the whole council, and bound Jeſus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate.

2 And Pilate asked him, Art thou the king of the Jews? And he anſwering, ſaid unto him, Thou ſayeſt it.

3 And the chief prieſts accuſed him of many things: but he anſwered nothing.

4 And Pilate asked him again, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou nothing? behold, how many things they witneſs againſt thee.

5 But Jeſus yet anſwered nothing; ſo that Pilate marvelled.

6 Now at that feaſt he releaſed unto them one priſoner whomſoever they deſired.

7 And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made inſurrection with him, who had committed murder in the inſurrection.

8 And the multitude crying aloud, began to deſire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

9 But Pilate anſwered them, ſaying, Will ye that I releaſe unto you the king of the Jews?

10 (For he knew that the chief prieſts had delivered him for envy)

11 But the chief prieſts moved the people, that he ſhould rather releaſe Barabbas unto them.

12 And Pilate anſwered and ſaid again, unto them, What will ye then that I ſhall do unto him whom ye call the king of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14 Then Pilate ſaid unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

15 ¶ And ſo Pilate willing to content the people, releaſed Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jeſus, when he had ſcourged him, to be crucified.

16 And the ſoldiers led him away into the hall, called Pretorium; and they call together the whole band.

17 And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head,

18 And began to ſalute him, Hail, king of the Jews.

19 And they ſmote him on the head with a reed, and did ſpit upon him, and bowing their knees, worſhipped him.

20 And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him.

21 And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who paſſed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his croſs.

22 And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, the place of a ſcull.

23 And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not.

24 And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, caſting lots upon them, what every man ſhould take.

25 And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.

26 And the ſuperſcription of his accuſation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27 And with him they crucify two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left.

28 And the ſcripture was fulfilled, which ſaith, And he was numbred with the tranſgreſſors.

29 And they that paſſed by, railed on him, wagging their heads, and ſaying, Ah, thou that deſtroyeſt the temple, and buildeſt it in three days,

30 Save thy ſelf, and come down from the croſs.

31 Likewiſe alſo the chief prieſts mocking, ſaid among themſelves with the ſcribes, He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave.

32 Let Chriſt the king of Iſrael deſcend now from the croſs, that we may ſee and believe. And they that were crucified with him, reviled him.

33 And when the ſixth hour was come, there was darkneſs over the whole land until the ninth hour.

34 And at the ninth hour Jeſus cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Eloi, Eloi, lama ſabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?

35 And ſome of them that ſtood by, when they heard it, ſaid, Behold, he calleth Elias.

36 And one ran and filled a ſpunge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, ſaying, Let alone; let us ſee whether Elias will come to take him down.

37 And Jeſus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghoſt.

38 And the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom.

39 ¶ And when the centurion which ſtood over againſt him, ſaw that he ſo cried out, and gave up the ghoſt, he ſaid, Truly this man was the Son of God.

40 There were alſo women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the leſs, and of Joſes, and Salome;

41 Who alſo when he was in Galilee, followed him, and miniſtred unto him; and many other women which came up with him unto Jeruſalem.

42 ¶ And now when the even was come, (becauſe it was the preparation, that is, the day before the ſabbath)

43 Joſeph of Arimathea, an honourable counſellor, which alſo waited for the kingdom of God, came and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jeſus.

44 And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

45 And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joſeph.

46 And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a ſepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a ſtone unto the door of the ſepulchre.

47 And Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of Joſes, beheld where he was laid.

CHAP. xiv, xv. See the notes following the xxvi. and xxvii. chapters of Matthew.

CHAP. xiv. VER. 3.——There came a woman having an alabaſter-box full of ointment of ſpikenard, very precious.] Now Matthew in xxvi. 7. ſays, only a box of very precious ointment, and therefore Mark ſpecifies the kind of the ointment, that from thence we may the better learn the reaſon of its being worth more than three hundred pence; ver. 5. for nard was the deareſt of all ointments, when it could be had unadulterated and faithfully prepared, as the compound word ſpikenard ſignifies; ſo Hierom on Matt. xxvi.

——— And ſhe brake the box.] Here is a palpable miſtake in the tranſlation, merely through inadvertency. Pray, what reaſon was there for breaking the box, or ala- baſter pot on ſuch an occaſion? Beſides, it could not be eaſily done, without, at leaſt, the loſs of the ointment. Therefore let us ſee what the original ſays: Συντρίψασα is the word commonly tranſlated, ſhe brake; and it may properly be ſo rendered in a ſuitable phraſe of ſpeech; but as it alſo ſignifies to ſhake (ſee συντρίβω in the old gloſſary, and Dr. Hammond on the place) ſhould it not be ſo rendered in this place, ſhe ſhoke the box, to liquify the ointment, and make it fitter to be poured out upon his head? Certain in this place, to ſhake, has a more rational meaning than to brake, and as the original will allow it, it ought to be ſo tranſlated.

Ver. 25. Henceforth I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, till the day that I ſhall drink it new in the kingdom of God.] Here let us obſerve againſt the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation, Chriſt, after conſecration calls the cup, or wine, the fruit of the vine. Therefore, he declares that the wine which he gave his Apoſtles to drink, was not ſubſtantially changed into his blood. — Till I drink it new with you in the kingdom of God. Or, as Luke varies the expreſſion, 'till the kingdom of God come, ch. xxii. 18. or until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God; which ſeems to amount to no more than, till I am riſen from the dead; for as Dr. Whitby obſerves, the kingdom of God here, and the kingdom of the Father in Matthew, being certainly the ſame, or ſignifying the kingdom, or the power given to Chriſt, for the exerciſe of his kingly office, being given to him of his Father, when one of theſe is come, the other muſt be come alſo. Now, Chriſt calling the Jews to repentance, becauſe "the kingdom of God was near," Mark i. 15. upbraiding the ſcribes and Phariſees, becauſe they ſuffered publicans to enter into the kingdom of God before them, Matt. xxi. 31. and threatning that the kingdom of God ſhould be taken from them, and given to other nations; ib. 43. The Jews expectations of the ſudden appearance of the kingdom of God, Luke xvii. 20. and xix. 11. compared together; and ſpeaking of eating bread with him in it, Luke xiv. 15. and wiſhing proſperity to it, as then coming, Mark xi. 10. Chriſt having told them that the kingdom of God was near, Luke xi. 2, 20. compared with Matt. xii. 28. xvi. 28. xiii. 19. Mark i. 14. iv. 11, 30. xix. 1. Luke iv. 43. viii. 1. ix. 2, 11, 60, 27. xiii. 18, 20. xvii. 21. xvi. 16. Chriſt alſo after his reſurrection, ſpeaking to his Apoſtles of the things relating to the kingdom of God, Acts. i. 3. and they preaching to others the things belonging to the kingdom of God, Acts viii. 12. xix. 8. xx. 25. xxviii. 23, 31. exhorting their hearers to enter into the kingdom of God, Acts xiv. 22. and telling believers, how they were tranſlated into the kingdom of God, Coloſſ. i. 13. plainly evinceth that this kingdom of God in the text before us, cannot mean Heaven, or the happineſs then and there to be enjoyed, but rather the Goſpel-ſtate, and the kingdom of Chriſt erected at his reſurrection. — To drink this wine new, is by Luke's own interpretation, to do it when it was fulfilled in the kingdom of God, that is to ſay, when Chriſt our paſſover, was ſacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7. and when that blood of the new covenant, repreſented by the wine, was actually ſhed, and a new feaſt was inſtituted in commemoration thereof. And if it be enquired, when Chriſt did thus drink this wine with his diſciples? It is anſwered, that he did not do it ſo much by eating and drinking with his diſciples, after he aroſe from the dead, Acts x. 41. for that action could not allude to either the paſchal or ſacramental cup; as in that inſtitution which he has left to us by the name of his ſupper, where he drinks with all believers, even as he promiſed, ſaying, "I diſpoſe to you a kingdom, as my Father hath done to me, and ye ſhall eat and drink with me at my table in my kingdom," Luke xxii. 29, 30. where note, that in what ſenſe ſoever Chriſt's diſciples are here ſaid to drink with him at his table, he alſo muſt be ſaid to drink with them. See the diſſertation of tranſubſtantiation, and the real preſence in the notes on John vi.

Ver. 26. And when they had ſung an hymn.] i. e. Pſalm cxiii. to the end of Pſalm cxviii. as was cuſtomary to be ſung by the Jews at their paſſover, in which, as the Jews obſerve, according to Dr. Lightfoot, are mentioned the ſorrows of the Meſſiah, and the reſurrection of the dead.

CHAP. XV. VER. 1. ——— And delivered him to Pilate.] Who was an heathen, and a Roman governour, on which Theophylact makes this juſt obſervation, The Jews delivered our Lord up to the Romans, and they, for that ſin, were themſelves given up into the hands of the Romans, as inſtruments of God's wrath and juſtice.

Ver. 33. There was darkneſs over the whole earth.] Of this wonderful event Euſebius writes in this manner, at the eighteenth year of Tiberius. Chriſt ſuffer'd this year, in which time we find in other commentaries of the heathens theſe words, there was a defection of the ſun. Bithynia was ſhaken with an earthquake, which overthrew many houſes in the city of Nice, and this he ſupports by the authority of Phlegon the heathen, in the 14th book of his chronicle. and 18 Tiber. And Tertullian vouches that this prodigious darkning of the ſun was recorded in the Archives, or publick records at Rome. See Tertull. Apol. c. 21.

Ver. 43. ——— An honourble counſellour.] One of the council of the high prieſts; ſee Dr. Whitby on the place.

What further notes are neceſſary on the ſufferings of Chriſt, ſee Luke xxii. &c. where they ſhall be particularly conſidered; ſee alſo before the notes on Matt. xxvi, xxvii.

CHAP. XVI.

1 An angel declareth the reſurrection of Chriſt to three women. 9 Chriſt himſelf appeareth to Mary Magdalene: 12 to two going into the country: 14 then to the Apoſtles, 15 whom he ſendeth forth to preach the Goſpel: 19 and aſcendeth into heaven.

AND when the ſabbath was paſt, Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought ſweet ſpices, that they might come and anoint him.

2 And very early in the morning, the firſt day of the week, they came unto the ſepulchre at the riſing of the ſun.

3 And they ſaid among themſelves, Who ſhall roll us away the ſtone from the door of the ſepulchre?

4 (And when they looked, they ſaw that the ſtone was rolled away) for it was very great.

5 And entring into the ſepulchre, they ſaw a young man ſitting on the right ſide, clothed in a white long garment; and they were affrighted.

6 And he ſaith unto them, Be not affrighted: ye ſeek Jeſus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is riſen, he is not here: behold the place where they laid him.

7 But go your ways, tell his diſciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee: there ſhall ye ſee him, as he ſaid unto you.

8 And they went out quickly, and fled from the ſepulchre; for they trembled, and were amazed: neither ſaid they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.

9 ¶ Now when Jeſus was riſen early, the firſt day of the week, he appeared firſt to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had caſt ſeven devils.

10 And ſhe we went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept.

11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been ſeen of her, believed not.

12 ¶ After that, he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

13 And they went and told it unto the reſidue: neither believed they them.

14 ¶ Afterward he appeared unto the eleven, as they ſat at meat and upbraided them with their unbelief, and hardneſs of heart, becauſe they believed not them which had ſeen him after he was riſen.

15 And he ſaid unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the goſpel to every creature.

16 He that believeth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.

17 And theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe; In my name ſhall they caſt out devils, they ſhall ſpeak with new tongues,

18 They ſhall take up ſerpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it ſhall not hurt them; they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover.

19 ¶ So then after the Lord had ſpoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and ſat on the right hand of God.

20 And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with ſigns following. Amen.

Ver. 7. ——— Say to his diſciples and Peter.] Where Peter is not named by way of precedency or as prince of the Apoſtles; but as the antient fathers ſay, for his conſolation to take of the ſcruple, which might lie on his ſpirits; whether after his three-fold denial of his maſter, he had not forfeited his right to be one of Chriſt's diſciples.

Ver. 13. — Nor believed they them.] For joy, ſays Luke xxiv. 17. Hence one of the ancients ſay well, Their doubt is the confirmation of our faith; for the more they were backward from believing the reſurrection of Chriſt, we have the greater reaſon to believe it; for the teſtimony of them that believed not themſelves, till after unqueſtionable conviction, is the more credible on that account.

Ver. 14. — He upbraided them for their unbelief and hardneſs of heart, &c.] Becauſe he had given them before his ſufferings ſo many aſſurances of his riſing again the third day; neither would they credit the eye-witneſſes, who had told them, they had ſeen him riſen from the dead, and ſpoken to him.

Ver. 15. —— Preach the Goſpel to every creature.] i. e. The joyful tidings of ſalvation, not to the Jews only, but to all mankind; ſee Luke xxiv. 47. and Rom. viii. 23.

Ver. 16. He that believeth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.] i. e. He that ſhall believe at your preaching, that I am the Meſſiah, and ſhall embrace my covenant by the profeſſion of that faith, and baptiſm, ſhall be put by virtue thereof into a ſtate of ſalvation; ſo that it if he continue in that faith, and do not willfully recede from his baptiſmal covenant, he ſhall certainly be ſaved; ſee the note on Eph. ii. 8. But, before we depart hence, let us obſerve, that this text only regardeth Adults, thoſe that are arrived at the uſe of reaſon to chuſe for themſelves; for faith cometh by hearing, well applied. Nor does it exclude infant-baptiſm, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in its proper place.

Ver. 17. And theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe, &c.] Of the caſting out of Devils, the healing diſeaſes, the ſpeaking with new tongues, ſee the general preface to the Epiſtles. Of the drinking of deadly poiſons, I find but four inſtances in hiſtory; that of Barſabas, as Euſebius writes in his hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 39. of the Cæcilian ſoldiers mentioned by Ado in his Martyrology; of Sabinus, biſhop of Canoſo, mentioned by Gregory of Tours, and that of Joſhua Ben-Levi, a Jew, who by pronouncing the name of Jeſus, was preſerved from the effects of poiſon, which he had drank; ſee the Talmud. And Paul, in Scripture, is the only inſtance of one taking up a ſerpent without hurt; Acts xxiii. 3. See the notes on the laſt chapter of Luke.

Critical

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE GOSPEL,

ACCORDING TO

St. LUKE.

The INTRODUCTION.

Luke the Evangeliſt is by ſome ancient Authors called Lucas, Lucius, or Lucanus. They who believe him to be called Lucius in the Epiſtle to the Romans, ch. xvi. 21. muſt alſo acknowledge, that he was Paul's kinſman; which wants ſufficient proof. This we venture to ſay, that he was a native of Antioch, the metropolis of Syria, as we read in Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. c. 4. and in Hierom's Treatiſe of illuſtrious men.

He was by profeſſion a Phyſician, as Paul certifies in his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, ch. iv. ver. 14. where it is written, Luke the Phyſician ſalutes you. But Nicephorus, and the modern Greeks, make him a Painter; and the Church of Rome taking advantage of this invention, which none of the Ancients thought of, or mention, proſtitute this notion to ſerve their own pious frauds, and conſequently have trumpt up, and expoſed to publick view and worſhip, for gain, many images and pictures of the Virgin Mary, and of her Son Jeſus, pretended to be the workmanſhip of Luke the Evangeliſt; "but thoſe, ſays the Romiſh Author, Ellis du Pin, in his Canon of the N. T. p. 44. fol. are fictions, that have nothing of truth or likelihood." Yet, ſays another French Author, Calmet the Jeſuit, "if he did not paint the Virgin's, and her Son's faces, he has left us many particulars concerning the Bleſſed Virgin, and the infancy of Jeſus Chriſt, from which we may judge, that he had ſeen, and was acquainted with this admirable perſon, and that he had even a ſhare in her confidence; ſee alſo Grotius on Luke ii. 51.

He was not our Lord's diſciple, nor one of the ſeventy-two, as ſome of the ancients believed. This plainly appears from the beginning of his Goſpel, where he does not ſay, that he wrote what he had ſeen, but that which he had learned from others. So Irenæus contents himſelf to bring his teſtimony, as that of a man, who had learned from the Apoſtles what he wrote, without inſiſting, that he was an eye-witneſs to the truths of the facts related by him; and Tertullian aſſures us of it as a certain thing, That he was not Chriſt's diſciple, but that he learned from the Apoſtles, and particularly from Paul the Apoſtle, what he had wrote; ſee Tertul. contra Marcion. c. 2. Euſebius adds, that he wrote his Goſpel upon the evidence and relation of others, and the acts upon his own knowledge, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. c. 4. Hierom aſſures us of the ſame thing in his Treatiſe of illuſtrious men, and in his Preface on Matthew the Evangeliſt; to whom might be added, the concurring opinions of Ambroſe, in his beginning of his Commentary upon Luke, Auſtin in his book, de Conſenſu Evang. lib. i. c. 1. and Theodoret in his Preface to the lives of the Fathers; which Authorities, ought to be preferred to thoſe of the Author of the Dialogue aſcribed to Origen, againſt Marcion; to that of Epiphanius, who only quoted it from that Author; and to thoſe of ſome modern Authors, who peremptorily aſſert gratis, that Luke was one of the ſeventy-two diſciples of our Lord. Beſides, had he been one of this number, he muſt conſequently have been a Jew; but this is improbable, not to ſay contradictory, to the Apoſtle Paul; for firſt, it ſhould be noted, that our Saviour choſe no diſciples among the Jews: And ſecondly, Paul in his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, having named Ariſtarchus, Mark and Jeſus, called Juſtus; ſays, that they were of the Circumciſion, or Jews by religion and extraction; then immediately he ſubjoins Epaphras, Demas, and Luke, as it were to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe that were circumciſed. This is the opinion of Chryſoſtom, and Hierom in his queſtions on Geneſis, calls Luke a proſelyte; therefore, he was not a Jew, by birth or extraction, which he muſt have been to be admitted one of Chriſt's ſeventy-two diſciples, but he was a Gentile and uncircumiſed. Tho' Epiphanius, as hinted above, thinks that he was one of thoſe who left Jeſus Chriſt, when he ſaid, He that eateth not my fleſh, and drinketh not my blood, is not worthy of me, and was reconciled again to the Faith, by Paul preaching at Antioch. Moreover, Gregory the Great, (lib. i. moral. c. 1.) and ſome others quoted by Theophylact believe, that Luke was Cleophas's companion at the time that Jeſus is ſaid to join himſelf to two of his diſciples in their way to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 15. But this is no more than pure conjecture againſt almoſt demonſtration to the contrary, as may be collected from what has been ſaid above.

He was Paul's diſciple, accompanying him almoſt in all his travels, and aſſiſted him continually in the miniſtry of the word, as we learn from the hiſtory of the Acts, and the advantageous teſtimonies, which Paul gives of him in his letters; he puts him almoſt amongſt his fellow-labourers in his Epiſtle to Philemon, verſe 24. ſaying, Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, and Lucas, my fellow-labourers; and he calls him, the beloved, in his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians iv. 14. "Luke the beloved Phyſician ſalutes you," and again he declares him, the only perſon that ſtaid with him, 2 Tim. iv. 11. The hiſtory of the Acts informs us, that he followed Paul, when that Apoſtle paſſed from Troas into Macedonia, for this is the firſt time that he ſpoke in the firſt perſon as being Paul's companion, We endeavoured, ſays he, immediately to go into Macedonia; Acts xvi. 11. and if the Cambridge M. S. of Irenæus be genuine, that father in enumerating the journies that Luke made with Paul, places this from Troas firſt: but thoſe who maintain that he was converted by Paul at Antioch, in the year 43, alſo aſſert, that Luke continued with the Apoſtle from that time, which I have ſhewn to be unreaſonable to think.---Having paſſed from Troas into Macedonia, he ſtaid there ſome days with Paul; and then we find no more mention of our Evangeliſt 'till the xxth chapter, where we read that Luke was with Paul again, going into Aſia through Macedonia, when again they parted at Philippi, and Paul returned to Troas. We find him again in the company of Paul going up to Jeruſalem, and afterwards following him carried in bonds from Ceſarea to Rome; nor did he forſake him there, as appears by the Epiſtles to the Coloſſians and Philemon, and 2 of Timothy. It is likewiſe ſuppoſed, that the Apoſtle means this Evangeliſt, when he wrote to the Corinthians, That he had ſent them a brother, whoſe praiſe is in the Goſpel throughout all the Churches, 2 Cor. viii. 18. Yet, though this opinion be ſupported by the concurring teſtimonies of Origen, Euſebius, Hierom and Ambroſe, Chryſoſtom writes that ſome think this anonymous brother to be Luke, and others underſtand it of Barnabas, and thus, being ſometimes for the one, and ſometimes favouring the other opinion, he leaves the matter at an uncertainty. Again, ſome underſtand it of Silas, becauſe of the following words, Who was alſo choſen of the Churches to travel with us, agree to his character and office; and, indeed, I am perſuaded, that this is the true account; for I can't find any other perſon, whoſe character and office does ſo exactly anſwer to that text, and Luke is only aſſumed by way of conjecture formed from the mention of the word Goſpel in that place, which is taken by the aſſertors of this opinion, to be a written Goſpel, which betrays great ignorance or credulity, for the Goſpel of Luke was not then compoſed, and conſequently, theſe words are to be underſtood of the Goſpel preached, and then the ſenſe of the words will lead us right, which I form thus: “That brother [Silas] who has acquired a reputation in all the Churches by the preaching of the Goſpel.”

There is no reaſon to confound him with Lucius, whom alſo Paul mentions in his Epiſtle to the Romans, though Origen in his notes on the ſaid Epiſtle, takes it for granted, that they were the ſame perſon by different names. But he could have no other reaſon, than the likeneſs of the name, even which proves the contrary, for had the name of Lucas been either grecized or latinized, they would rather have augmented, than abridged it, as of Demas comes Demetrius; of Apellas comes Apollodorus; of Epaphras, Epaphroditus; of Cleophas, Cleopatra; of Artemas, Artemidorus; of Antipas, Antipiter; of Harpocras, Harpocrates; and of Rufus, Rufinus, &c. Beſides, this Lucius was Paul's kinſman; and conſequently muſt have been a Jew; ſee Rom. ix. 3. But I believe my reader is convinc'd that Luke was not a Jew: and therefore not the ſame perſon as Lucius.

At the end of a treatiſe of eminent men aſcribed to Hierom, we find that Luke always lived a ſingle life, having had neither wife nor children, and died at the age of 84, or as Iſodore, Bede, &c. 74 years in Achaior Bithynia, of a natural death as Elias of Crete and many moderns believe; but Nazienzen, Paulinus, and Gaudentius ſay, that he ſuffered martyrdom; and the Modern Greeks affirm, that he was crucified upon an olive-tree; after that he had preached the Goſpel in Dalmatia, Gaul, Italy, and Macedonia, according to Epiphanius, and in other countries, as ſome pretend to aſſert; but there is nothing certain in this matter, nor yet of the manner of his death. For, Philoſtorgus, and the addition to the book of illuſtrious men, laſt cited, ſay, that the relicks, or bones of Luke, were brought from Antioch, where he had been interred. But Gaudentius ſays, he died at Petras, a city of Achaia: Nicephorus ſays at Thebes in Greece; and again we find him dead in Bithynia, according to the account given by Iſodore, Bede, Uſard, Ado, and the Roman Martyrology. Gregory Nazienzen reckons Luke among the Martyrs in his third Oration; but Elias of Crete, commenting on that place, maintains, that Gregory gives the names of victims in general to all thoſe, who ſuffered and laboured for Jeſus Chriſt, and that Luke died in peace, as well as the Apoſtle John. Then it is replied, that Paulinus gives him the title of Martyr, (Ep. 3. & Nat. 9.) But that term may be taken in a more general ſenſe; nor is it clear that he applies this firſt paſſage to Luke.

As for the motive, which induced Luke to undertake the writing of this Goſpel, he gives us an account thereof, and of his Deſign therein, at the very entrance of the book; ſaying, That whereas many having undertaken before him to write the hiſtory of Jeſus Chriſt and of his preaching, he believed that after having been exactly informed of all thoſe things from the beginning by thoſe, who had been eye-witneſſes of it, and miniſters of the word themſelves, he ought alſo to put in writing what he knew, to the end that Theophilus, his potent friend at Antioch, to whom he directs the work, and all the Greeks, or converted Gentiles, for whom particularly he exemplified his Goſpel, might know the truth of what he had preached, and teach it to the ſucceeding generations. And, as he was a diſciple, and almoſt an inſeparable companion to the Apoſtle Paul, who can doubt of his aſſiſtance in ſuch a great and uſeful work, and that Luke wrote by his knowledge and inſtructions. This was ſo generally believed by the Ancients, that Irenæus ſays poſitively, “that Luke wrote the Goſpel which Paul preached,” lib. 3. c. 1. Tertullian obſerves, “that ſome aſcribed this Goſpel to Paul, as its author, becauſe, it is reaſonable to aſcribe to the Maſter the works publiſhed by the diſciple;” lib. 4. Cont. Marcion. c. 5. Gregory Nazienzen ſays only, “that he wrote it upon the confidence he had in his Maſter.” And the author of the Synopſis believes, that Paul dictated this Goſpel to him. Others have fancied they could prove this to be the work of Paul from that paſſage in Rom. ii. 16. where the Apoſtle makes uſe of theſe terms, according to my Goſpel, i. e. the doctrine which I preach, which thoſe critics falſly underſtand of a written Goſpel, though none was yet written.

As for the place where it was compoſed, Hierom ſays, it was written by Luke in Achaia, or Bœtia, and Chryſoſtom ſeems to grant the ſame thing, when he ſays, that Luke compoſed his Goſpel for the Chriſtians of Achaia. And this opinion is very probable, ſuppoſing, that this Goſpel was written at Corinth, about the year 53, and this is the more likely, becauſe it is certain, that the Goſpel preceded the Book of Acts, which Hiſtory was penned in the ſecond year after Paul's arrival at Rome, i. e. An. 63, as may reaſonably be collected from the concluſion of its period, in regard of time, which is preciſely the year 63. Though perhaps he publiſhed both theſe books in Achaia, whither he returned at the end of the two years of Paul's confinement at Rome, where he had compoſed them. Yet, notwithſtanding theſe reaſons, Euthymius and ſome notes of Greek manuſcripts ſay, that it was compoſed fifteen years after our Saviour's reſurrection; and ſome inſcriptions of this Goſpel in Syriac and Perſian add, that it was written at Alexandria, which opinion, as alſo that of Metaphraſtes, &c. is founded upon the ſpurious authority of the Apoſtolic conſtitutions, whoſe Author is unknown, and among other abſurdities, gives us an account of Luke's travels into Egypt. Therefore, it is moſt reaſonable to give credit to Hierom in this particular.

This Goſpel, as Hierom obſerves, is of a purer Greek dialect, than any of the others; becauſe, as the ſaid Father reaſons, Luke was an able Phyſician, (bred by an ingenuous and liberal education,) and [as] he wrote for the Greeks, ſtudied to expreſs himſelf in the beſt ſtile he was maſter of, for the benefit and better comprehenſion of his Greek readers; ſee Hier. ep. 145. ad Damaſcum. Yet, tho' that ſame Father vouches (on Iſa. vi.) he underſtood Greek better than Hebrew, there are ſome Hebraiſms or Syriaciſms in this book, but not ſo many, as to breed any doubt of its genuineneſs and antiquity; ſee Huetius, in Demonſtr. Evang.

It is remarkable, that this Goſpel by Luke, is the only one of the four; that Marcion and his diſciples received for genuine or canonical: but this can't be ſuppoſed to be accepted in the whole, as we receive it. For, thoſe hereticks, as Irenæus, Tertullian and Epiphanius obſerve, both corrupted, and retrenched many places thereof. And it was after this cookery, that the falſe-hearted Marcion, and traitor to his Saviour, endeavoured to impoſe it upon the world; but it was ſoon convicted of forgery and corruption, by comparing it to the genuine copy which was received, preſerved and read by the Chriſtian Church. Therefore Tertullian, writing againſt Marcion, declares, "I maintain that my Goſpel, (or, that the Goſpel, I receive upon the authority of the Chriſtian Church) is true; yet Marcion as poſitively ſays, that his Goſpel is true: Who then ſhall judge betwixt us? Anſ. It ſhall be the order of time, that ſhall give authority to the eldeſt, and undeniably prove, that the modern one is ſpurious. For, falſhood being a depravation of truth, truth muſt of neceſſity go before falſhood. But it is ſo true, that ours is the moſt ancient, that Marcion himſelf believed it, before he ſeparated from the body of the univerſal Church of Chriſt. Then in correcting our Goſpel, as he pretends, he confirms, and ſhews, that it was the more ancient; and we have no reaſon to doubt, but that which was received, as Sacred by the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, is that which the Apoſtles gave by tradition." Now,

Marcion had curtailed all the two firſt chapters of this Goſpel, and began his book with theſe words; In the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæſar. He alſo cut off and mangled many things in the body of the Goſpel, as may be particularly read in the forty-ſecond hereſy publiſhed by Epiphanius, who alſo in another book (Ancorat. n. 21.) obſerves, that there were copies of this Goſpel of Luke, in which he could not find the account of our Saviour's tears or weeping, as we read it in ch. xix. ver. 42. which he attributes not to Marcion, but to the ſcrupuloſity of ſome orthodox; but ignorant Chriſtians, who ſmothered his tears, fearing that ſuch a paſſion might appear to be a weakneſs in Jeſus Chriſt. But he adds, that this xix. 42. was extant in the moſt correct copies, which he alſo proves from Irenæus's book againſt hereſies, c. 21. And,

Why may we not account in the ſame light for the omiſſion, which Hillary takes notice of, in many Greek and Latin copies of this Goſpel, viz. Of the hiſtory related in xxii. 43, and 44. Of the Angel, which appeared to our Lord in the garden of Gethſemane; Of his agony, and bloody ſweat. Hierom alſo, writing againſt the Pelagians, mentions theſe omiſſions; but we are to have more regard to the ſuperior teſtimonies of the more ancient Fathers, Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus, &c. than to ſome private manuſcripts, from which ſome corrupt, or ignorantly devout Chriſtians, might perhaps retrench it, becauſe they were afraid of aſcribing to Jeſus Chriſt, marks of human weakneſs, and infirmities of nature. But,

As to the preſent copies of this Goſpel, the Cambridge MS. differs the moſt from the others; but as Du Pin obſerves, it is clear that the differences are either paraphraſes, explanations, tranſpoſitions or additions, taken from other Goſpels. Amongſt the reſt, the two moſt remarkable is, the interpolation of the words Achazias, Joaſh, and Amaſias, Kings, taken purely from the book of the Kings, and other reformations in the genealogy of Jeſus Chriſt, till David, in order to make it agree with that in Matt. i. It cannot be ſaid, that this is the ancient reading of the text of Luke, becauſe Africanus and Irenæus, in the very infancy almoſt of the Church, inform us, that the genealogy of Jeſus Chriſt have been always differently deſcribed by Matthew and Luke, (ſee the reaſon in the notes on ch. iii.) Beſides the Pagans, Marcionites, and Manichees, have upbraided the Chriſtians (without reaſon) with this ſeeming contrariety; yet the Ancients never anſwered them, by ſaying or admitting that either of them was falſe, which would have been a ready and eaſy reply, had there been any foundation for it; I ſay, they would not have omitted ſuch a reply, which muſt have put an end to the objection, or at leaſt, they would have produced ſuch copies wherein theſe genealogical accounts were agreed. Yet we don't find that any of the eccleſiaſtical Authors, nor Commentators, knew any thing of this obſervation; and conſequently, we may rightly conclude, that not only this conformity of the Goſpel of Luke, with that of Matthew in the genealogies is not ancient, but alſo, that it was not common, and that it hath been peculiar to this Cambridge copy.

The other conſiderable difference, is an addition to the fifth verſe of the ſixth chapter, in theſe terms, "That ſame day Jeſus having ſeen a man who worked on the ſabbath-day, he ſaid to him; My friend, if thou knoweſt what thou doſt, thou art happy; but if thou doſt not know, thou art unhappy, and a tranſgreſſor of the law;" which addition is not found in any other copy; none of the eccleſiaſtical Authors have made any mention of it, nor can I make any ſenſe thereof. For, if our Lord would ſay to that man, "That he ſhould not ſin by working on the ſabbath-day, if he knew he was not forbid to work on that day, it is a manifeſt error; becauſe it is certain, that the Jews were obliged to obſerve the ſabbath by God's command through Moſes, the obligation of which command was not then diſcharged, the law being not abrogated, till Chriſt had paid our ranſom to the juſtice of our Heavenly Father. Therefore I am inclinable to believe, that it is of late date, and the invention of ſome deſigning ſophiſter, that might be an enemy to the law.

CHAP. I.

1 The preface of Luke to his whole goſpel. 5 The conception of John the Baptiſt, 26 and of Chriſt. 39 The prophecy of Eliſabeth, and of Mary concerning Chriſt. 57 The nativity and circumciſion of John. 67 The prophecy of Zachary both of Chriſt, 76 and of John.

FOraſmuch as many have taken in hand to ſet forth in order a declaration of thoſe things which are moſt ſurely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witneſſes, and miniſters of the word:

3 It ſeemed good to me alſo, having had perfect underſtanding of all things from the very firſt, to write unto thee in order, moſt excellent Theophilus,

4 That thou mighteſt know the certainty of thoſe things wherein thou haſt been inſtructed.

5 THERE was in the days of Herod the king of Judea, a certain prieſt named Zacharias, of the courſe of Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Eliſabeth.

6 And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the comandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs.

7 And they had no child, becauſe that Eliſabeth was barren, and they both were now well ſtricken in years.

8 And it came to paſs, that while he executed the prieſts office before God in the order of his courſe,

9 According to the cuſtom of the prieſts office, his lot was to burn incenſe when he went into the temple of the Lord.

10 And the whole multitude of the people were praying without, at the time of incenſe.

11 And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord, ſtanding on the right ſide of the altar of incenſe.

12 And when Zacharias ſaw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13 But the angel ſaid unto him, Fear not, Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Eliſabeth ſhall bear thee a ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name John,

14 And thou ſhalt have joy and gladneſs, and many ſhall rejoyce at his birth.

15 For he ſhall be great in the ſight of the Lord, and ſhall drink neither wine nor ſtrong drink; and he ſhall be filled with the holy Ghoſt, even from his mothers womb.

16 And many of the children of Iſrael ſhall he turn to the Lord their God.

17 And he ſhall go before him in the ſpirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

18 And Zacharias ſaid unto the angel, Whereby ſhall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wiſe well ſtricken in years.

19 And the angel anſwering ſaid unto him, I am Gabriel, that ſtand in the preſence of God: and am ſent to ſpeak unto thee, and to ſhew thee theſe glad tidings.

20 And behold, thou ſhalt be dumb, and not able to ſpeak, until the day that theſe things ſhall be performed, becauſe thou believeſt not my words, which ſhall be fulfilled in their ſeaſon.

21 And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried ſo long in the temple.

22 And when he came out, he could not ſpeak unto them: and they perceived that he had ſeen a viſion in the temple: for he beckned unto them, and remained ſpeechleſs.

23 And it came to paſs, that aſſoon as the days of his miniſtration were accompliſhed, he departed to his own houſe.

24 And after thoſe days his wife Eliſabeth conceived, and hid her ſelf five months, ſaying,

25 Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

26 And in the ſixth month, the angel Gabriel was ſent from God, unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth,

27 To a virgin eſpouſed to a man whoſe name was Joſeph, of the houſe of David; and the virgins name was Mary.

28 And the angel came in unto her, and ſaid, Hail thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: bleſſed art thou among women.

29 And when ſhe ſaw him, ſhe was troubled at his ſaying, and caſt in her mind what manner of ſalutation this ſhould be.

30 And the angel ſaid unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou haſt found favour with God.

31 And behold, thou ſhalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a ſon, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus.

32 He ſhall be great, and ſhall be called the Son of the Higheſt; and the Lord God ſhall give unto him the throne of his father David.

33 And he ſhall reign over the houſe of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there ſhall be no end.

34 Then ſaid Mary unto the angel, How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a man?

35 And the angel anſwered and ſaid unto her, The holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.

36 And behold thy couſin Eliſabeth, ſhe hath alſo conceived a ſon in her old age: and this is the ſixth month with her, who was called barren.

37 For with God nothing ſhall be impoſſible.

38 And Mary ſaid, Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.

39 And Mary aroſe in thoſe days, and went into the hill-country with haſte, into a city of Juda,

40 And entred into the houſe of Zacharias, and ſaluted Eliſabeth.

41 And it came to paſs, that when Eliſabeth heard the ſalutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb: and Eliſabeth was filled with the holy Ghoſt.

42 And ſhe ſpake out with a loud voice, and ſaid, Bleſſed art thou among women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy womb.

43 And whence is this to me that the mother of my Lord ſhould come to me?

44 For lo, as ſoon as the voice of thy ſalutation ſounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45 And bleſſed is ſhe that believed: for there ſhall be a performance of thoſe things which were told her from the Lord.

46 And Mary ſaid, My ſoul doth magnify the Lord,

47 And my ſpirit hath rejoyced in God my Saviour.

48 For he hath regarded the low eſtate of his handmaiden: for behold, from henceforth all generations ſhall call me bleſſed.

49 For he that is mighty hath done to me great things, and holy is his name.

50 And his mercy is on them that fear him, from generation to generation.

51 He hath ſhewed ſtrength with his arm, he hath ſcattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52 He hath put down the mighty from their ſeats, and exalted them of low degree.

53 He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath ſent empty away.

54 He hath holpen his ſervant Iſrael, in remembrance of his mercy, 55 As he ſpake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his ſeed for ever.

56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own houſe.

57 Now Eliſabeths full time came, that ſhe ſhould be delivered; and ſhe brought forth a ſon.

58 And her neighbours and her couſins heard how the Lord had ſhewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoyced with her.

59 And it came to paſs that on the eighth day they came to circumciſe the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother anſwered and ſaid, Not ſo; but he ſhall be called John.

61 And they ſaid unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62 And they made ſigns to his father, how he would have him called.

63 And he asked for a writing-table, and wrote, ſaying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64 And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue looſed, and he ſpake, and praiſed God.

65 And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all theſe ſayings were noiſed abroad throughout all the hill-country of Judea.

66 And all they that heard them, laid them up in their hearts, ſaying, What manner of child ſhall this be? And the hand of of the Lord was with him.

67 And his father Zacharias was filled with the holy Ghoſt, and propheſied, ſaying,

68 Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he hath viſited and redeemed his people,

69 And hath raiſed up an horn of ſalvation for us, in the houſe of his ſervant David;

70 As he ſpake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been ſince the world began;

71 That we ſhould be ſaved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us.

72 To perform the mercy promiſed to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant:

73 The oath which he ſware to our father Abraham,

74 That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear,

75 In holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all the days of our life.

76 And thou child ſhalt be called the prophet of the Higheſt: for thou ſhalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways;

77 To give knowledge of ſalvation unto his people, by the remiſſion of their ſins,

78 Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us,

79 To give light to them that ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

80 And the child grew, and waxed ſtrong in ſpirit, and was in the deſerts till the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael.

The Circumcision

Luke. II. V. 21.

3 And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

4 And Joſeph alſo went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem (becauſe he was of the houſe and lineage of David)

5 To be taxed with Mary his eſpouſed wife, being great with child.

6 And ſo it was, that while they were there, the days were accompliſhed that ſhe ſhould be delivered.

7 And ſhe brought forth her firſt-born ſon, and wrapped him in ſwaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger, becauſe there was no room for them in the inn.

8 And there were in the ſame country ſhepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

9 And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord ſhone round about them; and they were ſore afraid.

10 And the angel ſaid unto them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people.

11 For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord.

12 And this ſhall be a ſign unto you; Ye ſhall find the babe wrapped in ſwaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And ſuddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly hoſt praiſing God, and ſaying,

14 Glory to God in the higheſt, and on earth peace, good will towards men.

15 And it came to paſs, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the ſhepherds ſaid one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and ſee this thing which is come to paſs, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

16 And they came with haſte, and found Mary and Joſeph, and the babe lying in a manger.

17 And when they had ſeen it, they made known abroad the ſaying which was told them concerning this child.

18 And all they that heard it, wondred at thoſe things which were told them by the ſhepherds.

19 But Mary kept all theſe things, and pondred them in her heart.

20 And the ſhepherds returned, glorifying and praiſing God for all the the things that they had heard and ſeen, as it was told unto them.

21 And when eight days were accompliſhed for the circumciſing of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was ſo named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

22 And when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moſes, were accompliſhed, they brought him to Jeruſalem, to preſent him to the Lord,

23 (As it is written in the law of the Lord, Every male that openeth the womb ſhall be called holy to the Lord)

24 And to offer a ſacrifice according to that which is ſaid in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons.

25 And behold, there was a man in Jeruſalem, whoſe name was Simeon; and the ſame man was juſt and devout, waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael: and the holy Ghoſt was upon him.

26 And it was revealed unto him by the holy Ghoſt, that he ſhould not ſee death, before he had ſeen the Lords Chriſt.

27 And he came by the ſpirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jeſus, to do for him after the cuſtom of the law,

28 Then took he him up in his arms, and bleſſed God, and ſaid,

29 Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word.

30 For mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation:

31 Which thou haſt prepared before the face of all people:

32 A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Iſrael.

33 And Joſeph and his mother marvelled at thoſe things which were ſpoken of him.

34 And Simeon bleſſed them, and ſaid unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is ſet for the fall and riſing again of many in Iſrael; and for a ſign which ſhall be ſpoken againſt:

35 (Yea, a ſword ſhall pierce through thy own ſoul alſo) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.

36 And there was one Anna a propheteſs, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aſer; ſhe was of a great age, and had lived with an husband ſeven years from her virginity:

37 And ſhe was a widow of about fourſcore and four years: which departed not from the temple, but ſerved God with faſtings and prayers night and day.

38 And ſhe coming in that inſtant, gave thanks likewiſe unto the Lord, and ſpake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jeruſalem.

39 And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, into their own city Nazareth.

40 And the child grew, and waxed ſtrong in ſpirit, filled with wiſdom; and the grace of God was upon him.

41 Now his parents went to Jeruſalem every year at the feaſt of the paſſover.

42 And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jeruſalem, after the cuſtom of the feaſt.

43 And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jeſus tarried behind in Jeruſalem; and Joſeph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they ſuppoſing him to have been in the company, went a days journey; and they ſought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jeruſalem, ſeeking him.

46 And it came to paſs, that after three days they found him in the temple ſitting in the midſt of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them queſtions..

47 And all that heard him were aſtoniſhed at his underſtanding and anſwers.

48 And when they ſaw him, they were amazed: and his mother ſaid unto him, Son, why haſt thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have ſought thee ſorrowing.

49 And he ſaid unto them, How is it that ye ſought me? wiſt ye not that I muſt be about my fathers buſineſs?

50 And they underſtood not the ſaying which he ſpake unto them.

51 And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was ſubject unto them: but his mother kept all theſe ſayings in her heart.

52 And Jeſus increaſed in wiſdom and ſtature, and in favour with God and man.

Ver. 1, &c. And it came to paſs in thoſe days that there went out a decree from Ceſar Auguſtus, that all the world ſhould be taxed. Ver. 2. And this taxing was firſt made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria, &c.] This is the memorable epocha of the Chriſtian Church, from whence we date the birth of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, as it was foretold by Daniel, the Prophet, ſaying,

Ver. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon the Holy City, to finiſh the tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy, and to anoint the moſt Holy. Ver. 25. Know therefore and underſtand, that from the going forth of the commandment, to reſtore and to build Jeruſalem unto Meſſiah the prince, ſhall be ſeven weeks, and threeſcore and two weeks, the ſtreet ſhall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. Ver. 26. And after threeſcore and two weeks ſhall Meſſiah be cut off, but not for himſelf; and the people of the prince that ſhall come, ſhall deſtroy the city and the ſanctuary, and the end thereof ſhall be with a flood, and to the end of the war deſolations are determined. Ver. 27. And he ſhall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midſt of the week he ſhall cauſe the ſacrifice and the oblation to ceaſe, and for the overſpreading of abominations, he ſhall make it deſolate even until conſummation, and that determined ſhall be poured out upon the deſolate.

And it being of great moment for the conviction of Jews, and other Infidels, who reject the faith of Chriſt, to have this Prophecy well cleared, and made out, in order hereto it is to be obſerved.

1. That this Prophecy doth relate primarily, and eſpecially, to the Jews. For it expreſſeth the time that was determined upon the people of Daniel, that is, the Jews, and upon the Holy City, that is, Jeruſalem, the whole of which was ſeventy weeks; that is, that this was the time which God had fore-ordained and determined upon the Jews, for their being his peculiar people, and upon Jeruſalem for its being his Holy City; after the expiration of which, an end being to be put to the Moſaic œconomy, they ſhould be no longer God's peculiar people, and the worſhip which he had eſtabliſhed at Jeruſalem being to be aboliſh'd, that city ſhould be no longer a city holy unto him.

2. That theſe ſeventy weeks are weeks of years. For among the Jews, as there were ſabbatical days, whereby their days were divided into weeks, or days, ſo there were ſabbatical years, whereby their years were divided into weeks of years, and this laſt ſort of weeks, is that which is here mentioned, ſo that every one of the weeks of this Prophecy contains ſeven years, and the whole number of 70 weeks contains four hundred and ninety years, at the end whereof, this determined time expired; after which the Jews were no more to be the peculiar people of God, nor Jeruſalem his Holy City, becauſe then the œconomy, which he had eſtabliſhed among them, was to ceaſe, and the worſhip, which he had appointed at Jeruſalem, was wholly to be aboliſhed. And,

3. All this was accompliſhed at the death of Chriſt. For then the Jewiſh church, and the Jewiſh worſhip at Jeruſalem were wholly aboliſhed, and the Chriſtian Church, and the Chriſtian Worſhip ſucceeded in their ſtead; then the time, which was determined upon the Jews, for their being God's peculiar people, and upon Jeruſalem for its being his Holy City, being fully expired, thenceforth began the kingdom of the Meſſiah, and, inſtead of the Jews, all nations of the world were called thereunto, and inſtead of Jeruſalem, every place through the whole earth, where God ſhould be worſhipped, in ſpirit and in truth, was made unto him Holy. And therefore, then the ſeventy weeks of this Prophecy, muſt have their ending. For they were determined and deemed for this purpoſe, and therefore in this they muſt have their concluſion. And this all the events, which are in this Prophecy, predicted to be brought to paſs at the concluſion of theſe weeks, do neceſſarily prove. In the 24th verſe, we have ſix of them, for the accompliſhing of which, theſe ſeventy weeks, are there ſaid to be determined; and therefore at the accompliſhing of them, theſe weeks muſt have their ending. They are theſe following. 1ſt, To finiſh (or reſtrain) Tranſgreſſion; 2dly, To make an end of ſins; 3dly, To make expiation or reconciliation for iniquity; 4thly, To bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs; 5thly, To ſeal up (or compleat and fulfil) viſion and prophecy; 6thly, To anoint the Moſt Holy. And all theſe were accompliſhed in that great work of our ſalvation, which Chriſt our Lord undertook for us, and fully compleated by his death, and paſſion, and his reſurrection from the dead. For being born without original ſin, and having lived without actual ſin, he was truly the Moſt Holy of all, that bore our nature. And being therefore fitted for this great work, he was anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power to be our King, and our Prieſt, and our Prophet, for accompliſhing of it. And having as our prieſt offered up himſelf a ſacrifice upon the croſs, to make expiation and atonement for all our ſins, and did thereby make an end of them, by taking away their guilt, and by ſo doing he did work reconciliation for us with our God. And having as our Prophet given us his Goſpel, the law of everlaſting righteouſneſs, which was not a temporal law, as was that of Moſes, but to laſt for ever, and to be our guide into all righteouſneſs, as long as the world ſhould laſt, and alſo having as our King ſent his Holy Spirit into our hearts, to influence and govern us according to this law, he hath done all for us that is neceſſary, thereby to reſtrain and extinguiſh in us all manner of tranſgreſſions, and fully deliver us from the power of them, and in doing all this he hath ſealed up, that is, fulfilled, and thoroughly finiſhed all that, which by viſions and prophecies had been before revealed concerning him. And therefore all theſe events being thus brought to paſs, and accompliſhed at the time of Chriſt's death, this neceſſarily determines us, there to fix the end of theſe weeks, which were appointed for the accompliſhing of them.

4. The end of theſe weeks being thus fixed at the death of Chriſt, it doth neceſſarily determine us, where to place the beginning of them, that is, four hundred and ninety years before, and therefore the death of Chriſt, as moſt learned men agree, falling in the year of the Julian Period 4746. and in the Jewiſh month Niſan, if we reckon 440 years backward, this will lead us up to the month Niſan, in the year of the Julian Period 4256, which was the very year and month in which Ezra had his commiſſion from Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Perſia, for his return to Jeruſalem, there to reſtore the church and ſtate of the Jews. For that year of the Julian Period, according to Ptolemy's canon, was the ſeventh year of that king's reign, in which the Scriptures tell us his commiſſion was granted: the beginning therefore of the ſeventy weeks or four hundred and ninety years of this Prophecy, was in the month Niſan, of the Jewiſh years, and in the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus king of Perſia, and in the 4246th year of the Julian Period, when Ezra had his commiſſion; and the end of them fell in the very ſame month of Niſan, in the 4746th year of the Julian Period, in which very year and very month Chriſt our Lord ſuffered for us, and thereby compleated the whole work of our ſalvation, there being juſt ſeventy weeks of years, or four hundred and ninety years from the one to the other.

5. Its evident, that from the prophecy itſelf, that theſe weeks muſt have this beginning, that is, from the date of the commiſſion granted to Ezra. For 1ſt, they are pinn'd down thereto by an expreſs character in the text; and 2dly, They cannot, agreeable to that, and other Scriptures, and the authentick hiſtories of the times to which they relate, have it any way elſe.

And 1ſt, Theſe weeks have their beginning, from the date of the commiſſion granted to Ezra, becauſe they are pinn'd down thereto by an expreſs character in the text, and that character is the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, for that from thence the ſeventy weeks muſt have their beginning. The text is very expreſs, and to excite us the more to obſerve it, the Prophet introduceth it with this remarkable preface, Know therefore and underſtand. But this commandment or decree, was that which was granted to Ezra in that commiſſion, with which he was ſent to Judea, in the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Perſia; and therefore, from thence the beginning of theſe weeks muſt commence, for the words in the text to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, are not to be underſtood literally, but figuratively, for reſtoring the ſtate of the Jews, as well the political, as the eccleſiaſtical, and the reſettling of both according to the law of Moſes; and what is more uſual in prophecies, than to be given out in figurative expreſſions. And what is more common in Scripture, than by Jeruſalem, to mean the whole political and eccleſiaſtical ſtate of that people? And for the re-eſtabliſhing of both theſe, and the ſettling of theſe again upon the former baſis, from whence they had not been overthrown by the Babylonians, and were not as yet but very imperfectly reſtored, the commiſſion granted to Ezra was very full. For it gave him thorough power to reſtore the law of Moſes, and fully re-eſtabliſh the obſervance of it, both in church and ſtate, and to appoint magiſtrates and judges to govern the people according to it, and to puniſh all ſuch as ſhould be diſobedient thereto, either with death, baniſhment, impriſonment, or confiſcation of goods, according as their crime ſhould be found to deſerve. And all this Ezra, accordingly executed in the manner as will be hereafter related. Before his coming to Jeruſalem with this commiſſion the Scriptures were in a manner loſt, the people in a profound ignorance of the law, and the worſhip of God neglected, and every thing elſe both in church and ſtate in great diſorder and confuſion; but on his coming, he reſtored the Scriptures, inſtructed the people in the law, brought the worſhip of God into due order, and proceeded as long as his commiſſion laſted, to work a full reformation in all things elſe. And after his commiſſion was at an end, he gave not over his endeavours herein, but as a ſcribe in the law of God, and as a preſident of the Sanhedrim, he ſtill carried on the ſame work; and having a ſucceſſor equally zealous in the ſame deſign, he did as much in it, under his authority, as formerly he did by his own. So that he hath been eſteemed as another Moſes, and deſervedly reckoned as the ſecond founder of the Jewiſh church and ſtate. And therefore, the beginning of this work is a noble Epocha, from whence to begin the calculation of theſe weeks, and doth moſt agreeably accord with the intent and purpoſe of this prophecy, in which they are predicted. For the whole intent and purpoſe of it, is to foreſhew and ſet forth in the age of the reſtored church of the Jews, how long it was to continue, and when to ceaſe, and be aboliſhed; and from whence it is more proper to reckon this, than from the time when the thorough reſtoration of it began? And this was then only begun, when Ezra, by virtue of the commiſſion granted to him by Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Perſia, in the ſeventh year of his reign did ſet about this work; and therefore from hence the computation of theſe weeks, according to the Prophecy that predicts them, muſt begin. And that this figurative interpretation of the words, and none other, muſt be the true meaning of them, appears from hence, that they cannot be underſtood in a literal ſenſe, for if they are to be underſtood, they can be applicable to no other reſtoring and rebuilding of Jeruſalem, than that which was deemed and commanded by Cyrus, at the releaſe of the captivity. For this Prophecy was revealed to Daniel before this releaſe, and therefore when it is ſaid therein, that the Epocha of theſe weeks was to begin from the going forth of the command or decree to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, of what decree can it be more properly underſtood, than of that which ſhould firſt be granted next after this Prophecy for that purpoſe, and by virtue whereof, this city was accordingly rebuilt, after its having been deſtroyed by the Babylonians, and was again repeopled, and inhabited by the ſame people, who had been its former inhabitants; and that this was done by virtue of Cyrus's decree, appears from many places of Scripture, we are told in Iſaiah (ch. xliv. 28.) that it was Cyrus that ſhould ſay to Jeruſalem, be thou built, and to the temple, thy foundation ſhall be laid, and again, (chap. xlv. 13.) it is ſaid of the ſame Cyrus, that God would raiſe him up, and direct him, that he ſhould build his city, and releaſe his captives; where it is to be obſerved, that he that releaſed God's captives, and laid the foundation of the temple, was to be the perſon that was to rebuild Jeruſalem; ſo that he is not only by name, but alſo by this character and deſcription plainly pointed out to be the perſon that was to do this work. For that Cyrus did releaſe the captive Jews, who were God's people, and that he did no more than lay the foundation of the temple, (for it was not perfected till after his reign) is well known, and therefore according to theſe paſſages of Holy Scripture, it muſt be he only that did reſtore and rebuild

Jeruſalem. And ſo accordingly it was done by virtue of the decree, which he granted for the return of the Jews thither; for can it be imagined, that Cyrus ſhould grant licence for the Jews to return to Jeruſalem, and rebuild the temple there, without allowing them to rebuild that city alſo? Ezra plainly tells us, that aſſoon as the Jews were returned into Judea, by virtue of Cyrus's decree, they diſperſed themſelves into the ſeveral cities, to which they belonged, and again dwelt in them; and can it be thought, that they did not then again rebuild them? For without rebuilding of them how could they dwell in them? And if thoſe, who belonged to the other cities of Judah rebuilt, and dwelt in them again, how can we think, that thoſe, who belonged to Jeruſalem, did not do the ſame, and that eſpecially ſince it was the metropolis of the whole nation, the place where the temple ſtood, where all went up continually to worſhip, and where three times a year, every male appeared before the Lord at the ſolemn feſtivals, and where alſo the governor dwelt, where the council ſat, and all matters of judgment were ultimately decided, the matter is beyond all diſpute; when the Jews on their return rebuilt their other cities, they muſt then moſt certainly have rebuilt Jeruſalem alſo. The great concourſe, which the reaſons I have mentioned conſtantly drew thither, muſt have neceſſitated this, had there been no other inducement for it. It is eaſier to ſuppoſe, all the reſt of the cities of Judah to have been left ſtill in their rubbiſh, after the return of the Jews from their captivity, than that this city alone ſhould remain unbuilt. The rebuilding of it is not, indeed, expreſly included in the commiſſion of Cyrus, as we have it recorded in the firſt chapter of Ezra; that only gave licence to the Jews, to return into Judea, and there rebuild the Houſe of God, which is in Jeruſalem. But the licence to rebuild the Houſe of God, which is in Jeruſalem, muſt either imply a licence to rebuild Jeruſalem alſo; or elſe, (which ſeems moſt probable,) Ezra gives us in this place mentioned, only an abſtract of the chief things granted by that licence, and not a recital of the whole; in which, moſt likely, many other things, and among them the building of Jeruſalem, and the other cities of Judah, might be fully and expreſly mentioned. For it is certain, by vertue of that licence they had power ſo to do, and accordingly executed it. The complaint of the neighbouring nations to the Perſian court againſt them that were returned was, that they builded Jeruſalem, that rebellious and bad city, and had ſet up the walls thereof, and joined the foundations of it; and the order from king Artaxerxes, (ſo the Magian, who then reigned, it ſeems called himſelf) was to cauſe the Jews to ceaſe, that this city be not builded. However, from the firſt of Cyrus, till the time of this order, fourteen years having been elapſed, the rebuilding of Jeruſalem had by that time gone a great way: For, within two years after, we find the Prophet Haggai complaining of the Jews at Jeruſalem, that they dwelt in cieled houſes, while they let the Houſe of God lie waſte. From all this it plainly appears, that Jeruſalem, after its having been deſtroyed by the Babylonians, was again rebuilt by virtue of that decree, which Cyrus granted in the firſt year of his reign for the releaſe and reſtoration of the Jews. And therefore, if theſe words of the Prophecy, to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, are to be underſtood in a literal ſenſe, they can be underſtood of no other than reſtoring and building of that city, than that which was accompliſhed by virtue of that decree, and the computation of the ſeventy weeks muſt begin from the granting and going forth thereof. But if the computation be begun ſo high, the 490 years of the ſeventy weeks cannot come low enough to reach any of thoſe events, which are predicted by this Prophecy; for from the firſt of Cyrus to the death of Chriſt is 568 years: and therefore, if the ſaid 490 years be computed from thence, they will be expired a great many years, either before the cutting off, or the coming of the Meſſiah; which ought both to fall within the compaſs of them, according to the expreſs words of this Prophecy. It evidently therefore follows from hence, that the words of this Prophecy, to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, cannot be underſtood in a literal ſenſe. For the ſum of the whole argument is thus, if the words are to be underſtood in a literal ſenſe, they muſt be underſtood of that rebuilding of Jeruſalem, which was accompliſhed by virtue of Cyrus's decree, and the computation of the ſeventy weeks, or the 490 years thereof, muſt begin from the going forth, or iſſuing of that decree. But it cannot begin from thence, for the reaſon mentioned, and therefore theſe words cannot be underſtood in a literal ſenſe, but muſt be interpreted to mean figuratively, the reſtoring and rebuilding of the Church and ſtate of the Jews at Jeruſalem. And this Ezra effected by virtue of the command or decree, which was granted to him for this purpoſe, in the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and therefore, here the beginning of theſe weeks muſt be placed; and this will be further proved if we conſider:

That it can be placed no where elſe, ſo as to make the ending comport with the intent and purpoſe of the Prophecy, and the accompliſhing of the events predicted by it. For theſe were four commandments or decrees iſſued out by the kings of Perſia in favour of the Jews, from one of which, according to the expreſs words of the Prophecy, the computation of theſe weeks is to be begun; the firſt granted by Cyrus, in the firſt year of his reign; the ſecond by Darius, about the fourth year of his reign; the third by Artaxerxes to Ezra, in the ſeventh year of his reign; and the fourth by the ſame Artaxerxes to Nehemiah, in the thirtieth year of his reign. But this computation could not begin from that of Cyrus, nor from that of Darius, nor from that of the twentieth of Artaxerxes, and therefore it muſt begin from this of the ſeventh of Artaxerxes granted to Ezra, That it could not begin from any of the other three, I ſhall ſhew in their order.

And 1ſt, As to the decree of Cyrus, the 490 years of theſe weeks cannot be computed from thence, for the reaſon already ſaid; that is, becauſe, if they begin from thence, they cannot by a great many years reach the events predicted by this Prophecy; and therefore none, who underſtand this Prophecy to relate either to the cutting off, or the coming of the Meſſiah, do begin them from hence. For, according to this computation, no chronology can ever reconcile them to either of them.

2dly, Neither can the computation of theſe weeks be begun from the decree granted by Darius. But there having been three Darius's that reigned in Perſia; Darius Hyſtaſpes, Darius Nothus, and Darius Codomannus; it is to be firſt enquired, which of theſe three it was, that granted this decree; and then ſecondly, it ſhall be ſhewn, that the computation of theſe weeks cannot be begun from it. And firſt of theſe three Darius's, it is certain, could not be Darius Codomannus. For, if the 490 years of theſe weeks be reckoned from any part of his reign, they will overſhoot all the events predicted by this Prophecy by many more years, than they will fall ſhort of them, if reckoned from the firſt of Cyrus; and therefore, no one hath ever ſaid, that he was the Darius, that granted this decree. But Scaliger, and many others following his authority, have ſaid it of Darius Nothus. But there are invincible arguments againſt it, which unanſwerably demonſtrate, that it could not be Darius Nothus, but it muſt neceſſarily be Darius Hyſtaſpes, the firſt of theſe three, that reigned in Perſia, and none other, by whom this decree was iſſued out. For he, who according to Ezra, granted this decree, is the ſame Darius of whom mention is made in Haggai and Zechariah, but that could not be Darius Nothus, but muſt neceſſarily be Darius Hyſtaſpes. For firſt, from the deſtruction of the temple of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, to the reign of Darius Nothus, were one hundred ſixty and five years: But from the deſtruction of it to the time of the ſecond decree, by virtue of which the rebuilding of it was finiſhed, were no more than ſeventy years, according to the Prophet Zechariah; for we find in the book of his Prophecies, that in the fourth year of the ſame Darius, who granted this decree to the Jews, (which was alſo the year in which it was publiſhed at Jeruſalem) the faſt of the fifth month, in which they had mourned for the deſtruction of the temple, and the faſt of the ſeventh month, in which they had mourned for the utter deſolation of the land, which had been brought upon it by the death of Gedaliah, had been obſerved juſt ſeventy years; and no one can doubt, who thoroughly conſiders that text, but that their mourning for theſe calamities, had been from the very time they had ſuffered for them; and that therefore, it could not be Darius Nothus, but it muſt be ſome other Darius then reigning in Perſia, within the reach of the ſaid ſeventy years, who granted this decree; and that ſince the fourth of Darius Hyſtaſpes was juſt ſeventy years from the time, in which the city and temple of Jeruſalem were deſtroyed by the Chaldeans, as hath been before obſerved; this other Darius, muſt neceſſarily be Darius Hyſtaſpes. It muſt be acknowledged, that the ſame Prophet ſpeaks alſo in another place of the like number of ſeventy years, in the ſecond of Darius, two years before. But theſe were not the ſeventy years of mourning for the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem; but the ſeventy years, in which God had expreſſed his indignation againſt Jeruſalem, and the cities of Judah, which are to be computed from the time that Nebuchadnezzar came up againſt Judah, and beſieged Jeruſalem: For which, the Jews faſted in the tenth month, and this was two years before this city was taken and deſtroyed by him. For the taking and deſtroying of Jeruſalem, was in the eleventh year of Zedekiah; but the firſt beſieging of it was in the ninth year of Zedekiah, and in the tenth month of that year. But Scaliger, inſtead of being convinced by this argument, turns it to ſpeak for him, and his reaſonings upon it for this purpoſe are, that theſe faſts, which are ſpoken of in Zechariah, to have been obſerved on the fourth, and fifth month, and on the ſeventh month, and tenth month, could not be appointed but by the Church of the Jews, (by which I ſuppoſe he means the Sanhedrim, or ſome other convention of the prieſts and elders, repreſenting that Church;) but neither the Sanhedrim, or any other convention repreſenting that Church ſhould come together, or make any ſuch conſtitution after the calamities, which theſe feaſts commemorated, till the Jews were returned from their captivity, and again ſettled in Judah and Jeruſalem. And therefore, theſe faſts could not begin to be obſerved, nor the ſeventy years, obſerving them, which Zechariah ſpeaks of, commence 'till after that time. But ſeventy years from any time, after the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, will carry us much beyond the reign of Darius Hyſtaſpes, and therefore it could not be the fourth year of Darius Hyſtaſpes, but it muſt be the fourth year of Darius, the next of that name reigning after him is in Perſia, and that was Darius Nothus in which theſe faſts were ſpoken of by that Prophet. But the anſwer to all this is, that there was no need of any ſuch formal conſtitution of the whole Jewiſh Church for the obſerving of theſe faſts. The calamities, which they commemorated, while freſh in memory, might be reaſon enough to introduce the uſe of them by common conſent. And if not, yet what ſhould hinder, but that the prieſts and elders might meet together in Babylon, while there in captivity, and in that place, as well as if they had been at Jeruſalem, hold conventions for the making of ſuch a conſtitution, if the book of Baruch be to be credited in any thing, that tells us of ſuch a convention in Babylon held there in the time of the captivity, and of a faſt appointed by it. And we find in the Book of Ezekiel, which is of undoubted uſe of Divine Authority. And when Sherezar, and Regem-melech, came to Jeruſalem to aſk counſel of the Prophets and prieſts there, in the name and behalf of the Jews of Babylon about theſe faſts; can we think that they were ſent by another, than a convention of the prieſts and elders in that place met together for this purpoſe? It is certain, that moſt of the conſtitutions, that are now obſerved by the Jews, were made in the land of Babylon by conventions of their elders after the laſt deſtruction of Jeruſalem; for all that are in the Babyloniſh Gemara were there made. And why then might not a conſtitution for theſe faſts be made there alſo, by a like convention after the firſt deſtruction of that city? and why there might not be a Sanhedrim in Babylon during the captivity of the Jews, I cannot ſee. The temple-ſervice was indeed confined to Jeruſalem, but the Sanhedrim was no part of it. That was a national council, which might be aſſembled wherever the nation was. And therefore, when the whole nation of the Jews was removed into the land of Babylon, who can give a reaſon why this national council ſhould not be there alſo, and there meet and conſult together, for the common intereſt of that land, as well as they did, when they were in their own? We are told by the Jewiſh writers, that from the time of Alexander the Great, there was a Sanhedrim in Alexandria in Egypt, for the ſake only of a colony of the Jews, that was there planted, even while Judea and Jeruſalem were fully inhabited. And how much more then might there have been one at Babylon, when the whole nation was remo'vd thither during their captivity in that land? It is plain from hence, that every part of this argument Scaliger begs his principles, and therefore they can be of no force for the proof of any thing, that he would infer from them. But ſecondly, That the Darius, who granted this ſecond decree could not be Darius Nothus, but muſt neceſſarily be Darius Hyſtaſpes, will farther appear from the part, which Joſhua the high-prieſt, and Zerubbabel the governor, acted in it. For they were the perſons who were ſent to Jeruſalem with the firſt decree, that which was decreed by Cyrus, and they alſo executed the ſecond decree, that which was granted by Darius. But if this Darius were Darius Nothus, ſuppoſing Jeſhua to have been forty years old at the granting of Cyrus's decree, and leſs at that time he could not be, he having then ſons in the work of the temple of twenty years old and upward, and ſuppoſing Zerubbabel to be thirty years, and a leſs age could not compart with his office; the former muſt have been one hundred fifty-ſeven, and the other one hundred forty-ſeven years old, when this ſecond decree granted by Darius was executed by them, which is utterly improbable. Scaliger, to make the probability of it, brings inſtances of ſeveral long-livers. I deny not, it is poſſible one in a century may be found, who may have reached the firſt of theſe ages; that is, that of 140. For we have had a Par, who hath come nigh it, and a Jenkinſon, who hath out-lived it. But that two together, and colleagues in the ſame work and buſineſs, ſhould live ſo long, is not likely. But thirdly, The improbability of this will appear much farther, if we conſider the words ſpoken by God himſelf in the ſecond year of this Darius, which we have in the ſecond chapter of Haggai, ver. 3. Who is left among you that ſaw this houſe in its firſt glory? and how do you ſee it now? is it not in your eyes in compariſon of it as nothing? For this text does plainly expreſs, that ſome were then alive, who had ſeen the firſt temple, and well remembred the beauty and glory of it. And therefore, if this Darius were Darius Nothus, he muſt have been of an age much more beyond belief, than either that of Jeſhua, or that of Zerubbabel above-mentioned. For from the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in which the temple was deſtroyed, to the ſecond of Darius Nothus, had paſſed one hundred and ſixty-ſix years, and therefore ſuppoſing theſe perſons, who are here ſaid to have ſeen the firſt temple, and remembred the glory of it, had been then ſeven years old, which is the loweſt that can be allowed for ſuch a remembring: they muſt have been of 173 in the ſecond year of Darius Nothus. And who can think it likely, that many, as the text ſeems to expreſs, or any at all among the people, ſhould then be found of ſo great an age? Scaliger himſelf thinks this improbable, and therefore to avoid the ſtrength of the argument, which is from hence brought againſt him, he would turned the words of the Sacred Text to ſpeak thus, Oh! if any among you had ſeen the glory of the firſt houſe, &c. But the text will not bear this interpretation. Fourthly, The ſeries of the kings of Perſia, as mentioned in Ezra, plainly makes the Darius, who granted this ſecond decree in favour of the Jews, to be the fourth that reigned in that empire, and the fourth king therein, all agree, was Darius Hyſtaſpes. For after Cyrus, who was firſt, ſucceeded Cambyſes the ſecond, and after him was the Magian the third, and then was Darius Hyſtaſpes the fourth. And in the ſame order are theſe kings mentioned in Ezra in reſpect to the temple, and the rebuilding of it. For he tells us, that during the reign of Cyrus, tho' he had granted a decree for the rebuilding of the temple at Jeruſalem, yet the work was diſcouraged all his reign through the fraud of his officers corrupted by the bribes of the Samaritans; that in the beginning of the reign of Ahaſuerus, who next ſucceeded, the king himſelf being much diſcouraged at the work, but made no decree againſt it, out of reſpect, it is ſuppoſed, to his father's decree, which was for it. But Artaxerxes, the next that reigned, having no ſuch regard to what Cyrus had ordered, made a decree againſt the work, whereon it wholly ceaſed, which it had not done before for the ſpace of two years until the ſecond year of Darius. This Darius muſt therefore be Darius Hyſtaſpes, and none other. For he it was, that was the fourth of thoſe kings, that reigned over the Perſian empire. And the Prophecy of Daniel (ch. xi.) helps to make this out. For there (ver. 2.) the words are, there ſhall ſtand up yet three kings in Perſia, and the fourth ſhall be far richer than all, and by his ſtrength through his riches, he ſhall ſtir up all againſt the realm of Grecia. By which it appears, That the four kings here ſpoken of, were thoſe, who were to reign after him in Perſia, that was there reigning. And he that was king of Perſia at that time was Cyrus. And it is from the ſame words moſt manifeſt, that the fourth was Xerxes, and therefore, according to this place of Scripture, there were between Cyrus and Xerxes three kings in Perſia; and Herodotus and other hiſtorians ſay the ſame, and thus name them, 1. Cambyſes, 2. Smardis the Magian, and, 3. Darius Hyſtaſpes; and therefore, ſince the Scripture doth name them in the ſame order after Cyrus, theſe three as kings of Perſia, 1. Ahaſuerus, 2. Artaxerxes, and, 3. Darius, no doubt, they were the ſame perſons, and this Darius, the third of them, was he that granted the ſecond decree for the rebuilding the temple at Jeruſalem. But againſt all this, the ſhort time that was between the granting of the firſt decree by Cyrus, and the ſecond year of Darius Hyſtaſpes, is made an objection; and they being men of great name, who have thought it of weight; it muſt not be paſſed over without any anſwer, although it ſeems not worthy of any. They urge it thus: From the time of the granting Cyrus's decree to the ſecond of Darius Hyſtaſpes, were no more than ſixteen years; and therefore if it were then, that the reſuming of the work of the temple gave occaſion for the ſearching of the records for this decree; and it were, that Darius, who, on the finding of the decree, granted a confirmation of it, there would then have been no reaſon for any ſuch ſearch to have been made at all. For, ſay they, what need was there of ſearching the records for this decree before its confirmation, after ſo ſhort a time as that of ſixteen years? The thing might then have been well enough remembred, without going to the records for the proof of it. Darius Hyſtaſpes was himſelf bred up in Cyrus's court, and therefore might himſelf well enough have remembred this thing without ordering the records to be ſearched for it; and if not, yet many of his counſellors and courtiers might. And therefore from hence they infer, that it could not be Darius Hyſtaſpes that granted this decree, but it muſt neceſſarily have been another Darius reigning after him; in whoſe time the granting of Cyrus's decree, was grown to be a thing paſt the memory of man; and that could be none other than Darius Nothus. The whole, therefore, of this argument goes upon this ſuppoſition: That publick records are never to be appealed to, but for things paſt the memory of man; than which what can be more abſurd? Can any that attend the Chancery here in England, remember all the grants and decrees that have paſſed the ſeal for ſixteen years paſt? Can the Chancellor himſelf do this, if he hath been ſo long in office? Or if any decree is to be made upon the foundation of a former decree, though paſſed but ſixteen days before, will any Chancellor upon memory only, ſeal that latter decree, or paſs any thing in it, without having the former firſt laid before him: Although ſome may have a confuſed remembrance in general of ſome things there tranſacted, even for ſixteen years paſt, yet amidſt the parity, and the multiplicity of buſineſs, which paſs in ſuch a court, and where the quick ſucceſſion of new maſters frequently crowd out of the minds all thoughts of thoſe that preceded; whoſe memory can be ſufficient to be depended upon, for an exact account of any thing there decreed, without having recourſe to the records, where all is exactly ſet down and regiſtred? And how can any thing be there rightly ſettled without it? And if this cannot be done for ſo ſmall a realm as this of England, How could it be done for ſo large and vaſt an empire, as that of Perſia, which was above forty times as large, and therefore muſt have afforded occaſion for grants and decrees, forty times as many? Its ſcarce poſſibly to conceive, how ſuch a multitude of things, as muſt in this caſe have been decreed and granted for all that empire, could have been all diſtinctly remembred by any one, after a week paſt; and how much leſs after ſixteen years? As to the memory of Darius himſelf, Herodotus tells us, he was but twenty years old when Cyrus died, and therefore he could not have been above fourteen, when his decree was granted for the return of the Jews; and what could he know, or obſerve of it at that age? And as to the courtiers of Darius, the argument is not at all ſtronger. For is every courtier called to be witneſs of all the publick acts and decrees of the kingdom? Do all ſuch know what-ever paſſeth the royal ſignature? or rather, Are they not the feweſt of all that obſerve, or take notice of ſuch matters? And if otherwiſe, yet doth not ſixteen years uſually make great revolutions in kings courts, eſpecially in thoſe of arbitrary princes, where not only mens places, but alſo their lives depend wholly upon will and pleaſure; as was moſt notoriouſly the caſe of the Perſian court at that time. Cambyſes, who ſucceeded Cyrus, cruelly and wantonly, upon freak humour, and very trivial occaſion only, deſtroyed a great many of his fathers officers. And after him reigned the Magian, who no doubt, upon that uſurpation, provided himſelf with ſuch a new ſet of officers and attendants, as would but ſerve to ſupport him in it, and conceal the impoſture, by which he reigned. And on his death, there being a new revolution, and a new king choſen, moſt likely this produced another change of officers and miniſters at the court; and by that time many muſt have gone off the ſtage by natural death; ſo that whether any at all, that had been officers in Cyrus's court, when he granted this decree in favour of the Jews, were in Darius's court in the ſecond year of his reign; then to remember it, and give evidence thereof, is at beſt, very uncertain; but it is moſt likely, that none of them were: And therefore nothing that is ſaid from this head, for the proving that it could not be Darius Hyſtaſpes, that granted the decree above-mentioned, can amount to as much as an argument of the loweſt probability for it. But on the contrary, they, who for the ſake of this argument, put the granting of this decree as low as the time of Darius Nothus, do thereby afford a much ſtronger argument againſt themſelves, than this can be for them. For this will put the building of the ſecond temple at the diſtance of one hundred and eighteen years from the beginning of it. Whereon it may be asked, when it was that the decree of Artaxerxes made it ceaſe? If they allow this Artaxerxes to be the third Perſian king, as he is reckoned in Scripture, that is the Magian, who reigned next after Cambyſes; then from the ceaſing of the work, to the reſuming of it again, will be full one hundred years; and in ſo long a time of intermiſſion, how could they preſerve the beams from being rotten, and the whole builing from being ſo damaged and decayed, as not to be forced to begin all again anew, from the very foundation? Which it is certain they did not; for after granting of the decree for the proceeding of the work, all was finiſhed in a little more than three years time. But if they ſay it was not the Magian, who was the Artaxerxes in the Scriptures, that cauſed the work to ceaſe; but he that is firſt named in the catalogue, which we have of the Perſian kings in prophane hiſtorians, that is, Artaxerxes Longimanus; then from the beginning of the work, to that of the ceaſing of it, will be ſeventy-one years. And in this caſe, it may be asked, how it came to paſs, if they had ſo long been permitted to have gone on with the work, that in all that time it had not been finiſhed? Neither of theſe queſtions can be anſwered; and therefore taking either of theſe ways, the argument worketh ſtrong againſt them, and farther proves, that it could not be Darius Nothus, but that it muſt neceſſarily be Darius Hyſtaſpes, who granted the decree, whereby the rebuilding of the ſecond temple was finiſhed. And upon this ſuppoſition, all will be eaſy, and free of difficulty; and the whole proceeding of the matter, will be thus: Cyrus, in the firſt year of his reign over the whole Perſian empire, granted his decree to the Jews, for the rebuilding of the temple at Jeruſalem; for in the next year after, they begun the work, and went on with it for about thirteen years, 'till the Magian cauſed it to ceaſe. But two years after, in the ſecond year of Darius Hyſtaſpes, who ſlew the Magian, and ſucceeded him in the throne; it was on the preaching of the Prophets Haggai and Zechariah again reſumed; and about a year and an half after, they obtained a decree from Darius to authorize them therein; and then in little more than three years time after, they finiſhed the whole work. And thus far having ſhewn that the Darius, who granted the ſecond decree, in favour of the Jews, by virtue of which, the rebuilding of the temple at Jeruſalem was finiſhed, could be no other than Darius Hyſtaſpes, the remaining part of the argument is, that therefore the ſeventy weeks of this Prophecy could not have their beginning from this decree, which is demonſtrated by the ſame reaſon, whereby it hath been above ſhewn, that they could not begin from the decree of Cyrus, that is, becauſe the 490 years of theſe weeks reckoned from the granting of this decree, cannot reach the chief events, which are by this Prophecy predicted to fall within the compaſs of them, that is, the coming and the cutting off of the Meſſiah. For this decree, I reckon, was brought to Jeruſalem in the fourth year of Darius.

The Jews indeed began again with the rebuilding of the temple in the latter end of the ſecond year of Darius, but they had no decree to warrant them herein, till the beginning of the fourth year of his reign. But from the fourth year of Darius Hyſtaſpes, to the death of Chriſt, were five hundred and fifty years, and therefore, reckoning the ſeventy weeks, or their 490 years from thence, they will expire 60 years before the death of Chriſt, and twenty-four years before the birth of Chriſt, and therefore can reach neither the cutting off of the Meſſiah, nor the coming of the Meſſiah, in any ſenſe whatſoever, that his coming can be taken in. And theſe two are the grand events predicted by this Prophecy, and it can never be rightly interpreted, but in the accompliſhing of them. And it may be further added on this head, that this decree of Darius ſeems not to accord or agree with the deſcription of that commandment or decree, which is mentioned in the Prophecy. For the words of the text are, From the going forth of the commandment, to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, which plainly imply an original decree, which this of Darius was not. For it was no more than an exemplification and confirmation of that which was before granted by Cyrus, and if it be not ſuch a decree as the Prophecy intended, it is certain, the ſeventy weeks or their 490 years cannot begin from thence.

Thirdly, Neither can the computation of theſe weeks be begun from the decree granted to Nehemiah by Artaxerxes in the tweentieth year of his reign. And in the clearing of this particular, I muſt take the ſame method as in the former. For as there were three Darius's, ſo alſo were there three Artaxerxes's, which according to the ancient hiſtorians, reigned over the empire of the Perſians, Artaxerxes Longimanus, Artaxerxes Mnemon, and Artaxerxes Ochus. And therefore, firſt it muſt be enquired which of theſe three it was, that granted this decree, and then ſecondly, it ſhall be ſhewn, that the computation of theſe weeks cannot begin from it. And firſt, as to which of theſe three Artaxerxes's it was, that granted this decree to Nehemiah, it is certain it muſt be Artaxerxes Longimanus, who reigned immediately after Xerxes over the Perſian Empire. For it was that Artaxerxes who was contemporary with Eliaſhib the high-prieſt of the Jews, he being high-prieſt at that ſame time, when Nehemiah came to Jeruſalem with this decree, which was in the twentieth year of that king. But no other Artaxerxes but he, that was called Longimanus, could be contemporary with Eliaſhib, and therefore none other but he, could be the Artaxerxes, that granted this decree. For the age, which Joiakim the father of Eliaſhib muſt then have been of, at the time of his death, makes it utterly improbable, that it ſhould be Artaxerxes Mnemon, and it would make it much more ſo as to Artaxerxes Ochus, who ſucceeded him. For ſuppoſing Eliaſhib who was high-prieſt in the twentieth year of that Artaxerxes, who granted this dedecree to Nehemiah, had then been twenty years in that office, his father Joiakim, if this Artaxerxes were Artaxerxes Mnemon, muſt then upon this ſuppoſition have died in the laſt year of Darius Nothus, at which time Joiakim muſt have been at leaſt one hundred fifty one years old, which is utterly improbable. For we find in Ezra, that Jeſhua the father of Joiakim at the firſt return of the Jews to Jeruſalem, after the Babyloniſh captivity, had ſons of twenty years old and upwards, employed in the work of the temple; and ſince the high-prieſthood among the Jews went by ſucceſſion according to the primogeniture, and Joiakim ſucceeded Jeſhua in it, it cannot be doubted but that Joiakim was one of thoſe his ſons, who were thus employed, and the eldeſt of them; and if he were twenty years old at this time, he muſt then have been one hundred fifty one in the laſt of Darius Nothus. For from the firſt of Cyrus to the laſt of Darius Nothus, were one hundred thirty one years. The improbability of this ſufficiently proves, that it could not be Artaxerxes Mnemon, who granted this decree to Nehemiah. And the improbability would be much greater, if we ſhould ſuppoſe it to be Artaxerxes Ochus, who ſucceeded him; becauſe then Joiakim muſt have been forty ſix years older. Beſides, there is this further argument, that Artaxerxes Ochus could not be the perſon, becauſe in Scripture there is mention made of the thirty-ſecond year of that Artaxerxes who granted this decree to Nehemiah, but Artaxerxes Ochus reigned only twenty one years in all. And if it were not Artaxerxes Mnemon, nor Artaxerxes Ochus, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that it was Artaxerxes Longimanus, and none other, that granted the decree to Nehemiah in the twentieth year of his reign. And thus far the firſt part of the argument being cleared, the ſecond is, that the computation of the ſeventy weeks cannot be begun from this decree; which will fully be manifeſted by the calculation of the years. For reckoning from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus to the death of Chriſt, there will be no more than 477 years, and therefore if the 490 years of the ſeventy weeks, be computed from thence, they will overſhoot the death of Chriſt thirteen years, which being the grand event to be brought to paſs, at the concluſion of theſe weeks, it is certain they can never have their beginning from whence they cannot be brought to this ending.

But ſeveral great and learned men, having a particular fancy to begin the computation of theſe weeks from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, notwithſtanding this objection, they have deviſed ſeveral ways and methods for the removal of it; and the reconciling the ending of theſe weeks, as calculated from this beginning, with the time of the events predicted.

The firſt way, which hath been propoſed for this purpoſe, it to reckon the ſeventy weeks or the 490 years of this Propheſy by Lunar years; and this hath been of very ancient date, for it hath Africanus for its author, who flouriſhed in the beginning of the third century; and he is followed by Theodoret, Beda, Zonaras, Rupertus, and others; and the generality of the Romiſh doctors ſtrike in with this opinion; into which they are chiefly led by the vulgar Latin tranſlation, which they have decreed in their Trentine council to be authentick. For, inſtead of what we read in the beginning of the Prophecy, ſeventy weeks are determined upon thy people, &c. This tranſlation renders it, Septuaginta Hebdomades abbreviatæ ſunt ſuper populum tuum, i. e. Seventy weeks are abreviated upon thy people; from whence they argue, this abreviation of the years muſt be either in the number, or in their quality; it cannot be in their number. For,

The text abſolutely determines that to be ſeventy weeks of years, that is, 490 years, and therefore it muſt be in their quality or form, that is, they muſt be Lunar years, which are ſhort years; and not Solar years, which are longer years. But the Hebrew word nechtac in the text, will not bear this interpretation. For the true meaning or ſignification of it in this place is, are decided or determined, as in our Engliſh verſion; and in this ſenſe, it is uſed in the Chaldee Paraphraſe, and no where in any other. I confeſs, the word doth not occur any where elſe in the whole Hebrew Bible, or any other word of that root, and in the Septuagint it is rendred συνετμήθησαν. But,

This is not ſufficient to juſtify either the meaning, which they would put upon the word, or the inference, which they would deduce from it; and if it could, the difficulty would not be removed by it. For Lunar years, would carry us beyond the mark, as well as Solar years, fall ſhort of it. For whereas the 477 Solar years, which were from the 20th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus to the death of Chriſt, fall thirteen years ſhort of the 490 years, at the end of which this Prophecy doth put it: the ſame 477 years, when converted into Lunar years, making 491 years and 246 days over, do carry us one year and 246 days (which is a great part of another year) beyond the ſaid 490 years. And therefore this way of computation, doth by no means adjuſt the difference, but ſtill leaves it wide of an agreement, altho' not ſo wide as it was before. Beſides,

When Daniel had this Prophecy revealed unto him by the Angel Gabriel, there was not any form of a year purely Lunar, then any where in uſe. The Chaldean year at that time was moſt certainly, the Nabonaſſarean year, conſiſting of 365 days; and the Egyptian year was the ſame, and ſo was alſo the Perſian. The Jews, indeed, had their common years purely Lunar, conſiſting of twelve Lunar months, and ſo had the Greeks, only with this difference, that whereas the Jews Lunar months were ſtrictly Lunar, as being obſerved by the Phaſis, the Greeks miſtaking a Lunar month to conſiſt exactly of thirty days, in compounding of their year of twelve of them, made it amount to 360 days, which exceeded its true Aſtronomical meaſure almoſt ſix days. But beſides the common years, they had alſo intercalated years, intermixed with the common years, which reduced all to the Solar form. For what was defective of it in the common years, was reſtored in the intercalated years. And this the Jews, as well as the Greeks, were neceſſitated to by their feſtivals. For the Niſan of the Jewiſh year, which begun their Eccleſiaſtical year, being pinn'd down by their paſſover (which was always celebrated in the middle of it) to the time of the beginning of their harveſt; and the month of Tiſri, which begun their Civil year, being likewiſe pinn'd down by the feaſt of tabernacles (which was always celebrated in the middle of that month) to the time of the ending of their vintage, this neceſſitated them to fling in an intercalary month, whenever their year fell ſhort of theſe ſeaſons. And the Greeks were likewiſe neceſſitated to do the ſame thing for the ſake of their Olympiads. For the fixed time for their celebrating of thoſe games, being the firſt full moon after the Summer ſolſtice, it always fell within the compaſs of one Lunar moon, either ſooner or later in the Solar year; and there being juſt four years between Olympiad and Olympiad, this neceſſarily made theſe years to be Solar years; and cycles and rules of intercalation were invented of purpoſe to bring them to it; and the ſame is to be ſaid of all other nations, which uſed the like form. Altho' they might meaſure their months by the motion of the moon, they always regulated their years according to that of the ſun.

The Arabs, indeed, from the time of Mahomet, have uſed a year purely Lunar, and the Turks do the ſame in imitation of them, and ſo do all others of their ſect. But of the Ancients we find none that followed this form. All among them that had Lunar years, had alſo intercalated years, to make amends for their defects; and therefore, whatſoever any of their years might be in their ſingular number, they were always Solar in their collective ſums. And who can think then that in the collective ſum of ſeventy weeks, or the 490 years, of them the Angel ſhould intend a computation, which was then no where in practice the whole world over? This Prophecy, concerning principally the Jews, and being written to them, (for it is in the Hebrew, which was in the Jews language, and not in the Chaldee, as ſome other parts of Daniel are,) it is moſt likely, that the computation of the time mentioned therein, ſhould be according to the Jewiſh form, and none other. And there is one argument, which, I think, undeniably proves it to be ſo. The weeks of years, by which the time of this Prophecy is computed, are plainly and manifeſtly the ſame with the ſabbaths of years mentioned Leviticus xxv. 8. and therefore muſt be reckoned by the ſame ſort of years; but 'tis certain, that thoſe ſabbaths of years were reckoned by Solar years, and therefore theſe weeks of years muſt be ſo too.

That theſe ſabbaths of years were reckoned by Solar years is manifeſt. For they all begun from the firſt of Tiſri, which was pinn'd down by the feaſt of tabernacles (which was always celebrated in the middle of that month) to a certain ſeaſon of the year, as hath been already obſerved, and from that ſeaſon in one year, to the ſame ſeaſon in another year, can only be meaſured by the courſe of the ſun. And all this put together, ſufficiently ſhews, that Lunar years are not the years, which this Prophecy is to be computed by.

Another way taken for the reconciling of this difference is, by beginning the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus nine years ſooner, than where it is above-placed, and ending the ſaid ſeventy weeks three years and a half later, that is, by putting the death of Chriſt into the middle of the laſt week, and continuing the remainder of that week beyond it. For, according to this account, the firſt year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, will fall in the year of of the Julian period 4241, and his 20th year, in the year of the Julian period 4260, from which numbering 69 weeks and a half, it will carry down the computation to the year of the Julian period 4746, which was the very year in which Chriſt ſuffered. And thus far Petavius, and Archbiſhop Uſher agree, as to the time both of the beginning and ending of the Prophecy, but they differ in one circumſtance about the beginning, that is, whether this 20th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, from whence they both reckon this beginning, and which they both put in the ſame year of the Julian period, were the 20th year from the death of Xerxes his father, or his 20th year from the time when it is ſuppoſed he was admitted to reign in copartnerſhip with him, nine years before.

For Petavius ſuppoſeth, that Xerxes nine years before his death, admitted his ſon Artaxerxes to reign in copartnerſhip with him, and that from this admiſſion, is to be computed the 20th year of his reign, in which he iſſued out the decree, from whence the firſt year of this Prophecy did commence. And he builds this ſuppoſition chiefly upon the authority of Thucydides, who tells us, that Themiſtocles in his flight into Perſia, addreſſed himſelf to Artaxerxes then newly reigning. But Diodorus Siculus tells us, that Themiſtocles fled into Perſia in the 2d year of the 77th Olympiad, ſeveral years before the death of Xerxes, and therefore to reconcile theſe two Authors, Petavius infers, that Artaxerxes muſt have been admitted to reign with his father ſeveral years before his death, and theſe years he determines to nine, becauſe this will beſt ſerve his purpoſe. And,

To ſupport this ſuppoſition, he inſiſts on the uſage anciently in practice among the Perſian kings of naming their ſucceſſors, before they went to any dangerous war, and will have it, that when Xerxes renewed the war againſt the Greeks after the death of Pauſanias, he then named Artaxerxes according to this uſage, in the ſame manner as his father had named him on the like occaſion, and took him into copartnerſhip with him in the government of his empire. But there is nothing in the hiſtory of thoſe times that can give any countenance to this conjecture. Herodotus indeed tells us of ſuch a uſage among the Perſians, as is above-mentioned, but this was only to name a ſucceſſor, not to take a partner into the government, and this according to that uſage was then only to be done when there was a controverſy about the ſucceſſion, as was the caſe when Darius named Xerxes, his ſucceſſor in his life-time. But,

We are told of no ſuch controverſy about the ſucceſſion in Xerxes's time. And it is plain from the paſſage in Thucydides, where the words are, on which the main ſtreſs of Petavius's opinion is laid, that he there ſpeaks of Artaxerxes, as then newly reigning after his father's death, and till his father's death he could ſcarce be of an age proper for the receiving of ſuch an addreſs, as Themiſtocles is ſaid then to have made unto him. For he was but a lad when his father died, and therefore muſt have been a mere child, when according to this reckoning Themiſtocles came into Perſia. And if he were admitted to be ſucceſſor, and alſo partner in the empire before his elder brother Darius upon the ſame reaſon, that Xerxes was before his elder brother Artabaſanes, that is, becauſe he was born after his father came to be king; and the other before, it muſt follow then, that in the ſecond year of the 77th Olympiad, when Diodorus Siculus tells us Themiſtocles came to the Perſian court, he could be at the moſt but fourteen years old. For Xerxes began his reign but fourteen years before. And there are beſides many other inconſiſtencies in this opinion, but what hath been ſaid is ſufficient to ſhew, that it can afford no ſure foundation for the ſolution of any part of this Prophecy upon it. And,

Therefore Archbiſhop Uſher takes the other way, and altho' he placeth the 20th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus in the ſame year that Petavius doth, in order to the ſolution of this Prophecy, yet he doth not compute it any otherwiſe than from the death of Xerxes his father; ſo that he anticipates the true twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus in the ſame manner as Petavius doth, tho' not by joining him in copartnerſhip with his father, but by putting him in due ſucceſſion after him, nine years ſooner than either Ptolemy, or any other author doth; and the ſame teſtimony of Thucydides, which is above-mentioned, is the ground which he goes upon for it. And therefore to reconcile this teſtimony with the time aſſigned by Diodorus Siculus for the flight of Themiſtocles, which is above-mentioned, he puts the death of Xerxes, and the ſucceſſion of his ſon Artaxerxes, nine years higher up than any other writer doth, and to patch this up takes nine years from the reign of Xerxes, and adds them to the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus his ſon, contracting the former to twelve years, and enlarging the latter with that of his ſon Xerxes to fifty.

Xerxes, the ſon of Artaxerxes Longimanus, reigned after his father's death only 45 days, and Sogdianus, another of Artaxerxes's ſons, who ſucceeded his brother, reigned no more than ſix months and fifteen days; ſo the time of both their reigns amounting to no more than eight months, they are in the canon of Ptolemy caſt into the laſt year of Artaxerxes, and neither of them is therein made mention of.

In allowing no other beginning to the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, than from the death of his father, the moſt learned Archbiſhop is moſt certainly in the right. For all thoſe among the antients, who put the flight of Themiſtocles in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, ſuppoſe it to be after the death of his father, but in no other particular can this opinion be juſtified. For,

1ſt, In contracting the reign of Xerxes to twelve years, and enlarging that of Artaxerxes Longimanus and his ſon Xerxes to fifty, he goes contrary to all thoſe that wrote of thoſe times, whether antients or moderns; and eſpecially to Ptolemy, who in his canon, aſſigns twenty-one years to Xerxes, and no more than forty-one to Artaxerxes, including the ſhort reigns of Xerxes and Sogdianus his ſons in the laſt of them. And altho' the authority of Thucydides be great, and Plutarch tells us, that he hath Charon of Lampſacus alſo on his ſide; yet the ſame Plutarch, from a great number of other ancient writers, and of as good authority, concludes the contrary. But,

2dly, Altho' the authority of Thucydides and Charon of Lampſacus ſhould be allowed to be unconteſtible, and all other authorities muſt be ſet aſide to make place for theirs; yet this will not infer, that the beginning of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus muſt therefore be put nine years higher, than all others have put it, ſince the matter may be as well adjuſted by bringing the flight of Themiſtocles nine years lower; and this way Mr. Dodwell hath follow'd, and it is much the better of the two. For this only lays aſide the authority of Diodorus Siculus, who fixeth the flight of Themiſtocles to the year above-mentioned; whereas the other runs counter to that of all others that have wrote of the matter which it relates to. But that, which looks hardeſt in this opinion, is for the ſake of any hiſtorical writer to lay aſide the authority of Ptolemy's canon, which is built upon aſtronomical demonſtrations.

Altho' Thucydides be a grave author, and of unconteſtable authority in thoſe matters of the Peloponneſian war, which he writes of (for they were done in his time, and he was nigh at hand to be well informed of them, and he himſelf was an accurate obſerver) yet it is poſſible he might be miſtaken of what he tells us of the Perſian affairs, which were done at a diſtance (as this was) and before his time. For, According to Aulus Gellius, Thucydides was 40 years old when the Pelopenneſian war began. And the Peloponneſian war beginning towards the end of the firſt year of the 87th Olympiad, reckoning 40 years upward from thence, the firſt of them will end in the very year, in which Diodorus tells us Themiſtocles made his flight, i. e. in the ſecond year of the 77th Olympiad. For he was juſt born when this flight of Themiſtocles happened. But

Ptolemy's canon being fixed by the eclipſes, the truth of it may at any time be demonſtrated by aſtronomical calculations, and no one hath ever calculated thoſe eclipſes, but hath found them fall right in the times where placed, and therefore this being the ſureſt guide, which we have in the chronology, and it being alſo verified by its agreement every where with the Holy Scriptures, it is not for the authority of any other human writing whatſoever to be receded from. And,

As theſe two great men have been thus far out in placing the beginning of theſe ſeventy weeks, ſo have they been no leſs miſtaken in the fixing the end of them. For to make up the thirteen years, which this reckoning fell ſhort of; they have not only anticipated the beginning of theſe weeks, nine years; but have alſo cut them ſhort three years and an half in the ending; by placing the death of Chriſt in the middle of the laſt week, and there concluding this part of the Prophecy three years and an half, before theſe ſeventy weeks are full compleated, which hath this great objection againſt it, that it drops the latter half part of the laſt week, as void, and of no ſignificancy. But no word of God is given in vain; every part of it hath its ſignificancy, and every word of Prophecy therein contained, muſt have its completion. For what our Saviour ſaith of the law, Matt. v. 18. is true alſo of the Prophets, and as not one jot or one tittle of the former was to paſs, without being fulfilled, ſo neither can any one jot or tittle of the latter, ever paſs away without being accompliſhed. And therefore every part of the laſt week of this Prophecy, that is, the laſt half part, as well as the firſt half part, muſt have it its firſt ſignification, and alſo its completion; and accordingly, every part of it had, as well as all the reſt, as ſhall be hereafter ſhewn. Hence

It appears, that none of thoſe ways, which have been taken for the computing of theſe ſeventy weeks, from the 20th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, can make it agree with the Prophecy, and therefore it cannot be begun from thence. That which hath made ſo many fond of beginning the computation of theſe weeks, from the 20th year of this king, and the iſſuing out of the commiſſion then granted by him to Nehemiah, is the agreeableneſs which they think is between the Prophecy and this commiſſion, beyond what they find in any of the three other grants and commiſſions above-mentioned. For the Prophecy placeth the beginning of the ſeventy weeks, at the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and rebuild Jeruſalem, and afterwards makes mention of the building of the ſtreets and the walls thereof; and both theſe, ſay they, were rebuilt by Nehemiah, by virtue of the grant made to him, in the 20th year of this Artaxerxes.

To this I anſwer, 1. That Ezra, thirteen years before this grant made to Nehemiah, ſpeaks of a wall in Jeruſalem given to the Jews, by the favour of the king of Perſia; and therefore this, if literally taken, may imply, that the grant made to Ezra, included a licence or commiſſion to build ſuch a wall, as well as that made to Nehemiah. But if it be ſaid, that the wall mentioned by Ezra, in the place which I refer to, is to be taken figuratively (as I acknowledge it is) my reply hereto is; And why may not then the word wall in the Prophecy be taken figuratively alſo, there being as much reaſon for it in the one place, as there is in the other? But 2dly, There is no ſuch word as the wall to be found, in the original text of the Prophecy. For what we there render in our Engliſh tranſlation, the wall, is in the Hebrew original, the ditch.

3dly, That though Nehemiah did much enlarge Jeruſalem by bringing new colonies of the Jews thither out of the country, and obliging them to build themſelves houſes and dwell there; yet this enlarging of the city cannot be called the reſtoring and rebuilding of it. For it was reſtored and rebuilt long before, and had many ſtreets and cieled houſes again erected in it, by virtue of the decree granted by Cyrus, as hath been above ſhewn. And after that from time to time many more were added to them by virtue of the ſame decree, confirmed by Darius Hyſtaſpes many years before Nehemiah came to be governor of Judea.

4thly, The rebuilding or repairing of the walls of Jeruſalem, accompliſhed by Nehemiah, was a work but of 52 days; and the enlarging of Jeruſalem with new colonies, was within a year after; but the reſtoring and rebuilding of Jeruſalem, predicted by the Prophecy was to be a work of ſeven weeks or 49 years; and ſo long, firſt Ezra, and after Nehemiah, laboured ſucceſſively in the work of reſtoring and rebuilding the church and ſtate of the Jews at Jeruſalem, as will hereafter be ſhewn. And therefore of this reſtoring and rebuilding only can the Prophecy be underſtood. And

Thus far having ſhewn, that the commandment or decree mentioned in the Prophecy, for the reſtoring and rebuilding of Jeruſalem, cannot be underſtood, either of the decree of Cyrus, or of that of Darius, or of that granted to Nehemiah, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, it remains that it muſt then be underſtood of that granted to Ezra, by the ſame Artaxerxes in the ſeventh year of his reign, and of none other. For beſides the three commandments, or decrees above-mentioned, there was none other commandment or decree ever granted by any of the kings of Perſia, for the reſtoration of the Jews in Judah and Jeruſalem, after the Babyloniſh captivity, but this only, that was granted to Ezra. And therefore, if it cannot be underſtood of any of the other three, it muſt then neceſſarily be this fourth, and none other. And from thence to the death of Chriſt, are exactly four hundred and ninety years to a month. For in the month Niſan was the decree granted to Ezra, and in the middle of the ſame month Niſan, Chriſt ſuffered; juſt four hundred and ninety years after.

6thly, And thus much being ſaid for the fixing of the beginning and ending of theſe ſeventy weeks, it remains, that for the fuller explanation of all other particulars, that are in this Prophecy contained, I further obſerve, that the whole of it, as delivered to us in the 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th verſes of the 9th chapter of Daniel, contains three branches, or parts. The firſt foretels, events to be accompliſhed within 70 weeks in general, and to be fully compleated and brought to paſs at the end of them; the ſecond, events to be accompliſhed preciſely at the end of three particular periods, into which the ſaid general number of ſeventy week is divided; and the third, events to be brought to paſs, after the expiration of the ſaid 70 weeks in the times immediately following thereupon.

1ſt, The firſt branch or part of this Prophecy is that, which is contained in the 24th verſe, and foretels the ſix events abovementioned, which were to be accompliſhed within the ſaid 70 weeks in general, and to be fully compleated and brought to paſs at the end of them.

2. The ſecond branch, or part of this Prophecy, is that which is contained in the 25th verſe, and in the former part of the 26th verſe, and in the former part of the 27th verſe. This divides the general number of 70 weeks into three particular periods, and aſſign particular events to be preciſely accompliſhed at the end of each of them. Theſe three particular periods are 7 weeks, 62 weeks and 1 week, that is, 49 years, 434 years and 7 years. And,

The particular events to be accompliſhed at the end of each of them are, 1ſt, The reſtoring and building of the ſtreet and ditch of Jeruſalem in troubleſome times; 2dly, The coming of the Meſſiah, and 3dly, His confirming of the covenant of the Goſpel, with many of the Jews for one week, his cauſing ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe in the half of that week, and his being cut off at the end thereof. And therefore applying theſe particular events to their proper period, the Prophecy will be clearly thus. That,

Numbring the ſaid 70 weeks from the going forth of the commandment or decree, to reſtore and build Jeruſalem, (that is, to reſtore and eſtabliſh the church and ſtate of the Jews at Jeruſalem) there ſhould be firſt 7 weeks of that number, that is, 49 years, and then the ſaid church and ſtate (here figuratively expreſſed by the ſtreets of the city) ſhould be thoroughly reformed and reſtored, and all ſuch good conſtitutions and eſtabliſhments (here figuratively expreſſed by the ditch) ſhould be made and ſettled, as ſhould be neceſſary for the fortifying and preſerving of the ſame, and that all this ſhould be done in troubleſome times, and amidſt great oppoſition from enemies. That,

After ſixty and two weeks from the end of the ſaid ſeven weeks, that is, 434 years, the Meſſiah ſhould come. And that after this having for one week, the laſt of the ſaid ſeventy weeks, (that is, for the ſpace of 7 years) confirmed the covenant of the Goſpel with many of the Jews, he ſhould in the half part of that week, (that is, in the latter part of it) cauſe the ſacrifices and oblations of the temple to ceaſe, and in the concluſion of the whole, that is, in the preciſe ending of the ſeventy weeks, be cut off and die. And accordingly all this was exactly fulfilled and brought to paſs.

1ſt, As to the period of ſeven weeks, it muſt be acknowledged, that the particular event of building and reſtoring of Jeruſalem with its ſtreets and ditch in troubleſome times (by which I underſtand the reſtoring and ſettling of the church and ſtate of the Jews) is not diſtinctly applied thereto in the Prophecy. For in the end of the 25th verſe, both the two firſt periods being mentioned together, i. e. that of the 7 weeks, and that of the 62 weeks, the event of reſtoring and building of Jeruſalem, with its ſtreet and ditch, is ſubjoined to both of them, without any diſtinct application to either; but the words immediately following in the next verſe, appropriating the time of the Meſſiah to the period of the 62 weeks, this neceſſarily leaves the other, that is, the reſtoring and building of Jeruſalem with its ſtreets and ditch, to be appropriated to the period of ſeven weeks. And accordingly within the compaſs of the ſaid period of ſeven weeks or forty nine years, this event was accompliſhed, in the full reſtoring and eſtabliſhing of the church and ſtate of the Jews, in Judah and Jeruſalem, after the Babyloniſh captivity. For,

This was begun by Ezra, by virtue of that commandment or decree, which was granted to him for it in the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Perſia, and afterwards carried on by Nehemiah, by virtue of another decree granted to him for this purpoſe, by the ſame Artaxerxes, in the 20th year of his reign. And from the beginning of this reſtoration of the Church and ſtate of the Jews by Ezra, to the ending and perfecting of it by Nehemiah, in that laſt act of this reformation, which is ſpoken of in the thirteenth of Nehemiah (that is, from the 23d verſe, to the end of the chapter) were forty-nine years, as will be clearly made out in its proper place, in the ſequel For,

During all that time this work was carrying on, and the great oppoſition which theſe two good men met with herein, not only from the Samaritans, and other enemies abroad; but alſo from falſe brethren, and wicked men at home, who hated all reformation, was the true cauſe that it was ſo long a doing; and that there were ſuch oppoſitions in the doing of it, this ſufficiently verifieth the Prophecy in its prediction, that it was to be done in troubleſome times. And,

It is obſervable, that at the ſame juncture of time, where the reſtoration of the Jewiſh Church and ſtate ended, there the Holy Scriptures of the Old Teſtament do end alſo. For this laſt reformation of Nehemiah, which I have mentioned, and where I place the full completion of the ſaid reſtoration, is the laſt act that is recorded therein, and therefore this ending of the period is of ſufficient remark for this reaſon, as well as the other, to be taken notice of in the Prophecy, which can ſcarce be ſaid of any other, that is aſſigned for it. And,

2dly, From theſe 7 weeks, or 49 years, reckoning 62 weeks, or 434 years more, (which is the term of the ſecond period,) this will lead us down to the coming of Chriſt the Meſſiah, who is here in the Prophecy predicted to come at the end of the ſaid 62 weeks. For the words of the Prophecy are, From the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and to build Jeruſalem, unto the Meſſiah the Prince, ſhall be ſeven weeks, and threeſcore and two weeks; that is, there ſhall be ſeven weeks for the compleating and finiſhing of the work, for which that commandment or decree was granted, and from thence 62 weeks more, to the coming of Chriſt the Meſſiah here intended, that is, to the time of his firſt appearance on the miniſtry of the Goſpel. For his coming here predicted, muſt be interpreted either of his coming at his birth, or of his coming on his miniſtry. No one ſaith it of the former, neither will the term of years predicted of it, ever meet it there. And, Therefore it muſt be underſtood of the latter, that is, his coming and firſt appearance in his miniſtry, and here the years predicted in the Prophecy will exactly find it. For the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, from whence theſe weeks do begin, being co-incident with the year of the Julian Period 4256, if we reckon from thence ſeven weeks and ſixty-two weeks, that is ſixty-nine weeks, or 483 years; this will lead us down to the year of the Julian Period 4739, which was the very year, in which the miniſtry of the Goſpel firſt began. This, Chriſt executed at firſt, and therein made his appearance as the Meſſiah, by his forerunner John the Baptiſt, for the ſpace of three years and an half, and after that by himſelf, in his own perſon, for three years and an half more. And theſe two being put together, make up the laſt week of this Prophecy, which begun exactly at the ending of the ſaid ſixty-two weeks. And

Therefore, here this Prophecy concerning the coming of the Meſſiah had its completion. St. Luke tells us (ch. iii. 1, 2.) The word of God firſt came to John in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Ceſar, emperor of Rome. And from the coming of that word to John, and his preaching of it to the Jews, was the beginning of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and the firſt appearance of his kingdom here on earth. And this Chriſt himſelf tells us. For his words are (Luke xxvi. 16.) The law and the Prophets were until John, ſince that the kingdom of God is preached. That is, the Jewiſh œconomy under the law, and the Prophets laſted until the coming of John, and his preaching of the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins. But from the time of his coming on this miniſtry, which was the miniſtry of the Goſpel, the kingdom of the Meſſiah began. For as in the Goſpel of St. Matthew, by the kingdom of Heaven, ſo here by the kingdom of God, is meant the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the Church of Chriſt, which he hath here eſtabliſhed among us. And,

Therefore this kingdom thus beginning with the preaching of John, there muſt we neceſſarily place the firſt coming of that King, Chriſt our Lord, who founded this his kingdom here among us. And this was, as hath been ſaid, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Ceſar. But here it is to be obſerved, That this fifteenth year of Tiberius could not be his fifteenth year from the death of Auguſtus his predeceſſor. For then there would have been but four years for the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and the perſonal miniſtry of Jeſus Chriſt put both together, which time would have been too narrow a ſpace for the actings, which are recorded of them in the Goſpel. Beſides, in ſo ſhort a time, as muſt be allowed to the miniſtry of John in this caſe, it is not likely, that he could have acquired that great fame, as appears not only by the Goſpels, but alſo from the writings of Joſephus the hiſtorian, that he had obtained, not only in Judea and Galilee, but alſo through all the circumjacent regions before his death.

The fifteenth year therefore of the reign of Tiberius, in which John the Baptiſt began to preach, muſt be reckoned from that time when he began to reign jointly with Auguſtus, and was according to Velleius Paterculus, and Suetonius, admitted by him into copartnerſhip with him in the empire; and by a law (which Auguſtus cauſed to be propoſed and enacted by the Conſuls) had conferred on him an equal power in the government of the provinces with Auguſtus himſelf. For from that time the publick acts went in his name, as well as in that of Auguſtus, eſpecially in the Imperial provinces, of which Syria was one. And therefore from that time, the years of his reign were reckoned in theſe provinces. And this happened, as the moſt learned Archbiſhop Uſher obſerves, in the year of the Julian Period 4725, and the fifteenth year from thence brings us to the year of the Julian Period 4739, in which (as is above noted) the word of God came to John the Baptiſt, and the preaching of the Goſpel firſt began. And then it was that Chriſt by this his forerunner, manifeſted his coming, and made his firſt appearance in that great work of our ſalvation, on which he was ſent. And from the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, when the commandment went forth from that king for the reſtoring of the Church and ſtate of the Jews, to this time, even juſt ſeven weeks and ſixty-two weeks, that is, ſixty-nine weeks, or 483 years in all, exactly as this Prophecy predicted.

3dly, From this coming of our Saviour began the third Period of theſe ſeventy weeks, i. e. the one week, which is ſpoken of in the 27th verſe, the events thereof as there predicted are, That for that week the Meſſiah ſhould confirm the covenant with many, and in the half part thereof (for thus it ought to be rendred, where, in our Engliſh tranſlation we read the midſt) ſhould cauſe the ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe; and ſo accordingly it came to paſs. For,

During theſe ſeven years of his evangelical miniſtry, he did firſt by his forerunner the Meſſenger, whom he had ſent before him, and then by himſelf in his perſonal miniſtry confirm the covenant of the Goſpel with many of the Jews, who were converted, and admitted thereto; and then in the half part of the ſaid week, that is, in the laſt half part thereof, when he appeared in his own perſon in the ſame miniſtry, on which John was ſent before him, he cauſed the ſacrifices and oblations of the temple to ceaſe; that is, firſt by his preaching of the Goſpel, which was to ſuperſede them, and then laſtly, by that great ſacrifice of himſelf, which he once offered for all in his death upon the croſs, at the end of this week, whereby they were all abſolutely and finally extinguiſhed for ever. For all other ſacrifices and oblations, till then, being only antitypes, and figurative repreſentations of this great ſacrifice after to be offered, and of no virtue, or efficacy, but as they referred to it, when this was offered, all others vaniſhed of courſe, as the repreſentative doth at the appearance of the principal, or the type, or figure, at the preſence of the thing that is typified or expreſſed by it; and the virtue and propitiation of this one ſacrifice, hath ſufficed for all ever ſince. The whole latter part of the laſt week being the time of Chriſt's perſonal miniſtry here on earth, as the whole of it was employed in the preaching of the Goſpel, which was to cauſe the law to ceaſe; ſo the whole of it may very properly be ſaid to be employed in cauſing all thoſe ſacrifices and oblations to ceaſe, which the law enjoined, tho' the whole was not compleated till at the end of this half part by his death and paſſion. For then, at the offering up of this great ſacrifice, the virtue and efficacy of all others ceaſed for ever. But here it may be objected, that my placing the death of Chriſt at the end of this laſt period, is againſt the expreſs words of the Prophecy. For that placeth the cutting off of the Meſſiah at the end of the ſecond period, that is, of the 62 weeks. For,

The words of it are (ver. 26.) After threeſcore and two weeks ſhall Meſſiah be cut off. To this I anſwer, The word after, in this place, cannot be underſtood to mean ſtrictly the time immediately after, but in a large and indefinite ſenſe, to denote the whole next week, which after followed. For otherwiſe his coming, and his cutting off, muſt have happened at the ſame time both together, and no intermediate ſpace would have been left for his miniſtry. For in the verſe preceding it is poſitively ſaid, that from the going forth of the commandment to reſtore and build Jeruſalem unto Meſſiah the prince, ſhould be ſeven weeks, and threeſcore and two weeks, and therefore if it be the end of the ſame 62 weeks, he ſhould be cut off alſo. Then his coming and his cutting off, muſt have happened both together at the ſame time, and the conſequence, which I have mentioned, muſt neceſſarily follow, i. e. that no intermediate ſpace would have then been left for his miniſtry, which cannot be ſaid.

The word after muſt then mean the whole week after, at the end of which, Chriſt the Meſſiah named in that Prophecy, was cut off by his death on the croſs.——And there is no need of expreſſing it otherwiſe in that place, becauſe the cutting off and death of the Meſſiah had been exactly determined to that time, by what was ſaid before in the 24th verſe. For it is manifeſt, that according to the true intent and meaning of that part of the Prophecy, his death muſt be there placed. For, according to that, it muſt be there placed, where it placeth the events, that were to be accompliſhed and brought to paſs by it; but the events, which were to be accompliſhed and brought to paſs by the cutting off of the Meſſiah, are by that part of the ſaid Prophecy (ver. 24.) placed at the end of the 70 weeks, and conſequently, at the end of the laſt of them, and therefore the cutting off of the Meſſiah muſt there be placed alſo, and there it accordingly happened in the death and paſſion of Chriſt our Saviour, and this part of the Prophecy was exactly fulfilled by it.

The whole therefore of this ſecond part or branch of the Prophecy is thus; the ſeventy weeks being divided into three periods, that is, into ſeven weeks, ſixty-two weeks, and one week, the firſt reacheth from the time of the going forth of the commandment to Ezra, for the reſtoring of the Church and ſtate of the Jews in the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, to the finiſhing of that work by Nehemiah 49 years after; The ſecond, from the end of that period to the coming of the Meſſiah, 434 years after; And the laſt from that his coming, to his cutting off by his death on the croſs, which was one week, or ſeven years after. All theſe put together, fully make up the 70 weeks, or the 490 years of this Prophecy, and according to this computation, every particular of it hath been fully verified in a completion exactly agreeable thereto, and the whole number of years pointed out thereby, exactly anſwered to a month. For as the going out of the commandment to Ezra, from whence they began, was in the month Niſan, ſo the crucifixion of Chriſt was alſo in the ſame month, juſt 490 years after.

3. After what is predicted of theſe three periods, follows the third branch or part of the Prophecy, which is contained in the latter end of the 26th, and in the latter end of the 27th verſes, and foretels events to be brought to paſs after the expiration of the ſaid 70 weeks, in the times immediately following thereupon; that is, the deſtruction of the city and ſanctuary, by the people of the Prince that was to come, who with their armies and deſolating abominations ſhould invade Judea, as with a flood, and by a terrible and conſuming war, bring utter ruin and deſolation upon it; and all the people of the Jews, that ſhould dwell therein, and conſummate the ſame upon them in an abſolute deſtruction.

All which, accordingly came to paſs, and did in a very ſignal manner verify the Prophecy, in a full completion of every particular hereof. For on the end of theſe 70 weeks, which were determined upon that people, and their Holy City, they having ſlain the Lord of Life, they were thereon caſt off by God from being his peculiar people; and the Gentiles were called in their ſtead; ſo that thenceforth they were no more his people, nor their city of Jeruſalem any longer Holy unto him, but both were given up and deſtined to utter ruin and deſtruction. For, immediately on their having executed the ſentence of death upon Chriſt our Lord; this ſentence of condemnation paſſed upon them, and from that time all ſecond cauſes operated towards the haſtning the execution of it, till at length the Roman armies, the people that were to come, under the command of Titus their prince, invaded them as with a torrent, and begirt Jeruſalem with their enſigns, the abomination of deſolation, which our Saviour from this Prophecy, forewarns his diſciples of. For, they were idolatrous images abominated by the Jews, under which thoſe people marched againſt them, invaded their land, beſieged their Holy City; and by a moſt calamitous war, brought utter deſolation upon both; which, according to the relations of Joſephus (who was an hiſtorian of their own nation, and preſent in all the actions of the war) they executed in the moſt terrible and tragical manner of deſtruction, that was ever brought upon any nation, and conſummated it to ſuch a degree upon them, that they have never been able to recover themſelves ever ſince, even to this day; though now 1645 years have paſſed, ſince theſe judgments were by the juſt hand of God, thus executed upon them.

But for the full clearing of all that hath hitherto been ſaid in the explication of this Prophecy, there ſtill remains one great objection to be anſwered. For it is urged, that the Artaxerxes who granted the commiſſion to Ezra in the ſeventh year of his reign, from whence we begin the computation of the ſeventy weeks, was the ſame Artaxerxes, who, in the 20th year of his reign, granted another commiſſion to Nehemiah. For, the Scriptures making Ezra and Nehemiah contemporary, render this beyond diſpute. But that this Artaxerxes, ſhould be Artaxerxes Longimanus, the age, which Nehemiah and Sanballat muſt then have lived to, make it, they ſay, wholly improbable. For, Nehemiah in the Book of Holy Scripture, called by his name (which all acknowledge, to have been written by him) ſpeaking of the reign of Darius Codomannus king of Perſia, and of the days of Jaddua the high-prieſt of the Jews, as of times paſt, he muſt have been alive after the death of both of them, but Jaddua not dying till two years after the death of Alexander the Great, in the year of the Julian period 4392, from the 20th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, to that time, had paſſed 132 years, to which if we add thirty years more for the age of Nehemiah, when he came to be governor of Judea, (which is the leaſt that can be allowed to qualify him for ſuch a truſt,) he muſt have been at the leaſt 153 years old, when he wrote that book, if the Artaxerxes, from whom he had his commiſſion, were Artaxerxes Longimanus. And,

Though we ſuppoſe the writing of this book to have been, while Darius Codomannus and Jaddua were both alive, and put it up as high as we can, that is, into the firſt year of the reign of that Darius, yet this will not much mend the matter. For, on this ſuppoſition, Nehemiah muſt have been 140 years old, when he wrote that book, which is ſtill a very improbable age in thoſe times, and conſequently infers the ſuppoſal, on which it is built, (i. e. that it was Artaxerxes Longimanus, from whom he had his commiſſion,) to be very improbable alſo. And the age of Sanballat upon the ſame ſuppoſal will not only be as improbable, but alſo much more ſo. For, when Nehemiah came into Judea, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, he found him governor of Samaria under the king of Perſia, and he was alive, as Joſephus tells us, till the beſieging of Gaza, by Alexander the Great, in the fourth year of Darius Codomannus, at which time he died. And,

Therefore, if that Artaxerxes, were Artaxerxes Longimanus, Sanballat at the time of that ſiege, could not be leſs than 148 years old: For, from the twentieth of Artaxerxes Longimanus, to the fourth of Darius Codomannus, according to Ptolemy's canon were 113 years, and when Nehemiah came to Jeruſalem, Sanballat having been for ſometime, perchance for ſeveral years, fixed in the government of Samaria, he cannot be well ſuppoſed to have been leſs than thirty-five years old at that time, and putting both theſe numbers together, they make 148 years; and both theſe ages, that is, that of Nehemiah, and this of Sanballat, it muſt be acknowledged, ſeem very improbable, and moſt eſpecially that of the latter. For, as to Nehemiah, an extraordinary bleſſing upon that good man may be alledged, for ſuch an extraordinary age in him; but this cannot be ſaid of the other. Each of theſe inſtances apart look very improbable, but coming both together are much more ſo. And,

Therefore, as we have argued above, that the Darius, who granted the decree for the finiſhing of the temple, could not be Darius Nothus, becauſe of the great and improbable age, which Jeſhua and Zerubbabel muſt have been of, at the executing of that decree: So it is argued here in the ſame manner, that the Artaxerxes, from whom Ezra and Nehemiah had their commiſſions, could not be Artaxerxes Longimanus, becauſe of the great and improbable age, which Nehemiah and Sanballat muſt then have been at the time of their death. And,

Therefore, as we have ſaid of the former difficulty, that it can be no otherwiſe ſolved, but by making the Darius, who granted the decree for the finiſhing of the temple to be another Darius, that is, Darius Hyſtaſpes, who reigned ninety-eight years before that Darius who is called Nothus; ſo in like manner, is it ſaid of this later difficulty, that it can be no otherwiſe cleared, but by making the Artaxerxes, who in the ſeventh, and in the twentieth years of his reign, granted his commiſſions to Ezra and Nehemiah, to have been another Artaxerxes, that is, Artaxerxes Mnemon, whoſe ſeventh year, and whoſe twentieth year of his reign, were juſt ſixty years after the ſeventh year, and the twentieth year of the other Artaxerxes, that was called Longimanus. Thus far the objection; and if it hold good, I muſt acknowledge, it overthrows the computation on which hath been built all, which I have hitherto ſaid for the explication of this Prophecy.

In anſwer hitherto it hath been ſaid by ſome, 1ſt, As to Nehemiah, that in that paſſage of his book, (chap. xii. 22.) where the reign of Darius the Perſian, and the days of Jaddua the high-prieſt of the Jews are mentioned, that reign of Darius, was the reign of Darius Nothus; and thoſe days of Jaddua, were his days from his birth; which might very well have happened in the reign of the ſaid Darius Nothus. And 2dly, As to Sanballat, that there were two of that name, the firſt of which was the Sanballat ſpoken of by Nehemiah; and the ſecond, the Sanballat ſpoken of by Joſephus. But neither of theſe anſwers can poſſibly hold good. For,

1ſt, It is manifeſt, that the text of Nehemiah, (chap. xii. 22.) where the Levites are ſpoken of, that were in the days of Eliaſhib, Joiada, Johanan and Jaddua, cannot be underſtood to mean any other days than thoſe, wherein they were high-prieſts. For the high-prieſt among the Jews, was the head of the prieſts and Levites, and after the captivity, when there was no king in Judah, he had the abſolute ſupremacy over them in all affairs relating to their office. And therefore, it was then as proper for them to reckon all ſuch affairs by the times of their high-prieſts, as it is now with us to reckon all actions in the ſtate by the times of our kings, and conſequently when any thing is ſaid to have been done in ſuch an high-prieſt's time, it is altogether as improper to underſtand it of any other time, than that of his high-prieſthood, as it would be when any thing is ſaid to have been in ſuch a king's time, to underſtand it of any other time, than that of his reign. And therefore, to refer what is here ſaid of the days of Jaddua, as far back as to his days from his birth, is a very forced ſenſe, which the text cannot naturally bear. When ſuch a thing is ſaid to have been in the time of king Henry the Eighth, will any one underſtand it of the time before his reign, or think it any other than an abſurdity ſo to conſtrue it? And is it not altogether as abſurd to underſtand, what is here ſaid of the Levites, to have been in the days of Jaddua, of any other days, than of thoſe wherein he was high-prieſt? And it is here to be obſerved, that the text joins with the days of Jaddua, the days of Eliaſhib, Joiada, and Johanan. For,

It is ſaid in the days of Eliaſhib, Joiada, Johanan and Jaddua, &c. And therefore if it ſhould be here aſked, whether the days of Eliaſhib, Joiada and Johanan are to be underſtood of the days of their high-prieſthood, or of the days of their life from their birth; no doubt it will be anſwered by every body, of the days of their high-prieſthood. And why then muſt not the days of Jaddua be underſtood ſo too? It may further be added, what need is there in this caſe to name Jaddua's days at all? Becauſe if they be underſtood of thoſe before he was high-prieſt, they were co-incident with the days of Joiada and Johanan, which were named before. And therefore if we underſtand thoſe days of Jaddua in the text, of any other days than thoſe wherein he was high-prieſt, they muſt have been named twice in the ſame text, which would be ſuch a faulty repetition, as it muſt not be charged with. Nothing ſeems more plain, than that the text ſpeaks of the days of theſe four men, as in ſucceſſion one after another; and therefore we muſt not run the days of one into the days of the other. Beſides,

The whole deſign of interpreting the days of Jaddua in this text, of the days before he was high-prieſt, is to ſupport a notion, that the ſaid text was written before he was high-prieſt, and ſo far back as immediately after his birth, about the latter end of the reign of Darius Nothus; they who are the patrons of this notion, having no other way to make them contemporary. But then to name his days, with the days of the other high-prieſt, ſo many years before he came to be high-prieſt, and when it muſt be on many reſpects uncertain, whether he would ever be ſo or no, is what all the writings in the world beſides cannot give us an inſtance of. From all this it plainly follows, that thoſe days of Jaddua in the text above-mentioned, can be meant of no other days, than the days of his high-prieſthood; and that therefore he muſt have been in that office before this text was written. And alſo it is as evident, that the Darius in the ſame text mentioned, can be none other than Darius Codomannus; in whoſe reign Jaddua was high-prieſt. For the text bringing down the reckoning through the ſucceſſion of ſeveral high-prieſts, terminates the whole in the days of Jaddua, and the reign of Darius the Perſian, which clearly makes them contemporary. And therefore Darius the Perſian in that text mentioned could be no other than Darius Codomannus, becauſe no other Darius was king of Perſia, while Jaddua was high-prieſt at Jeruſalem. And if ſo, it muſt be in the reign of this Darius of the ſooneſt, that this text was written; and conſequently Nehemiah, if he were the writer of it, muſt then have been living. And ſuppoſing it to have been in the reign of this Darius, and in the firſt year of it, Nehemiah, if then living, muſt have been 140 years old; but if it were after the death of both of Darius and Jaddua, as the obvious ſenſe of the text ſeems to imply, he muſt then have been much older, that is 153 at the leaſt, as I have above ſaid, but neither of theſe is likely, and therefore it muſt be acknowledged, that this anſwer doth not remove the difficulty, Neither 2dly, Can the other anſwer remove that, which ariſeth from the age of Sanballat. For to ſolve that objection by making two Sanballats, is plainly giving up the cauſe, it being only a ſhift, which can never go down with any one that duly conſiders the matter. For it is not to be doubted, but that the Sanballat, who is ſaid in the laſt chapter of Nehemiah, to have married his daughter to one of the ſons of Joiada the high-prieſt, is the ſame Sanballat, who is mentioned ſo often in the former part of that book, as the great oppoſer of Nehemiah in all his undertakings, for the welfare of the children of Iſrael. For he is in this laſt place called by the ſame proper name of Sanballat, as in the former places of that book, and hath there alſo given unto him the ſame additional name of the Heronite, taken from the name of Heronaim a city of Moab (whereof it is ſuppoſed he was a native) And it is not likely, that both theſe names ſhould occur in any other within the time of the ſame governor of Judea, but in the ſame perſon only. And that this ſame Sanballat the Heronite is the ſame Sanballat, which Joſephus treateth of, is as evident. For the Sanballat of Nehemiah was governor of Samaria, and ſo was the Sanballat of Joſephus. The Sanballat of Nehemiah married his daughter to one of the ſons of an high-prieſt of the Jews, and ſo did the Sanballat of Joſephus; and who then is there that will not from hence conclude that they were both the ſame perſon? And thus far I have ſhewn, that neither part of the objection abovementioned, is removed by either of theſe anſwers. And I have been the longer herein, becauſe they have been men of great name and great learning, who have been the authors of them, and others as great have acquieſced in them as ſufficient. But to come to the truth of the matter, I anſwer,

1ſt, As to the age of Nehemiah, that the text from whence this objection is made, doth not infer it. For notwithſtanding what is ſaid therein, Nehemiah might have been dead, as no doubt he was, a great number of years before it was written. For all that is contained in the ſaid 12th chapter of Nehemiah from the beginning of it to the 27th verſe of the ſame, was never written by Nehemiah, but is an interpolation there inſerted long after his death, by thoſe who received this book into the canon of Scripture. For as Ezra, as far as he went in that collection, which he made of the Holy Scriptures; inſerted in ſeveral places ſuch interpolations, as he thought neceſſary, for the clearer underſtanding of them; ſo they who laboured after him in the perfection of the ſaid collection, did the ſame in the books which they afterwards added to it, till they had compleated the whole, about the time of Simon the Juſt. For he being the laſt of thoſe, whoſe labours were employed in the ſettling of the canon of the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, and this book being the laſt that was received into it, as being the laſt that was written, 'tis juſtly reckoned to have been in his time, that it was firſt thus received into the number of the Sacred Books, and then this interpolation was added by him, and thoſe who were aſſiſting to him in this work. Of all which particulars a fuller account will be hereafter given in their proper places. And that this is an interpolation, the interruption, which is made thereby in the ſenſe and connection of that part of the book, doth ſufficiently ſhew, and moſt learned men, that have conſidered this matter, are now convinced that it is ſo. But

2dly, As to the other objection, which is drawn from the age of Sanballat, the anſwer is much eaſier. For here there is no oppoſition between Scripture and Scripture, but only between Scripture and the writings of a prophane author. Nehemiah placeth Sanballat the Heronite in the time of Artaxerxes Longimanus, Joſephus makes him live down to the time of Alexander the Great, above an hundred years after. Here there is no neceſſity of reconciling one with the other. For it both cannot conſiſt together, (as the great age which Sanballat in this caſe muſt have lived to, doth ſufficiently prove they cannot) the prophane writer muſt give place to the Sacred. And therefore, the true anſwer in this matter is, Joſephus was miſtaken. The Sacred Writ, as being dictated by the Holy Spirit of God, muſt even be of infallible Truth, which cannot be ſaid of the writings of Joſephus. For they have in them many great and manifeſt miſtakes, and no part of them more than the eleventh Book of Antiquities, in which is written, what gives ground for this objection. For therein he frequently varies from Scripture, hiſtory and common-ſenſe, which manifeſtly proves it to have been the leaſt conſidered, and the worſt digeſted of all, that he hath written. Therein he makes Cambyſes, who was the firſt that reigned after Cyrus, to have been the Perſian king, that by his decree forbad the going on with the rebuilding of the temple, whereas the Scripture plainly tells us that it was Artaxerxes, who is there named in the third place after Cyrus. He inſerts into this book out of the Apocryphal Eſdras, the fabulous and abſurd ſtory of the three chamberlains, contending before Darius Hyſtaſpes about what is ſtrongeſt; and making Zerubbabel to be one of them, and to obtain the victory in this conteſt; he introduceth Darius, giving him for the reward of this victory, a decree for another return of the captive Iſraelites to Judea, which is neither ſpoken of in Scriptute, nor conſiſting with it, and placed at the Head of thoſe, who he ſaith then returned, Zerubbabel the Governour, and Jeſhua the high-prieſt, whereas 'tis certain from Ezra, Haggai, and Zechariah, that they were then both at Jeruſalem, and there on the exhortations of the two Prophets laſt mentioned ſetting forward the rebuilding of the temple. And then he goes on out of the ſame romance to relate as conſequential to this ſecond return (which is wholly fictitious) all that, which the Scriptures tell us was done after the firſt, and in ſome particulars very much exceed the fictions of the romancer himſelf. For he makes thoſe who came from Babylon to Judea, in this fictitious return, to be four millions eight thouſand ſix hundred eighty four men, a monſtrous number! and the women and children that belonged to them, to be no more than forty thouſand ſeven hundred forty and two, a diſproportion which is utterly incredible, eſpecially among thoſe who had plurality of wives. And he makes Xerxes, who ſucceeded Darius Hyſtaſpes, to have been that Artaxerxes of the Holy Scripture, who ſent Ezra and Nehemiah to Jeruſalem, whereas the 32d year of that Artaxerxes is mentioned in Scripture, and 'tis certain, the reign of Xerxes did not exceed one and twenty. He brings Nehemiah to Jeruſalem, till the 25th year of that Artaxerxes, whereas the Scriptures tell us he came thither in the 20th, and he makes him to be employed there three years and an half in the rebuilding of the walls of the City, whereas we read in the Sacred Text, that it was done in fifty-two days. And,

Since Joſephus hath in this book, made all theſe miſtakes, beſides many more, which would be too long to relate. I hope it will not be thought ſtrange, that I aſſert, what he ſaith in this ſame book, in reference to Sanballat, is a miſtake alſo. For,

Therein he tells us of him, "That being made governour of Samaria for the laſt Darius, he married his daughter to one whoſe father had been high-prieſt of the Jews, and that this ſon-in-law having for this marriage, as being contrary to the Jewiſh law, been deprived of his prieſthood, and driven out of Jeruſalem, he obtained from Alexander, to whom he revolted while at the ſiege of Tyre licence to build on mount Gerizim near Samaria a temple like that at Jeruſalem, and to make his ſon-in-law, high-prieſt of it, and that after having attended Alexander at this ſiege of Tyre, and alſo at that of Gaza, with eight thouſand men, about the time of the taking of the laſt of theſe he died." Thus far this hiſtorian. That Sanballat thus married his daughter to a ſon of an high-prieſt of the Jews, and built a temple on Mount Gerizim for him, I readily acknowledge; but that he built this temple by licence from Alexander, or lived down to thoſe times is as great a miſtake in the relator, as any that I have above-mentioned. That he ſhould build this temple by licence from Alexander, is inconſiſtent with what Joſephus himſelf tells us of this matter. For according to him, Sanballat did not revolt to Alexander 'till he was ſet down before Tyre, and that ſiege and the ſiege of Gaza both together, laſted only nine months. And therefore if we ſuppoſe Sanballat to have obtained this licence from Alexander in the very beginning of theſe nine months, he could have had but nine months wherein to build a temple like that at Jeruſalem, which coſt the labour of many years, and the work of a multitude of hands to erect it. And,

How is it poſſible ſuch a ſtructure could be built in ſo ſhort a time, and that eſpecially ſince all that while, neither Sanballat himſelf could be preſent to attend it, nor thoſe by whoſe hands and help the work was to be effected? For during that time, Joſephus tells us, Sanballat attended Alexander in the camp, and had 8000 of his Samaritans with him, who being the main ſtrength and flower of that people, it is wholly improbable, that in their abſence thoſe who were left behind ſhould have capacity enough to go through with ſuch a work, eſpecially when the chief projector, Sanballat himſelf, by whoſe direction all was to be done, was abſent alſo.

It being therefore utterly improbable, if not altogether impoſſible, that this temple could have been built by a licence from Alexander in the life-time of Sanballat, it muſt follow that if it were built at all by virtue of ſuch a licence from Alexander, it muſt have been built by the Samaritans after Sanballat was dead. But the ill circumſtances on which the Samaritans were with Alexander immediately after the time, when Joſephus ſaith Sanballat died, and the great misfortunes which they thereon fell into, make this as improbable as the former. For Alexander was no ſooner gone into Egypt, where he immediately marched after his taking of Gaza; but the Samaritans riſing in a mutiny againſt Andromachus, a favourite of his, whom he had left governor of Syria, ſet fire to the houſe where he was, and burnt him to death; which juſtly provoked Alexander to ſo ſevere a revenge againſt them, that on his return he put a great number of them to death, expelled all the reſt of them out of their city, and gave it to be inhabited by a colony of his Macedonians, and added their country to that of the Jews. And as to the 8000 men which had followed his camp, he ſent them into Thebais, the remoteſt province in Egypt, and there ſettled them on ſuch lands, as he cauſed to be diſtributed among them in that province, without ſuffering them any more to return into their own country. The remainder that ſurvived this ruin, were permitted to dwell in Sechem, a ſmall village near Samaria, which hath from that time been the head ſeat of that people, and there they have remained ever ſince, even unto this day. And,

Whether a people, who had in ſo high a degree provoked Alexander, ſhould be allowed to build ſuch a temple by his favour, or if they had, could at all be in a capacity, when thus broken and ruined, to accompliſh it, is an eaſy queſtion to anſwer. Whoever ſhall conſider this in both its branches, will no doubt, think it in each of them improbable, and that with a licence from Alexander, neither before the death of Sanballat, nor after it, could any ſuch temple have been built by the Samaritans. However,

I deny not, but that, as hath been already ſaid, ſuch a temple was built by Sanballat upon Mount Gerizim, and upon the occaſion mentioned, that is, of the marriage of his daughter with a ſon of the high-prieſt of the Jews; but this was done long before the time of the laſt Darius, who was called Codomannus in the time of a former Darius ſurnamed Nothus, who was king of Perſia 88 years before him. For it appears froom Scripture, that this marriage was conſummated while Joiada the ſon of Eliaſhib was high-prieſt of the Jews, and he entred on his office in the eleventh year of this Darius; and four years afterwards, that is, in the fifth year of the high-prieſthood of the ſaid Joiada, and in the fifteenth year of Darius Nothus) was it, that his ſon was thus married to the daughter of Sanballat, as will be hereafter ſhewn in its proper place. And upon this marriage followed all the reſt, which Joſephus relates of the building of the temple upon mount Gerizim by Sanballat, and the making of his ſon-in-law high-prieſt of it. So that

All this was done, not in the time of Darius Codomannus in the laſt year of his reign, or by licence from Alexander, but in the time of Darius Nothus, and by licence from him only granted in the fifteenth year of his reign to Sanballat for this purpoſe; and this clears the whole objection. For Darius Nothus in Ptolemy's canon, immediately ſucceeded Artaxerxes Longimanus, in whoſe 20th year Sanballat is firſt made mention of, and ſuppoſing him to have been then thirty-five years old, he would in the 15th year of Darius Nothus be no more than 71, which is an age that more than the tenth part of mankind commonly arrive at, if we may make a judgment hereof from the bills of mortality in London, where commonly the aged make a tenth part of the burials, and none that die there uſe to be put into thoſe bills under that title, unleſs they out-live ſeventy.

That which led Joſephus into this error, I take it, was the common notion, which hath long obtained among his countrymen, that the Darius whom Alexander conquered, was the ſon of Ahaſuerus by Eſther; and therefore, on his making Artaxerxes Longimanus to be Ahaſuerus, he makes the Darius that ſucceeded him; that is, Darius Nothus, to be the laſt Darius, who was ſubdued by that conqueror. And that this was his opinion, appears plainly from his hiſtory. For, having therein given us an account of all the kings of Perſia from Cyrus to Artaxerxes Longimanus, in that exact ſeries of ſucceſſion, in which they reigned one after the other, without omitting ſo much as the Magian uſurper, tho' he reigned only ſeven months, after Artaxerxes Longimanus, he names none other, but that laſt Darius in whom the Perſian empire ended. Which is a plain argument, that he took that laſt Darius to have been the Darius, that ſucceeded Artaxerxes Longimanus, and if ſo, the age of Sanballat will then put no difficulty upon us. But Iſaac Voſſius, by an emendation of the text of Joſephus, introduceth thereinto another Artaxerxes, as mentioned by him to reign in Perſia, between Artaxerxes Longimanus, and the laſt Darius. For whereas in the ſeventh chapter of the eleventh book of his antiquities, in all the printed copies we read of Bagoſes, that he was general τȣ̃ λαȣ̃ 'Αρταξέρξȣ, that is, of the people of Artaxerxes, he would have it to be τῶν ἄλλȣ 'Αρταξέρξȣ, which may be rendred in Engliſh either of the other Artaxerxes, or of another Artaxerxes And to juſtiſy the emendation, he brings the authority of Ruffinus, who in his verſion of Joſephus tranſlates this place, as if the copy which he uſed, had it τῶν ἄλλȣ 'Αρταξέρξȣ. But Ruffinus's Latin verſion is no ſufficient ſtandard, whereby judge of the original, ſince in many places he phantaſtically varies from it. And ſince there were two Artaxerxes's, that reigned in Perſia after Artaxerxes Longimanus, that is Artaxerxes Mnemon, and Artaxerxes Ochus, whether by this ἄλλος 'Αρταξέρξης, we underſtand the other Artaxerxes, or another Artaxerxes; the true propriety of ſpeech will bear neither of them in that place, and it it would, a long received reading, ought in no ancient Author to be varied from, without the authority of ſome good manuſcript to juſtiſy the emendation of it, and there is none alledged in this caſe. So that all that Voſſius ſaith about it, can amount to no more than a conjecture, which we can build nothing certain upon; and to alter old Authors upon conjectures only, is never to be allowed, eſpecially where the context will bear the one reading as well as the other. For ſince the various fancies of men may lead to various conjectures, if there ſhould be ſuch a liberty allowed, whole books may be thus altered away, and utterly defaced, by ſuch conjectural emendations, and many good Authors have already too much ſuffered by it.

And thus far I have explained this important Prophecy in all its parts and branches, and fully ſhewn all thoſe events, in which every particular of it had its completion. That there are ſeveral difficulties in it muſt be acknowledged. The perplexities which many learned men have been led into in their explications of it, do ſufficiently prove it. And the underſtanding in a literal ſenſe, what is there meant in a figurative, hath not been the leaſt cauſe hereof. Not to be delivered in plain terms is what is common to all Prophecies, there being none of them without their difficulties and obſcurities. There is too great an itch in mankind, to look into futurities, which belong to God only to know. And altho' God hath been pleaſed ſo far to gratify a curioſity herein, as to give us Prophecies for the magnifying of his omniſcience among us; yet they are moſt of them deliver'd in ſuch dark and obſcure terms, as not to be thoroughly underſtood, till after they are fulfilled. Then the events become ſure comments upon the text. And, I hope, when the reader hath fully conſidered all that is above propoſed, concerning this very important Prophecy, he will be thoroughly ſatisfied how every particular of it had its completion. Yet,

This will appear more fully from that account which the late Sir Iſaac Newton has left us concerning the years of Chriſt, which is as follows,

The times of the birth and paſſion of Chriſt, with ſuch like niceties, being not material to religion, were little regarded by the Chriſtians of the firſt age. They who began firſt to celebrate them, placed them in the cardinal periods of the year; as the annunciation of the Virgin Mary, on the 25th of March, which when Julius Cæſar corrected the calendar was the vernal equinox; the feaſt of John Baptiſt on the 24th of June, which was the ſummer Solſtice; the feaſt of St. Michael on Sept. 29, which was the autumnal equinox; and the birth of Chriſt on the winter Solſtice, Decemb. 25, with the feaſts of St. Stephen, St. John and the Innocents, as near it as they could place them. And becauſe the Solſtice in time removed from the 25th of December to the 24th, the 23d, the 22d, and ſo on backwards, hence ſome in the following centuries placed the birth of Chriſt on Decemb. 23, and at length on Decemb. 20; and for the ſame reaſon they ſeem to have ſet the feaſt of St. Thomas on Decemb. 21, and that of St. Matthew on Sept. 21. So alſo at the entrance of the ſun into all the ſigns in the Julian calendar, they placed the days of other Saints; as the converſion of Paul on Jan. 25, when the Sun entred ♒; St. Matthias on Feb. 25, when he entred ♓; St. Mark on Apr. 25, when he entred ♉; Corpus Chriſti on May 26, when he entred ♊; St. James on July 25, when he entred ♋; St. Bartholomew on Aug. 24, when he entred ♍; Simon and Jude on Octob. 28, when he entred ♏: and if there were any other remarkable days in the Julian calendar, they placed the Saints upon them, as St. Barnabas on June 11, where Ovid ſeems to place the feaſt of Veſta and Fortuna, and the goddeſs Matuta; and St. Philip and James on the firſt of May, a day dedicated both to the Bona Dea, or Magna Mater, and to the goddeſs Flora, and ſtill celebrated with her rites. All which ſhews that theſe days were fixed in the firſt Chriſtian calendars by Mathematicians at pleaſure, without any ground in tradition; and that the Chriſtians afterwards took up with what they found in the calendars.

Neither was there any certain tradition about the years of Chriſt. For the Chriſtians who firſt began to enquire into theſe things, as Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Tertullian, Julius Africanus, Lactantius, Jerome, St. Auſtin, Sulpicius Severus, Proſper, and as many as place the death of Chriſt in the 15th or 16th year of Tiberius, make Chriſt to have preached but one year, or at moſt but two. At length Euſebius diſcovered four ſucceſſive Paſſovers in the Goſpel of John, and thereupon ſet on foot an opinion that he preach'd three years and an half; and ſo died in the 19th year of Tiberius. Others afterwards, finding the opinion that he died in the equinox Mar. 25, more conſonant to the times of the Jewiſh paſſover, in the 17th and 20th years, have placed his death in one of thoſe two years. Neither is there any greater certainty in the opinions about the time of his birth. The firſt Chriſtians placed his baptiſm near the beginning of the 15th year of Tiberius; and thence reckoning thirty years backwards, placed his birth in the 43d Julian year, the 42d of Auguſtus, and 28th of the Actiac victory. This was the opinion which obtained in the firſt ages, till Dionyſius Exiguus, placing the baptiſm of Chriſt in the 16th year of Tiberius, and miſinterpreting the text of Luke, iii. 23. as if Jeſus was only beginning to be 30 years old when he was baptized, invented the vulgar account, in which his birth is placed two years later than before. As therefore relating to theſe things there is no tradition worth conſidering; let us lay aſide all, and examine what prejudices can be gathered from records of good account.

The fifteenth year of Tiberius began Aug. 28, An. J. P. 4727. So ſoon as the winter was over, and the weather became warm enough, we may reckon that John began to baptize; and that before next winter his fame went abroad, and all the people came to his baptiſm, and Jeſus among the reſt. Whence the firſt paſſover after his baptiſm, mentioned John ii. 13. was in the 16th year of Tiberius. After this feaſt Jeſus came into the land of Judea, and ſtaid there baptizing, whilſt John was baptizing in Ænon, John iii. 22, 23. But when he heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed into Galilee, Matt. iii. 12. being afraid, becauſe the Phariſees had heard that he baptized more diſciples than John, John iv. 1. and in his journey he paſſed thro' Samaria four months before the harveſt, John iv. 35. that is, about the time of the winter Solſtice. For their harveſt was between Eaſter and Whitſunday, and began about a month after the vernal equinox. Say not ye, ſaith he, there are yet four months, and then cometh harveſt? Behold, I ſay unto you, lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harveſt; meaning, that the people in the fields were ready for the Goſpel, as his next words ſhew. John therefore was impriſoned about November, in the 17th year of Tiberius; and Chriſt thereupon went from Judea to Cana of Galilee in December, and was received there of the Galileans, who had ſeen all he did at Jeruſalem at the paſſover: and when a nobleman of Capernaum heard he was returned into Galilee, and went to him and deſired him to come and cure his ſon, he went not thither yet, but only ſaid, Go thy way, thy ſon liveth; and the nobleman returned and found it ſo, and believed, he and his houſe, John iv. This is the beginning of his miracles in Galilee; and thus far John is full and diſtinct in relating the actions of his firſt year, omitted by the other Evangeliſts. The reſt of his hiſtory is from this time related more fully by the other Evangeliſts than by John; for what they relate he omits.

From this time therefore Jeſus taught in the ſynagogues of Galilee on the ſabbath-days, being glorified of all: and coming to his own city Nazareth, and preaching in their ſynagogue, they were offended, and thruſt him out of the city, and led him to the brow of the hill on which the city was built to caſt him headlong; but he paſſing through the midſt of them, went his way, and came and dwelt at Capernaum, Luke iv. And by this time we may reckon the ſecond paſſover was either paſt or at hand.

All this time Matthew paſſeth over in few words, and here he begins to relate the preaching and miracles of Chriſt. When Jeſus, ſaith he, had heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed into Galilee; and leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt at Capernaum, and from that time began to preach and ſay, Repent, for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand, Matt. iv. 12. Afterwards he called his diſciples Peter, Andrew, James and John; and then went about all Galilee, teaching in the ſynagogues,—— and healing all manner of ſickneſs:——and his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all ſick people,——and there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jeruſalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan, Matt. iv. 18——25. All this was done before the ſermon in the mount: and therefore we may certainly reckon that the ſecond paſſover was paſt before the preaching of that ſermon. The multitudes that followed him from Jeruſalem and Judea, ſhew that he had lately been there at the feaſt. The ſermon in the mount was made when great multitudes came to him from all places, and followed him in the open fields; which is an argument of the ſummer-ſeaſon: and in this ſermon he pointed at the lillies of the field then in the flower before the eyes of his auditors. Conſider, ſaith he, the lillies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they ſpin; and yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of theſe. Wherefore if God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, which to-day is and to-morrow is caſt into the oven, &c. Matt. vi. 28. So therefore the graſs of the field was now in the flower, and by conſequence the month of March with the paſſover was paſt.

Let us ſee, therefore, how the reſt of the feaſts follow in order in Matthew's Goſpel: for he was an eye-witneſs of what he relates, and ſo tells all things in due order of time, which Mark and Luke do not.

Sometime after the ſermon in the mount, when the time came that he ſhould be received, that is, when the time of a feaſt came that he ſhould be received by the Jews, he ſet his face to go to Jeruſalem: and as he went with his diſciples in the way, when the Samaritans in his paſſage through Samaria had denied him lodgings, and a certain ſcribe ſaid unto him, Maſter, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt, Jeſus ſaid unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head, Matt. viii. 19. Luke ix. 51——57. The ſcribe told Chriſt he would bear him company in his journey, and Chriſt replied that he wanted a lodging. Now this feaſt I take to be the feaſt of tabernacles, becauſe ſoon after I find Chriſt and his Apoſtles on the ſea of Tiberias in a ſtorm ſo great, that the ſhip was covered with water and in danger of ſinking, till Chriſt rebuked the winds and the ſea, Matt. viii. 23. For this ſtorm ſhews that winter was now come on.

After this Chriſt did many miracles, and went about all the cities and villages of Galilee, teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom, and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people, Matt. ix. he then ſent forth the twelve to do the like, Matt. x. and at length when he had received a meſſage from John, and anſwered it, he ſaid to the multitudes, From the days of John the Baptiſt until now the kingdom of Heaven ſuffereth violence; and upbraided the cities, Chorazin, Bethſaida, and Capernaum, wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not, Matt. xi. Which ſeveral paſſages ſhew, that from the impriſonment of John till now there had been a conſiderable length of time: the winter was now paſt, and the next paſſover was at hand; for immediately after this, Matthew, in ch. xii. ſubjoins, that Jeſus went on the ſabbath-day through the corn, and, his diſciples were an hungred, and began to pluck the ears of corn and to eat,——rubbing them, ſaith Luke, in their hands: the corn therefore was not only in the ear, but ripe; and conſequently the paſſover, in which the firſt-fruits were always offered before the harveſt, was now come or paſt. Luke calls this ſabbath δευτερόπρωτον, the ſecond prime ſabbath, that is, the ſecond of the two great feaſts of the paſſover. As we call Eaſter-day High-Eaſter, and its Octave Low-Eaſter or Low-Sunday: ſo Luke calls the feaſt on the ſeventh day of the unleavened bread, the ſecond of the two prime ſabbaths.

In one of the ſabbaths following he went into a ſynagogue, and healed a man with a withered hand, Matt. xii. 9. Luke vi. 6. And when the Phariſees took counſel to deſtroy him, he withdrew himſelf from thence, and great multitudes followed him; and he healed them all, and charged them that they ſhould not make him known, Matt. xii. 14. Afterwards being in a ſhip, and the multitude ſtanding on the ſhore, he ſpake to them three parables together, taken from the ſeeds-men ſowing in the fields, Matt. xiii. by which we may know that it was now ſeed-time, and by conſequence that the feaſt of tabernacles was paſt. After this he went into his own country, and taught them in their ſynagogue, but did not many mighty works there becauſe of their unbelief. Then the twelve having been abroad a year, returned, and told Jeſus all that they had done: and at the ſame time Herod beheaded John in priſon, and his diſciples came and told Jeſus; and when Jeſus heard it, he took the twelve and departed thence privately by ſhip into a deſert place belonging to Bethſaida: and the people when they knew it, followed him on foot out of the cities, the winter being now paſt; and he healed their ſick, and in the deſert fed them to the number of five thouſand men, beſides women and children, with only five loaves and two fiſhes, Matt. xiv. Luke ix. at the doing of which miracle the paſſover of the Jews was nigh, John vi. 4. But Jeſus went not up to this feaſt; but after theſe things walked in Galilee, becauſe the Jews at the paſſover before had taken counſel to deſtroy him, and ſtill ſought to kill him, John vii. 1. Henceforward therefore he is found firſt in the coaſt of Tyre and Sidon, then by the ſea of Galilee, afterwards in the coaſt of Cæſarea Philippi; and laſtly, at Capernaum, Matt. xv. 21—29. xvi. 13. xvii. 34.

Afterwards when the feaſt of tabernacles was at hand, his brethren upbraided him for walking ſecretly, and urged him to go up to the feaſt. But he went not till they were gone, and then went up privately, John vii. 2. and when the Jews ſought to ſtone him, he eſcaped, John viii. 59. After this he was at the feaſt of dedication in winter, John x. 22. and when they ſought again to take him, he fled beyond Jordan, John x. 39, 40. Matt. xix. 1. where he ſtayed till the death of Lazarus, and then came to Bethany near Jeruſalem, and raiſed him, John ix. 7—18. whereupon the Jews took counſel from that time to kill him: and therefore he walked no more openly among the Jews, but went thence into a country near to the wilderneſs, into a city called Ephraim; and there continued with his diſciples till the laſt paſſover, in which the Jews put him to death, John xi. 53, 54.

Thus have we, in the Goſpels of Matthew and John compared together, the hiſtory of Chriſt's actions in continual order during five paſſovers. John is more diſtinct in the beginning and end; Matthew in the middle: what either omits, the other ſupplies. The firſt paſſover was between the baptiſm of Chriſt and the impriſonment of John, John ii. 13. the ſecond within four months after the impriſonment of John, and Chriſt's beginning to preach in Galilee, John iv. 35. and therefore it was either that feaſt to which Jeſus went up, when the ſcribe deſired to follow him, Matt. viii. 19. Luke ix. 51—57. or the feaſt before it. The third was the next feaſt after it, when the corn was eared and ripe, Matt. xii. 1. Luke vi. 1. The fourth was that which was nigh at hand when Chriſt wrought the miracle of the five loaves, Matt. xiv. 15. John vi. 4, 5. and the fifth was that in which Chriſt ſuffered, Matt. xx. 17. John xii. 1.

Between the firſt and ſecond paſſover, John and Chriſt baptized together, till the impriſonment of John, which was four months before the ſecond. Then Chriſt began to preach, and call his diſciples; and after he had inſtructed them a year, ſent them to preach in the cities of the Jews: at the ſame time John hearing of the fame of Chriſt, ſent to him to know who he was. At the third, the chief prieſts began to conſult about the death of Chriſt. A little before the fourth, the twelve after they had preached a year in all the cities, returned to Chriſt; and at the ſame time Herod beheaded John in priſon, after he had been in priſon two years and a quarter: and thereupon Chriſt fled into the deſart for fear of Herod. The fourth, Chriſt went not up to Jeruſalem for fear of the Jews, who at the paſſover before had conſulted his death, and becauſe his time was not yet come. Thenceforward therefore till the feaſt of tabernacles he walked in Galilee, and that ſecretly for fear of Herod: and after the feaſt of tabernacles he returned no more into Galilee, but ſometimes was at Jeruſalem, and ſometimes retired beyond Jordan, or to the city Ephraim by the wilderneſs, till the paſſover in which he was betrayed, apprehended, and crucified.

John therefore baptized two ſummers, and Chriſt preached three. The firſt ſummer John preached to make himſelf known, in order to give teſtimony to Chriſt. Then, after Chriſt came to his baptiſm and was made known to him, he baptized another ſummer, to make Chriſt known by his teſtimony; and Chriſt alſo baptized the ſame ſummer, to make himſelf the more known: and by reaſon of John's teſtimony there came more to Chriſt's baptiſm than to John's. The winter following John was impriſoned; and now his courſe being at an end, Chriſt entred upon his proper office of preaching in the cities. In the beginning of his preaching he compleated the number of the twelve Apoſtles, and inſtructed them all the firſt year in order to ſend them abroad. Before the end of this year, his fame by his preaching and miracles was ſo far ſpread abroad, that the Jews at the paſſover following conſulted how to kill him. In the ſecond year of his preaching, it being no longer ſafe for him to converſe openly in Judea, he ſent the twelve to preach in all their cities: and in the end of the year they returned to him, and told him all they had done. All the laſt year the twelve continued with him to be inſtructed more perfectly, in order to their preaching to all nations after his death. And upon the news of John's death, being afraid of Herod as well as of the Jews, he walked this year more ſecretly than before; frequenting deſarts, and ſpending the laſt half of the year in Judea, without the dominions of Herod.

Thus have we in the Goſpels of Matthew and John all things told in due order, from the beginning of John's preaching to the death of Chriſt, and the years diſtinguiſhed from one another by ſuch eſſential characters that they cannot be miſtaken. The ſecond paſſover is diſtinguiſhed from the firſt, by the interpoſition of John's impriſonment. The third is diſtinguiſhed from the ſecond, by a double character: Firſt, By the interpoſition of the feaſt to which Chriſt went up, Matt. viii. 19. Luke ix. 57. And ſecondly, By the diſtance of time from the beginning of Chriſt's preaching: For the ſecond was in the beginning of his preaching, and the third ſo long after, that before it came, Chriſt ſaid, from the days of John the Baptiſt until now, &c. and upbraided the cities of Galilee for their not repenting at his preaching, and mighty works done all that time. The fourth is diſtinguiſhed from the third, by the miſſion of the twelve from Chriſt to preach in the cities of Judea in all the interval. The fifth is diſtinguiſhed from all the former by the Twelve's being returned from preaching, and continuing with Chriſt during all the interval, between the fourth and fifth, and by the paſſion and other infallible characters.

Now ſince the firſt ſummer of John's baptizing fell in the fifteenth year of the Emperor Tiberius, and by conſequence the firſt of theſe five paſſovers in his ſixteenth year; the laſt of them, in which Jeſus ſuffered, will fall on the twentieth year of the ſame Emperor; and by conſequence in the Conſulſhip of Fabius and Vitellius, in the 79th Julian year, and year of Chriſt 34, which was the ſabbatical year of the Jews. And that it did ſo, I further confirm by theſe arguments.

I take it for granted, that the paſſion was on Friday the 14th day of the month Niſan; the great feaſt of the paſſover on Saturday the 15th day of Niſan; and the reſurrection of the day following. Now the 14th day of Niſan always fell on the full moon next after the vernal equinox; and the month began at the new moon before, not at the true conjunction, but at the firſt appearance of the new moon: for the Jews referred all the time of the ſilent moon, as they phraſed it, that is, of the moon's diſappearing, to the old moon; and becauſe the firſt appearance might uſually be about 18 hours after the true conjunction, they therefore began their month from the ſixth hour at evening, that is, at ſun-ſet, next after the eighteenth hour from the conjunction. And this rule they called יח Jah, deſigning by the letters י and ח the number 18.

I know that Epiphanius tells us, if ſome interpret his words rightly, that the Jews uſed a vicious cycle, and thereby anticipated the legal new moons by two days. But this ſurely he ſpake not as a witneſs, for he neither underſtood aſtronomy or Rabbinical learning, but as arguing from his erroneous hypotheſis about the time of the paſſion. For the Jews did not anticipate, but poſtpone their months: they thought it lawful to begin their months a day later than the firſt appearance of the new moon, becauſe the new moon continued for more days than one; but not a day ſooner, leſt they ſhould celebrate the new moon before there was any. And the Jews ſtill keep a tradition in their books, that the Sanhedrim uſed diligently to define the new moons by ſight: Sending witneſſes into mountainous places, and examining them about the moon's appearing, and tranſlating the new moon from the day they had agreed on to the day before, as often as witneſſes came from diſtant regions, who had ſeen it a day ſooner than it was ſeen at Jeruſalem. Accordingly Joſephus, one of the Jewiſh prieſts, who had miniſtred in the temple, tells us that the paſſover was kept on the fourteenth day of Niſan, κατὰ σελήνην, according to the moon, when the ſun was in Aries. This is confirmed alſo by two inſtances, recorded by him, which totally overthrow the hypotheſis of the Jews uſing a vicious cycle. For that year, in which Jeruſalem was taken and deſtroyed, he ſaith, the paſſover was on the fourteenth day of the month Xanticus, which according to Joſephus is our April; and that five years before, it fell on the eighth day of the ſame month. Which two inſtances agree with the courſe of the moon.

Computing therefore the new moons of the firſt month according to the courſe of the moon, and the rule Jah, and thence counting fourteen days, I find that the fourteenth day of this month in the year of Chriſt 31, fell on Tueſday March 27; in the year 32, on Sunday Apr. 13; in the year 33, on Friday Apr. 3; in the year 34, on Wedneſday March 24, or rather, for avoiding the equinox which fell on the ſame day, and for having a fitter time for harveſt, on Thurſday Apr. 22. Alſo in the year 35, on Tueſday Apr. 12. and in the year 36, on Saturday March 31.

But becauſe the 15th and 21ſt days of Niſan, and a day or two of Pentecoſt, and the 10th, 15th, and 22d of Tiſri, were always ſabbatical days, or days of reſt, and it was inconvenient on two ſabbaths together to be prohibited burying their dead, and making ready freſh meat, for in that hot region their meat would be apt in two days to corrupt: To avoid theſe and ſuch like inconveniencies, the Jews poſtponed their months a day, as often as the firſt day of the month Tiſri, or, which is all one, the third of the month Niſan, was Sunday, Wedneſday, or Friday: and this rule they called אדו Adu, by the letters א, ד, ו, ſignifying the numbers 1, 4, 6; that is, the 1ſt, 4th, and 6th days of the week; which days we call Sunday, Wedneſday and Friday. Poſtponing therefore, the months found above; the 14th day of the month Niſan will fall in the year of Chriſt 31, on Wedneſday March 28; in the year 32, on Monday Apr. 14; in the year 33, on Friday Apr. 3; in the year 34, on Friday Apr. 23; in the year 35, on Wedneſday Apr. 13; and in the year 36, on Saturday March 31.

By this computation therefore the year 32 is abſolutely excluded, becauſe the paſſion cannot fall on Friday without making it five days after the full moon, or two days before it; whereas it ought to be upon the day of the full moon, or the next day. For the ſame reaſon the years 31 and 35 are excluded, becauſe in them the paſſion cannot fall on Friday, without making it three days after the full moon, or four days before it: Errors ſo enormous, that they would be very conſpicuous in the heavens to the vulgar eye. The year 36 is contended for by few or none, and both this and the year 35 may be thus excluded.

Tiberius in the beginning of his reign made Valerius Gratus preſident of Judea; and after eleven years ſubſtitued Pontius Pilate, who governed ten years. Then Vitellius, newly made preſident of Syria, deprived him of his honour, ſubſtituting Marcellus, and at length ſent him to Rome: but, by reaſon of delays, Tiberius died before Pilate got thither. In the mean time Vitellius, after he had depoſed Pilate, came to Jeruſalem in the time of the paſſover, to viſit that province as well as others in the beginning of his office; and in the place of Caiaphas, then high-preſt, created Jonathas the ſon of Ananus, or Annas, as he is called in Scripture. Afterwards, when Vitellius was returned to Antioch, he received letters from Tiberius, to make peace with Artabanus king of the Parthians. At the ſame time the Alans, by the ſollicitation of Tiberius, invaded the kingdom of Artabanus; and his ſubjects alſo, by the procurement of Vitellius, ſoon after rebelled: for Tiberius thought that Artabanus, thus preſſed with difficulties, would more readily accept the conditions of peace. Artabanus therefore ſtraightway gathering a greater army, oppreſs'd the rebels; and then meeting Vitellius at Euphrates, made a league with the Romans. After this, Tiberius commanded Vitellius to make war upon Aretas king of Arabia. He therefore leading his army againſt Aretas, went together with Herod to Jeruſalem, to ſacrifice at the publick feaſt which was then to be celebrated. Where being received honourably, he ſtayed three days, and in the mean while tranſlated the high-prieſthood from Jonathas to his brother Theophilus; and the fourth day, receiving letters of the death of Tiberius, made the people ſwear allegiance to Caius the new emperor; and recalling his army, ſent them into quarters. All this is related by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 18. c. 6, 7. Now Tiberius reigned 22 years and 7 months, and died March 16, in the beginning of the year of Chriſt 37; and the feaſt of the paſſover fell on April 20 following, that is, 35 days after the death of Tiberius; ſo that there were about 36 or 38 days, for the news of his death to come from Rome to Vitellius at Jeruſalem; which being a convenient time for that meſſage, confirms that the feaſt which Vitellius and Herod now went up to was the paſſover. For had it been Pentecoſt, as is uſually ſuppoſed, Vitellius would have continued three months ignorant of the emperor's death; which is not to be ſuppoſed. However, the things done between this feaſt and the paſſover which Vitellius was at before, namely, the ſtirring up a ſedition in Parthia, the quieting that ſedition, the making a league after that with the Parthians, the ſending news of that league to Rome, the receiving new orders from thence to go againſt the Arabians, and the putting thoſe orders in execution; required much more time than the fifty days between the paſſover and Pentecoſt of the ſame year: And therefore the paſſover which Vitellius firſt went up to, was in the year before. Therefore Pilate was depoſed before the paſſover A. C. 36, and by conſequence the paſſion of Chriſt was before that paſſover; for he ſuffered not under Vitellius, nor under Vitellius and Pilate together, but under Pilate alone.

Now it is obſervable, that the high-prieſthood was at this time become an annual office, and the paſſover was the time of making a new high-prieſt. For Gratus the predeceſſor of Pilate, ſaith Joſephus, made Iſmael high-prieſt after Ananus; and a while after, ſuppoſe a year, depoſed him, and ſubſtituted Eleazar, and a year after Simon, and after another year Caiaphas; and then gave way to Pilate. So Vitellius at one paſſover made Jonathas ſucceſſor to Caiaphas, and at the next Theophilus to Jonathas. Hence Luke tells us, that in the 15th year of Tiberius, Annas and Caiaphas were high-prieſts, that is, Annas till the paſſover, and Caiaphas afterwards. Accordingly John ſpeaks of the high-prieſthood as an annual office: for he tells us again and again, in the laſt year of Chriſt's preaching, that Caiaphas was high-prieſt for that year, John xi. 49, 51. xviii. 13. And the next year Luke tells you, that Annas was high-prieſt, Acts iv. 6. Theophilus was therefore made high-prieſt in the firſt year of Caius, Jonathas in the 22d year of Tiberius, and Caiaphas in the 22d year of Tiberius, and Caiaphas in the 21ſt year of the ſame emperor; and therefore, allotting a year to each, the paſſion, when Annas ſucceeded Caiaphas, could not be later than the 20th year of Tiberius, A. C. 34.

Thus there remain only the years 33 and 34 to be conſidered; and the year 33 I exclude by this argument. In the paſſover two years before the paſſion, when Chriſt went through the corn, and his diſciples pluck'd the ears, and rubbed them with their hands to eat; this ripeneſs of the corn ſhews that the paſſover then fell late; and ſo did the paſſover A. C. 32, April 14. but the paſſover A. C. 31, March 28th, fell very early. It was not therefore two years after the year 31, but two years after 32 that Chriſt ſuffered.

Thus all the characters of the paſſion agree to the year 34; and that is the only year to which they all agree.

The inſtitution of this ceremony was of God's appointment to Abraham, as a ſign of that covenant he had made with him; Gen. xvii. 12. In purſuance of which order, Abraham, though he was then ninety years of age, was circumciſed, with his ſon and all his family, that were males.——God alſo repeated this precept to Moſes, and ordained that all thoſe who intended to partake of the paſchal ſacrifice, ſhould receive circumciſion, and that all the males that ſhould be born thenceforward, ſhould be circumciſed on the eighth day after their birth; Exod. xii. 44. Levit. xii. 3. And this was the reaſon why Jeſus was circumciſed, becauſe the law was not yet abrogated.

The law of Moſes ordained nothing, either concerning the miniſter, or inſtrument of circumciſion. And accordingly we read ſometimes of the father, or of a relation, or of a ſurgeon, or of ſome other performing this ceremony. And as to the inſtrument, They generally uſe a ſharp razor, or launcet, or pen-knife; but Zipporah, the wife of Moſes, circumciſed her ſon Eliezer with a ſharp ſtone, Exod. iv. 25. and Joſhua followed her example; Joſh. v. 3.

Ver. 32. A light to lighten the Gentiles.] We, to underſtand this phraſe, muſt examine what the ſtate of the Gentile world was before our Saviour came; and we find it frequently repreſented to us in Scripture under the ſole word, darkneſs: Thus we read, "To give light to them that ſit in darkneſs:" Ye were ſometimes darkneſs, but now are ye light in the Lord, who hath called you out of darkneſs, into marvellous light; we are not of the night, nor of darkneſs; who hath delivered us from the power of darkneſs. To which might be added many ſynonimous places, in all which the word darkneſs is uſed to repreſent the ſad condition, the world was in before the Meſſiah was manifeſted to them; ſad indeed it was, if this be a juſt name for it: for, darkneſs is our great and natural averſion, 'tis a ſtate of inactivity, deprives us of all the uſe and pleaſure of the day, and is utterly unfit for motion; we either cannot move, or cannot be ſure we move aright; 'tis a time fit only for the beaſts and men of prey to move in; for we want the benefit of the nobleſt and moſt uſeful ſenſe we have, our ſight; without which the reſt are of very little uſe, either to keep us from the dangers which we ſhould otherwiſe bring upon our ſelves, or to defend us from the inſults and injuries of others. In a word, there is nothing creates a greater, or more univerſal fear, than long or unuſual darkneſs; and nothing but cuſtom, and the help of artificial light, reconciles us to what is uſual. What then can a ſtate of darkneſs mean leſs than a wretched, ignorant, uncomfortable ſtate; a ſtate full of confuſion and error, of corrupt opinions, and abominable practices; a ſtate hideous and ugly as the firſt chaos, when the earth was without form and void, and darkneſs was upon the face of the deep?

Now, that the ſtate of the Gentile world before our Saviour came, was a ſtate of darkneſs, and deſervedly called by ſo black a name, muſt be owned by all who have ever looked into theſe times, and conſidered the particulars wherein this darkneſs conſiſted; which, were they all put together, would give us a juſt conception of that univerſal night, which was then ſpread over the intellectual world. The great ignorance they were under, and the conſequences of it, would give us ſuch a frightful ſcene of things, as one can hardly tell how to believe; or believing, how to reconcile it with the wiſdom and goodneſs of that Being, whoſe eyes are always upon the works of his hands, and who from the beginning ruleth over all. The firſt and great fundamental error they were in, was concerning the true God; their notions were ſo contrary and inconſiſtent upon this head, that one can't read them without deeply and frequently reflecting, how poor and low a thing the mind of man is, when he attempts to comprehend Divine Truths. The world was divided into two extremes; they were either for many gods, or none at all; opinions almoſt as remote from truth, as from one another. The oldeſt indeed, and always moſt univerſal opinion, and which perhaps aroſe from the ſcattered and corrupt remains of ſome ancient and genuine traditions, was that of many gods: But this was ſo abſurd in itſelf, and all its conſequences; their number, names, actions, offices, worſhip and ſacrifices, were ſo very unaccountable, ſo impoſſible to be made ſenſe of; that when the world grew more refined, the men of penetration and thought, to mend the matter, betook themſelves to the oppoſite extreme: and, becauſe they could no where meet with a rational religion, vainly concluded, that reaſon and religion were in their natures inconſiſtent; they concluded no religion could be true, becauſe all they had ſeen were certainly falſe. For they were in almoſt every country different at the ſame time, and in the ſame country at different times; they worſhipped they knew not what, nor why, they worſhipped ſtocks and ſtones, and under them imaginary Beings infinitely above human nature, together with others as much below it.

We have an epitome of the groſſeſt and fouleſt ſuperſtition the world ever knew, in that one people the Egyptians: Nothing can be more ridiculous, than what the beſt writers tell us of their gods, and their religious rites; and in their ſtory, we ſee in effect the religions of other nations. For Egypt was the great nurſery of ſuperſtition; from thence aroſe that thick darkneſs, which afterwards overſpread the earth; not that this darkneſs was every where uniformly ſpread; as ſoon as it began to be diffus'd, 'twas divided and broke into unequal parts, inſenſibly altered as it went along, and received different additions, according to the ſeveral climates to which it came. By which means their religions by degrees differed more from one another, but not leſs from reaſon than before. Sacred and prophane were every where arbitrary things, and ſometimes names directly oppoſite were given to the ſame thing by different orders of men in the ſame country. There was nothing ſo abſurd which ſuperſtition could not lead them into a belief of; and if one may judge of what they thought by what they did, one would think, the more abſurd a thing was, the more they liked it: otherwiſe one can't imagine how the world could have fallen into ſo great a variety of errors, ſo very groſs, with ſo ſmall a mixture of truth in them; which, as it was very little, ſo very probably 'twas owing not to any right reaſoning; for had they reaſoned about theſe things rightly, they muſt needs have found out more truth, they could not have ſtopped ſo very ſhort, and have taken up with ſo few right notions, ſo extremely diſguiſed with falſe ones. Theſe therefore, 'tis likely, were borrowed from ſome traditions, which once were more perfect, but now were grown very old, and by length of time, and frequent tranſplanting, ſo altered and defaced, that the firſt Authors of them would ſcarce have known them; ſo little of the genuine parts remained, and the old ſtrokes were in a manner all gone. Elſe how could things ſo incoherent be embraced, as there was in moſt of their religions? how was it poſſible ſo many and ſo different perſuaſions could be deductions from the ſame common principles?

'Tis hard to conceive, how the opinions of any one people, taken together, could proceed from any principles at all: nor indeed did they; theſe religions were then formed when the world were children in underſtanding; when they admired every thing, and underſtood nothing; nothing of arts and ſciences, nothing of the cauſes and natures of things, in a word, nothing beyond their ſenſes, and what was juſt before their eyes; and by that means became an eaſy prey to a few, who thought farther than the reſt, and uſed them as we uſe children now; amuſed them with fables and ſtrange ſtories, and lead them which way they would, by complying with their ſuperſtition; to which purpoſe they took care the doctrines they taught the people, ſhould be abſurd enough, and well adjuſted to the lowneſs of their underſtandings. This was really the caſe, and no better; for the fabulous age of the world, was the time when theſe ſeveral religions were firſt invented, and their poets were the Authors of them; of which the eldeſt either never wrote, or at leaſt nothing of their genuine writings is now left; but of the poets which do remain, we find always the oldeſt, as had in greateſt veneration, ſo be ſure moſt abſurd in matters of religion.

The world in the mean time was like to thrive and grow in underſtanding, under the influence of ſuch teachers, and in embracing ſchemes of religion formed in ſuch times, times of which we know nothing certainly beſides their ignorance. Yet conſiderations of State, management of deſigning men, and the intereſt that a great many had in them, kept theſe ſuperſtitions up in after-times; the bulk of the people being as ignorant as ever, and ſtill believing whatever they were taught. There were, no doubt, ſome wiſe and honeſt men, who ſaw the abſurdity of theſe things, and would have declaimed ſooner and more loudly againſt them, but were deterred, 'tis likely, from the attempt, partly by the danger they might bring upon themſelves, and partly through a very right opinion they had, that religion was neceſſary for ſociety; and that though the eſtabliſhed one were very faulty, there might be more inconvenience in labouring a change; eſpecially ſince they could not be ſure what religion was true, to bring in the room of it, or indeed, whether any were ſo: Beſides, it may be the thought, that in that ſtate of things prejudices were neceſſary to make the people have any notion of religion; and therefore if they were once removed, the people, who are always ready to run into extremes, and if once unhinged, are very hard to be ſettled again, if they had ſhaken off the religion they were bred in, would then perhaps take up with none at all. Some ſuch thoughts probably kept in the wiſer heathens from expoſing the folly and inconſiſtency of the religions then in uſe, who could eaſily have framed more rational ſchemes, but were not ſure they could find out the true one; and therefore were content to ſit down by thoſe they had, and make the beſt ſenſe of them they could.

In time indeed they ventured, many of them, to refine a little, and by degrees endeavoured to explain away what was moſt apparently abſurd; but this did not ſatiſfy ſome, who being men of more heat and leſs diſcretion, were for going faſter, and thinking they knew more than all before them, could not keep in the mighty ſecret any longer. The credulity, implicite belief and bigotry the world had been ſo long under, about things they had ſcarce any notion at all of, made them run now into the other extreme; and ſo firſt Scepticiſm, and then downright Atheiſm, became the learning and wiſdom of the world. Theſe men having, found the world was miſtaken in many things, began now to doubt of every thing, they began to queſtion the Being of any God at all; and having ſhewn with reaſon enough on their ſide the folly and weakneſs of the common opinions, as they were then corrupted, 'twas ſo hard to ſee the little truth that lay under them, that without diſtinction they threw them all away; and ſetting up for themſelves, entertained about almoſt all things new opinions of their own, very different from what had been hitherto received, but not leſs extravagant. And thus by different ways they came to all intents and purpoſes to the ſame end, and left the world in as ill a condition as they found it, or rather made things worſe; for perhaps 'tis better to act upon wrong principles, than none at all; for then men may be governed by thoſe that are wiſer than themſelves, whereas the men of no principles can be governed neither by themſelves nor others.

Some of the main points about which the world, when they began to think freely, were employed, were theſe; Firſt, They were much in the dark, whether there were ſuch a thing as an eternal intelligent Being or not; if there were, wherein his nature conſiſted, and what were his chief attributes; and if there were one ſuch Being, who was infinitely wiſe and good, whether there were not an evil one equal in power to him; without which they could not account for the origin of evil, which was always one great difficulty. Next, if there were one eternal mind, and but one, which we call God, whether he made the world or not; if he did, whether he only put things into that frame and order they are now in, or whether he made the things themſelves out of nothing; If the former, for the latter was an opinion that all their philoſophy was not able to comprehend, whether this God were any other than the ſoul of the world, animating the vaſt maſs of matter, after the ſame manner as the ſoul of man actuates his little world. Again, if God, were a Being intirely diſtinct from the univerſe, with which many of them confounded him, whether he did at all intereſt himſelf in the goverment of the world, after he had made it; that is, whether there were any providence or not, whether his happineſs did not conſiſt in perpetual eaſe and reſt, and conſequently, whether any care or thought of buſineſs were not inconſiſtent with it; or if he did meddle and concern himſelf with the government of things, whether this care were not confined within certain bounds, in looking after the great ſprings and wheels of the machine, while the ſublunary things and this lower world were quite neglected; or if he took care of them too, whether this extended to the inſenſible and vegetable part only, or to the ſenſible and rational; if to them, whether he governed the minds and actions of men, or only their involuntary motions; if their minds and thoughts and actions, whether by a chain of cauſes link'd together in a perpetual and neceſſary order, or only by a concurrence with their own free voluntary motions; if the latter, whether men were by that rendered capable of moral good or moral evil; if capable, whether they were actually accountable to God for what they do; which ſuppoſes that there are fix'd and unalterable rules of good and evil, that theſe rules are the will of God, that he has declared this will of his to man; if ſo, what, and how many are theſe rules; when and where revealed; are they all of perpetual and univerſal obligation or not; if ſome only, which are they; what puniſhments are annexed to the violation of them; when to be inflicted, in this life or another; if in another, the ſoul muſt be immortal and immaterial, and the man muſt live again; beſides, many other difficulties, which muſt be determined, before we can know whether man be actually accountable to God for what he does.

Theſe, all theſe are queſtions of great importance, and ſuch as the wiſeſt Heathens could come to no certain concluſions about: Some of them, indeed, by an extraordinary goodneſs of mind have hit upon noble thoughts, and very much reſembling truth; but when well examined, they appear to be, what themſelves could rather wiſh to be true, than be at all ſure they were ſo. I ſhall give but one inſtance of this, and that is in that excellent diſcourſe of Socrates before his death; in which there are ſtrange and ſurprizing ſtrokes of truth, about the immortality of the ſoul, and the rewards and puniſhments of another life. Who can without pity ſee the weak efforts of the beſt reaſon? who can forbear wiſhing him ſucceſs, or not be ſorry, extremely ſorry at his diſappointment, who has ſuch noble concluſions in view; but is utterly at a loſs, by what certain ſteps to get at them? One ſees him throughly all along that piece, very earneſt in the ſearch after, and purſuit of truth; he ſometimes takes ſuch true ſteps, and purſues ſo cloſely, that one can't help thinking every minute, the next will be the laſt, he ſeems ſo very near it; and then loſes his ſcent a while, and then comes on again; which gives the reader a very melancholy pleaſure, who can't but be in ſome ſort diſappointed himſelf, every time he ſees he is. The diſcourſe throughout muſt be owned to be at firſt ſight very beautiful; but if one view the picture nicely, examine the ſeveral parts of it, the proportions and reaſons on which they are built, the whole will appear ſuch a ſtrange mixture of truth and error, full of ſuch inconcluſive arguments, ſo like dreaming of ſome Fairy-land, that one can't but wonder how it could come from the hand of ſo great a maſter, or be thought a finiſh'd piece by thoſe that heard it. In truth, under all the good-will he diſcovers for ſo good a cauſe, one can't but obſerve with how much diffidence himſelf ſpeaks of it; much leſs can any body elſe be convinc'd by what he ſays, unleſs ſuch as come prepar'd to believe before they hear, and can take up with concluſions firſt, and then look out for premiſes, by which they may ſeem to others to have come to them.

So great was the blindneſs and ignorance the world was under about things of the greateſt moment; I might proceed to ſhew that their works alſo were works of darkneſs; that their manners, generally ſpeaking, were as corrupt as their opinions; but the cloſe connection there is between religion and morality, makes this leſs neceſſary, nor have I time for it, if I would. How far this corruption was inevitable and invincible, I will not now diſpute: Thus much is certain, the world either had no means to remove it, or at leaſt did not know how to uſe them, and conſequently would never have remov'd it, had not the Meſſiah in the fulneſs of time been reveal'd to them. In him the people that walked in darkneſs, have ſeen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the ſhadow of death, upon them hath the light ſhined. 'Twas he diſpell'd theſe clouds which had ſo long hung over the earth; he enlightened the world after this long and univerſal dark, this black eternal night. Now,

This enlightning conſiſted in introducing a new ſtate of things, a ſtate in all its parts oppoſite to that I have been deſcribing; in teaching the world all that is neceſſary for them to know of Divine Things, of the nature of God, and of themſelves; in giving us juſt and true notions of the Divine Providence, of his wiſdom and goodneſs in governing the world; in laying down excellent rules of living well, and teaching us the true nature of moral good and evil; and laſtly, in giving us a reaſonable worſhip, worthy of man, and in ſome ſort worthy his Creator.

Now the world is no longer at a loſs to know what God is, what he requires of us, and how he will be ſerved; now we have a certain meaſure of our duty, we have fix'd unalterable rules to go by; we depend now no longer on our own reaſon, or the authority of others; we are directed by the higheſt reaſon of the beſt Being, by the divine and infallible guidance of the Son of God. Before, the world muſt either have followed the dictates of ſome great law-giver, or found out the rules of their duty for themſelves. As to the former, no man ever had or could have an authority to preſcribe to the reſt of the world, nor was it ſafe he ſhould, as appears from the great imperfections, that are to be met with in the beſt ſyſtems of human laws; nor could they find out the meaſure of their duty themſelves; for that requires vaſt abilities, capable of drawing a very long chain of conſequences from a very few principles; and therefore, if poſſible, yet is it what much the greateſt part of mankind have neither capacity nor opportunity for.

But this is but a part only of what our Saviour had done for us; to all this he has added great and precious promiſes, to invite us to our duty, and proportionable threats to deter us from the contrary: And that nothing might be wanting to compleat this great redemption he hath wrought for us, that no one might complain he had not at all due aſſiſtance to enable him to do what is required of him, he hath graciouſly promiſed his Holy Spirit to all them that call upon him.

CHAP. III.

1 The preaching and baptiſm of John: 15 His teſtimony of Chriſt. 20 Herod impriſoneth John. 21 Chriſt baptized, receiveth teſtimony from heaven. 23 The age and genealogy of Chriſt from Joſeph upwards.

NOW in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Ceſar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea, and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lyſanias the tetrarch of Abilene,

2 Annas and Caiaphas being the high-prieſts, the word of God came unto John the ſon of Zacharias in the wilderneſs.

3 And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins;

4 As it is written in the book of the words of Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight.

5 Every valley ſhall be filled, and every mountain and hill ſhall be brought low; and the crooked ſhall be made ſtraight, and the rough ways ſhall be made ſmooth;

6 And all fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God.

7 Then ſaid he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abraham to our father: for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham.

9 And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and caſt into the fire.

10 And the people asked him, ſaying, What ſhall we do then?

11 He anſwereth and ſaith unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewiſe.

12 Then came alſo publicans to be baptized, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, what ſhall we do?

13 And he ſaid unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

14 And the ſoldiers likewiſe demanded of him, ſaying, And what ſhall we do? And he ſaid unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuſe any falſly, and be content with your wages.

15 And as the people were in expectation, and all men muſed in their hearts of John, whether he were the Chriſt or not;

16 John anſwered, ſaying unto them all: I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier

mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to unlooſe: he ſhall baptize you with the holy Ghoſt, and with fire.

17 Whoſe fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable.

18 And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people.

19 But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philips wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done,

20 Added yet this above all, that he ſhut up John in priſon.

21 Now when all the people were baptized, it came to paſs, that Jeſus alſo being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened:

22 And the holy Ghoſt deſcended in a bodily ſhape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which ſaid, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleaſed.

23 And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was ſuppoſed) the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Heli,

24 Which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi, which was the ſon of Melchi, which was the ſon of Janna, which was the ſon of Joſeph,

25 Which was the ſon of Mattathias, which was the ſon of Amos, which was the ſon of Naum, which was the ſon of Eſli, which was the ſon of Nagge,

26 Which was the ſon of Maath, which was the ſon of Mattathias, which was the ſon of Semei, which was the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Juda,

27 Which was the ſon of Joanna, which was the ſon of Rheſa, which was the ſon of Zorobabel, which was the ſon of Salathiel, which was the ſon of Neri,

28 Which was the ſon of Melchi, which was the ſon of Addi, which was the ſon of Coſam, which was the ſon of Elmodam, which was the ſon of Er,

29 Which was the ſon of Joſe, which was the ſon of Eliezer, which was the ſon of Jorim, which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi,

30 Which was the ſon of Simeon, which was the ſon of Juda, which was the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Jonan, which was the ſon of Eliakim,

31 Which was the ſon of Melea, which was the ſon of Menan, which was the ſon of Mattaha, which was the ſon of Nathan, which was the ſon of David,

32 Which was the ſon of Jeſſe, which was the ſon of Obed, which was the ſon of Booz, which was the ſon of Salmon, which was the ſon of Naaſſon,

33 Which was the ſon of Aminadab, which was the ſon of Aram, which was the ſon of Eſrom, which was the ſon of Phares, which was the ſon of Juda,

34 Which was the ſon of Jacob, which was the ſon of Iſaac, which was the ſon of Abraham, which was the ſon of Thara, which was the ſon of Nachor,

35 Which was the ſon of Saruch, which was the ſon of Ragua, which was the ſon of Phalec, which was the ſon of Heber, which was the ſon of Sala,

36 Which was the ſon of Cainan, which was the ſon of Arphaxad, which was the ſon of Sem, which was the ſon of Noe, which was the ſon of Lamech,

37 Which was the ſon of Mathuſala, which was the ſon of Enoch, which was the ſon of Jared, which was the ſon of Maleleel, which was the ſon of Cainan,

38 Which was the ſon of Enos, which was the ſon of Seth, which was the ſon of Adam, which was the ſon of God.

Ver. 7. — O generation of vipers, &c.] This is a note of the great wickedneſs of the Jewiſh nation at that time, compared with Matt. iii. 7. and our Lord confirms this accuſation with his Divine Mouth, calling the Jews an evil and adulterous generation, Matt. xii. 39. Again, when they boaſted of their relation to Abraham, and yet ſought to kill him, who had told them the truth, our Saviour tells them, Ye are of your father the devil, and the works of your father ye will do, John viii. 40. And our Lord often intimates, that the true reaſon why his doctrine was ſo little regarded by them was this; that their affections were entirely engaged by worldly advantages, and they had no ſincere love of truth or virtue; ſee John iii. 19. and v. 44. And from many other parts of the Goſpel, it plainly appears, that their righteouſneſs conſiſted in a regard to ſome ritual parts of the law of Moſes, and in obſerving the traditional rules of the elders; ſee Matt. xxiii. 5—23. To whoſe teſtimony I ſhall add the authority of Joſephus.

Eleazar, ſays he, the chief man among the Sicarii (or villains, that went with ſhort ſwords concealed under their clothes) was a deſcendant of Judas, who had perſuaded many Jews not to enroll themſelves, when Cyrenius the cenſor was ſent into Judea. For then the Sicarii conſpired againſt all that were willing to ſubmit to the Romans. They treated all ſuch as publick enemies. —— Affirming they were no better than ſtrangers, ſince they ſurrendered to the Romans thoſe privileges of their nation, which ought to be precious to all the Jews. —— But all this was mere pretence, and publiſhed with no other view, than to cover their cruelty and avarice. —— That was indeed a time fruitful of all ſorts of wickedneſs among the Jews; ſo that no evil whatever was left unpractiſed. It is impoſſible for man to contrive any new wickedneſs, which was not then committed. All were corrupt in their private and publick character. They ſtrove to exceed each other in impiety towards God, and in injuſtice toward their neighbour. The great men oppreſſed the people, and the people ſtrove to ruin them. The former were ambitious of dominion and power; the latter had an inſatiable thirſt after violence and plunder; ſee Joſephus's book of wars, l. 7. c. 8 compared with his Antiq. l. 20. c. vii. and his wars, lib. v. c. 13. So I ſhall conclude with the following ſhort paſſage of the ſame author, "It is impoſſible to reckon up all their villanies; but in a word, never did any city ſuffer ſo great calamities; nor was there ever from the beginning of the world a time more fruitful of wickedneſs than that was." Therefore, when the Baptiſt uſed this expreſſion, O generation of vipers; and our Saviour confirmed it, when he ſaid, It is written, my houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves; it can't in any wiſe be thought an aggravation of their guilt.

CHAP. IV.

1 The temptation and faſting of Chriſt: 13 He overcometh the Devil: 14 Beginneth to preach: 16 The people of Nazareth admireth his gracious words: 33 He cureth one poſſeſſed of a Devil, 38 Peter's mother-in-law, 40 and divers other ſick perſons. 41 The Devils acknowledge Chriſt, and are reproved for it: 43 He preacheth through the cities.

AND Jeſus being full of the holy Ghoſt returned from Jordan, and was led by the ſpirit into the wilderneſs,

2 Being forty days tempted of the devil; and in thoſe days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungred.

3 And the devil ſaid unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this ſtone that it be made bread.

4 And Jeſus anſwered him, ſaying, It is written, that man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And the devil taking him up into an high mountain, ſhewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil ſaid unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them; for that is delivered unto me, and to whomſoever I will, I give it.

7 If thou therefore wilt worſhip me, all ſhall be thine.

8 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

9 And he brought him to Jeruſalem, and ſet him on a pinnacle of the temple, and ſaid unto him, If thou be the Son of God, caſt thy ſelf down from hence.

10 For it is written, He ſhall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee.

11 And in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone.

12 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, It is ſaid, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a ſeaſon.

14 ¶ And Jeſus returned in the power of the ſpirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their ſynagogues, being glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and as his cuſtom was, he went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day, and ſtood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Eſaias; and when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

18 The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me to preach the goſpel to the poor, he hath ſent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of ſight to the blind, to ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed,

19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And he cloſed the book, and he gave it again to the miniſter, and ſat down: and the eyes of all them that were in the ſynagogue were faſtned on him.

21 And he began to ſay unto them, This day is this ſcripture fulfilled in your ears.

22 And all bare him witneſs, and wondred at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they ſaid, Is not this Joſephs ſon?

23 And he ſaid unto them, Ye will ſurely ſay unto me this proverb, Phyſician, heal thy ſelf: whatſoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do alſo here in thy country.

24 And he ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country.

25 But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Iſrael in the days of Elias, when the heaven was ſhut up three years and ſix months, when great famine was throughout all the land:

26 But unto none of them was Elias ſent, ſave unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And many lepers were in Iſrael in the time of Eliſeus the prophet: and none of them was cleanſed, ſaving Naaman the Syrian.

28 And all they in the ſynagogue, when they heard theſe things, were filled with wrath,

29 And roſe up, and thruſt him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill (whereon their city was built) that they might caſt him down headlong.

30 But he paſſing through the mids of them went his way:

31 And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the ſabbath-days.

32 And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine: for his word was with power.

33 ¶ And in the ſynagogue there was a man which had a ſpirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice,

34 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? art thou come to deſtroy us? I know thee who thou art; the holy One of God.

35 And Jeſus rebuked him, ſaying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the mids, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36 And they were all amazed, and ſpake among themſelves, ſaying, What a word is this? for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean ſpirits, and they come out.

37 And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

38 ¶ And he aroſe out of the ſynagogue, and entred into Simons houſe: and Simons wifes mother was taken with a great fever; and they beſought him for her.

39 And he ſtood over her, and rebuked the fever, and it left her. And immediately ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them.

40 ¶ Now when the ſun was ſetting, all they that had any ſick with divers diſeaſes, brought them unto him: and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41 And devils alſo came out of many, crying out, and ſaying, Thou art Chriſt the Son of God. And he rebuking them, ſuffered them not to ſpeak: for they knew that he was Chriſt.

42 And when it was day, he departed and went into a deſert place: and the people ſought him, and came unto him, and ſtayed him, that he ſhould not depart from them.

43 And he ſaid unto them, I muſt preach the kingdom of God to other cities alſo: for therefore am I ſent.

44 And he preached in the ſynagogues of Galilee.

Ver. 1. And Jeſus being full of the Holy Ghoſt returned from Jordan, &c.] See Matt. iv. 1. Mark i. 12.

—— And was led by the ſpirit into the wilderneſs, Ver. 2. Being forty days tempted of the devil, &c.] Here let us obſerve, 1ſt, Why our Saviour, whom the Scripture elſewhere declares to have been tempted in all points like as we are, only without ſin, is yet by the Evangeliſts recorded, as having been tempted only at this particnlar time, aſſoon as he had been baptized, Mark i. 11, 12. The reaſon is, becauſe he then began to enter upon his office of preaching the Goſpel of ſalvation; that doctrine by which the works and kingdom of the Devil, the power and dominion of ſin over mankind, was to be deſtroyed. Before this, we do not read of his having been tempted; becauſe his life being private like that of other men, his temptations were ſo likewiſe, ſin only always excepted. Neither after this, is there any mention of his being tempted any more; becauſe the tempter being at this time thoroughly vanquiſhed, did not hereafter hope to prevail ſo much by tempting, as by oppoſing and perſecuting him. The proper time of trial was juſt after his baptiſm, at the very entrance into his office. And as the tempter might reaſonably think this the likelieſt ſeaſon to aſſault him with ſucceſs; ſo the wiſdom of God knew on the contrary, that it was the fitteſt time for his repulſing and triumphing over the tempter. For which reaſon the text takes notice, that Jeſus was led up of the ſpirit, i. e. not by the evil ſpirit, but by the good ſpirit of God, as muſt be interpreted by the foregoing words, Jeſus being full of the Holy Ghoſt, under whoſe conduct Chriſt is repreſented through the whole Goſpel to act and ſpeak, God having given unto him the ſpirit not by meaſure, John iii. 34.

2. It may be enquired, why our Saviour continued ſo long as forty days in the ſolitary retirement of a deſart place, or wilderneſs; and why he faſted through all that time, for ſo we read in Matthew, and it is included in the next words, and in thoſe days he did eat nothing. —— As to his retirement in general, and his faſting or humiliation during that retirement, the reaſon ſeems to have been, that he might prepare his earthly body by meditation and prayer, for the executing that great office, which he was about to undertake, even as Moſes, the giver of the law; and Elijah the head of the ancient Prophets; John Baptiſt the forerunner of our Lord, before the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael, Luke i. 80. faſted and prayed, leaving us an example that we be not raſh and precipitate, careleſs and full of worldly thoughts and deſigns, but that, in our undertaking any office, particularly any Sacred Function, we ſhould withdraw our minds from worldly things, and attend ſeriouſly to the promoting of God's glory, or the intereſt of truth and virtue amongſt men, by praying the Divine Aſſiſtance to enable us.

As to the particular ſpace of time wherein our Saviour faſted, which was forty days, it was an accompliſhment of thoſe ancient types of Moſes's faſt; ſee Exod. xxxiv, 28. and Elijah's; ſee 1 Kings xix. 8. Whence note, that the faſt of Moſes was for the ſins of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, Deut. ix. 18. and Elijah's faſt was for the idolatry of Iſrael in the days of the kings: ſee 1 Kings xix. 13. Therefore our Saviour, who came to fulfil the law and the Prophets, to fulfil all legal, as well as moral righteouſneſs, and to be an expiation for the ſins of the whole world, thought fit to accompliſh theſe types of the Jewiſh law-giver, and of the chief of the Prophets, and poſſibly, if we conſider the viſion of Ezekiel, ch. iv. 6. the Prophecy of Jonah, yet forty days and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown; the forty years in which God ſuffered the manners of the Jews in the wilderneſs; and finally, the forty years allowed the impenitent Jewiſh nation from the time of our Saviour's death, to the final deſtruction of Jeruſalem, this faſt of Jeſus may be alſo eſteemed typical and Prophetical. But note, that the inſtitution of Lent, or an abſtinence for forty days is not of Chriſt nor his Apoſtles inſtitution, it is no more than of human authority, inſtituted long after the Apoſtles times, for ſome ſort of reſemblance or imitation of our Saviour's faſt.

3. It may be next enquired, why our Saviour, who had power over unclean ſpirits, and could caſt out Devils at his pleaſure; was yet pleaſed to ſubmit himſelf and condeſcend ſo far, as to be tempted at all by the enemy? The Apoſtle Paul gives this anſwer (Heb. ii. 14.) That our Lord being through death to deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil; —took therefore upon him, not the nature of Angels, wherein he could not have died; but the nature of men. Wherefore, in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, — that he himſelf being tempted, he might be able to ſuccour them that are tempted; and in ver. 15. we have not an high prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one who was in all points tempted like as we are," not only by the great adverſary, but in all the difficulties of human life; for ſo he expreſſes himſelf to his diſciples, ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations, Luke xxii. 28.

4. But ſome may aſk, why the tempter would at all aſſault our Lord, or what advantage he could poſſibly hope to gain over him, was it poſſible that he could think to defeat the counſel of God, or diſappoint the deſign of his ſending the Meſſiah into the world? It is anſwered, 1ſt, That as wicked men are always upon ſome vain, unreaſonable and abſurd project; ſo wicked ſpirits, deſerted of God, are much of the ſame diſpoſition. It is too abſurd to imagine, that the Devil hoped to prevail againſt the Almighty by power and force; but they, as well as wicked men, conſtantly rebel againſt the counſel and will of God, and endeavour maliciouſly to overthrow his kingdom of righteouſneſs Yet 2dly, It may be preſumed that the tempter was not certain whether our Lord was the true Meſſiah, or no; as may be collected from that doubtful ſaying, if thou be the Son of God. Nor ſhould this be thought incredible, ſince it may be ſo well confirmed from 1 Peter i. 11. Eph. iii. 9. For, certainly if good Angels, and ancient Prophets were not capable of diſtinguiſhing ſuch a great myſtery, much leſs can we ſuppoſe evil ſpirits to be endued with ſo extenſive a capacity, to know thoſe things which the Angels of God deſired to look into.

Ver. 13. —— He [the Devil] departed from him [Jeſus] for a ſeaſon.] Theſe words ſeem to imply, as if after ſome interval he returned to tempt him again; but there is no account hereafter of any ſuch return; therefore the meaning of this text is plainly this. The tempter having failed of ſucceſs in his preſent method, departed from our Lord for a time, intending hereafter to aſſault him after another manner. He reſolves to lay aſide ſtratagem, and to withſtand his doctrine by oppoſition and force. Finding there was no way to aſſault Chriſt in perſon, he ſtirs up againſt him the hatred of prophane men, by which malicious inſtruments he hopes to put a ſtop to that doctrine, which he himſelf by his own temptations could not prevent from being preached. After a ſeaſon, therefore, according to Luke's intimation, he returned again, and prevailed with Judas to betray him, and with the Phariſees to perſecute him, and with Pilate to condemn and crucify him; ſee John xiii. 2. xiv. 30. Luke xxii. 53. and many other texts, which every where in the Goſpels preſents themſelves to the attentive reader.

CHAP. V.

1 Chriſt teacheth the people out of Peter's ſhip; 4 in a miraculous taking of fiſhes, ſheweth how he will make him and his partners fiſhers of men; 12 cleanſeth the leper; 16 prayeth in the wilderneſs; 18 healeth one ſick of the palſy; 27 calleth Matthew the publican; 29 eateth with ſinners, as being the phyſician of ſouls; 34 foretelleth the faſtings and afflictions of the Apoſtles after his aſcenſion; 36 and likeneth faint-hearted and weak diſciples to old bottles and worn garments.

AND it came to paſs, that as the people preſſed upon him to hear the word of God, he ſtood by the lake of Geneſareth,

2 And ſaw two ſhips ſtanding by the lake: but the fiſhermen were gone out of them, and were waſhing their nets.

3 And he entred into one of the ſhips, which was Simons, and prayed him that he would thruſt out a little from the land: and he ſat down, and taught the people out of the ſhip.

4 Now when he had left ſpeaking, he ſaid unto Simon, Lanch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon anſwering ſaid unto him, Maſter, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheleſs at thy word I will let down the net.

6 And when they had this done, they encloſed a great multitude of fiſhes; and their net brake.

7 And they beckned unto their partners which were in the other ſhip, that they ſhould come and help them. And they came and filled both the ſhips, ſo that they began to ſink.

8 When Simon Peter ſaw it, he fell down at Jeſus knees, ſaying, Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, O Lord.

9 For he was aſtoniſhed, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fiſhes which they had taken:

10 And ſo was alſo James and John the ſons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jeſus ſaid unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou ſhalt catch men.

11 And when they had brought their ſhips to land, they forſook all, and followed him.

12 ¶ And it came to paſs, when he was in a certain city, behold, a man full of leproſy: who ſeeing Jeſus, fell on his face, and beſought him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and touched him, ſaying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately the leproſy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to tell no man: but go and ſhew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing, according as Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them.

15 But ſo much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16 ¶ And he withdrew himſelf into the wilderneſs, and prayed.

17 And it came to paſs on a certain day, as he was teaching, that there were Phariſees and doctors of the law ſitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jeruſalem: and the power of the Lord was preſent to heal them.

18 ¶ And behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with the palſy: and they ſought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in, becauſe of the multitude, they went upon the houſe-top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch, into the midſt before Jeſus.

20 And when he ſaw their faith, he ſaid unto him, Man, thy ſins are forgiven thee.

21 And the ſcribes and the Phariſees began to reaſon, ſaying, Who is this which ſpeaketh blaſphemies? Who can forgive ſins, but God alone?

22 But when Jeſus perceived their thoughts, he anſwering ſaid unto them, What reaſon ye in your hearts?

23 Whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee, or to ſay, Riſe up and walk?

24 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive ſins, (he ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy) I ſay unto thee, Ariſe, and take up thy couch, and go into thine houſe.

25 And immediately he roſe up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own houſe glorifying God.

26 And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, ſaying, We have ſeen ſtrange things to day.

27 ¶ And after theſe things he went forth, and ſaw a publican named Levi, ſitting at the receit of cuſtom: and he ſaid unto him, Follow me.

28 And he left all, roſe up, and followed him.

29 And Levi made him a great feaſt in his own houſe: and there was a great company of publicans, and of others that ſat down with them.

30 But their ſcribes and Phariſees murmured againſt his diſciples, ſaying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and ſinners?

31 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, They that are whole need not a phyſician: but they that are ſick.

32 I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance.

33 ¶ And they ſaid unto him, Why do the diſciples of John faſt often, and make prayers, and likewiſe the diſciples of the Phariſees; but thine eat and drink?

34 And he ſaid unto them, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bridegroom is with them?

35 But the days will come, when the bridegroom ſhall be taken away from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe days.

36 ¶ And he ſpake alſo a parable unto them, No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old: if otherwiſe, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new, agreeth not with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; elſe the new wine will burſt the bottles, and be ſpilled, and the bottles ſhall periſh.

38 But new wine muſt be put into new bottles; and both are preſerved.

39 No man alſo having drunk old wine, ſtraightway deſireth new: for he ſaith, The old is better.

CHAP. V. See this whole chapter annotated in Matt. viii. and ix. and Mark i. and ii.

Ver. 37. —— No man putteth new wine into old bottles; elſe the new wine will burſt the bottles, &c.] To underſtand this parable, it will be neceſſary to inform you, what is here called a bottle literally; for it is not to be underſtood of a glaſs, or a ſtone bottle, in uſe amongſt us, but of ſuch bottles as were common in the country where this parable was ſpoken, which was made, (as they are at this day in Spain, &c.) of goat's-skin, with the hair on the inſide, well pitch'd and ſewed together; ſo that the mouth of the bottle is through one of the animals paws. This is the kind of bottles here alluded to, and of which there is mention made in the other parts of Scripture. For, when Abraham diſmiſſed Hagar, he provided her and her ſon with bread, and a bottle of water for their journey, Gen. xxi. 14, 15. — The Gibeonites deceived Joſhua and the elders of the people by ſhewing them old bottles, what they affirmed were new at the time they ſet out from their own country, Joſhua ix. 4, 13. with an expectation to perſuade them, that they were come from far. — Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite opened abottle full of milk, and offered Siſera ſome of it to drink, Judges iv. 19. —— The Pſalmiſt intending to magnify the power of God, repreſents him holding the waters of the ſea, ſhut up, as it were, in a bottle, Pſ. xxxii. 7. and in another place he compares himſelf to a bottle dried, blackened and ſhrivelled in the ſmoak, Pſ. cxix. 83. —— In the text before us, our Saviour compares his Apoſtles to old bottles, who being not yet renewed in ſpirit by the Holy Ghoſt, were no more capable of receiving and comprehending, or practiſing all the perfection which Jeſus Chriſt came to teach mankind, than old bottles made of goat-skins are capable, or fit to hold new wine; which ferments ſo ſtrongly, that it muſt needs burſt the leather, almoſt worn out before.

CHAP. VI.

1 Chriſt reproveth the Phariſees blindneſs about the obſervation of the ſabbath, by Scripture, reaſon, and miracle: 13 Chuſeth twelve Apoſtles: 17 Healeth the diſeaſed: 20 Preacheth to his diſciples before the people of bleſſings and curſings: 27 How we muſt love our enemies: 46 And join the obedience of good works to the hearing of the word: leſt in the evil day of temptation, we fall like an houſe built upon the face of the earth without any foundation.

AND it came to paſs on the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt, that he went through the corn-fields: and his diſciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the Phariſees ſaid unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the ſabbath-days?

3 And Jeſus anſwering them, ſaid, Have ye not read ſo much as this, what David did, when himſelf was an hungred, and they which were with him:

4 How he went into the houſe of God, and did take and eat the ſhew-bread, and gave alſo to them that were with him, which is not lawful to eat but for the prieſts alone?

5 And he ſaid unto them, That the Son of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath.

6 And it came to paſs alſo on another ſabbath, that he entred into the ſynagogue and taught: and there was a man whoſe right hand was withered.

7 And the ſcribes and Phariſees watched him, whether he would heal on the ſabbath-day: that they might find an accuſation againſt him.

8 But he knew their thoughts, and ſaid to the man which had the withered hand, Riſe up, and ſtand forth in the mids. And he aroſe, and ſtood forth.

9 Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, I will ask you one thing, Is it lawful on the ſabbath-days to do good, or to do evil? to ſave life, or to deſtroy it?

10 And looking round about upon them all, he ſaid unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did ſo: and his hand was reſtored whole as the other.

11 And they were filled with madneſs; and communed one with another what they might do to Jeſus.

12 And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that he went into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

13 ¶ And when it was day, he called unto him his diſciples: and of them he choſe twelve, whom alſo he named Apoſtles:

14 Simon (whom he alſo named Peter) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15 Matthew and Thomas, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes,

16 And Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iſcariot, which alſo was the traitor.

17 ¶ And he came down with them, and ſtood in the plain, and the company of his diſciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea, and Jeruſalem, and from the ſea-coaſt of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diſeaſes;

18 And they that were vexed with unclean ſpirits: and they were healed.

19 And the whole multitude ſought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

20 ¶ And he lifted up his eyes on his diſciples, and ſaid, Bleſſed be ye poor: for yours is the kingdom of God.

21 Bleſſed are ye that hunger now: for ye ſhall be filled. Bleſſed are ye that weep now: for ye ſhall laugh.

22 Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall hate you, and when they ſhall ſeparate you from their company, and ſhall reproach you, and caſt out your name as evil, for the Son of mans ſake.

23 Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.

24 But wo unto you that are rich: for ye have received your conſolation.

25 Wo unto you that are full: for ye ſhall hunger. Wo unto you that laugh now: for ye ſhall mourn and weep.

26 Wo unto you when all men ſhall ſpeak well of you: for ſo did their fathers to the falſe prophets.

27 ¶ But I ſay unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you:

28 Bleſs them that curſe you, and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you.

29 And unto him that ſmiteth thee on the one cheek, offer alſo the other: and him that taketh away thy cloke, forbid not to take thy coat alſo.

30 Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods, ask them not again.

31 And as ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye alſo to them likewiſe.

32 For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for ſinners alſo love thoſe that love them.

33 And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for ſinners alſo do even the ſame.

34 And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for ſinners alſo lend to ſinners, to receive as much again.

35 But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again: and your reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the children of the Higheſt: for he is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil.

36 Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father alſo is merciful.

37 Judge not, and ye ſhall not be judged: condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned: forgive, and ye ſhall be forgiven:

38 Give, and it ſhall be given unto you; good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over, ſhall men give into your boſom. For with the ſame meaſure that ye meet withal, it ſhall be meaſured to you again.

39 And he ſpake a parable unto them, Can the blind lead the blind? ſhall they not both fall into the ditch?

40 The diſciple is not above his maſter: but every one that is perfect ſhall be as his maſter.

41 And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brothers eye, but perceiveſt not the beam that is in thine own eye?

42 Either how canſt thou ſay to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thy ſelf beholdeſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, caſt out firſt the beam out of thine own eye, and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brothers eye.

43 For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit: neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44 For every tree is known by his own fruit: for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble-buſh gather they grapes.

45 A good man out of the good treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is good: and an evil man out of the evil treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth ſpeaketh.

46 ¶ And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I ſay?

47 Whoſoever cometh to me, and heareth my ſayings, and doth them, I will ſhew you to whom he is like.

48 He is like a man which built an houſe, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood aroſe, the ſtream beat vehemently upon that houſe, and could not ſhake it: for it was founded upon a rock.

49 But he that heareth, and doth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an houſe upon the earth, againſt which the ſtream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell, and the ruin of that houſe was great.

CHAP. VII.

1 Chriſt findeth a greater faith in the centurion a Gentile, than in any of the Jews; 10 healeth his ſervant being abſent; 11 raiſeth from death the widow's ſon at Nain; 19 anſwereth John's meſſengers with the declaration of his miracles; 24 teſtifieth to the people what opinion he held of John; 30 inveigheth againſt the Jews, who with neither the manners of John nor of Jeſus could be won; 36 and ſheweth by occaſion of Mary Magdalene, how he is a friend to ſinners, not to maintain them in ſins, but to forgive them their ſins, upon their faith and repentance.

NOW when he had ended all his ſayings in the audience of the people, he entred into Capernaum.

2 And a certain centurions ſervant, who was dear unto him, was ſick, and ready to die.

3 And when he had heard of Jeſus, he ſent unto him the elders of the Jews, beſeeching him that he would come and heal his ſervant.

4 And when they came to Jeſus, they beſought him inſtantly, ſaying, That he was worthy for whom he ſhould do this.

5 For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a ſynagogue.

6 Then Jeſus went with them. And when he was now not far from the houſe, the centurion ſent friends to him, ſaying unto him, Lord, trouble not thy ſelf, for I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt enter under my roof.

7 Wherefore neither thought I my ſelf worthy to come unto thee: but ſay in a word, and my ſervant ſhall be healed.

8 For I alſo am a man ſet under authority, having under me ſoldiers, and I ſay unto one, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my ſervant, Do this, and he doth it.

9 When Jeſus heard theſe things, he marvelled at him, and turned him about and ſaid unto the people that followed him, I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no, not in Iſrael.

10 And they that were ſent, returning to the houſe, found the ſervant whole that had been ſick.

11 ¶ And it came to paſs the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his diſciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only ſon of his mother, and ſhe was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

13 And when the Lord ſaw her, he had compaſſion on her, and ſaid unto her, Weep not.

14 And he came and touched the bier, (and they that bare him ſtood ſtill) and he ſaid, Young man, I ſay unto thee, Ariſe.

15 And he that was dead ſat up, and began to ſpeak: and he delivered him to his mother.

16 And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, ſaying, That a great prophet is riſen up among us; and, That God hath viſited his people.

17 And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.

18 And the diſciples of John ſhewed him of all theſe things.

19 ¶ And John calling unto him two of his diſciples, ſent them unto Jeſus, ſaying, Art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another?

20 When the men were come unto him, they ſaid, John Baptiſt hath ſent us unto thee, ſaying, Art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another?

21 And in that ſame hour he cured many of their infirmities, and plagues, and of evil ſpirits, and unto many that were blind he gave ſight.

22 Then Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have ſeen and heard, how that the blind ſee, the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed, to the poor the goſpel is preached.

23 And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.

24 ¶ And when the meſſengers of John were departed, he began to ſpeak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderneſs for to ſee? A reed ſhaken with the wind?

25 But what went ye out for to ſee? A man clothed in ſoft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeouſly apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings courts.

26 But what went ye out for to ſee? A prophet? Yea, I ſay unto you, and much more than a prophet.

27 This is he of whom it is written, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee.

28 For I ſay unto you, Among thoſe that are born of women, there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptiſt: but he that is leaſt in the kingdom of God, is greater than he.

29 And all the people that heard him, and the publicans juſtified God, being baptized with the baptiſm of John.

30 But the Phariſees and lawyers rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptized of him.

31 ¶ And the Lord ſaid, Whereunto then ſhall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32 They are like unto children ſitting in the market-place, and calling out one to another, and ſaying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

33 For John the Baptiſt came neither eating bread, nor drinking wine; and ye ſay, He hath a devil.

34 The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye ſay, Behold, a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners.

35 But wiſdom is juſtified of all her children.

36 ¶ And one of the Phariſees deſired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Phariſee's houſe, and ſat down to meat.

37 And behold, a woman in the city, which was a ſinner, when ſhe knew that Jeſus ſat at meat in the Phariſee's houſe, brought an alabaſter-box of ointment.

38 And ſtood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to waſh his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kiſſed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39 Now when the Phariſee which had bidden him, ſaw it, he ſpake within himſelf, ſaying, This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who, and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him: for ſhe is a ſinner.

40 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, Simon, I have ſomewhat to ſay unto thee. And he ſaith, Maſter, ſay on.

41 There was a certain creditor which had two debters: the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty.

42 And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore, which of them will love him moſt?

43 Simon anſwered and ſaid, I ſuppoſe that he to whom he forgave moſt. And he ſaid unto him, Thou haſt rightly judged.

44 And he turned to the woman, and ſaid unto Simon, Seeſt thou this woman? I entred into thine houſe, thou gaveſt me no water for my feet: but ſhe hath waſhed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou gaveſt me no kiſs: but this woman, ſince the time I came in, hath not ceaſed to kiſs my feet.

46 Mine head with oil thou didſt not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47 Wherefore I ſay unto thee, Her ſins, which are many, are forgiven; for ſhe loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the ſame loveth little.

48 And he ſaid unto her, Thy ſins are forgiven.

49 And they that ſat at meat with him, began to ſay within themſelves, Who is this that forgiveth ſins alſo?

50 And he ſaid to the woman, Thy faith hath ſaved thee; go in peace.

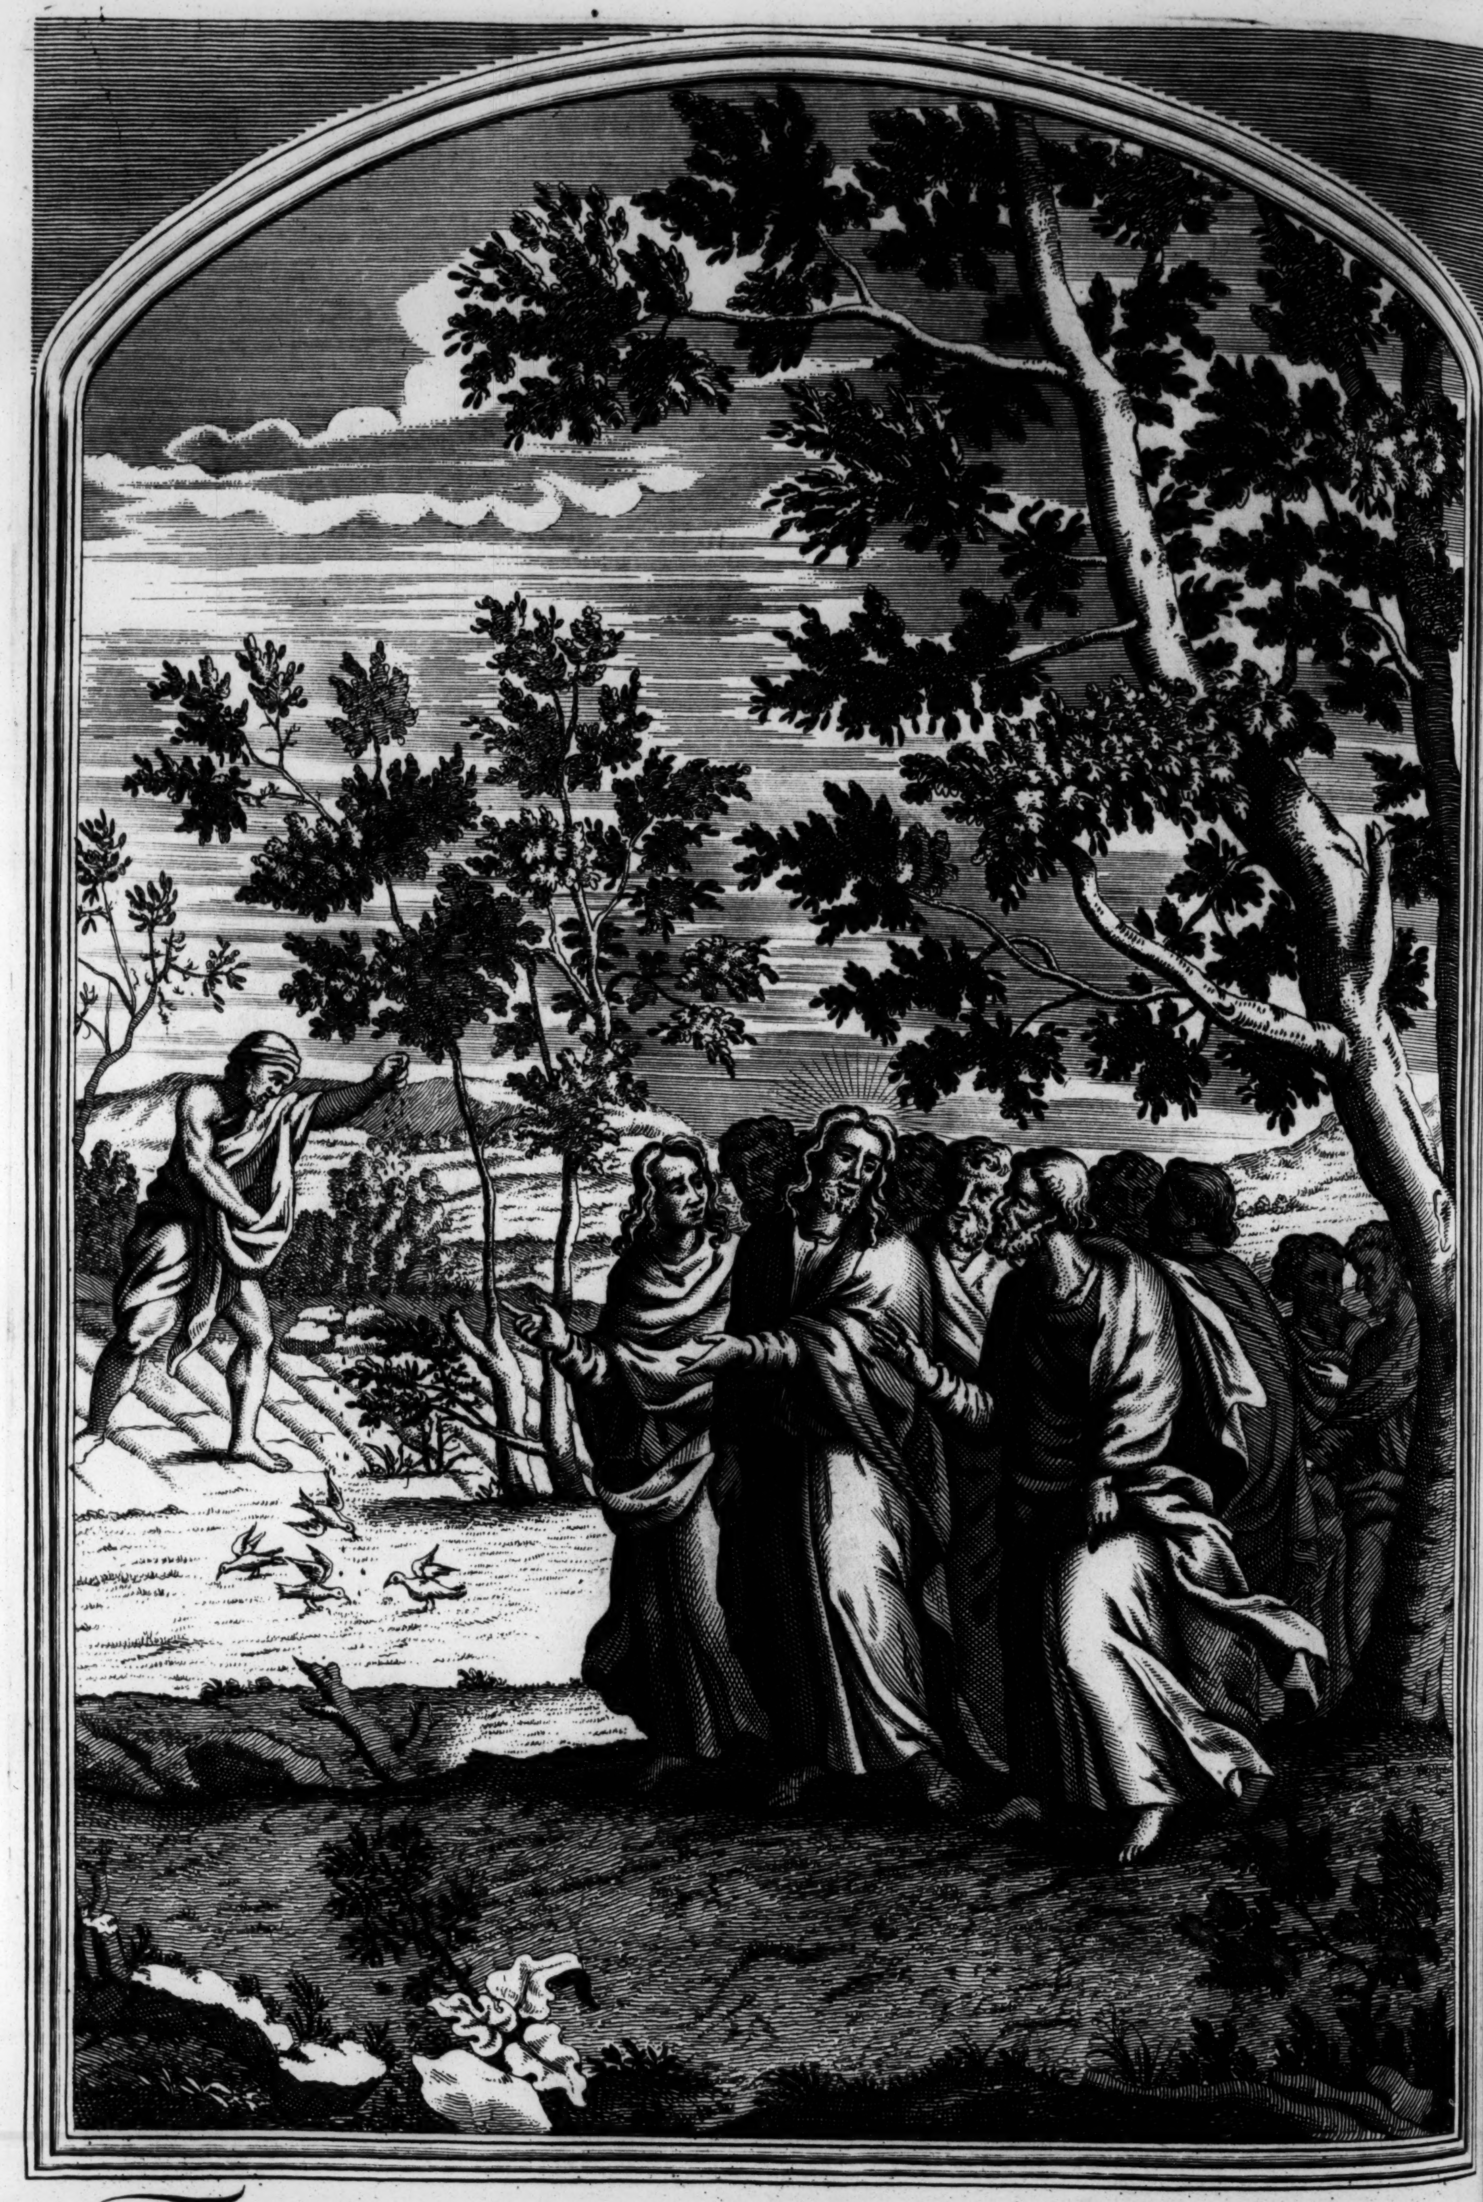
Luke VII.



The Parable of the Sower and Seed.

Luke VIII. v 5.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Women miniſter unto Chriſt of their ſubſtance. 4 Chriſt after he had preached from place to place, attended with his Apoſtles, propoundeth the parable of the ſower, 16 and of the candle; 21 declareth who are his mother, and brethren; 22 rebuketh the winds; 26 caſteth the legion of devils out of the man, into the herd of ſwine; 37 is rejected of the Gadarenes; 43 healeth the woman of her bloody iſſue; 49 and raiſeth from death Jairus daughter.

AND it came to paſs afterward, that he went throughout every city and village preaching and ſhewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him;

2 And certain women which had been healed of evil ſpirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went ſeven devils,

3 And Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herods ſteward, and Suſanna, and many others, which miniſtred unto him of their ſubſtance.

4 ¶ And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he ſpake by a parable:

5 A ſower went out to ſow his ſeed: and as he ſowed, ſome fell by the way-ſide, and it was troden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6 And ſome fell upon a rock, and aſſoon as it was ſprung up, it withered away, becauſe it lacked moiſture.

7 And ſome fell among thorns, and the thorns ſprang up with it, and choked it.

8 And other fell on good ground, and ſprang up, and bare fruit an hundred-fold. And when he had ſaid theſe things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

9 And his diſciples asked him, ſaying, What might this parable be?

10 And he ſaid, Unto you it is given to know the myſteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that ſeeing they might not ſee, and hearing they might not underſtand.

11 Now the parable is this: The ſeed is the word of God.

12 Thoſe by the way-ſide, are they that hear: then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, leſt they ſhould believe and be ſaved.

13 They on the rock, are they, which when they hear, receive the word with joy; and theſe have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

14 And that which fell among thorns, are they, which when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleaſures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.

15 But that on the good ground, are they, which in an honeſt and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

16 ¶ No man when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a veſſel, or putteth it under a bed: but ſetteth it on a candleſtick, that they which enter in may ſee the light.

17 For nothing is ſecret, that ſhall not be made manifeſt: neither any thing hid, that ſhall not be known, and come abroad.

18 Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given; and whoſoever hath not, from him ſhall be taken even that which he ſeemeth to have.

19 ¶ Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the preſs.

20 And it was told him by certain, which ſaid, Thy mother and thy brethren ſtand without, deſiring to ſee thee.

21 And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, My mother and my brethren are theſe which hear the word of God, and do it.

22 ¶ Now it came to paſs on a certain day, that he went into a ſhip with his diſciples: and he ſaid unto them, Let us go over unto the other ſide of the lake. And they lanched forth.

23 But as they ſailed, he fell aſleep: and there came down a ſtorm of wind on the lake, and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and awoke him, ſaying, Maſter, maſter, we periſh. Then he aroſe and rebuked the wind, and the raging of the water: and they ceaſed, and there was a calm.

25 And he ſaid unto them, Where is your faith? And they being afraid, wondred, ſaying one to another, What manner of man is this? for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

26 ¶ And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over-againſt Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city, a certain man man which had devils long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any houſe, but in the tombs.

28 When he ſaw Jeſus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice ſaid, What have I to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God moſt high? I beſeech thee torment me not.

29 (For he had commanded the unclean ſpirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains, and with fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderneſs)

30 And Jeſus asked him, ſaying, What is thy name? And he ſaid, Legion: becauſe many devils were entred into him.

31 And they beſought him, that he would not command them to go out into the deep.

32 And there was there an herd of many ſwine feeding on the mountain: and they beſought him that he would ſuffer them to enter into them. And he ſuffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entred into the ſwine: and the herd ran violently down a ſteep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them ſaw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

35 Then they went out to ſee what was done; and came to Jeſus, and found the man out of whom the devils were departed, ſitting at the feet of Jeſus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They alſo which ſaw it, told them by what means he that was poſſeſſed of the devils, was healed.

37 ¶ Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about beſought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear: and he went up into the ſhip, and returned back again.

38 Now the man out of whom the devils were departed, beſought him that he might be with him: but Jeſus ſent him away, ſaying,

39 Return to thine own houſe, and ſhew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and publiſhed throughout the whole city, how great things Jeſus had done unto him.

40 And it came to paſs, that when Jeſus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

41 ¶ And behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the ſynagogue: and he fell down at Jeſus feet, and beſought him that he would come into his houſe:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and ſhe lay a dying. (But as he went, the people thronged him.

43 ¶ And a woman having an iſſue of blood twelve years, which had ſpent all her living upon phyſicians, neither could be healed of any,

44 Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her iſſue of blood ſtanched.

45 And Jeſus ſaid, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter, and they that were with him, ſaid, Maſter, the multitude throng thee, and preſs thee, and ſayſt thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jeſus ſaid, Some body hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.

47 And when the woman ſaw that ſhe was not hid, ſhe came trembling, and falling down before him, ſhe declared unto him before all the people, for what cauſe ſhe had touched him, and how ſhe was healed immediately.

48 And he ſaid unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace)

49 ¶ While he yet ſpake, there cometh one from the rulers of the ſynagogues houſe, ſaying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Maſter.

50 But when Jeſus heard it, he anſwered him, ſaying, Fear not: believe only, and ſhe ſhall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the houſe, he ſuffered no man to go in, ſave Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And all wept, and bewailed her: but he ſaid, Weep not; ſhe is not dead, but ſleepeth.

53 And they laughed him to ſcorn, knowing that ſhe was dead.

54 And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, ſaying, Maid, ariſe.

55 And her ſpirit came again, and ſhe aroſe ſtraightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And her parents were aſtoniſhed : but he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what was done.

CHAP. IX.

1 Chriſt ſendeth his Apoſtles to work miracles, and to preach. 7 Herod deſireth to ſee Chriſt. 17 Chriſt feedeth five thouſand : 18 enquireth what opinion the world had of him : 22 foretelleth his paſſion : 23 propoſeth to all the pattern of his patience. 28 The transfiguration. 37 He healeth the lunatick : 43 again forewarneth his diſciples of his paſſion : 46 commendeth humility : 51 biddeth them to ſhew mildneſs towards all, without deſire of revenge. 57 Divers would follow him, but upon conditions.

THEN he called his twelve diſciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diſeaſes.

2 And he ſent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the ſick.

3 And he ſaid unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither ſtaves, nor ſcrip, neither bread, neither money ; neither have two coats apiece.

4 And whatſoever houſe ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5 And whoſoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, ſhake off the very duſt from your feet for a teſtimony againſt them.

6 And they departed and went through the towns, preaching the goſpel, and healing every where.

7 ¶ Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him : and he was perplexed, becauſe that it was ſaid of ſome, that John was riſen from the dead :

8 And of ſome, that Elias had appeared : and of others, that one of the old prophets was riſen again.

9 And Herod ſaid, John have I beheaded : but who is this of whom I hear ſuch things ? And he deſired to ſee him.

10 ¶ And the apoſtles when they were returned, told him all that they had done. And he took them, and went aſide privately into a deſert place, belonging to the city called Bethſaida.

11 And the people when they knew it, followed him : and he received them, and ſpake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12 And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve and ſaid unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals : for we are here in a deſert place.

13 But he ſaid unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they ſaid, We have no more but five loaves and two fiſhes ; except we ſhould go and buy meat for all this people.

14 For they were about five thouſand men. And he ſaid to his diſciples, Make them ſit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did ſo, and made them all ſit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves, and the two fiſhes, and looking up to heaven, he bleſſed them, and brake, and gave to the diſciples to ſet before the multitude.

17 And they did eat, and were all filled : and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them, twelve baskets.

18 ¶ And it came to paſs as he was alone praying, his diſciples were with him : and he asked them, ſaying, Whom ſay the people that I am ?

19 They anſwering, ſaid, John the Baptiſt : but ſome ſay, Elias : and others ſay, that one of the old prophets is riſen again.

20 He ſaid unto them, But whom ſay ye that I am ? Peter anſwering, ſaid, The Chriſt of God.

21 And he ſtraitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing,

22 Saying, The Son of man muſt ſuffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and chief prieſts, and ſcribes, and be ſlain, and be raiſed the third day.

23 ¶ And he ſaid to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me.

24 For whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it : but whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, the ſame ſhall ſave it.

25 For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and loſe himſelf, or be caſt away?

26 For whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and of my words, of him ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he ſhall come in his own glory and in his Fathers, and of the holy angels.

27 But I tell you of a truth, there be ſome ſtanding here which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the kingdom of God.

28 ¶ And it came to paſs about an eight days after theſe ſayings, he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

29 And as he prayed, the faſhion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and gliſtering.

30 And behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moſes and Elias.

31 Who appeared in glory, and ſpake of his deceaſe which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem.

32 But Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with ſleep: and when they were awake, they ſaw his glory, and the two men that ſtood with him.

33 And it came to paſs, as they departed from him, Peter ſaid unto Jeſus, Maſter, it is good for us to be here; and let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias: not knowing what he ſaid.

34 While he thus ſpake, there came a cloud and overſhadowed them: and they feared as they entred into the cloud.

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, hear him.

36 And when the voice was paſt, Jeſus was found alone: and they kept it cloſe, and told no man in thoſe days any of thoſe things which they had ſeen.

37 ¶ And it came to paſs, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And behold, a man of the company cried out, ſaying, Maſter, I beſeech thee, look upon my ſon, for he is mine only child.

39 And lo, a ſpirit taketh him, and he ſuddenly crieth out, and it teareth him that he fometh again, and bruiſing him, hardly departeth from him.

40 And I beſought thy diſciples to caſt him out, and they could not.

41 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, O faithleſs and perverſe generation, how long ſhall I be with you, and ſuffer you? Bring thy ſon hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him: and Jeſus rebuked the unclean ſpirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.

43 ¶ And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God: But while they wondred every one at all things which Jeſus did, he ſaid unto his diſciples, 44 Let theſe ſayings ſink down into your ears: for the Son of man ſhall be delivered into the hands of men.

45 But they underſtood not this ſaying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that ſaying.

46 ¶ Then there aroſe a reaſoning among them, which of them ſhould be greateſt.

47 And Jeſus perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and ſet him by him.

48 And ſaid unto them, Whoſoever ſhall receive this child in my name, receiveth me: and whoſoever ſhall receive me, receiveth him that ſent me: for he that is leaſt among you all, the ſame ſhall be great.

49 ¶ And John anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name; and we forbad him, becauſe he followeth not with us.

50 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Forbid him not: for he that is not againſt us, is for us.

51 ¶ And it came to paſs, when the time was come that he ſhould be received up, he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face to go to Jeruſalem,

52 And ſent meſſengers before his face: and they went, and entred into a village of the Samaritans to make ready for him.

53 And they did not receive him, becauſe his face was as though he would go to Jeruſalem.

54 And when his diſciples James and John ſaw this, they ſaid, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and conſume them, even as Elias did?

55 But he turned, and rebuked them, and ſaid, Ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of.

56 For the Son of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them. And they went to another village.

57 ¶ And it came to paſs, that as they went in the way, a certain man ſaid unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt.

58 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have neſts, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

59 And he ſaid unto another, Follow me: But he ſaid, Lord, ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father.

60 Jeſus ſaid unto him, Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

61 And another alſo ſaid, Lord, I will follow thee: but let me firſt go bid them farewel which are at home at my houſe.

62 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

CHAP. X.

1 Chriſt ſendeth out at once ſeventy diſciples to work miracles, and to preach: 17 admoniſheth them to be humble, and wherein to rejoyce: 21 thanketh his Father for his grace: 23 magnifieth the happy eſtate of his Church: 25 teacheth the lawyer how to attain eternal life, and to take every one for his neighbour that needeth his mercy: 41 reprehendeth Martha, and commendeth Mary her ſiſter.

AFTER theſe things, the Lord appointed other ſeventy alſo, and ſent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himſelf would come.

2 Therefore ſaid he unto them, The harveſt truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt, that he would ſend forth labourers into his harveſt.

3 Go your ways: behold, I ſend you forth as lambs among wolves.

4 Carry neither purſe, nor ſcrip, nor ſhoes: and ſalute no man by the way.

5 And into whatſoever houſe ye enter, firſt ſay, Peace be to this houſe.

6 And if the ſon of peace be there, your peace ſhall reſt upon it: if not, it ſhall turn to you again.

7 And in the ſame houſe remain, eating and drinking ſuch things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from houſe to houſe.

8 And into whatſoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat ſuch things as are ſet before you.

9 And heal the ſick that are therein, and ſay unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10 But into whatſoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the ſtreets of the ſame, and ſay,

11 Even the very duſt of your city which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off againſt you: notwithſtanding be ye ſure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

12 But I ſay unto you, that it ſhall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.

13 Wo unto thee, Chorazin, wo unto thee, Bethſaida: for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, ſitting in ſackcloth and aſhes.

14 But it ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you.

15 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, ſhalt be thruſt down to hell.

16 He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me: and he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth him that ſent me.

17 ¶ And the ſeventy returned again with joy, ſaying, Lord, even the devils are ſubject unto us through thy name.

18 And he ſaid unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.

19 Behold, I give unto you power to tread on ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing ſhall by any means hurt you.

20 Notwithſtanding in this rejoyce not, that the ſpirits are ſubjects unto you: but rather rejoyce, becauſe your names are written in heaven.

21 ¶ In that hour Jeſus rejoyced in ſpirit, and ſaid, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes: even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight.

22 All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.

23 ¶ And he turned him unto his diſciples, and ſaid privately, Bleſſed are the eyes which ſee things that ye ſee.

24 For I tell you, that many prophets and kings have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them; and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

25 ¶ And behold, a certain lawyer ſtood up, and tempted him, ſaying, Maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life?

26 He ſaid unto him, What is written in the law? how readeſt thou?

27 And he anſwering, ſaid, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and withal thy ſoul, and withal thy ſtrength, and withal thy mind; and thy neighbour as thy ſelf.

28 And he ſaid unto him, Thou haſt anſwered right: this do, and thou ſhalt live.

29 But he willing to juſtify himſelf, ſaid unto Jeſus, And who is my neighbour.

30 And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, A certain man went down from Jeruſalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which ſtripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half-dead.

31 And by chance there came down a certain prieſt that way; and when he ſaw him, he paſſed by on the other ſide.

32 And likewiſe a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and paſſed by on the other ſide.

33 But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he ſaw him, he had compaſſion on him,

34 And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and ſet him on his own beaſt, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35 And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the hoſt, and ſaid unto him, Take care of him; and whatſoever thou ſpendeſt more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

36 Which now of theſe three, thinkeſt thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves?

37 And he ſaid, He that ſhewed mercy on him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Go, and do thou likewiſe.

38 ¶ Now it came to paſs, as they went, that he entred into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her houſe.

39 And ſhe had a ſiſter called Mary, which alſo ſat at Jeſus feet, and heard his word.

40 But Martha was cumbred about much ſerving, and came to him, and ſaid, Lord, doſt thou not care that my ſiſter hath left me to ſerve alone? bid her therefore that ſhe help me.

41 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things.

42 But one thing is needful. And Mary hath choſen that good part, which ſhall not be taken away from her.

CHAP. XI.

1 Chriſt teacheth to pray, and that inſtantly: 11 aſſuring that God ſo will give us good things: 14 He caſting out a dumb devil, rebuketh the blaſphemous Phariſees: 28 and ſheweth who are bleſſed: 29 preacheth to the people: 37 and reprehendeth the outward ſhew of holineſs in the Phariſees, ſcribes, and lawyers.

AND it came to paſs that as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceaſed, one of his diſciples ſaid unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John alſo taught his diſciples.

2 And he ſaid unto them, When ye pray, ſay, Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, ſo in earth.

3 Give us day by day our daily bread.

4 And forgive us our ſins; for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

5 And he ſaid unto them, Which of you ſhall have a friend, and ſhall go unto him at midnight, and ſay unto him, Friend, lend me three loaves;

6 For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to ſet before him:

7 And he from within ſhall anſwer, and ſay, Trouble me not: the door is now ſhut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot riſe, and give thee.

8 I ſay unto you, Though he will not riſe and give him, becauſe he is his friend: yet becauſe of his importunity, he will riſe and give him as many as he needeth.

9 And I ſay unto you, Ask and it ſhall be given you: ſeek, and ye ſhall find: knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you.

10 For every one that asketh, receiveth: and he that ſeeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it ſhall be opened.

11 If a ſon ſhall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a ſtone? or if he ask a fiſh, will he for a fiſh give him a ſerpent?

12 Or if he ſhall ask an egg, will he offer him a ſcorpion?

13 If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more ſhall your heavenly Father give the holy Spirit to them that ask him?

14 ¶ And he was caſting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to paſs, when the devil was gone out, the dumb ſpake: and the people wondred.

15 But ſome of them ſaid, He caſteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16 And others tempting him, ſought of him a ſign from heaven.

17 But he knowing their thoughts, ſaid unto them, Every kingdom divided againſt it ſelf is brought to deſolation: and a houſe divided againſt a houſe, falleth.

18 If Satan alſo be divided againſt himſelf, how ſhall his kingdom ſtand? becauſe ye ſay that I caſt out devils through Beelzebub.

19 And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, by whom do your ſons caſt them out? therefore ſhall they be your judges.

20 But if I with the finger of God caſt out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

21 When a ſtrong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace.

22 But when a ſtronger than he ſhall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he truſted, and divideth his ſpoils.

23 He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth.

24 When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeeking reſt: and finding none, he ſaith, I will return into my houſe whence I came out.

25 And when he cometh, he findeth it ſwept and garniſhed.

26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him ſeven other ſpirits more wicked than himſelf, and they enter in, and dwell there: and the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the firſt.

27 ¶ And it came to paſs, as he ſpake theſe things, a certain woman of the company lift up her voice, and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou haſt ſucked.

28 But he ſaid, Yea, rather bleſſed are they that hear the word of God and keep it.

29 ¶ And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to ſay, This is an evil generation: they ſeek a ſign, and there ſhall no ſign be given it, but the ſign of Jonas the prophet.

30 For as Jonas was a ſign unto the Ninevites, ſo ſhall alſo the Son of man be to this generation.

31 The queen of the ſouth ſhall riſe up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for ſhe came from the utmoſt parts of the earth, to hear the wiſdom of Solomon; and behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

32 The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe up in the judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

33 No man when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it into a ſecret place, neither under a buſhel; but on a candleſtick, that they which come in may ſee the light.

34 The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is ſingle, thy whole body alſo is full of light: but when thine eye is evil, thy body alſo is full of darkneſs.

35 Take heed therefore, that the light which is in thee be not darkneſs.

36 If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole ſhall be full of light, as when the bright ſhining of a candle doth give thee light.

37 ¶ And as he ſpake, a certain Phariſee beſought him to dine with him: and he went in and ſat down to meat.

38 And when the Phariſee ſaw it, he marvelled that he had not firſt waſhed before dinner.

39 And the Lord ſaid unto him, Now do ye Phariſees make clean the outſide of the cup and the platter: but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedneſs.

40 Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without, make that which is within alſo?

41 But rather give alms of ſuch things as you have: and behold, all things are clean unto you.

42 But wo unto you Phariſees: for ye tithe mint and rue, and all manner of herbs, and paſs over judgment and the love of God; theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

43 Wo unto you Phariſees: for ye love the uppermoſt ſeats in the ſynagogues, and greetings in the markets.

44 Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites: for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them, are not aware of them.

45 ¶ Then anſwered one of the lawyers, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, thus ſaying, thou reproacheſt us alſo.

46 And he ſaid, Wo unto you alſo ye lawyers: for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be born, and ye your ſelves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

47 Wo unto you: for ye build the ſepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them.

48 Truly ye bear witneſs that ye allow the deeds of your fathers: for they indeed killed them, and ye build their ſepulchres.

49 Therefore alſo ſaid the wiſdom of God, I will ſend them prophets and apoſtles, and ſome of them they ſhall ſlay and perſecute:

50 That the blood of all the prophets which was ſhed from the foundation of the world may be required of this generation;

51 From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which periſhed between the altar and the temple; verily I ſay unto you, It ſhall be required of this generation.

52 Wo unto you lawyers: for ye have taken away the key of knowledge; ye entred not in your ſelves, and them that were entring in, ye hindred.

53 And as he ſaid theſe things unto them, the ſcribes and the Phariſees began to urge him vehemently, and to provoke him to ſpeak of many things:

54 Laying wait for him, and ſeeking to catch ſomething out of his mouth, that they might accuſe him.

CHAP. XII.

1 Chriſt preacheth to his diſciples to avoid hypocriſy, and fearfulneſs in publiſhing his doctrine. 10 Warneth the people to beware of covetouſneſs, by the parable of the rich man who ſet up greater barns. 22 We muſt not be overcareful of earthly things, 31 but ſeek the kingdom of God, 33 give alms, 36 be ready at a knock to open to our Lord whenſoever he cometh. 41 Chriſt's miniſters are to ſee to their charge, 49 and look for perſecution. 54 The people muſt take this time of grace, 58 becauſe it is a fearful thing to die without reconciliation.

IN the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, inſomuch, that they trode one upon another, he began to ſay unto his diſciples firſt of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Phariſees, which is hypocriſy.

2 For there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed; neither hid, that ſhall not be known.

3 Therefore whatſoever ye have ſpoken in darkneſs, ſhall be heard in the light: and that which ye have ſpoken in the ear in cloſets, ſhall be proclaimed upon the houſetops.

4 And I ſay unto you, my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

5 But I will forewarn you whom you ſhall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay unto you, Fear him.

6 Are not five ſparrows ſold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God?

7 But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many ſparrows.

8 Alſo I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before men, him ſhall the Son of man alſo confeſs before the angels of God.

9 But he that denieth me before men, ſhall be denied before the angels of God.

10 And whoſoever ſhall ſpeak a word againſt the Son of man, it ſhall be forgiven him: but unto him that blaſphemeth againſt the holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven.

11 And when they bring you unto the ſynagogues, and unto magiſtrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye ſhall anſwer, or what ye ſhall ſay:

12 For the holy Ghoſt ſhall teach you in the ſame hour what ye ought to ſay.

13 ¶ And one of the company ſaid unto him, Maſter, ſpeak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me.

14 And he ſaid unto him, Man, who made me a judge, or a divider over you?

15 And he ſaid unto them, Take heed and beware of covetouſneſs: for a mans life conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth.

16 And he ſpake a parable unto them, ſaying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully.

17 And he thought within himſelf, ſaying, What ſhall I do, becauſe I have no room where to beſtow my fruits?

18 And he ſaid, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I beſtow all my fruits and my goods.

19 And I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry.

20 But God ſaid unto him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee:

then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided?

21 So is he that layeth up treaſure for himſelf, and is not rich towards God.

22 ¶ And he ſaid unto his diſciples, Therefore I ſay unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat; neither for the body, what ye ſhall put on.

23 The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment.

24 Conſider the ravens: for they neither ſow nor reap; which neither have ſtorehouſe nor barn; and God feedeth them: How much more are ye better than the fowls?

25 And which of you with taking thought can add to his ſtature one cubit?

26 If ye then be not able to do that thing which is leaſt, why take ye thought for the reſt?

27 Conſider the lillies how they grow: They toil not, they ſpin not: and yet I ſay unto you, that Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of theſe.

28 If then God ſo clothe the graſs, which is to day in the field, and to morrow is caſt into the oven: how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith?

29 And ſeek not ye what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind.

30 For all theſe things do the nations of the world ſeek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of theſe things.

31 ¶ But rather ſeek ye the kingdom of God, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you.

32 Fear not, little flock; for it is your Fathers good pleaſure to give you the kingdom.

33 Sell that ye have, and give alms: provide your ſelves bags which wax not old, a treaſure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth.

34 For where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo.

35 Let your loyns be girded about, and your lights burning;

36 And ye your ſelves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

37 Bleſſed are thoſe ſervants, whom the Lord when he cometh ſhall find watching: verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall gird himſelf, and make them to ſit down to meat, and will come forth and ſerve them.

38 And if he ſhall come in the ſecond watch, or come in the third watch, and find them ſo, bleſſed are thoſe ſervants.

39 And this know, that if the goodman of the houſe had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken through.

40 Be ye therefore ready alſo: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

41 ¶ Then Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, ſpeakeſt thou this parable unto us, or even to all?

42 And the Lord ſaid, Who then is that faithful and wiſe ſteward, whom his lord ſhall make ruler over his houſhold, to give them their portion of meat, in due ſeaſon?

43 Bleſſed is that ſervant, whom his lord when he cometh ſhall find ſo doing.

44 Of a truth I ſay unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath.

45 But and if that ſervant ſay in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and ſhall begin to beat the men-ſervants, and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken:

46 The Lord of that ſervant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not ware, and will cut him in ſunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

47 And that ſervant which knew his lords will, and prepared not himſelf, neither did according to his will, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes.

48 But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of ſtripes, ſhall be beaten with few ſtripes. For unto whomſoever much is given, of him ſhall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

49 ¶ I am come to ſend fire on the earth, and what will I, if it be already kindled?

50 But I have a baptiſm to be baptized with, and how am I ſtraitned till it be accompliſhed?

51 Suppoſe ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather diviſion.

52 For from henceforth there ſhall be five in one houſe divided, three againſt two, and two againſt three.

53 The father ſhall be divided againſt the ſon, and the ſon againſt the father: the mother againſt the daughter, and the daughter againſt the mother: the mother-in-law againſt her daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law.

54 ¶ And he ſaid alſo to the people, When ye ſee a cloud riſe out of the weſt, ſtraightway ye ſay, There cometh a ſhowre; and ſo it is.

55 And when ye ſee the ſouth-wind blow, ye ſay, There will be heat; and it cometh to paſs.

56 Ye hypocrites, ye can diſcern the face of the ſky, and of the earth: but how is it, that ye do not diſcern this time?

57 Yea, and why even of your ſelves judge ye not what is right?

58 ¶ When thou goeſt with thine adverſary to the magiſtrate, as thou art in the way, give diligence that thou mayſt be delivered from him; leſt he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer caſt thee into priſon.

59 I tell thee, thou ſhalt not depart thence, till thou haſt paid the very laſt mite.

Ver. 1. In the mean time, when, &c.] See Matt. xvi. 6, &c. and Mark viii. 16.

Ver. 2. For there is nothing covered that ſhall not be revealed, &c.] See Matt. x. 26. and Mark iv. 22.

Ver. 6. Are not five ſparrows ſold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? Ver. 7. But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered.] This is the ſame as that in anſwer, in Matt. x. 29, 30. which Jeſus made to an objection, which might reaſonably have been expected from the diſciples, whom he was ſending out to preach the Goſpel. For they could expect nothing, but all the perſecution, which the rage and malice of the world would ſuggeſt againſt ſuch a miſſion. And therefore, our Saviour told them, I ſend you out as ſheep among wolves, who would not only deride their meſſage, injure their perſons, revile and blaſpheme that Holy Name, on which they were ſummoned to believe; but would doubtleſs worry and devour them. Conſequently,

Our Saviour encourages them to deſpiſe ſuch rage, malice and perſecution, which can only kill the body, by aſſuring them, that their ſoul is out of their power, and ſhall be rewarded of God. They can kill the body, ſays he, at ver. 4. but after that, have no more that they can do. As if he had ſaid, fear not thoſe men, who, in the height of their malice, can only deſtroy that part of you which nature or diſeaſes, or ſome accident, muſt ſoon put an end to in this world. What can you call the body more or better than a clog to your ſpirit, and a priſon to your ſoul? Then deſpiſe ſuch an enemy, who, when they think to hurt you moſt, only knock off your clog, or break open your priſon, and let your ſoul eſcape to eternal reſt.

Again, our Saviour ſhews, that their enemies can't even touch their bodies without God's permiſſion, by an argument drawn from his Divine Care over the very ſmalleſt of his creatures, E. g. A ſparrow, whoſe price is but mean, two of them valued at a farthing in Matthew x. 29. and five of them here valued at no more than two farthings, the leaſt of the Roman coins, whoſe life therefore is but contemptible, and whoſe flight ſeems but giddy and at random; yet it falls not to the ground, neither lights any where without God's permiſſion. His all-wiſe providence appoints, where, how, and how long it ſhall live; and conſequently, if God take ſo much care about the ſmall concernments even of ſparrows; what need ye to doubt of his protection, not only as ye are by nature better, or of greater value than many ſparrows, but in the execution of his command, when ye preach the Goſpel in the midſt of a faithleſs and perverſe generation.

Our Saviour continues his argument with another obſervation, that God is not only able, but that he is all-wiſe and knoweth all things, there is not an hair in our head, but he ſeeth it and has ordained its particular uſe, and exiſtence; and therefore it cannot be doubted, but that he can foreſee the devices and deſigns of wicked enemies, who ſhall riſe up to deſtroy and kill you in his ſervice. Hence,

We learn, that God governs the meaneſt, the moſt inconſiderable and contemptible occurrences in the world, by an exact and particular providence. And if God's care and providence extend to thoſe minute creatures, and almoſt contemptible parts of the creation; who can doubt but man, who is the head and Lord of all creatures, for whoſe ſake and ſervice all other creatures in this ſublunary world were made, is particularly guided and governed by an over-ruling providence in all his actions. Now,

Providence is an act of God whereby, according to his eternal and moſt wiſe counſel, he preſerves and governs all things, and directs them all to their ends, but chiefly to his own glory. So that

This providence conſiſteth in two things, preſervation and government of his creatures. For,

He preſerves them in their ſpecies and kind by the conſtant ſucceſſion of them one after another; ſo that though the individuals of them are mortal and periſh; yet the ſpecies or kind is immortal. There is no kind of creature that was at firſt made by God, but it ſtill continueth to this very day, and ſhall ſo continue to the end of the world. Which is the wonderful effect of God's Providence; becauſe, as there is an imbred antipathy or enmity of ſome creatures againſt others, there muſt have been by this time a total extirpation of the weaker creature, did not his wiſdom ſway their mutual antipathies.

He preſerves them likewiſe by his providence in their individual and particular Beings, while they have room to fill up, or an office to diſcharge on the earth. Each fly and worm hath its proper office in the creation, and till that be executed, God ſuſtains its Being; nor ſhall the weakeſt creature be deſtroyed, till the time come which God hath ſet for its duration. And it is only his goodneſs, that hath hitherto preſerved and reſcued us from many dangers and deaths to which we ſtood expoſed.

As God preſerves, ſo he governs all things by his providence, which government conſiſts in two things; a direction of the creatures actions, and a diſtribution of rewards and puniſhments, according to the actions of his rational creatures. So that God by his governing providence is ſaid to direct all the actions of his creatures, and by a ſecret, but efficacious illapſe and penetration of the Divine Influence, powerfully to ſway and determine them, which way he pleaſes. From whence we obſerve his permiſſion of evil actions, and his concurrence to good, both by the aſſiſtance of his common, and likewiſe of his ſpecial grace; and laſtly, his general influence into all the actions of our lives; for it is by his conſtant concurrence that our faculties are excited and aſſiſted to their reſpective operations.

He alſo diſtributes rewards and puniſhments according to our actions, which, tho' we have many remarkable inſtances thereof in this life, is more eſpecially manifeſted and executed in the life to come; where all the ſeeming inequalities of God's diſpenſations here, will be fully adjuſted in the eternal recompenſe of the Godly and eternal puniſhment of the wicked and impenitent. Now,

By this Almighty Providence, God over-rules and ſways all things to his own glory, tho' the world ſeems to run at random, and affairs ſeem to be huddled together in blind confuſion and rude diſorder; for God, who ſees and knows the concatenation of all cauſes and effects, ſo governs them to ſuch an end, as to make a perfect harmony out of all thoſe ſeeming jarrings and diſcords. Which may be illuſtrated in the works of a watch, whoſe wheels though they all move with contrary motions one to the other, yet they are uſeful and neceſſary to make it go right; ſee alſo Eccleſ. i. 18. where the providences of God are ſet forth by the emblem of a wheel within a wheel, one interſecting and croſſing another; yet they are deſcribed to be full of eyes round about, i. e. God ſees and chuſes his way in the moſt intricate and intangled providences that are, and ſo governs all things, that whilſt each purſues its own inclination, they are all over-ruled to promote his glory. Hence I infer,

That all things in this world are governed by Divine Providence. And this will more clearly appear from the due conſideration of the Being and nature of God; and from a contemplation of that beauty and order which is viſible in the whole creation. As to

The Being of a God, it is clear from the light of nature; for there never was a people ſo barbarous and irrational, but did firmly aſſent to this truth without any other proof than the deep impreſs upon their hearts; and the obſervation of viſible objects, that there was a Deity: it is neither a problem of reaſon, nor yet ſtrictly an article of faith, but the unforced dictate of every man's natural conſcience; where conſcience is not violently perverted, and under the force of thoſe vices, whoſe intereſt it is, that there ſhould be no God. Hence it was, that there never was a nation remarked for worſhipping no god.

It is then confeſſed, that there is a God, who is the firſt principle and ſource of all things; ſo it muſt alſo be acknowledged, that all the perfections of wiſdom, power, knowledge, &c. which we ſee ſcattered among the creatures, muſt be concentred in him their Creator; with this diſtinction, that the Creator is infinite in them all; whereas the perfections of the creature are borrowed and periſhable. Conſequently,

God is infinite in knowledge, knowing himſelf, and all other things in himſelf. God perfectly knows himſelf, and the boundleſs extent of his own being; and though he be infinite and incomprehenſible to all others; yet he is finite and comprehended to himſelf. And therefore,

As he knows himſelf perfectly, he muſt needs know all things beſides himſelf; becauſe none can perfectly know himſelf, that doth not fully know all that his power and ſtrength can reach unto. But there is nothing which the power of God our Creator can't reach; and therefore knowing his own eſſence, which is the cauſe of all, he knows every thing in the fecundity of his eſſence.

Again, this knowledge of the Almighty does not depend upon objects known, or the contemplations of things already exiſting. But it is like the knowledge of an artificer, which cauſeth and produceth the things it apprehends. God knows them before they are, and by knowing them, brings them to paſs; Auſtin de Trinitat. 15 So that his eternal knowledge and underſtanding, gives being to every thing in the world. And therefore it appertains to him, to preſerve and govern it in its being. And conſequently, God giving being to all things, he alſo doth maintain and provide for them. This is the very law of nature which he hath imprinted upon all his creatures to provide for their own offspring. But we are the offspring of God; and therefore his providence muſt be confeſſed to reach unto all things, and eſpecially mankind.

The next argument is, that beauty and order which we ſee in the natural world. The world is a book, wherein we may read clearly the wonderful wiſdom of God. There is no creature that doth not proclaim aloud, That God is the wiſe Creator and governor of it. Who hath gilded the globe of the ſun and put on its rays? Who hath ſet its bounds, and meaſured out its race, that it ſhould without failing, without error or miſtake, know how to make its daily and annual returns, and divide the times and ſeaſons to the world? Who hath given a particular motion to all the voluminous orbs of Heaven, and beat out a path for every ſtar to walk in? Who hath ſwathed in the great ocean with a girdle of ſand, and reſtrains the waves thereof, that, though they be higher than the earth, they ſhall not overflow it? Who poiſeth the oppoſitions and contrarieties that are in nature in ſo even a balance, that none of them ſhall ever prevail to a total deſtruction of the other? Who brings up the great family of brute beaſts without tumult and diſorder? Do not all theſe great and wonderful works ſpeak forth the watchful providence of God; who, as he makes them by his word, ſo ſtill governs them by his power? Therefore, whatſoever we receive beneficial from them; whatſoever ſeems to provide for our neceſſities or conveniencies; it is God who hath ſo diſpoſed the government of the world as to make it ſerviceable. If the heavens turn and move for us: if the ſtars, as ſo many burning torches, light us in the obſcurity of the night: if the Angels protect and defend us: Let us acknowledge all this from the providence of God alone; ſee alſo Matt. x. 29.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Chriſt preacheth repentance upon the puniſhment of the Galileans, and others. 6 The fruitleſs fig-tree may not ſtand. 11 He healeth the crooked woman: 18 ſheweth the powerful working of the word in the hearts of his choſen, by the parable of the grain of muſtard-ſeed, and of leaven: 24 exhorteth to enter in at the ſtrait gate, 31 and reproveth Herod, and Jeruſalem.

THERE were preſent at that ſeaſon, ſome that told him of the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate had mingled with their ſacrifices.

2 And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, Suppoſe ye that theſe Galileans were ſinners above all the Galileans, becauſe they ſuffered ſuch things?

3 I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

4 Or thoſe eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and ſlew them, think ye that they were ſinners above all men that dwelt in Jeruſalem?

5 I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

6 ¶ He ſpake alſo this parable: a certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, and he came and ſought fruit thereon, and found none.

7 Then ſaid he unto the dreſſer of his vineyard, Behold, theſe three years I come ſeeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down, why cumbreth it the ground?

8 And he anſwering ſaid unto him, Lord, let it alone this year alſo, till I ſhall dig about it, and dung it.

9 And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that thou ſhalt cut it down.

10 And he was teaching in one of the ſynagogues on the ſabbath.

11 ¶ And behold, there was a woman which had a ſpirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wiſe lift up her ſelf.

12 And when Jeſus ſaw her, he called her to him, and ſaid unto her, Woman, thou art looſe from thine infirmity.

13 And he laid his hands on her: and immediately ſhe was made ſtraight, and glorified God.

14 And the ruler of the ſynagogue anſwered with indignation, becauſe that Jeſus had healed on the ſabbath-day, and ſaid unto the people, There are ſix days in which men ought to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the ſabbath-day.

15 The Lord then anſwered him, and ſaid, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the ſabbath looſe his ox, or his aſs from the ſtall, and lead him away to watering?

16 And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo theſe eighteen years, be looſed from this bond on the ſabbath-day?

17 And when he had ſaid theſe things, all his adverſaries were aſhamed: and all the people rejoyced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

18 ¶ Then ſaid he, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto ſhall I reſemble it?

19 It is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, which a man took, and caſt into his garden, and it grew, and waxed a great tree: and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it.

20 And again he ſaid, Whereunto ſhall I liken the kingdom of God?

21 It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three meaſures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

22 And he went through the cities and villages, teaching and journeying towards Jeruſalem.

23 Then ſaid one unto him, Lord, are there few that be ſaved? and he ſaid unto them,

24 ¶ Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate: for many, I ſay unto you, will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able.

25 When once the maſter of the houſe is riſen up, and hath ſhut to the door, and ye begin to ſtand without, and to knock at the door, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he ſhall anſwer and ſay unto you, I know you not whence you are:

26 Then ye ſhall begin to ſay, We have eaten and drunk in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets.

27 But he ſhall ſay, I tell you, I know you not whence you are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28 There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you your ſelves thruſt out.

29 And they ſhall come from the eaſt, and from the weſt, and from the north, and from the ſouth, and ſhall ſit down in the kingdom of God.

30 And behold, there are laſt which ſhall be firſt, and there are firſt which ſhall be laſt.

31 ¶ The ſame day there came certain of the Phariſees, ſaying unto him, Get thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will kill thee.

32 And he ſaid unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I caſt out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I ſhall be perfected.

33 Nevertheleſs, I muſt walk to day, and to morrow, and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem.

34 O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, which killeſt the prophets, and ſtoneſt them that are ſent unto thee: how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not?

35 Behold, your houſe is left unto you deſolate: And verily I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not ſee me, until the time come when ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Ver. 1.——Whoſe blood Pilate mixed with their ſacrifices.] Theſe whoſe blood was thus ſpilt, were the followers of one Judas Gaulonites, who rebelled againſt Ceſar in Galilee, and came thence on the ſame errand to ſeduce the people at Jeruſalem, at the time of the paſſover. For, Pilate being informed of their endeavours to perſuade the people not to pay tribute to Ceſar, and to ſhake off the Roman yoke, encloſed them in the city, and ſlew them there, and in the temple, on the very day appointed for killing the paſſover.

Ver. 5.——Ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.] That is, ſaith Grotius, among the ruins of the city, and temple; ſee Joſephus's Account of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

Ver. 11. There was a woman which had a ſpirit of infirmity, &c.] This miracle is to be accounted for as the other mentioned by Matthew and Mark, wrought upon a woman diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood; to which I refer you, in the notes on Mark.

Ver. 24.——Shall not be able.] Becauſe they won't ſeek to enter till the door is ſhut; ſee Matt. vii. 13. and xxv. 10—13.

Ver. 32.——That fox.] i. e. Herod, whom Chriſt, as a Prophet, ſtigmatized with this ignominious name, as propereſt to repreſent his tyranny.

Ver. 33. A Prophet cannot periſh out of Jeruſalem.] Becauſe a Prophet could not be tried in any other court than the great Sanhedrim, and they could not paſs ſentence againſt him out of that city; ſee Dr. Lightfoot on this place.

CHAP. XIV.

2 Chriſt healeth the dropſy on the ſabbath: 7 teacheth humility: 12 to feaſt the poor: 16 Under the parable of the great ſupper, ſheweth how worldly minded men, who contemn the word of God, ſhall be ſhut out of heaven. 25 Thoſe who will be his diſciples, to bear their croſs, muſt make their accounts aforehand, leſt with ſhame they revolt from him afterward, 34 and become altogether unprofitable, like ſalt that hath loſt his ſavour.

AND it came to paſs, as he went into the houſe of one of the chief Phariſees to eat bread on the ſabbath-day, that they watched him.

2 And behold, there was a certain man before him, which had the dropſy.

3 And Jeſus anſwering ſpake unto the lawyers and Phariſees, ſaying, Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-day?

4 And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go:

5 And anſwered them, ſaying, Which of you ſhall have an aſs, or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not ſtraightway pull him out on the ſabbath-day?

6 And they could not anſwer him again to theſe things.

7 ¶ And he put forth a parable to thoſe which were bidden, when he marked how they choſe out the chief rooms; ſaying unto them,

8 When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, ſit not down in the higheſt room: leſt a more honourable man then thou be bidden of him;

9 And he that bade thee and him, come and ſay to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with ſhame to take the loweſt room.

10 But when thou art bidden, go and ſit down in the loweſt room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may ſay unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then ſhalt thou have worſhip in the preſence of them that ſit at meat with thee.

11 For whoſoever exalteth himſelf, ſhall be abaſed: and he that humbleth himſelf, ſhall be exalted.

12 ¶ Then ſaid he alſo to him that bade him, When thou makeſt a dinner, or a ſupper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor thy rich neighbours; leſt they alſo bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee,

13 But when thou makeſt a feaſt, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14 And thou ſhalt be bleſſed; for they cannot recompenſe thee: for thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt.

15 ¶ And when one of them that ſat at meat with him, heard theſe things, he ſaid unto him, Bleſſed is he that ſhall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

16 Then ſaid he unto him, A certain man made a great ſupper, and bade many:

17 And ſent his ſervant at ſupper-time to ſay to them that were bidden, Come, for all things are now ready.

18 And they all with one conſent began to make excuſe. The firſt ſaid unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I muſt needs go and ſee it: I pray thee have me excuſed.

19 And another ſaid, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excuſed.

20 And another ſaid, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21 So that ſervant came and ſhewed his lord theſe things. Then the maſter of the houſe being angry, ſaid to his ſervant, Go out quickly into the ſtreets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.

22 And the ſervant ſaid, Lord, it is done as thou haſt commanded, and yet there is room.

23 And the Lord ſaid unto the ſervant, Go out into the high-ways, and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my houſe may be filled.

24 For I ſay unto you, that none of thoſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.

25 ¶ And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and ſaid unto them,

26 If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple.

27 And whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, and come after me, cannot be my diſciples.

28 For which of you intending to build a tower, ſitteth not down firſt, and counteth the coſt, whether he have ſufficient to finiſh it?

29 Leſt haply after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finiſh it, all that behold it, begin to mock him,

30 Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finiſh.

31 Or what king going to make war againſt another king, ſitteth not down firſt, and conſulteth whether he be able with ten thouſand to meet him that cometh againſt him with twenty thouſand?

32 Or elſe, while the other is yet a great way off, he ſendeth an ambaſſage, and deſireth conditions of peace.

33 So likewiſe, whoſoever he be of you, that forſaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my diſciple.

34 ¶ Salt is good, but if the ſalt have loſt his ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſeaſoned?

35 It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghil; but men caſt it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

Ver. 5. And anſwered them, ſaying, &c.] As the book of the law directed in Exodus xxiii. 5. Deut. xxii. 4.

Ver. 10. But when thou art bidden, go and ſit down in the loweſt room.] Alluding to the proverb recorded in the Book of Prov. xxv. 6, 7.

Ver. 13.——When thou makeſt a feaſt, call the poor, the maimed, the blind, the lame.] According to the examples of good old Tobit, (ſee the book of Tobit) Nehemiah the Tirſhatha, or governor; ſee Nehem. viii. 10, 12.

Ver. 15——Bleſſed is he that ſhall eat bread in the kingdom of God.] See the notes on Mark xiv. 25.

Ver. 16.——A certain man made a great ſupper, &c.] By this parable, or figurative diſcourſe, Chriſt endeavoureth to reclaim his hearers from their vain longings after temporal gain to the ſerious meditation of, and ſearch after, the means of attaining God's grace in Chriſt, which only is able to afford us true and laſting contentment.

Ver. 17.——Come, for all things are now ready.] Here Chriſt upbraids the Jews with their unthankfulneſs, becauſe they refuſed to receive that holy meat of his doctrine, he had ſo long invited them to.

Ver. 18. And they all with one conſent began to make excuſe, &c.] Such as are mentioned in this and the two following verſes, repreſent unto us thoſe who have their hearts fixed upon worldly affairs, ſo as to be more attached to them than to heavenly joys. And they alſo deſcribe that wretched condition of the Jews, who deſpiſed their calling in Chriſt the Meſſiah.

Ver. 23.——Compel them to come in, &c.] This Scripture has been very ill treated, and wreſted by many to countenance their own tyrannical minds and bloody perſecutions; as if the Goſpel was hereby warranted to be propagated by fire and ſword, or the cruelties of the horrid inquiſition which the Church of Rome has founded upon this text. This was the text by which the Spaniards pretend to defend their cruelties to the Ethnic inhabitants and proprietors of Peru and Mexico: Their tortures, impriſonment and execution of all thoſe that deſcent from the eſtabliſhed religion of their nation; and that unparallel treachery of Philip the ſecond, who, having ordered all the Jews, that would not embrace Chriſtianity, to withdraw to the ſea-ſide, inſtead of means to convey them out of his dominions, as he had promiſed, put all theſe to death, that would not openly confeſs that Jeſus was the Meſſiah. Thus alſo the French palliate that infamous Perſian maſſacre on Bartholomew's day, when in cool blood every Papiſt deſtroyed his Proteſtant neighbour. And it can't be forgot how this ſame tyranny was ready to burſt out among our ſelves by that plenary commiſſion granted by James the ſecond to Judge Jefferies and his Popiſh army. But had all theſe been in a right cauſe, which they were not, the text can bear no ſuch interpretation. For, how can it be thought that the diſciples of Chriſt, of whom this parabolic expreſſion principally concerns, could compel the nations, to whom they had to preach the Goſpel, to embrace their doctrine by force. Truly, this would be an extravagant aſſertion; and yet it muſt not only be ſo thought, but maintained by all thoſe, that, inſtead of ſound doctrine, good advice and Chriſtian patience, endeavour to propagate what they call the Goſpel of Chriſt, with bell, book and candle, or with fire and ſword. Halters, impriſonments or confiſcation of peoples fortunes; ſee Mr. Bayle profeſſedly on this text. Conſequently, we muſt conſider in what degree our Lord's diſciples, may be ſaid to compel unbelievers to embrace Chriſt.

Their arms was prayer, patience, perſeverance, and conſequently the ſenſe of this text, and the application of this whole parable, is, that the preachers of the Goſpel muſt be aſſiduous and indefatigable, and preach the doctrine and faith in Chriſt in its beauty and holineſs in the midſt of all dangers, that in the end the unbelievers may thereby be convinced that Jeſus is the Chriſt, and renouncing their errors and wicked life ſhall be compelled by ſuch proofs to embrace the Goſpel.

Ver. 26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father, &c.] i. e. We are not to obey neither father, nor mother, nor our neareſt relations in any thing they adviſe or command, incompatible with the love and obedience due to God; ſee Gen. xxix. 31. Deut. xiii. 6. xxi. 15, 17. xxxiii. 9. Matt. x. 37. Rom. ix. 13. Rev. xii. 11.

Ver. 27. And whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, &c.] This is a plain declaration that every diſciple of Chriſt muſt expect to be ſubject to many perſecutions and diſtreſſes in preaching and profeſſing the Goſpel; ſee Matt. xvi. 24. Mark viii. 34.

Ver. 28. For which of you intending to build a tower, &c.] See this in Proverbs xxiv. 27. This is here a reaſon why he ordered his diſciples to prepare themſelves for the croſs, in ver. 27. For, it imports, if you have not ſtrength and conſtancy to perſevere to the end, through all oppoſitions and perſecutions, you will be ſo far from obtaining that prize of a good fight, a crown of glory, that your former endeavours will prove a ſhame to you.

Ver. 33.—That forſaketh not all that he hath, &c.] i. e. That doth not prefer me in his affections, before his earthly and temporal things. Or, when God and the world calls us different ways, we muſt follow the voice of God and forſake the world and the affections thereof.

Ver. 34. Salt is good, &c.] This is a figurative expreſſion taken from the ſeaſoning quality of ſalt, and applied to ſpirituals, importing, that it is a good and excellent thing to be a Chriſtian, and believe the Goſpel.

CHAP. XV.

1 The parable of the loſt ſheep: 8 of the piece of ſilver: 11 of the prodigal ſon.

THEN drew near unto him, all the publicans and ſinners for to hear him.

2 And the Phariſees and ſcribes murmured, ſaying, This man receiveth ſinners, and eateth with them.

3 ¶ And he ſpake this parable unto them, ſaying,

4 What man of you having an hundred ſheep, if he loſe one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderneſs, and go after that which is loſt, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his ſhoulders, rejoycing.

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, ſaying unto them, Rejoyce with me, for I have found my ſheep which was loſt.

7 I ſay unto you, that likewiſe joy ſhall be in heaven over one ſinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine juſt perſons, which need no repentance.

8 ¶ Either what woman having ten pieces of ſilver, if ſhe loſe one piece, doth not light a candle, and ſweep the houſe, and ſeek diligently, till ſhe find it?

9 And when ſhe hath found it, ſhe calleth her friends and her neighbours together, ſaying, Rejoyce with me, for I have found the piece which I had loſt.

10 Likewiſe I ſay unto you, There is joy in the preſence of the angels of God, over one ſinner that repenteth.

11 ¶ And he ſaid, a certain man had two ſons:

12 And the younger of them ſaid to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

13 And not many days after, the younger ſon gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there waſted his ſubſtance with riotous living.

14 And when he had ſpent all, there aroſe a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he went and joyned himſelf to a citizen of that country; and he ſent him into his fields to feed ſwine.

16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the ſwine did eat: and no man gave unto him.

17 And when he came to himſelf, he ſaid, How many hired ſervants of my fathers have bread enough and to ſpare, and I periſh with hunger!

18 I will ariſe and go to my father, and will ſay unto him, Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and before thee.

19 And am no more worthy to be called thy ſon: make me as one of thy hired ſervants.

20 And he aroſe, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father ſaw him, and had compaſſion, and ran and fell on his neck, and kiſſed him.

21 And the ſon ſaid unto him, Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and in thy ſight, and am no more worthy to be called thy ſon.

22 But the father ſaid to his ſervants, Bring forth the beſt robe, and put it on him, and put a ring on his hand, and ſhoes on his feet.

23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat and be merry.

24 For this my ſon was dead, and is alive again; he was loſt, and is found. And they began to be merry.

25 Now his elder ſon was in the field: and as he came and drew nigh to the houſe, he heard muſick and dancing.

26 And he called one of the ſervants, and asked what theſe things meant.

27 And he ſaid unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, becauſe he hath received him ſafe and ſound.

28 And he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and intreated him.

29 And he anſwering, ſaid to his father, Lo, theſe many years do I ſerve thee, neither tranſgreſſed I at any time thy commandment, and yet thou never gaveſt me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends.

30 But as ſoon as this thy ſon was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou haſt killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he ſaid unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine.

32 It was meet that we ſhould make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was loſt, and is found.

Ver. 1. — Sinners.] Such as were notorious for their bad life.

Ver. 4. What man of you having an hundred ſheep, &c.] The end of all thoſe parables, or ſimilitudes, is to ſhew God's goodneſs and care in calling ſinners to repentance, and the joy which the righteous ought to conceive thereat. By the firſt, Chriſt juſtifieth his own proceedings; by the other, he inſtructeth the Phariſees; who found fault with his preaching to ſinners and publicans, that it is the duty of all good men to rejoice at their converſion.

Ver. 7. — Juſt perſons, that need no repentance.] i. e. Not ſpotted with any ſcandalous, exorbitant or notorious crime or with ſuch an evil life, which, according to the law and traditions of the Jewiſh nation, might require an expreſs reconciliation, and publick act of repentance. For, otherwiſe, ſhould this word juſt be taken here at large to ſignify without ſin, and doth not live under a neceſſity of perpetual repentance and amendment, it would be a contradiction to Eccleſiaſtes vii. 20.

Ver. 8. — Ten pieces of ſilver.] See Matt. xviii. 28.

Ver. 12. — Give me the portion of goods, &c.] This parable ſhews, that we ſhould always be ſo united to God, as never to deſire to be parted from him; for if we ſhare our affections between God and the world, we are in danger to looſe all our part in Heaven, and ſo to be undone.

Ver. 22. — The beſt robe.] So God is more gracious to repenting ſinners, than we can expect from any merit of our own.

Ver. 25. Now his elder ſon, &c.] Here Chriſt reproves the diſaffection and repinings of thoſe, who are diſcontented at God's gracious and providential diſpoſal of his favours to repenting ſinners, &c.

Ver. 28. — Intreated him.] i. e. Inſtructed and adviſed him not to let his eye be evil, becauſe God was good.

CHAP. XVI.

1 The parable of the unjuſt ſteward. 14 Chriſt reproveth the hypocriſy of the covetous Phariſees. 19 The rich glutton, and Lazarus the beggar.

AND he ſaid alſo unto his diſciples, There was a certain rich man which had a ſteward; and the ſame was accuſed unto him that he had waſted his goods.

2 And he called him, and ſaid unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy ſtewardſhip: for thou mayſt be no longer ſteward.

3 Then the ſteward ſaid within himſelf, What ſhall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the ſtewardſhip: I cannot dig, to beg I am aſhamed.

4 I am reſolved what to do, that when I am put out of the ſtewardſhip, they may receive me into their houſes.

5 So he called every one of his lords debters unto him, and ſaid unto the firſt, How much oweſt thou unto my lord?

6 And he ſaid, An hundred meaſures of oil. And he ſaid unto him, Take thy bill, and ſit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then ſaid he to another, And how much oweſt thou? And he ſaid, An hundred meaſures of wheat. And he ſaid unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourſcore.

8 And the lord commended the unjuſt ſteward, becauſe he had done wiſely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiſer than the children of light.

9 And I ſay unto you, Make to your ſelves friends of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlaſting habitations.

10 He that is faithful in that which is leaſt, is faithful alſo in much: and he that is unjuſt in the leaſt, is unjuſt alſo in much.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your truſt the true riches?

12 And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another mans, who ſhall give you that which is your own?

13 ¶ No ſervant can ſerve two maſters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or elſe he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other. Ye cannot ſerve God and mammon.

14 And the Phariſees alſo, who were covetous, heard all theſe things: and they derided him.

15 And he ſaid unto them, Ye are they which juſtify your ſelves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly eſteemed amongſt men, is abomination in the ſight of God.

16 The law and the prophets were until John: ſince that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man preſſeth into it.

17 And it is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, than one tittle of the law to fail.

18 Whoſoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whoſoever marrieth her that is put away from her huſband, committeth adultery.

19 ¶ There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple, and fine linen, and fared ſumptuouſly every day.

20 And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of ſores,

21 And deſiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich mans table: moreover, the dogs came and licked his ſores.

22 And it came to paſs that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abrahams boſom: the rich man alſo died, and was buried.

23 And in hell he liſt up his eyes, being in torments, and ſeeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his boſom.

24 And he cried, and ſaid, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and ſend Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

25 But Abraham ſaid, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

26 And beſides all this, between us and you there is a great gulph fixed: ſo that they which would paſs from hence to you, cannot; neither can they paſs to us, that would come from thence.

27 Then he ſaid, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldſt ſend him to my fathers houſe:

28 For I have five brethren; that he may teſtify unto them, leſt they alſo come into this place of torment.

29 Abraham ſaith unto him, They have Moſes and the prophets; let them hear them.

30 And he ſaid, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

31 And he ſaid unto him, If they hear not Moſes and the prophets, neither will they be perſwaded, though one roſe from the dead.

Ver. 1. — There was a certain rich man, which had a ſteward, &c.] Chriſt by this parable intended to ſhew, that as men are no more than ſtewards of the goods which they have received of God, which goods they do ſundry ways abuſe; they ought before they depart this life, and be diveſted of them, ſeek to make amends by charitable actions to the poor members of Chriſt's Church, in ſome meaſure attoning for thoſe faults of covetouſneſs, fraud, &c. and not applying them, as the proper ſtation of their lives ſhewed it was God's appointment they ſhould have done: For he is the only and ſupreme owner of them; that ſo by the proper diſtribution of his benefits, they may be known to be God's children, and be received into the everlaſting kingdom.

Ver. 6. — Meaſures of oil] This was a liquid meaſure called batus in the original, containing nine gallons three quarts; ſee Ezek. xlv. 10, 11, 12, 14.

Ver. 7. — An hundred meaſures of wheat.] This is a dry meaſure, and the word in the original, ſignifies the ſame as an Hebrew omer, or as ſome interpreters compute, contains about fourteen buſhels and a pottle Engliſh.

Ver. 8. And the Lord commended the unjuſt ſteward, &c.] Note, our Saviour does not commend the unjuſt action here mentioned, neither does he ſay, that the Lord of that unjuſt ſteward, commended or approved of his wicked fraud; but only that the children of this world, they that ſeek after temporal gain, and prefer the riches of this life to their eternal welfare, are more induſtrious and careful to obtain their deſires, than thoſe who pretend to be the followers of Chriſt in the regeneration, to obtain their crown of glory. Therefore, the Lord commended the unjuſt ſtewards care in providing for the time to come; and not his wicked practice of defrauding his maſter. For, he was —— Unjuſt] Or guilty of a breach of truſt in the exerciſe of his office. But he did

—— Wiſely.] In this action, in reſpect of his own proviſion. There is a great deal of difference between doing wiſely and juſtly. When therefore wiſdom is joined to juſtice, we ought to imitate it; but when it is ſubjoined to injuſtice, it implies no more than ſubtility, craftineſs, and over-reaching, and conſequently ought to be avoided by every good man. So that

This verſe teacheth ſinners to repent in time, and, by a timely charity, to make reſtitution to God for their unjuſt obtaining or uſing temporal goods; ſee Dan. iv. 27. Luke xi. 41. 1 Tim. vi. 18, 19.

—— For the children of this world are in their generation wiſer than, &c.] Worldly men are more anxious to provide for themſelves here, than believers are in ſpiritual things. They, guided by natural reaſon, make a better proviſion for the body, than the elect themſelves, bleſſed with a ſupernatural light of God's ſpirit and revelation, provide for their ſouls, in the working out their own ſalvation.

Ver. 9. —— Make to your ſelves friends of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs.] i. e. Give the poor occaſion by your bountifulneſs, to pray for you, and in a manner, to lay open your charity before God; that he may, according to his promiſes, and in regard of them, reward you therefore in the life everlaſting; for charity, ſays the Apoſtle James, covers a multitude of ſins.

—The mammon.] Riches; ſee Matt. vi. 24.

—— Of unrighteouſneſs.] Unjuſtly gotten; or, becauſe they are the allurements to many ſins.

—Ye fail.] Or die, or looſe the enjoyment of earthly good, riches and honours.

Ver. 10. He that is faithful in that which is leaſt, is faithful alſo in much.] i. e. The right uſe of riches among Chriſtians, is the trial of their loyal employment of their ſpiritual graces, and of the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, which hath been given to them: And contrariwiſe, the abuſe of the one, ſheweth the abuſe of the other, and God likewiſe taketh away his ſpiritual graces from them who do not make a right uſe of his temporal bleſſings.

Ver. 11. —— True riches.] Or, the ſpiritual gifts of God, which only are able to bring man to eternal happineſs.

Ver. 12. —— Which is another mans.] i. e. Which ye can't carry out of this world, but muſt leave them to be enjoyed by another man that ſhall ſurvive.

—— Your own] That ſpiritual and internal good ſtate of a man, which being cultivated in the ſoul by a holy life, will bring it to everlaſting glory. This is a man's own treaſure, which he neither can part with to another, nor be deprived of by the ſeparation of his body and ſoul, but will accompany him to the manſions of bliſs, there to abide for evermore.

Ver. 16. —— Until John.] For, in the days of John, the things which were foretold of Chriſt in the law and Prophets, began to be fulfilled in Jeſus Chriſt; ſee Matt. xi. 12.

Ver. 17. And it is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, &c.] See Matt. v. 18.

Ver. 18. Whoſoever putteth away his wife, &c.] See Matt. v. 32. xix. 9. Mark x. 11. 1 Cor. vii. 10, 11.

Ver. 19. There was a certain rich man, &c.] What is recorded in this place of the rich man and Lazarus is a parabolical hiſtory, ſhewing how little good uſe is made of thoſe temporal advantages which providence has put into the hands of a hard-hearted uncharitable proud man; and may be a proper interpretation of that ſaying, "It is more difficult for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, than for a Camel to go through the eye of the needle."

Ver 20. Lazarus.] This is the ſame name as Eliezer or Eliazar, which is interpreted, God is my help; and ſeems to be choſen as a figurative declaration, that there is is but one kind of good poor men, who are ſuch as put their whole confidence in the Lord: But the rich man hath no name, becauſe there are divers kinds of bad rich men.

——— Son.] A general phraſe accommodated to the parable.

Ver. 26 —— A great gulph.] Whereby we are to underſtand that God hath ſo ſeparated the place of the happy from the damned, that it is impoſſible for one to come to the other.

Chap. XVII.

1 Chriſt teacheth to avoid occaſions of offence. 3 One to forgive another. 6 The power of faith. 7 How we are bound to God, and not he to us: 11 He healeth ten lepers. 22 Of the kingdom of God, and the coming of the Son of man.

THEN ſaid he unto the diſciples, It is impoſſible but that offences will come: but wo unto him through whom they come.

2 It were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and he caſt into the ſea, than that he ſhould offend one of theſe little ones.

3 ¶ Take heed to your ſelves: If thy brother treſpaſs againſt thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him.

4 And if he treſpaſs againſt thee ſeven times in a day, and ſeven times in a day turn again to thee, ſaying, I repent; thou ſhalt forgive him.

5 And the apoſtles ſaid unto the Lord, Increaſe our faith.

6 And the Lord ſaid, If ye had faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, ye might ſay unto this ſycamine-tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the ſea; and it ſhould obey you.

7 But which of you having a ſervant plowing, or feeding cattle, will ſay unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and ſit down to meat?

8 And will not rather ſay unto him, Make ready wherewith I may ſup, and gird thy ſelf, and ſerve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou ſhalt eat and drink?

9 Doth he thank that ſervant becauſe he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10 So likewiſe ye, when ye ſhall have done all thoſe things which are commanded you, ſay, We are unprofitable ſervants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

11 ¶ And it came to paſs, as he went to Jeruſalem, that he paſſed through the midſt of Samaria and Galilee.

12 And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which ſtood afar off:

13 And they lifted up their voices, and ſaid, Jeſus Maſter have mercy on us.

14 And when he ſaw them, he ſaid unto them, Go ſhew your ſelves unto the prieſts. And it came to paſs that as they went, they were cleanſed.

15 And one of them when he ſaw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God.

16 And fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan.

17 And Jeſus anſwering ſaid, Were there not ten cleanſed? but where are the nine?

18 There are not found that returned to give glory to God, ſave this ſtranger.

19 And he ſaid unto him, Ariſe, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.

20 ¶ And when he was demanded of the Phariſees, when the kingdom of God ſhould come; he anſwered them, and ſaid, The kingdom of God cometh not with obſervation.

21 Neither ſhall they ſay, Lo here, or lo there: for behold, the kingdom of God is within you.

22 And he ſaid unto the diſciples, The days will come, when ye ſhall deſire to ſee one of the days of the Son of man, and ye ſhall not ſee it.

23 And they ſhall ſay to you, See here, or ſee there: go not after them, nor ſollow them.

24 For as the lightning that lightneth out of the one part under heaven, ſhineth unto the other part under heaven: ſo ſhall alſo the Son of man be in his day.

25 But firſt muſt he ſuffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.

26 And as it was in the days of Noe, ſo ſhall it be alſo in the days of the Son of man.

27 They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entred into the ark: and the flood came and deſtroyed them all.

28 Likewiſe alſo as it was in the days of Lot, they did eat, they drank, they bought, they ſold, they planted, they builded:

29 But the ſame day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimſtome from heaven, and deſtroyed them all:

30 Even thus ſhall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed.

31 In that day, he which ſhall be upon the houſe-top, and his ſtuff in the houſe, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewiſe not return back.

32 Remember Lots wife.

33 Whoſoever ſhall ſeek to ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: and whoſoever ſhall loſe his life, ſhall preſerve it.

34 I tell you, in that night there ſhall be two men in one bed; the one ſhall be taken and the other ſhall be left.

35 Two women ſhall be grinding together; the one ſhall be taken and the other left.

36 Two men ſhall be in the field; the one ſhall be taken, and the other left.

37 And they anſwered and ſaid unto him, Where, Lord? And he ſaid unto them, Whereſoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.

For, by this whole preceding ſimilitude, taken from bond-ſlaves, who are bound to do all manner of ſervice to their maſters, without any right of interchangeable requital from them, Chriſt reproves the Apoſtles ſecret preſumption, who thought they had done ſo much for him, that they deſerve great and immediate rewards. But Chriſt hereby tells them, that they did nothing but their duties, and what they were bound unto; and adviſes them rather to perſevere to the end, and remit with all humility, the reward to God's appointed time and good pleaſure, who gives it as his mere grace, and not as a thing due; ſee the note on Rom. iv. 4, 5. CHAP. XVIII.

3 Of the importunate widow. 9 Of the Phariſee and the publican. 15 Children brought to Chriſt. 18 A ruler that would follow Chriſt, but is hindred by his riches. 28 The reward of them that leave all for his ſake: 31 He foreſheweth his death, 35 and reſtoreth a blind man to his ſight.

AND he ſpake a parable unto them, to this end that men ought always to pray, and not to faint;

2 Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man.

3 And there was a widow in that city, and ſhe came unto him, ſaying, Avenge me of mine adverſary.

4 And he would not for a while: but afterward he ſaid within himſelf, Though I fear not God, nor regard man;

5 Yet becauſe this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, leſt by her continual coming ſhe weary me.

6 And the Lord ſaid, Hear what the unjuſt judge ſaith.

7 And ſhall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?

8 I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily. Nevertheleſs, when the Son of man cometh, ſhall he find faith on the earth?

9 And he ſpake this parable unto certain which truſted in themſelves, that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others:

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Phariſee, and the other a publican.

11 The Phariſee ſtood and prayed thus with himſelf, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers, or even as this publican.

12 I faſt twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I poſſeſs.

13 And the publican ſtanding afar off, would not lift up ſo much as his eyes unto heaven, but ſmote upon his breaſt, ſaying, God be merciful to me a ſinner.

14 I tell you, this man went down to his houſe juſtified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himſelf, ſhall be abaſed; and he that humbleth himſelf, ſhall be exalted.

15 And they brought unto him alſo infants, that he would touch them: but when his diſciples ſaw it, they rebuked them.

16 But Jeſus called them unto him, and ſaid, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of ſuch is the kingdom of God.

17 Verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, ſhall in no wiſe enter therein.

18 And a certain ruler asked him, ſaying, Good Maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life?

19 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? none is good ſave one, that is God.

20 Thou knoweſt the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not ſteal, Do not bear falſe witneſs, Honour thy father and thy mother.

21 And he ſaid, all theſe have I kept from my youth up.

22 Now when Jeſus heard theſe things, he ſaid unto him, Yet lackeſt thou one thing: ſell all that thou haſt, and diſtribute unto the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven: and come, follow me.

23 And when he heard this, he was very ſorrowful: for he was very rich.

24 And when Jeſus ſaw that he was very ſorrowful, he ſaid, How hardly ſhall they that have riches, enter into the kingdom of God!

25 For it is eaſier for a camel to go through a needles eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they that heard it, ſaid, Who then can be ſaved?

27 And he ſaid, The things which are impoſſible with men, are poſſible with God.

28 Then Peter ſaid, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.

29 And he ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, There is no man that hath left houſe, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children for the kingdom of Gods ſake.

30 Who ſhall not receive manifold more in this preſent time, and in the world to come, life everlaſting.

31 ¶ Then he took unto him the twelve, and ſaid unto them, Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man, ſhall be accompliſhed.

32 For he ſhall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and ſhall be mocked, and ſpitefully entreated and ſpitted on;

33 And they ſhall ſcourge him and put him to death: and the third day he ſhall riſe again.

34 And they underſtood none of theſe things: and this ſaying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were ſpoken.

35 ¶ And it came to paſs, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man ſat by the way-ſide begging.

36 And hearing the multitude paſs by, he asked what it meant.

37 And they told him, that Jeſus of Nazareth paſſeth by.

38 And he cried, ſaying, Jeſus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

39 And they which went before, rebuked him, that he ſhould hold his peace: but he cried ſo much the more, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

40 And Jeſus ſtood and commanded him to be brought unto him: and when he was come near, he asked him,

41 Saying, What wilt thou that I ſhall do unto thee? And he ſaid, Lord, that I may receive my ſight.

42 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Receive thy ſight: thy faith hath ſaved thee.

43 And immediately he received his ſight, and followed him, glorifying God: and all the people when they ſaw it, gave praiſe unto God.

Ver. 1.——Always to pray.] i. e. At all times and ſeaſons; never omitting the ordinary uſe thereof; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 7.

Ver. 7.——And ſhall not God avenge his elect, &c.] Here the elect is to be interpreted all Chriſtians choſen out of the world through faith in Chriſt, to be the Church and people of God. For when it relates to the Jews particularly, it ſignifies thoſe of them, who believed in Chriſt, and upon that account are ſtiled, the election of grace; and abſolutely the election; Rom. xi. 5——7. under the which character Peter writes unto them in his Epiſtle; ch. i. 1.

Ver. 8.——When the Son of man cometh, ſhall he find faith upon the earth?] i.e. When the Son of man (Chriſt) comes to exerciſe his vengeance upon the Jewiſh nation, how few will he find amongſt them, (the Jews) that will believe it. For, though Chriſt and John the Baptiſt had told them ſo frequently and plainly of their approaching ruin; and though they had ſo many ſigns of it, recorded in Joſephus, yet this hiſtorian teſtifies, that they ſtill expected deliverance from God. Yea, even the proſelytes to Chriſtianity began to grow weary, and to wax faint in their minds, and, being preſſed with continual ſufferings, to ask, Where is the promiſe of his coming? ſome of them began in earneſt to forſake the aſſemblies of the Saints; Heb. x. 25. and many of them became apoſtates, and fell back to Judaiſm.

AND Jeſus entred and paſſed through Jericho.

2 And behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.

3 And he ſought to ſee Jeſus who he was, and could not for the preſs, becauſe he was little of ſtature.

4 And he ran before, and climbed up into a ſycomore-tree to ſee him; for he was to paſs that way.

5 And when Jeſus came to the place, he looked up and ſaw him, and ſaid unto him, Zaccheus, make haſte, and come down; for to-day I muſt abide at thy houſe.

6 And he made haſte, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7 And when they ſaw it, they all murmured, ſaying, That he was gone to be gueſt with a man that is a ſinner.

8 And Zaccheus ſtood, and ſaid unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor: and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation, I reſtore him four-fold.

9 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, This day is ſalvation come to this houſe, forſomuch as he alſo is the ſon of Abraham.

10 For the Son of man is come to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt.

11 And as they heard theſe things, he added, and ſpake a parable, becauſe he was nigh to Jeruſalem, and becauſe they thought that the kingdom of God ſhould immediately appear.

12 He ſaid therefore, a certain noble man went into a far country to receive for himſelf a kingdom, and to return.

13 And he called his ten ſervants, and delivered them ten pounds, and ſaid unto them, Occupy till I come.

14 But his citizens hated him, and ſent a meſſage after him, ſaying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to paſs, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded theſe ſervants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the firſt, ſaying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he ſaid unto him, Well, thou good ſervant: becauſe thou haſt been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the ſecond came, ſaying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he ſaid likewiſe to him, Be thou alſo over five cities.

20 And another came, ſaying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound which I have kept laid up in a napkin:

21 For I feared thee, becauſe thou art an auſtere man: thou takeſt up that thou layeſt not down, and reapeſt that thou didſt not ſow.

22 And he ſaith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked ſervant. Thou kneweſt that I was an auſtere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not ſow:

23 Wherefore then gaveſt not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with uſury?

24 And he ſaid unto them that ſtood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they ſaid unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds)

26 For I ſay unto you, That unto every one that hath, ſhall be given: and from him that hath not, even that he hath ſhall be taken away from him.

27 But thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and ſlay them before me.

28 ¶ And when he had thus ſpoken, he went before, aſcending up to Jeruſalem.

29 And it came to paſs, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he ſent two of his diſciples,

30 Saying, Go ye into the village over-againſt you; in the which at your entring ye ſhall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man ſat: looſe him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man aſk you, Why do ye looſe him? thus ſhall ye ſay unto him, Becauſe the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were ſent, went their way, and found even as he had ſaid unto them.

33 And as they were looſing the colt, the owners thereof ſaid unto them, Why looſe ye the colt?

34 And they ſaid, The Lord hath need of him.

35 And they brought him to Jeſus: and they caſt their garments upon the colt, and they ſat Jeſus thereon.

36 And as he went, they ſpread their clothes in the way.

37 And when he was come nigh, even now at the deſcent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the diſciples began to rejoice and praiſe God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had ſeen,

38 Saying, Bleſſed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the higheſt.

39 And ſome of the Phariſees from among the multitude ſaid unto him, Maſter, rebuke thy diſciples.

40 And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, I tell you, that if theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out.

41 ¶ And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it.

42 Saying, If thou hadſt known, even thou, at leaſt in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

43 For the days ſhall come upon thee, that thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſs thee round, and keep thee in on every ſide,

44 And ſhall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they ſhall not leave in thee one ſtone upon another: becauſe thou kneweſt not the time of thy viſitation.

45 And he went into the temple, and began to caſt out them that ſold therein, and them that bought,

46 Saying unto them, Is it written, My houſe is the houſe of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves.

47 And he taught daily in the temple. But the chief prieſts and the ſcribes, and the chief of the people ſought to deſtroy him, 48 And could not find what they might do: for all the people were very attentive to hear him.

Ver. 8. Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have wronged any man, I reſtore him fourfold.] This is the method which Zaccheus the publican took to demonſtrate his reformation and converſion. He did not only make the reſtitution which the law required in general from every man; but he moreover, inflicted on himſelf, a ſurpluſage, by way of penalty for his ſins, bequeathing, not only the legal fifth part of his income, but half of his eſtate to charitable uſes.

Ver. 12. A certain noble man went into a far country to receive a kingdom, and to return.] See the reaſon of this alluſion, in Matt. ix. 38. and was intended to reprove the Jews for rejecting the Meſſiah. And here obſerve, that as the dreadful deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews was an emblem of the laſt judgment; ſo Chriſt's reckoning with them, is a repreſentation of that account he will take of all men in the great day, for all the talents they have reſpectively received; and with reſpect to that, this Lord is ſaid to come after a long time; Matt. xxv. 19.

Ver. 41.—And he wept over it.] i. e. Jeruſalem, out of a profound charity, and compaſſion of the evils he knew were coming upon that holy city.

What follows in this chapter, is before explained in the parallel Scripture in Matthew and Mark. To which I refer you.

CHAP. XX.

1 Chriſt avoucheth his authority, by a queſtion of John's baptiſm. 9 The parable of the vineyard. 19 Of giving tribute to Ceſar: 27 He convinceth the Sadducees that denied the reſurrection. 41 How Chriſt is the ſon of David: 45 He warneth his diſciples to beware of the ſcribes.

AND it came to paſs, that on one of thoſe days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the goſpel, the chief prieſts and the ſcribes came upon him, with the elders,

2 And ſpake unto him, ſaying, Tell us, By what authority doſt thou theſe things? or who is he that gave thee this authority?

3 And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, I will alſo ask you one thing; and anſwer me:

4 The baptiſm of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5 And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, If we ſhall ſay, From heaven; he will ſay, Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we ſay of men; all the people will ſtone us: for they be perſwaded that John was a prophet.

7 And they anſwered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things.

9 Then began he to ſpeak to the people this parable: A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time.

10 And at the ſeaſon he ſent a ſervant to the husbandmen, that they ſhould give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen beat him, and ſent him away empty.

11 And again he ſent another ſervant; and they beat him alſo, and entreated him ſhamefully, and ſent him away empty.

12 And again he ſent the third; and they wounded him alſo, and caſt him out.

13 Then ſaid the lord of the vineyard, What ſhall I do? I will ſend my beloved ſon: it may be they will reverence him, when they ſee him.

14 But when the husbandmen ſaw him, they reaſoned among themſelves, ſaying, This is the heir: come let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.

15 So they caſt him out of the vineyard, and killed him. What therefore ſhall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He ſhall come and deſtroy theſe husbandmen, and ſhall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it, they ſaid, God forbid.

17 And he beheld them, and ſaid, What is this then that is written, The ſtone which the builders rejected, the ſame is become the head of the corner?

18 Whoſoever ſhall fall upon that ſtone, ſhall be broken: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall, it will grind him to powder.

19 ¶ And the chief prieſts and the ſcribes the ſame hour ſought to lay hands on him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that he had ſpoken this parable againſt them.

20 And they watched him, and ſent forth ſpies, which ſhould feign themſelves juſt men, that they might take hold of his words, that ſo they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked him, ſaying, Maſter, we know that thou ſayeſt and teacheſt rightly, neither accepteſt thou the perſon of any, but teacheſt the way of God truly.

22 Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Ceſar, or not?

23 But he perceived their craftineſs, and ſaid unto them, Why tempt ye me?

24 Shew me a peny: whoſe image and ſuperſcription hath it? They anſwered and ſaid, Ceſars.

25 And he ſaid unto them, Render therefore unto Ceſar the things which be Ceſars, and unto God the things which be Gods.

26 And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at his anſwer, and held their peace.

27 ¶ Then came to him certain of the Sadducees (which deny that there is any reſurrection) and they asked him,

28 Saying, Maſter, Moſes wrote unto us, If any mans brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother.

29 There were therefore ſeven brethren: and the firſt took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the ſecond took her to wife, and he died childleſs.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner the ſeven alſo. And they left no children, and died.

32 Laſt of all the woman died alſo.

33 Therefore in the reſurrection whoſe wife of them is ſhe? for ſeven had her to wife.

34 And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which ſhall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the reſurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage.

36 Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the reſurrection.

37 Now that the dead are raiſed, even Moſes ſhewed at the buſh, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob.

38 For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him.

39 ¶ Then certain of the ſcribes anſwering, ſaid, Maſter, Thou haſt well ſaid.

40 And after that they durſt not ask him any queſtion at all.

41 ¶ And he ſaid unto them, How ſay they that Chriſt is Davids ſon?

42 And David himſelf ſaith in the book of pſalms, The LORD ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand,

43 Till I make thine enemies thy footſtool.

44 David therefore calleth him Lord, how is he then his ſon?

45 ¶ Then in the audience of all the people he ſaid unto his diſciples,

46 Beware of the ſcribes, which deſire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the higheſt ſeats in the ſynagogues, and the chief rooms at feaſts;

47 Which devour widows houſes, and for a ſhew make long prayers: the ſame ſhall receive greater damnation.

Ver. 16. — And when they heard it, they ſaid, God forbid.] In Matt. xxi. 41. and Mark xii. 9. Chriſt is introduced enquiring of them, "what the Lord of the vineyard will do to theſe husbandmen?" And they anſwer, he will deſtroy them, and let out his vineyard to other husbandmen:" Here Chriſt himſelf is repreſented declaring what the Lord of the vineyard will do to thoſe husbandmen, and they ſeem to ſay, God forbid that he ſhould do ſo. Which is a ſeeming contrariety, and is reſolved by ſome in this manner; That the Phariſees do not by theſe words deny, that the Lord of the vineyard would deſtroy thoſe husbandmen; but knowing that the parable was ſpoken againſt them, they ſay, μὴ γένοιτο, far be it from us husbandmen, to do a work ſo worthy of ſuch a puniſhment; which ſeems agreeable to Chriſt's reply, "If the prieſts and Phariſees will not do this, what means that which is written?" what means that ſaying of the Pſalmiſt? which even you my perſecutors interpret of the Meſſiah. The ſtone which the builders refuſed is become the head of the corner; Pſ. cxviii. 22. To add the greater weight to this interpretation, remark that our Lord ſpake this parable againſt them, Matt. xxi. 45. Mark xii. 12. They therefore deny what they underſtood, that they ſhould deſtroy the Son of the Lord of the vineyard, i. e. the Meſſiah, as not believing Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, but an impoſtor; but they deny not, that they who ſhould do this, were worthy of this puniſhment. Or, becauſe it is particularly noted by our Evangeliſt above at the ninth verſe, that this parable was ſpoken to the people, this may be their anſwer, "Far be it from our rulers to do ſo vile a thing, as may bring down this judgment upon us, whilſt the rulers and Phariſees, who thought themſelves far from being ſuch husbandmen, as they knew Chriſt ſuggeſted they would prove themſelves to be, ſtick not to ſay, ſuch husbandmen deſerve indeed to be deſtroyed, as thinking they ſhould never be concerned in their ruin.

Ver. 36.—Equal to the angels.] i. e. In duration.

——— And are children of God, being the children of the reſurrection.] They are the children or ſons of God, becauſe they are the children of the reſurrection, or the redemption of the body from corruption, to live for ever, ſee Rom. viii. 23. and John viii. 35.

Ver. 38. For he is not a God of the dead.] i. e. Of them who are ſo dead, as not to be the ſons of the reſurrection, ſee verſe 36.

——— But of the living.] i. e. Of them whoſe bodies ſhall live again; ſee the note on verſe 36. to be glorified with him, Rom. viii. 17. And Here let us not be deceived with the falſhood of that interpretation, which ſays, that the Scripture in this place imports, that the ſouls of good men live not after death till the general reſurrection. For,

When Chriſt ſaid God is not a God of the dead, we are to underſtand that he is not a God of them, who are to abide in a ſtate of death, and never to enjoy the reſurrection of the juſt, i. e. he owns not them for his who are not to be the ſons of the reſurrection; and will not be called their God, as having not prepared for them an Heavenly City, Heb. xi. 16. Hence the Scripture ſpeaks of them, as being paſſed from death unto life, John v. 24. and that they ſhall not die; becauſe Chriſt will raiſe them up at the laſt day, John vi. 50. And in the opinion of the Jews, they only ſeemed to die in the eyes of fools, becauſe their hope is full of immortality, Wiſd. iii. 2, 3, 4. and they ſpeak it as a proverb, that the juſt live when they are dead: And in this ſenſe, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, would not live to God, tho' their ſouls lived with him, unleſs their bodies alſo roſe again.

Ver. 46.—Deſire to walk in long robes.] Reaching down to their ancles, or to their feet, that no part of their bodies may be ſeen; ſee Dr. Lightfoot on the place. Hence Le Clerc makes this good obſervation, "The clergy are not to be eſteemed ſo much for their apparel, as for their learning; not for their habit, but for their converſation; not for the adornment of their bodies, but for purity of mind.

See the notes on Matt. xxi. and xxii. and Mark xii. where you may find ſatisfaction as to thoſe paſſages, not annotated on in this chapter.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Chriſt commendeth the poor widow: 5 He foretelleth the deſtruction of the temple, and of the city Jeruſalem: 25 The ſigns alſo which ſhall be before the laſt day: 35 He exhorteth them to be watchful.

AND he looked up, and ſaw the rich men caſting their gifts into the treaſury.

2 And he ſaw alſo a certain poor widow, caſting in thither two mites.

3 And he ſaid, Of a truth I ſay unto you, that this poor widow hath caſt in more than they all.

4 For all theſe have of their abundance caſt in unto the offerings of God: but ſhe of her penury hath caſt in all the living that ſhe had.

5 ¶ And as ſome ſpake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly ſtones, and gifts, he ſaid,

6 As for theſe things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down.

7 And they aſked him, ſaying, Maſter, but when ſhall theſe things be? and what ſign will there be when theſe things ſhall come to paſs?

8 And he ſaid, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them.

9 But when ye ſhall hear of wars, and commotions, be not terrified: for theſe things muſt firſt come to paſs, but the end is not by and by.

10 Then ſaid he unto them, Nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes ſhall be in divers places, and famines, and peſtilences, and fearful ſights, and great ſigns ſhall there be from heaven.

12 But before all theſe they ſhall lay their hands on you, and perſecute you, delivering you up to the ſynagogues, and into priſons, being brought before kings and rulers for my names ſake.

13 And it ſhall turn to you for a teſtimony.

14 Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before, what ye ſhall anſwer.

15 For I will give you a mouth and wiſdom, which all your adverſaries ſhall not be able to gainſay, nor reſiſt.

16 And ye ſhall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and ſome of you ſhall they cauſe to be put to death.

17 And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake.

18 But there ſhall not an hair of your head periſh.

19 In your patience poſſeſs ye your ſouls.

20 And when ye ſhall ſee Jeruſalem compaſſed with armies, then know that the deſolation thereof is nigh.

21 Then let them which are in Judea, flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midſt of it, depart out; and let not them that are in the countries, enter thereinto.

22 For theſe be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.

23 But wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days: for there ſhall be great diſtreſs in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they ſhall fall by the edge of the ſword, and ſhall be led away captive into all nations: and Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

25 ¶ And there ſhall be ſigns in the ſun, and in the moon, and in the ſtars; and upon the earth diſtreſs of nations with perplexity, the ſea and the waves roaring;

26 Mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after thoſe things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven ſhall be ſhaken.

27 And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

28 And when theſe things begin to come to paſs, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.

29 And he ſpake to them a parable, Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees;

30 When they now ſhoot forth, ye ſee and know of your own ſelves, that ſummer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewiſe ye when ye ſee theſe things come to paſs, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32 Verily I ſay unto you, This generation ſhall not paſs away, till all be fulfilled.

33 Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away: but my words ſhall not paſs away.

34 ¶ And take heed to your ſelves, leſt at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, and cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares.

35 For as a ſnare ſhall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

36 Watch ye therefore and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to eſcape all theſe things that ſhall come to paſs, and to ſtand before the Son of man.

37 And in the day-time he was teaching in the temple, and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

Ver. 18. But.] i. e. Notwithſtanding, if you continue faithful unto the end.

—— There ſhall not one hair of your head periſh.] In that deſtruction which I foretel you now, ſhall then come upon the ſtiff-necked and unbelieving Jews; ſo Whitby and Grotius ſays, this is a proverbial expreſſion uſed in 1 Sam. xiv. 45. 2. 2 Sam. xiv. 11. 1 Kings i. 52. Acts xxvii. 34. ſignifying, that they ſhould ſuſtain no loſs, i. e. all circumſtances conſidered: For to ſuffer ſome loſs for the preſent, to gain eternal life, is the greateſt advantage, whilſt that which ſeems at preſent to be loſt is laid up with God to be reſtored to us with uſury; and this limitation ſeems neceſſary, not only from the former words, ſome of you they ſhall cauſe to be put to death, ver. 16. but alſo from the event; for as moſt of the Apoſtles were cut off before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſo the firſt martyr Stephen was ſtoned to death by the Jews; James the leſs, and other Chriſtians, by Ananus the high-prieſt, as Joſephus teſtifies, Antiq. l. xx. c. 8. Thus Grotius. But with his leave, thoſe texts of Samuel and Kings prove ſomething more, that even in this world they of whom the proverb is ſpoken, ſhall not ſuffer, or be put to death, and ſo it was; for when the report ſpread that the Roman army was approaching to the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, city and temple, the faithful Chriſtians, that were there, were inſpired by a revelation to leave the city, as the Lord had foretold in this Scripture; ſee Theodoret in Zach. xiv. 2.

Ver. 24. — And ſhall be led away captive into all nations.] The completion of this Prophecy no one can doubt, who views the preſent circumſtances of the Jews. But even in the beginning of their deſtruction it was accompliſhed in ſome meaſure; for, Joſephus tells us, that during the war, the Romans took ninety and ſeven thouſand, of which Titus reſerved the faireſt and talleſt to adorn his future triumph; the reſt that were above ſeventeen years old, he ſent ſome to work in the mines; but moſt of them he diſperſed through the Roman provinces, to be deſtroyed in their theatres, by the ſword and wild beaſts; and they that were under ſeventeen years of age were ſold. De bello Jud. l. vii. c. 49.

——— Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden down of the Gentiles, till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.] i. e. Jeruſalem ſhall be inhabited, not by the Jews, but by the Gentiles ruling there, till the ſeaſon for the full converſion of the Gentiles ſhall come in, i. e. till the time of the converſion of the Jews, and the flowing in of all nations to them.

Ver. 25. And there ſhall be ſigns in the ſun, and in the moon, and in the ſtars.] i. e. In the Heavens where they move.

—— Diſtreſs of nations.] By bloody and cruel wars.

—— With perplexity.] How the inhabitants ſhall eſcape the ſword.

—— The ſea and the waves roaring.] This was a prophetical declaration of that ſtorm called Malemboreas, which happened afterwards to the Jews, and deſcribed by Joſephus in his Jewiſh wars, l. iii. c. 9. where it is written, — "The ſeditious, and thoſe that had eſcaped out of the demoliſhed cities, which were in all a great number (and in great perplexity how to extricate themſelves from the imminent danger of becoming ſlaves to or of periſhing by the ſword of the Romans) repaired to Joppa. —— Where they turned pirates. —— But were ſoon obliged by Veſpaſian to quit the town, and flee to their ſhips in a haven that lay expoſed to the Malemboreas or black north wind, which roſe very high, and daſhed their ſhips one againſt another; drove many upon the rocks; and carried many more into the ocean. Nay the waves roſe ſo very high, that ſome were drowned. Now they had no place to flee into, nor to ſave themſelves. —— In this hurry there was great lamentation made by the diſtreſſed, and a terrible noiſe when their ſhip ſplit againſt each other. Some were glad to die in the waves; and others choſe rather to butcher themſelves with their own ſwords, than to fall into the hands of the Romans. Yet the greateſt part of them were daſhed by the violence of the waves againſt the rocks. So that the ſea was a long way ſtained with blood, and the ſhore was covered with dead corpſes, which amounted to the number of four thouſand two hundred."

Ver. 34. And take heed to your ſelves, &c.] This, and the context, ſhews that God's promiſe of deliverance to the Chriſtians, out of the deſtruction of the Jews, was only conditional, provided that they took care to avoid thoſe ſins, which might render them obnoxious to theſe judgments, and to do thoſe things, which might render them worthy to eſcape. And

This proves, that there is to be a connection of our beſt endeavours with the Divine Aid, and Providence, for our preſervation; and that we are not, and cannot in reaſon expect preſervation immediately from him, without the uſe of thoſe means, which he hath put into our power to effect it.

CHAP. XXII.

1 The Jews conſpire againſt Chriſt: 3 Satan prepareth Judas to betray him. 7 The Apoſtles prepare the paſſover. Chriſt inſtituteth his holy ſupper: 21 covertly foretelleth of the traitor; 24 dehorteth the reſt of his Apoſtles from ambition: 32 aſſureth Peter his faith ſhould not fail, 34 and yet he ſhould deny him thrice: 39 He prayeth in the mount, and ſweateth blood: 47 is betrayed with a kiſs: 50 He healeth Malchus ear: 54 He is thrice denied of Peter, 63 ſhamefully abuſed, 66 and confeſſeth himſelf to be the Son of God.

NOW the feaſt of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the paſſover.

2 And the chief prieſts and ſcribes ſought how they might kill him; for they feared the people.

3 ¶ Then entred Satan into Judas ſirnamed Iſcariot, being of the number of the twelve.

4 And he went his way, and communed with the chief prieſts and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

5 And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money.

6 And he promiſed, and ſought opportunity to betray him unto them in the abſence of the multitude.

7 ¶ Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the paſſover muſt be killed.

8 And he ſent Peter and John, ſaying, Go and prepare us the paſſover, that we may eat.

9 And they ſaid unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare?

10 And he ſaid unto them, Behold, when ye are entred into the city, there ſhall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the houſe where he entreth in.

11 And ye ſhall ſay unto the good-man of the houſe, The Maſter ſaith unto thee, Where is the gueſt-chamber, where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples?

12 And he ſhall ſhew you a large upper room furniſhed: there make ready.

13 And they went and found as he had ſaid unto them: and they made ready the paſſover.

14 And when the hour was come, he ſat down, and the twelve apoſtles with him.

15 And he ſaid unto them, With deſire I have deſired to eat this paſſover with you before I ſuffer.

16 For I ſay unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and ſaid, Take this, and divide it among your ſelves.

18 For I ſay unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God ſhall come.

19 ¶ And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, ſaying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

20 Likewiſe alſo the cup after ſupper, ſaying, This cup is the new teſtament in my blood, which is ſhed for you.

21 ¶ But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me, is with me on the table.

22 And truly the Son of man goeth as it was determined: but wo unto that man by whom he is betrayed.

23 And they began to enquire among themſelves, which of them it was that ſhould do this thing.

24 ¶ And there was alſo a ſtrife among them, which of them ſhould be accounted the greateſt.

25 And he ſaid unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exerciſe lordſhip over them; and they that exerciſe authority upon them, are called benefactors.

26 But ye ſhall not be ſo: but he that is greateſt among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth ſerve.

27 For whether is greater, he that ſitteth at meat, or he that ſerveth? is not he that ſitteth at meat: but I am among you as he that ſerveth.

28 Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations.

29 And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me:

30 That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and ſit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

31 ¶ And the Lord ſaid, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath deſired to have you, that he may ſift you as wheat:

32 But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren.

33 And he ſaid unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee both into priſon, and to death.

34 And he ſaid, I tell thee, Peter, the cock ſhall not crow this day, before that thou ſhalt thrice deny that thou knoweſt me.

35 And he ſaid unto them, When I ſent you without purſe, and ſcrip, and ſhoes, lacked ye any thing? And they ſaid, Nothing.

36 Then ſaid he unto them, But now he that hath a purſe, let him take it, and likewiſe his ſcrip: and he that hath no ſword, let him ſell his garment, and buy one.

37 For I ſay unto you, that this that is written, muſt yet be accompliſhed in me, And he was reckoned among the tranſgreſſors: for the things concerning me have an end.

38 And they ſaid, Lord, behold, here are two ſwords. And he ſaid unto them, It is enough.

39 ¶ And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his diſciples alſo followed him.

40 And when he was at the place, he ſaid unto them, Pray, that ye enter not into temptation.

41 And he was withdrawn from them about a ſtones caſt, and kneeled down, and prayed,

42 Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheleſs, not my will, but thine be done.

43 And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, ſtrengthning him.

44 And being in an agony, he prayed more earneſtly: and his ſweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

45 And when he roſe up from prayer, and was come to his diſciples, he found them ſleeping for ſorrow,

46 And ſaid unto them, Why ſleep ye? riſe and pray, leſt ye enter into temptation.

47 ¶ And while he yet ſpake, behold, a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jeſus, to kiſs him.

48 But Jeſus ſaid unto him, Judas, betrayeſt thou the Son of man with a kiſs?

49 When they which were about him, ſaw what would follow, they ſaid unto him, Lord, ſhall we ſmite with the ſword?

50 ¶ And one of them ſmote the ſervant of the high-prieſt, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him.

52 Then Jeſus ſaid unto the chief prieſts, and captains of the temple, and the elders which were come to him, Be ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves?

53 When I was daily with you in the temple, ye ſtretched forth no hands againſt me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkneſs.

54 ¶ Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high-prieſts houſe. And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they had kindled a fire in the midſt of the hall, and were ſet down together, Peter ſat down among them.

56 But a certain maid beheld him as he ſat by the fire, and earneſtly looked upon him, and ſaid, this man was alſo with him.

57 And he denied him, ſaying, Woman, I know him not.

58 And after a little while, another ſaw him, and ſaid, Thou art alſo of them. And Peter ſaid, Man, I am not.

59 And about the ſpace of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, ſaying, Of a truth this fellow alſo was with him; for he is a Galilean.

60 And Peter ſaid, Man, I know not what thou ſayeſt. And immediately while he yet ſpake, the cock crew.

61 And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter; and Peter remembred the word of the Lord, how he had ſaid unto him, Before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice.

62 And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

63 ¶ And the men that held Jeſus, mocked him, and ſmote him.

64 And when they had blindfolded him, they ſtruck him on the face, and asked him, ſaying, Propheſy, who is it that ſmote thee?

65 And many other things blaſphemouſly ſpake they againſt him.

66 ¶ And aſſoon as it was day, the elders of the people, and the chief prieſts and the ſcribes came together, and led him into their council.

67 Saying, Art thou the Chriſt? tell us. And he ſaid unto them, If I tell you, you will not believe.

68 And if I alſo ask you, you will not anſwer me, nor let me go.

69 Hereafter ſhall the Son of man ſit on the right hand of the power of God.

70 Then ſaid they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he ſaid unto them, Ye ſay that I am.

71 And they ſaid, What need we any further witneſs? for we our ſelves have heard of his own mouth.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Jeſus is accuſed before Pilate, and ſent to Herod: 8 Herod mocketh him: 12 Herod and Pilate are made friends. 18 Barabbas is deſired of the people, and is looſed by Pilate, and Jeſus is given to be crucified: 27 He telleth the women that lament him, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: 34 prayeth for his enemies. 39 Two evildoers are crucified with him: 46 His death: 50 His burial.

AND the whole multitude of them aroſe, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to accuſe him, ſaying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Ceſar, ſaying, that he himſelf is Chriſt a king.

3 And Pilate asked him, ſaying, Art thou the king of the Jews? and he anſwered him and ſaid, Thou ſayeſt it.

4 Then Pilate ſaid to the chief prieſt, and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

5 And they were the more fierce, ſaying, He ſtirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean.

7 And as ſoon as he knew that he belonged unto Herods juriſdiction, he ſent him to Herod, who himſelf was alſo at Jeruſalem at that time.

8 ¶ And when Herod ſaw Jeſus, he was exceeding glad: for he was deſirous to ſee him of a long ſeaſon, becauſe he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have ſeen ſome miracle done by him.

9 Then he queſtioned with him in many words; but he anſwered him nothing.

10 And the chief prieſts and ſcribes ſtood and vehemently accuſed him.

11 And Herod with his men of war ſet him at nought, and mocked him, and arayed him in a gorgeous robe, and ſent him again to Pilate.

12 ¶ And the ſame day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themſelves.

13 ¶ And Pilate when he had called together the chief prieſts, and the rulers, and the people,

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and behold, I having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching thoſe things whereof ye accuſe him;

15 No, nor yet Herod: for I ſent you to him, and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him.

16 I will therefore chaſtiſe him, and releaſe him.

17 For of neceſſity he muſt releaſe one unto them at the feaſt.

18 And they cried out all at once, ſaying, Away with this man, and releaſe unto us Barabbas:

19 (Who for a certain ſedition made in the city, and for murder was caſt in priſon)

20 Pilate therefore willing to releaſe Jeſus, ſpake again to them.

21 But they cried, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22 And he ſaid unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cauſe of death in him: I will therefore chaſtiſe him, and let him go.

23 And they were inſtant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified: and the voices of them, and of the chief prieſts prevailed.

24 And Pilate gave ſentence that it ſhould be as they required.

25 And he releaſed unto them, him that for ſedition and murder was caſt into priſon whom they had deſired; but he delivered Jeſus to their will.

26 And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the croſs, that he might bear it after Jeſus.

27 ¶ And there followed him a great company of people, and of women which alſo bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jeſus turning unto them, ſaid, Daughters of Jeruſalem, weep not for me, but weep for your ſelves, and for your children.

29 For behold, the days are coming, in the which they ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave ſuck.

30 Then ſhall they begin to ſay to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us.

31 For if they do theſe things in a green tree, What ſhall be done in the dry?

32 And there were alſo two other malefactors led with him to be put to death.

33 And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors; one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

34 ¶ Then ſaid Jeſus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and caſt lots.

35 And the people ſtood beholding: and the rulers alſo with them, derided him, ſaying, He ſaved others; let him ſave himſelf, if he be Chriſt the choſen of God.

36 And the ſoldiers alſo mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar,

37 And ſaying, If thou be the king of the Jews, ſave thy ſelf.

38 And a ſuperſcription alſo was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 ¶ And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on him, ſaying, If thou be Chriſt, ſave thy ſelf and us.

40 But the other anſwering, rebuked him, ſaying, Doſt not thou fear God, ſeeing thou art in the ſame condemnation?

41 And we indeed juſtly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiſs.

42 And he ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, remember me when thou comeſt into thy kingdom.

43 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, To day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe.

44 And it was about the ſixth hour, and there was a darkneſs over all the earth until the ninth hour.

45 And the ſun was darkned, and the vail of the temple was rent in the mids.

46 ¶ And when Jeſus had cried with a loud voice, he ſaid, Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: and having ſaid thus, he gave up the ghoſt.

47 Now when the centurion ſaw what was done, he glorified God, ſaying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

48 And all the people that came together to that ſight, beholding the things which were done, ſmote their breaſts, and returned.

49 And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, ſtood afar off, beholding theſe things.

50 ¶ And behold, there was a man named Joſeph, a counſellor, and he was a good man, and a juſt:

51 (The ſame had not conſented to the counſel and deed of them) he was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews (who alſo himſelf waited for the kingdom of God)

52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jeſus.

53 And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a ſepulchre that was hewn in ſtone, wherein never man before was laid.

54 And that day was the preparation, and the ſabbath drew on.

55 And the women alſo which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the ſepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56 And they returned and prepared ſpices and ointments; and reſted the ſabbath-day according to the commandment.

Chap. xxii and xxiii. See the connection and paraphraſe of theſe two chapters in the notes on Matthew xxvi, xxvii. See alſo ſome Annotations proper to be applied to this Scripture, after Mark xiv. and xv.

Chap. xxii. Ver. 3. Then entred Satan into Judas.] i. e. Two days before the paſſover, as it appears by that paſſage of John xiii. 1——29. For, if the ſupper, in which our Saviour gave him the ſop, when Satan entred, was as John relates (xiii. 1.) before the feaſt of the paſſover, at a time when the diſciples thought that Chriſt had bid him buy thoſe things which were needful for the paſchal feaſt, when he had ſaid to Judas, what thou doeſt, do quickly; it is evident that feaſt was not yet celebrated by them. Beſides, let it be obſerved, that Luke in this place ſaith, that after Satan had entred into Judas, he conſulted with the high-prieſts and with the ſoldiers, or captains, how he might deliver him up unto them; and then it follows; Then came the days of unleavened bread, and Chriſt ſaid unto his diſciples, Prepare the paſſover for us, that we may eat; ſo that Satan muſt have entred into Judas before the paſſover was prepared. Now,

The Apoſtle declares, that Satan ἐνεργεῖται, inwardly worketh in the children of diſobedience; Eph. ii. 2. and leads them captive at his will; 2 Tim. ii. 26. Therefore, when Judas, tempted by his covetouſneſs, had robbed even the poor of the charity deſigned for them; John xii. 6. Satan ſuggeſts unto him another way to ſatisfy his avarice, even the betraying his maſter for a ſum of money; and yielding to this ſuggeſtion, then he was prompted to put this queſtion to the high-prieſt, What will you give me to betray him? Matt. xxvi. 15. Then Satan fully entred into him, and carried him on without remorſe to the performance of that horrid enterprize.

Ver. 6. And he promiſed.] i. e. To make good his word, or bargain.

Ver. 22.——As it was determined] The original has it, κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, i. e. according to the prophecies concerning the death of Chriſt, made by the council and appointment of God. Yet this does not deſtroy free will. See my Diſſertation thereon in the courſe of this work.

Ver. 28.——In my temptations.] i. e. In my low and afflicted ſtate on earth.

Ver. 29. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as [or ſuch a one as] my Father hath appointed unto me.] Where note, that Chriſt here does not ſpeak of the heavenly kingdom common to all the faithful, but of a kingdom proper to his Apoſtles. For, even as the Father had given him power to make laws, by which all his ſubjects ſhould be governed, and to which they ſhould be ſubject; ſo did Chriſt give to his Apoſtles power and authority to deliver to Chriſtians thoſe Evangelical laws which ſhould be of univerſal and perpetual obligation. Now,

Hence it follows, That the Goſpels and Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, muſt be owned as the laws of Chriſt; and whereas the nobility in a kingdom are wont to be diſtinguiſhed by the honour and power imparted to them by eating at a king's table, and in having a ſhare in the government under the king: Therefore our Saviour repreſents the honour of of his Apoſtles, by eating and drinking with them at his table, and their power by promiſing they ſhall judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

Ver. 36.———And he that hath no ſword, let him ſell his garment, and buy one.] This is not a command to buy a ſword, or to uſe one to repel force by force: but it is a figurative admonition, that the times would be ſo perilous, that they ought to arm themſelves as much as poſſible with faith and patience againſt their bitter trials. That it is the interpretation hereof, is yet more evident from Chriſt's ſaying two ſwords were enough; which can never be ſuppoſed to mean, were enough to withſtand and overcome the aſſault of the outward enemy; but only that they were good emblems of that ſtedfaſtneſs we ought to have againſt the aſſault of perſecution and the ſpiritual enemy.

Ver. 42.——Let this cup paſs from me.] i. e. This death, according to the Jewiſh phraſe of ſpeech; ſee Dr. Whitby in loc.

Ver. 52.————And captains of the temple.] Theſe were not the Roman ſoldiers placed in the tower of Antonia; but the Jewiſh captains of ſeveral watches of the temple, which were in all twenty-four; ſee Dr. Whitby in loc.

Ver. 53. This is your hour, and the power of darkneſs.] Or, This is the time in which it is permitted you to exerciſe your malice, and to execute your bloody deſigns againſt me; and in which Satan alſo is permitted to ruſh upon me with his moſt furious temptations.

Chap. xxiii. Ver. 2.———And forbidding to give tribute to Ceſar.] This was an abſolute falſhood, if underſtood that Chriſt had at any time perſonally forbid his diſciples to pay tribute; for he taught the very contrary; Matt. xxii. 21. But this whole accuſation was artfully laid together, intending to perſuade Pilate, that Jeſus was a Galilean, a follower of Judas Gaulonites, and one of that ſedition, whoſe blood Pilate had poured out, becauſe they taught it unlawful to pay tribute to Ceſar; ſee the note on Luke xiii. 1.

Ver. 29.———The days are coming in which they ſhall ſay, Bleſſed are the barren, &c.] Theſe days were the time that Jeruſalem was beſieged and taken, &c. when the women loſt their children, who were ſold to be bondſlaves; (ſee the note on ch. xxi. 24.) and Mary the daughter of Eleazar was by famine reduced to eat her own ſucking-child; Joſeph. Jewiſh Wars, lib. 7.

Ver. 30. Then ſhall they begin to ſay to the mountains, Fall on us.] This is a proverbial expreſſion uſed in Hoſea x. 8. importing, that God would bring ſuch judgments upon the Jews, which muſt render their condition as miſerable, as if the mountains ſhould cover them, and the hills fall upon them.

Ver. 31.——A green tree.] This is a metaphor ſignifying a good and juſt man.

——The dry.] i. e. Tree, this repreſents on the contrary, a bad or wicked man. Thus God by Ezekiel threatens, that he will cut off every green tree, and every dry tree in Jeruſalem; ch. xx. 47. which the ſaid Prophet in ch. xxi. 3. interprets, of cutting off both the righteous and the wicked: And the Jews have this proverb, Two dry ſticks will burn a green one; which ſignifies, that the company of two wicked men, will corrupt and bring judgment upon a good man.

Ver. 43.——To day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe.] Here, as always, Chriſt ſpoke in ſuch a manner as was known, and accuſtomary to the Jews, who called that place, into which pious ſouls ſeparated from the body, were immediately received. So the Chaldeans uſed to admoniſh, ſeek, ſaid they, Paradiſe, the glorious country of the ſoul. And when any perſon was reported to be dying, or dead, they kindly wiſhed that his ſoul might reſt in Paradiſe. Hence

We learn, that the ſouls of men remain in a ſtate of ſenſibility after their ſeparation of their bodies. Chriſt here recommends his into the hands of God; ver. 46. where the ſouls of the juſt are; Wiſdom iii. 1. in peace; ver. 3. and in hope; ver. 4. And, That the ſouls of good men after this mortal ſtate, paſs through death into an happy ſtate of eternal joy and felicity; for Philo ſaith, that Paradiſe is "the repreſentation of a ſoul leaping for fulneſs and greatneſs of joy;" or, according to Tertullian, it is a place of heavenly delights.

Chap. XXIV.

1 Chriſt's reſurrection is declared by two Angels, to the women that came to the ſepulchre. 9 Theſe report it to others. 13 Chriſt himſelf appeareth to the two diſciples that went to Emmaus: 36 Afterwards he appeareth to the Apoſtles, and reproveth their unbelief: 47 Giveth them a charge: 49 Promiſeth the Holy Ghoſt: 51 And ſo aſcendeth into heaven.

NOW upon the firſt day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the ſepulchre, bringing the ſpices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

2 And they found the ſtone rolled away from the ſepulchre.

3 And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jeſus.

4 And it came to paſs, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men ſtood by them in ſhining garments.

5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they ſaid unto them, Why ſeek ye the living among the dead.

6 He is not here, but is riſen: remember how he ſpake unto you when he was yet in Galilee.

7 Saying, The Son of man muſt be delivered into the hands of ſinful men, and be crucified, and the third day riſe again.

8 And they remembered his words.

9 And returned from the ſepulchre, and told all theſe things unto the eleven, and to all the reſt.

10 It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanno, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told theſe things unto the apoſtles.

11 And their words ſeemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12 Then aroſe Peter, and ran unto the ſepulchre, and ſtooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themſelves, and departed, wondring in himſelf at that which was come to paſs.

13 ¶ And behold two of them went that ſame day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jeruſalem about threeſcore furlongs.

14 And they talked together of all theſe things which had happened.

15 And it came to paſs, that while they communed together, and reaſoned, Jeſus himſelf drew near, and went with them.

16 But their eyes were holden, that they ſhould not know him.

17 And he ſaid unto them, What manner of communications are theſe that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are ſad?

18 And the one of them, whoſe name was *Cleopas, anſwering, ſaid unto him, Art thou only a ſtranger in Jeruſalem, and haſt not known the things which are come to paſs there in theſe days?

19 And he ſaid unto them, What things? And they ſaid unto him, Concerning Jeſus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God, and all the people:

20 And how the chief prieſts and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we truſted that it had been he, which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael: and beſide all this, to day is the third day ſince theſe things were done.

22 Yea, and certain women alſo of our company made us aſtoniſhed, which were early at the ſepulchre:

23 And when they found not his body, they came, ſaying, that they had alſo ſeen a viſion of angels, which ſaid that he was alive.

24 And certain of them which were with us, went to the ſepulchre, and found it even ſo as the women had ſaid; but him they ſaw not.

25 Then he ſaid unto them, O fools, and ſlow of hearts to believe all that the prophets have ſpoken!

26 Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory?

27 And beginning at Moſes, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the ſcriptures, the things concerning himſelf.

28 And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further.

29 But they conſtrained him, ſaying, Abide with us, for it is towards evening, and the day is far ſpent. And he went in to tarry with them.

30 And it came to paſs, as he ſat at meat with them, he took bread, and bleſſed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31 And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vaniſhed out of their ſight.

32 And they ſaid one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the ſcriptures?

33 And they roſe up the ſame hour, and returned to Jeruſalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them,

34 Saying, The Lord is riſen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

36 ¶ And as they thus ſpake, Jeſus himſelf ſtood in the midſt of them, and ſaith unto them, Peace be unto you.

37 But they were terrified, and affrighted, and ſuppoſed that they had ſeen a ſpirit.

38 And he ſaid unto them, Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts ariſe in your hearts?

39 Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I my ſelf: handle me, and ſee, for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones, as ye ſee me have.

40 And when he had thus ſpoken, he ſhewed them his hands, and his feet.

41 And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondred, he ſaid unto them, Have ye here any meat?

42 And they gave him a piece of a broiled fiſh, and of an honey-comb.

43 And he took it, and did eat before them.

44 And he ſaid unto them, Theſe are the words which I ſpake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things muſt be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moſes, and in the prophets, and in the pſalms concerning me.

45 Then opened he their underſtanding, that they might underſtand the ſcriptures,

46 And ſaid unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the dead the third day:

47 And that repentance, and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem.

48 And ye are witneſſes of theſe things.

49 ¶ And behold I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jeruſalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.

50 ¶ And he led them out as far as to Bethany: and he lift up his hands, and bleſſed them.

51 And it came to paſs, while he bleſſed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven.

52 And they worſhipped him, and returned to Jeruſalem with great joy:

53 And were continually in the temple, praiſing and bleſſing God. Amen.

As for the preciſe time when Chriſt ſuffered, it is largely proved above in the notes on the ſecond chapter to which I ſhall refer you. But as there ſeems one thing more neceſſary to illuſtrate the hiſtory of our Saviour's miniſtry and paſſion, in regard to the power, with which the Jewiſh ſtate in Judea was then inveſted. I ſhall here ſubjoin, before we proceed to the account of our Saviour's reſurrection, ſuch obſervations as are needful to illuſtrate the hiſtory of his ſufferings and paſſion in the following diſſertation.

A diſſertation on the power with which the Jewiſh ſtate in Judea, was inveſted during the time of our Saviour's miniſtry.

Luke has informed us, that when the word of God came to John, in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea, and Annas and Caiaphas were high-prieſts, Luke iii. 1, 2. And all the Evangeliſts have aſſured us, that our Saviour was brought before Pilate and condemned by him. So that (according to them) this Pilate was governor in Judea, during the whole time of our Saviour's miniſtry, or the period we are now in. But becauſe the power of this governor is not particularly deſcribed by any of the Evangeliſts, in order to judge what authority he had here, and what power Annas or Caiaphas, or any other chief men among the Jews were poſſeſſed of in this country, we muſt obſerve the diſcourſes, proceedings, and events recorded by the ſacred hiſtorians, which have any relation to this matter.

1, The Jews appear to have been at liberty to follow their own laws and cuſtoms, in moſt matters, particularly in the affair of marriage, and divorce, in which they differed conſiderably from many other people.

'It has been ſaid, whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: but I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication cauſeth her to commit adultery: and whoſoever ſhall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery,' Matt. v. 31, 32. It is evident, from the manner, in which our Lord condemns all divorces, ſave thoſe made for the cauſe of fornication, that they did at this time put them in practice upon other accounts. This appears alſo from the queſtions put to him concerning this matter, and the anſwers he gave to them and the ſurpriſe and uneaſineſs which the diſciples expreſſed at his deciſions; when he forbad ſuch licentious divorces as thoſe made for every cauſe; for they ſaid unto him if the caſe of the man be ſo with his wiſe, it is not good to marry, Matt. xix. 3, 10.

It is ſaid indeed, that when the Phariſees brought theſe queſtions, they came to him tempting him. But there ſeems not to have been any danger of giving offence to the Roman government, in this caſe, which way ſo ever the queſtion was anſwered. The deſign could be only to expoſe him to the reſentment of the Jewiſh people, by deciſions, contrary to practices they indulged themſelves in, and were very fond of, as I think appears likewiſe from the notice, the diſciples took of what he ſaid upon this ſubject.

However, this is no proof of any great degree of power in the nation, at this time. Joſephus in Vit. ſays, he put away his ſecond wife, becauſe 'he did not like her manners' This was after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and he was ſettled at Rome.

Juſtin Martyr, in Dialog. p. 11. about the middle of the ſecond Century, ſays, 'That to that very day, their Rabbies permitted them to have, each man, four, or five wives. And that, where-ever they were, they converſed with as many women as they pleaſed, and that under the notion of marriage.' Their Rabbies indulged them in theſe practices, and it ſeems the Romans did not interrupt them.

2 Our Lord ſays, Ye have heard, Matt. v. 21, 22. that it was ſaid by them of old time, (or to the ancients,) thou ſhalt not kill: and whoſoever ſhall kill, ſhall be in danger of the judgment. but I ſay unto you, that whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment: and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother, Racha, ſhall be in danger of the counſel.

Grotius, Matt. v. 21. ſuppoſes, that though the power of inflicting capital puniſhments had been now for ſome time taken away from the Jews; yet our Saviour alludes to thoſe methods of proceeding, which had been in uſe among them, and were ſtill freſh in their memory. Our Lord, I think, does not declare at all, what power they now had, or made uſe of; but from the mention of the words of their law, and referring perhaps to the ſenſe in which they then underſtood it; that they who committed murder deſerved puniſhment, and that they who forbore that, were innocent, proceeds to lay down a more ſtrict and pure morality. What he delivers, in terms accommodated to their courts of judicature, is certainly no repreſentation of their conduct, or the ſtate of things, at that time. For it cannot be thought, that every one who was angry with his brother without a cauſe, was then in danger of the judgment, (unleſs the word mean the judgment of God) or that every one who ſaid to his brother Racha, was in danger of being brought by them before the council.

3. Our Lord delivered many predictions concerning the treatment, which his followers would meet with. ‘ Therefore alſo ſaid the wiſdom of God, I will ſend them Prophets and Apoſtles ; and ſome of them they ſhall ſlay and perſecute,’ Luke xi. 49. ‘ Wherefore, behold I ſend unto you prophets and wiſe men and ſcribes ; and ſome of them ſhall ye kill and crucifie, and ſome of them ſhall ye ſcourge in your ſynagogues, and perſecute them from city to city,’ Matt. xx. 34. ‘ Take heed to your ſelves, for they ſhall deliver you up to the councils : and in the ſynagogues ye ſhall be beaten, and ye ſhall be brought before rulers and kings for my ſake,’ Mark xiii. 9. ſee John xvi. 2.

Theſe words of our Lord would, I think, be underſtood by his hearers, agreeably to the ſtate of things at that time, whatever it was : thoſe puniſhments which are purely Jewiſh, ſuch as being ſcourged in their ſynagogues, or driven from them, would be underſtood to be inflicted by Jewiſh hands. If the Jews had not then the power of condemning men to death, the capital puniſhments ſpoken of, as to be inflicted by them, would be underſtood to be brought about by their means and procurement ; unleſs it were thought, that the words implied a prediction, that they would have ſupreme power, though they now had it not ; and that then they would uſe it for theſe purpoſes.

It can never be inferred from hence, that they had at this time ſupreme power in Judea, or any where elſe. It is very common to aſcribe to men, not only thoſe things they do themſelves, but thoſe alſo which are brought about by their means. In all languages, and in all countries, the puniſhment of an offender is aſcribed to the proſecutor, the judge and the executioner, though this laſt only put him to death in the ſtricteſt ſenſe. Thus, it is certain that Pilate condemned our Lord, and his officers crucified him : Yet the Jews are more than once ſaid to have crucified Chriſt, becauſe his death was owing to their proſecution, and importunity. Cleophas, one of the diſciples whom Jeſus met in the way to Emmaus told him, how the chief prieſts, and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him, Luke xxiv. 20. The crucifying, as well as delivering up Jeſus is aſcribed to the chief prieſts. Peter ſpeaks to his hearers in this manner : Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words ; Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you. — Him ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain, Acts ii. 22, 23. Again, Peter, filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſaid unto them, ye rulers of the people aud elders of Iſrael.—— Be it known unto you all, and to the people of Iſrael, that by the name of Jeſus of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, does this man ſtand here before you whole.

So Joſephus ſays, that Herod reigned thirty four years after he had killed Antigonus, de bello l. 1. c. 33. Tho’ every one knows, it was Mark Antony who beheaded Antigonus, at the requeſt of Herod.

And not only is this ſtile uſed in relating facts that have already happened, but alſo in predicting thoſe that are future. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them : When ye have lift up the Son of man, John viii. 28, &c. Though at other times, when he ſpeaks of his death, he repreſents the ſhare they would have in it, more diſtinctly. ‘ Saying, Behold we go up to Jeruſalem : and the Son of man ſhall be delivered unto the chief prieſts. —— and they ſhall condemn him to death and ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles, Mark x. 33.

In like manner, he thus repreſents the ſufferings his followers would be expoſed to. ‘ Now the brother ſhall betray the brother to death, and the father the ſon : and the children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and ſhall cauſe them to be put to death, Mark xiii. 12. (Κὰι θανατώσȣσιν ἀυτȣ̀ς,) and ſhall put them to death. It never was legal, according to any conſtitution in the world for children in a private capacity to put their parents to death. And this phraſe is to be explained by thoſe that go before, of betraying or delivering, that is, accuſing and proſecuting them, that they may be put to death.

In all theſe places then our Lord would be underſtood by his hearers, according to the quality of the perſons ſpoken of and the ſtate of affairs at that time, what ever it was.

The perſecuting from city to city is no argument of ſupreme power any where : ‘ The Jews, (at Antioch in Piſidia) ſtirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coaſts,’ Acts xiii. 50. Again, the ſame thing happened at Iconium. But the multitude of the city was divided, and part held with the Jews, and part with the Apoſtles. And when there was an aſſault made both of the Gentiles, and alſo of the Jews —— they were ware of it, and fled unto Lyſtra and Derbe,’ Acts xiv. 4, 6. And in many cities, ſituated undoubtedly in countries ſubject to the Roman juriſdiction, but in which the Jews had ſettlements, did they foment diſturbances againſt the Apoſtles, and thus drive them from place to place.

Farther, our Lord bid his diſciples to beware of men : for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues, Matt. x. 17. xxiii. 34. It muſt be ſuppoſed, ſince the Jews had the free exerciſe of their religion, and we often read of the ruler of the ſynagogue, that the expelling from the ſynagogue, and beating in the ſynagogues were puniſhments purely Jewiſh, and that they inflicted theſe penalties by their own proper authority. The Jews agreed, in our Saviour’s lifetime, that if any man did confeſs that he was the Chriſt, he ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue, John ix. 22. This was a decree of theirs ; and they did actually caſt out, or excommunicate the man, that had been cured of his blindneſs, ver. 34. Paul ſays, that before his converſion, He beat in every ſynagogue them that believed in Jeſus, Acts xxiii. 19. Nay, as they had ſettlements in many parts, and were protected by the laws in the exerciſe of their religion, it’s not unlikely that they inflicted this puniſhment alſo out of Judea. Paul ſays, of the Jews received I five times forty ſtripes ſave one, 2 Cor. xi. 24. He uſually made ſo ſhort a ſtay when he came into Judea, the ſeveral times he was there after his converſion, that its moſt likely theſe ſcourgings had happened, moſt or all of them in ſome other country. Epiphanius, who lived in the fourth century, informs us, that one Joſeph, a Jew, whom he knew, having received a book of the Goſpels from a Chriſtian Biſhop, and being ſurprized by ſome of his countrymen, when he was reading it, they took the book out of his hands with great violence, threw him on the ground, “ drag’d him to the ſynagogue, and there beat him,” l. i. tom. ii. cap. xi. her. 30.

Uriel Acoſta ſuffered this puniſhment in the ſynagogue at Amſterdam, in the laſt century, of which he has himſelf publiſhed a curious relation, to be ſeen in Limborch. This therefore muſt be reckoned one of thoſe leſſer penalties, which they had a right to inflict in Judea, and poſſibly out of it.

4. The queſtion brought to our Saviour about tribute, Matt. xxii. 15, 20. is remarkable. Then went the Phariſees, and took council how they might entangle him in his talk ; and they ſent out their diſciples —— ſaying, We know that thou teacheſt the way of God in truth, —— Is it lawful to give tribute to Ceſar or not ? Bat Jeſus perceived their wickedneſs (craftineſs Luke xx. 23) and ſaid, why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites ; ſhew me the tribute-money. And they brought him a peny : and he ſaith unto them, whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription ? And they ſay unto him, Ceſar’s. This is a proof the Emperor’s coin was current among them, and that they paid tribute to him. And Luke’s introduction to this ſtory is in theſe words : “ And they watched him, and ſent forth ſpies, which ſhould feign themſelves juſt men, that they might take hold of his words, that ſo they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor,” Luke xx. 10

5. In the viiith chapter of John we have another enſnaring queſtion put to our Saviour. “ And the ſcribes and Phariſees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery ; and when they had ſet her in the midſt, they ſay unto him, Maſter, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act : Now Moſes in the law commanded us, that ſuch ſhould be ſtoned ; but what ſayeſt thou ?” It is evident this was an enſnaring queſtion, for John adds, ver. 6. “ This they ſaid tempting him, that they might have to accuſe him.”

The ſpeech they made ſeems to me very artful, and it is not eaſy to ſay which way they deſired to have their queſtion anſwered. But they ſeem to have ſuggeſted the ſtrongeſt reaſons they could, againſt his determining, that they might not ſtone her. Perhaps therefore, they wiſhed he would ſay, they ought to obey the law of Moſes. Now, if the Romans did not allow them, at that time, to inflict this puniſhment in this caſe, here would have been matter of accuſation before the governor, if the queſtion were ſo reſolved by him.

Our Lord, however, gives a moſt ſurprizing, and unlooked for deciſion. "So when they continued asking him, he lift up himſelf, and ſaid unto them, He that is without ſin, let him caſt the firſt ſtone at her, ver. 7. And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conſcience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt even unto the laſt," ver. 9. It gives one indeed, a terrible idea of the wickedneſs of that people at that time, but, I think, it is evident from hence, that all, then preſent, were guilty of crimes of a like nature with that they charged this woman with. And I ſhould think it may be concluded, with ſome probability, from the deciſion our Saviour pronounced, that they had not at this time the power of ſtoning any one for this crime; becauſe, the deſign of the anſwer given them at laſt by our Saviour ſeems to have been, to ſhew them how unworthy they were of the power of inflicting capital puniſhments; and to intimate, that they ought not to expect to be reſtored to the authority they wiſhed for, whilſt they were ſo univerſally corrupt. And how little they deſerved to be entruſted with the adminiſtration of juſtice, appears from their notorious partiality; ſee Deut. xxii. 23. 24. For if this woman was taken in the act, as they ſaid, they might have brought the man alſo. This our Saviour takes no notice of: they were a ſet of men, whom it was in vain to argue with in a direct way. The deciſion he gave is a proof of the higheſt wiſdom, and had the effect to fill them, for the preſent, with confuſion.

6. They had their councils, theſe were ſummoned, met, iſſued out orders. There is alſo frequent mention of their forming deſigns to apprehend Jeſus, and put him to death.

Jeſus having healed a man with a withered hand on the ſabbath-day, the Phariſees held a council againſt him, how they might deſtroy him, Matt. xii. 14. The man that had been cured by him at the pool of Betheſda, having told the Jews, that it was Jeſus that had made him whole, it is ſaid, "therefore did the Jews perſecute Jeſus, and ſought to ſlay him, becauſe he had done theſe things on the ſabbath-day. But Jeſus anſwered them, my Father worketh hitherto, and I work. Therefore the Jews ſought the more to kill him, becauſe he not only had broken the ſabbath, but ſaid alſo, that God was his Father, making himſelf equal with God, John v. 15. 18. After theſe things, Jeſus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk Jewry, becauſe the Jews ſought to kill him, —— vii. 1. Then ſaid ſome of them of Jeruſalem, Is not this he whom they ſeek to kill? ver. 25. The Phariſees heard that the people murmured ſuch things concerning him: and the Phariſees and chief prieſts ſent officers to take him, ver. 32. Therefore they ſought again to take him: but he eſcaped out of their hands," John x. 39. After he had raiſed Lazarus, ſome of them that were by "went their ways to the Phariſees, and told them, what things Jeſus had done. Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, and ſaid, what do we? For this man does many miracles, —— xi. 45. 47. Then from that day forth they took council together for to put him to death, ver. 53. But the chief prieſts conſulted, that they might put Lazarus alſo to death, —— xii. 10.

7. But the actual apprehending, trial, and proſecution of Jeſus, is the moſt particular, and material inſtance of their authority in this period. And, if I miſtake not, the method of proceeding in this affair does explain the nature of all thoſe deſigns hitherto mentioned to put Jeſus to death, excepting only clandeſtine or tumultuous attempts.

It will ſuffice to tranſcribe Matthew's account, taking in, here and there, a circumſtance from the other Evangeliſts.

"Then aſſembled together the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high-prieſt, which was called Caiaphas, and conſulted that they might take Jeſus, by ſubtilty, and kill him, Matt. xxvi. 3. 4. Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iſcariot, went unto the chief prieſts. —— And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of ſilver. And from that time he ſought opportunity to betray him, ver. 14—16. When Jeſus was in the garden, whither he had retired after ſupper: Lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came; and with him a great multitude with ſwords and ſtaves from the chief prieſts and elders of the people, ver. 47. John ſays, ch. xviii. 5. "Judas then having received a band of men, and officers from the chief prieſts and Phariſees. This band muſt be a company of ſoldiers. Our Saviour is evidently apprehended by the authority of the Jewiſh council; but beſide the officers of the high-prieſt, here are ſoldiers, taken, it is likely, with the governor's leave, from the guard conſtantly kept by the Romans at Jeruſalem. This may be inferred from the Jews going to the governor, after our Saviour's crucifixion, for a guard to ſecure the ſepulchre, which he readily granted, Matt. xxvii. 64. 66. And 'tis likely, had done the ſame now, to aſſiſt the officers of the high-prieſt, if any diſturbance ſhould happen.

"Then came they, and laid hands on Jeſus, and took him," — ver. 50. Luke informs us, that when they came to apprehend Jeſus, "he ſaid unto the chief prieſts and captains of the temple, and the elders which were come to him; be ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords, Luke xxii. 52. and ſtaves?" And John ſays, ch. xviii. 12, 13. Then the "band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jeſus, and bound him, and led him away." Who this captain, or captains of the temple were, whether Roman or Jewiſh officers, has been doubted. I think, they were Jewiſh officers, who preſided there, over the prieſts and Levites, and the inferior officers of the temple, as I have noted on Luke xxii. 52. This I may ſhew more particularly hereafter, but now we paſs on. "And they that laid hold on Jeſus, led him away to Caiaphas the high-prieſt, where the ſcribes and elders were aſſembled, Matt. xxvi. 57. Now the chief prieſts and elders, and all the council, ſought falſe-witneſs againſt Jeſus, to put him to death, but found none: Yea, though many falſe-witneſſes came, yet found they none. At laſt came two falſe-witneſſes, and ſaid, This fellow ſaid, I am able to deſtroy this temple and build it in three days. And the high-prieſt aroſe, and ſaid, Anſwereſt thou nothing? What is it that theſe witneſs againſt thee? But Jeſus held his peace. And the high-prieſt anſwered and ſaid unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt, the Son of God. Jeſus ſaith unto him, thou haſt ſaid: nevertheleſs I ſay unto you, hereafter ſhall ye ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of Heaven. Then the high-prieſt rent his clothes, ſaying, he hath ſpoken blaſphemy: —— What think ye? They anſwered and ſaid, he is guilty of death, ver. 59—66.

Mark delivers their ſentence in theſe words, "Then the high-prieſt ſaith, —— Ye have heard the blaſphemy? What think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death, Mark xiv. 64.

Theſe are the proceedings of the council, whilſt Jeſus was before them.

"When the morning was come, all the chief prieſts, and elders of the people took council againſt Jeſus to put him to death. And when they had bound him, they led him away and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor," Matt. xxvii. 1. 2; ſee Mark xv. 1. Luke xxiii. 1.

John obſerves, that the Jewiſh elders not entring into "the judgment-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, Pilate went out unto them, and ſaid, what accuſation bring you againſt this man," John xviii. 28, 29.

Having heard from them what things they had to lay to his charge, Pilate examined Jeſus; having ſo done, "he ſaid to the chief prieſts and the people, I find no fault in this man, and they were the more fierce, ſaying, he ſtirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place," Luke xxiii. 4—8. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he ſent Jeſus to Herod who was then at Jeruſalem, —— He having mocked him ſent him again to Pilate. Being therefore again returned to him, "Pilate, when he had called together the chief prieſts and the rulers, and the people, ſaid unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me as one that perverteth the people : and behold, I having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man, touching thoſe things whereof you accuſe him. No, nor yet Herod.—— I will therefore chaſtiſe him and releaſe him," ver. 13—16. They deſired that he would rather releaſe Barabbas, " Pilate therefore willing to releaſe Jeſus, ſpake again to them : but they cried, ſaying, Crucify him, Crucify him. And he ſaid unto them the third time, Why what evil has he done? I have found no cauſe of death in him : I will therefore chaſtiſe him and let him go. And they were inſtant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified, and the voices of them, and of the chief prieſts prevailed, and Pilate gave ſentence, that it ſhould be as they required," ver. 17—24.

A few remarks will be needful. The Jewiſh council having judged that Jeſus was guilty of death, or that according to their law, he deſerved to die, they carry him to Pilate, and produce their charges againſt him. It's ſurpriſing that they ſhould do this, if they had themſelves the power of life and death. A people fond of authority and power would not have committed to a foreigner a cauſe that was within their own juriſdiction. If they had not the power of life and death in this caſe, they had it not in any other. For the only crime, that Jeſus was ſuppoſed to be convicted of before them, was that of blaſphemy, or aſſuming without foundation the character of the Meſſias. The Evangeliſts are extremely unanimous in this point: That the high-prieſts, and all the council ſought falſe witneſs againſt him but found none, yea, though many witneſſes came, yet found they none, Matt. xxvi. 59, 60. Many bare falſe witneſs againſt him, but their witneſs agreed not together, Mark xiv. 56. Matthew (ch. xxvi. 63——66.) Mark (ch. xiv. 60—64.) Luke xii. (69——71.) have particularly informed us, that the condemnation paſſed by the council upon Jeſus was founded upon the declaration he made, that he was the Chriſt when the high-prieſt had adjured him to tell them who he was. And John ſays, this was what they inſiſted on before Pilate: We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God, John xix. 7. As therefore the only fact, which they had the proof of, was that of our Lord's own confeſſion made before them, which they called blaſphemy, if they had had the power of inflicting death in this caſe, they would have puniſhed him accordingly, by their own authority, and not have carried him to Pilate.

They did indeed accuſe him before Pilate "of many things, and ſaid, he ſtirred up the people,' and the like. But theſe appear to have been merely malicious inventions of their own, without any ground in the leaſt from any action they knew of, or that had been proved, when he was under examination before them: or elſe, were concluſions they pretended to draw, and inſinuated to the governor, muſt be the conſequence of Jeſus's confeſſion and declaration, that he was the Chriſt. And it ſeems to me, that this declaration of his was the only ground of all theſe charges, from what Luke ſays, " and they began to accuſe him, ſaying, we found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Ceſar, ſaying, That he himſelf is Chriſt a King;" Luke xxiii. 2. as alſo from what John relates: " The Jews cried, ſaying, if thou let this man go thou art not Ceſar's friend: Whoſoever maketh himſelf a King, ſpeaketh againſt Ceſar," John xix. 13. As likewiſe, becauſe that this was the thing, which Pilate ſeems more eſpecially to have informed himſelf about. For he asked him, art thou the King of the Jews, John xvii. 33. Where we have the anſwer that Jeſus returned him —— to ver. 38. Pilate perceiving there was nothing criminal in this pretenſion of Jeſus, went out again unto the Jews, and ſaith unto them; I find in him no fault at all. There being no crime in this, he was fully ſatisfied of his innocence.

Perhaps, it will be objected againſt this, that the title ſet upon the croſs, of Jeſus of Nazareth, King of the Jews is a proof the crime he was condemned for by Pilate was that of ſedition, or high-treaſon. But I think, this is no proof of any ſuch thing. For, Pilate judging, that our Saviour was really innocent, (ſince it was the Roman cuſtom to put ſome title), might write what he pleaſed. And our Lord had ſatisfied Pilate, there was nothing ſeditious in that claim he made under that character, foraſmuch as his kingdom was not of this world. But I contend not about this. It is not at all material what was the pretended crime for which Pilate at laſt condemned Jeſus.

Blaſphemy was the only crime of which Jeſus was ſuppoſed to be convicted before the council; and yet theſe Jewiſh high-prieſts and elders carried him to the governor, and it appears from the ſequel, that Pilate was the ſupreme judge in this cauſe, and the maſter of the event. For he gives the caſe a freſh hearing, asks the Jews what accuſation they brought, examined Jeſus; and when he had done ſo, told them, he found in him no fault at all. This his conduct is a full proof that he was the Judge, and that they were only proſecutors and accuſers.

Pilate indeed propoſes to them, which he ſhould releaſe to them, Barabbas, or Jeſus. But certainly, he does not appeal to them as judges. This is evident from the perſons, to whom he addreſſed himſelf with this propoſal, ſc. the people, the multitude, which never had, among the Jews, a legal power of life and death. " At that feaſt the governor was wont to releaſe unto the people a priſoner, whom they would, Matt. xxvii. 15. Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate ſaid unto them, whom will ye that I releaſe unto you,——17. But the chief prieſts and elders perſuaded the multitude that they ſhould ask Barabbas and deſtroy Jeſus,——20. and the multitude crying aloud began to deſire him to do as he had ever done unto them, Mark xv. 8. So Pilate willing to content the people releaſed Barabbas unto them, and deliver'd Jeſus to be crucified,"——15. This appeal to the people ſeems to have been only to diſcern how far he might act in this matter conſiſtent with the peace of the province, which depended upon the diſpoſition of the people.

Moreover, Pilate at length pronounced the ſentence. He wrote the title upon the croſs, and would not alter what he had written, though deſired by the high-prieſts. ——John xix. 19. When the ſentence was pronounced, the " ſoldiers of the governor took Jeſus into the common hall, and gathered unto them the whole band of ſoldiers, and they ſtripped him, and put on him a ſcarlet robe, Matt. xxvii. 27, 28. and led him away to crucify him,"——31. The crucifixion was performed by theſe ſoldiers under the command of a centurion,——54. " Joſeph of Arimathea went to Pilate and begged the body of Jeſus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered,——58. The chief prieſts and Phariſees came to Pilate, deſiring that he would command that the ſepulchre be made ſure until the third day.————Pilate ſaid unto them, ye have a watch, go your way, make it as ſure as ye can. So they went and made——63——66. the ſepulchre ſure, ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch."

Theſe ſoldiers were entirely accountable to Pilate. For when " ſome of the watch came into the city and ſhewed unto the chief prieſts all the things that were done—— they gave large money unto the ſoldiers, ſaying, ſay ye, his diſciples came by night and ſtole him away while we ſlept: And if this come to the governor's ears, we will perſuade him and ſecure you, Matt. xxviii. 11.—14.

Beſide the light we receive into this matter from the proceedings relating to our Saviour himſelf; we learn that Pilate had in his cuſtody divers priſoners, which were of the Jewiſh nation: For it could be ſuch only, that it can be ſuppoſed, they ſhould deſire to have releaſed to them: And it ſeems, it had been an uſual cuſtom with him during his government, to releaſe to them ſome priſoner at that feaſt; " and the multitude crying aloud, began to deſire him to do as he had ever done unto them," Mark xv. 8.

When Pilate ſaid unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, John xviii. 31.

As they here affirm expreſly, that they had not the power of life and death; ſo Pilate told our Saviour that he had. Then Pilate ſaid unto him,—knoweſt thou not, that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to releaſe thee, John xix. 10.

So that the whole courſe of the proceedings in this tranſaction, and theſe expreſs declarations of theſe two parties, the high-prieſts and elders on the one hand, and Pilate on the other, aſſure us, that the Jewiſh nation had not, at this time, within themſelves, the power of life and death, upon any occaſion.

But yet, there are ſome expreſſions of the Evangeliſts relating to this matter that may require conſideration.

1. There is a prediction of our Lord concerning the manner of his death related by John, with the Evangeliſts own reflection: And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he ſaid, ſignifying what death he ſhould die, John xii. 32. John has mentioned this again, ch. xviii. 31, 32. Then Pilate ſaid unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, ſignifying what death he ſhould die.

Poſſibly, ſome may hence conclude, that the Jews had the power of putting men to death; and therefore the Evangeliſt obſerves, that the fulfilment of this prediction was remarkable: Since though they had the power, yet they diſclaim'd it, and would not exerciſe it upon this occaſion.

But without this ſuppoſition, the accompliſhment of this prediction is remarkable on two accounts. Firſt, In that he did not die a natural death, and Secondly, That he was not put to death in a tumult; but his death was the reſult of a legal proceſs according to the form of government which then obtained in that country. No man, without a prophetic ſpirit, could foreſee certainly, that he ſhould not die a natural death; and yet, perhaps, it was more extraordinary to foreſee, that he ſhould eſcape all the ſudden attempts upon his life. We have many of theſe recorded in the Evangeliſts: But notwithſtanding, he ſuffered as a criminal by the ſentence of the government.

And the meaning of the Evangeliſts in the laſt mentioned place, I think, is this: The Jews ſaid, it is not lawful for us to put any man to death; and hereby, i. e. by their not having the power of inflicting capital puniſhments, it came to paſs, that the words of Jeſus were fulfilled, in which he had predicted, that he ſhould be crucified, that being a Roman and not an ordinary Jewiſh puniſhment.

2. Perhaps, ſome may think their departing willingly at this time from their right, is implied in the phraſe, delivering up to the Gentiles; which our Lord made uſe of ſometimes, when he ſpoke of his death. Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be delivered unto the chief prieſts, and unto the ſcribes; and they ſhall condemn him to death, and ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles, Mark x. 33. See Luke xviii. 32. and after the council had condemned Jeſus, it is ſaid, when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor, Matt. xxvii. 2.

Hereby ſome may be pleaſed to underſtand, that for ſome reaſons, the Jews voluntarily ſurrendered him to Pilate; though if they had thought fit, they might have put him to death themſelves.

But this is not the meaning of this word in the New Teſtament, as is evident from Mark x. 33. the firſt text here quoted. "Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be delivered to the chief prieſts, and unto the ſcribes." Judas, of whom this delivery is chiefly intended, releaſed no right. The word is often uſed to expreſs the acts of private perſons, who accuſed, proſecuted, betrayed, or any other way contributed to the bringing another before a court of juſtice, in order to be condemned and put to death. "But beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues, and ye ſhall be brought before governors and kings for my ſake ——but when they deliver you up, take no thought, how, or what ye ſhall ſpeak.——And the brother ſhall deliver the brother to death, and the father the child, Matt. x. 17——21. But when they ſhall lead you and deliver you up, take no tho't before hand, Mark xiii. 11. and in the next verſe betraying is uſed for delivering. Now the brother ſhall betray the brother, and the father the ſon.

But ſtill ſome may ſuſpect that they might have ſome particular reaſons, for not employing, at this time, all the authority they were poſſeſſed of. For, Luke ſays, "And the chief prieſts and ſcribes ſought how they might kill him, for they feared the people. And Matthew, that they conſulted that they might take Jeſus by ſubtilty, and kill him. But they ſaid, not on the feaſt-day leſt there be an uprore among the people." Matt. xxiv. 4, 5. Poſſibly therefore, ſuſpecting the affections of the people, they might be willing to decline the odium of this action, and throw it upon Pilate.

But whatever apprehenſions they might have concerning the people, at firſt; yet when they had ſeized Jeſus without any diſturbance, and many had ſhewn their forwardneſs in coming in to them, and bringing them many falſe accuſations againſt him, theſe fears might then be pretty well over. And certainly, they could be in no fear of the people, after the multitude had unanimouſly demanded with loud voices, that Barabbas might be releaſed, and Jeſus crucified. For that offer which Pilate made them, ſaying take ye him and crucify him, John xix. 6. was plainly after that the people had petitioned for Barabbas. Then cried they all again, ſaying not this man but Barabbas, ch. xviii. 40. If they could have put any man to death, would not they now have joyfully accepted this offer which Pilate made them? Would they not have been willing now to merit with the people, by putting to death a man whom they diſliked as well as themſelves, if before, they were afraid to kill one, whom they ſuſpected the people were fond of?

4. And this brings me to another difficulty. For it may be ſaid, If the Jews had not the power of life and death, what could Pilate mean, by ſaying, take ye him, and judge him according to your law? John xviii. 31. And again, Take ye him and crucify him, for I find no fault in him? xix. 6.

I anſwer, that Pilate's meaning in the firſt place is very evident, and the anſwer they make him ſhews, they had not the power of life and death. The context is thus: Then led they Jeſus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment. They ſcrupling to go in, Pilate went out unto them, and ſaid, what accuſation bring you againſt this man? They anſwered and ſaid unto him, if he were not a malefactor we would not have delivered him up unto thee. Then ſaid Pilate, take ye him and judge him according to your law, i. e. Go then and puniſh him your ſelves. The Jews therefore ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, John xviii. 28—31. i. e. "This is a criminal we cannot puniſh according to his deſerts. It is not one of the leſſer faults, for which we are wont to ſcourge men, or to caſt out of the ſynagogue; but he is guilty of blaſphemy, which by our law ought to be puniſhed with death. And ſince, we are not permitted to puniſh any man capitally, we have brought him to your tribunal, where alone we can have ſatisfaction."

The other words are thus introduced: Pilate had ſcourged Jeſus, platted a crown of thorns upon him, and offered him other indignities, hoping hereby to pacify the Jewiſh rage, and ſave his life: and goes out, and ſaith unto them, behold I bring him forth to you, that you may know that I find no fault in him: he is an innocent man, and I cannot puniſh him as you deſire. When the chief prieſts therefore, and officers ſaw him, they cried out ſaying, crucify him, crucify him. Pilate ſaith unto them take ye him and crucify him, for I find no fault in him, John xix. 1—16. It is not unlikely, that ſome may ſuppoſe, the word crucify here, ought to be interpreted by the general word judge, uſed before. But, I think, the moſt natural meaning of Pilate's words here is this. "You muſt crucify him then your ſelves, if you can commit ſuch a villany, for I cannot. He appears to me innocent, as I have told you already; and I have now puniſhed him as much, or more than he deſerves."

The anſwer they make again, goes upon the ſuppoſition, that they could not take away any man's life. The Jews anſwered him, we have a law, and by our law, he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God, ver. 7. that is, "Indeed, Sir, you need not be ſo ſcrupulous: He is a blaſphemer; and by our law all ſuch ought to be put to death. And if you do not condemn him to death, we ſhall think you do not pay that reſpect to our law which you ought to do." And then they threaten him with the general reſentment of the nation, if he would not puniſh capitally the moſt heinous violation of their law.

This diſcourſe, which now paſſed between Pilate and the chief prieſts, is a proof, they had not the power of life and death, and that the intent of what Pilate ſaid, is not, that they might crucify him if they pleaſed: If this had been Pilate's meaning, and they could have legally executed Jeſus, would they have put a matter they were intent upon to an uncertain iſſue? would they have refuſed to take the cauſe into their own hands, when they ſaw the governor was backward to gratify their intentions? Their ſtill preſſing Pilate to pronounce a ſentence of death, is a proof, that they knew very well, if Jeſus was not condemned by Pilate, he muſt be ſet at liberty.

5. But though theſe particulars, thus laid together appear deciſive, and the Jews here, in a moſt critical ſeaſon, ſay expreſly that it was not lawful for them to put any man to death; yet in another place, there are ſome Jews, who ſeem to aſſert, they had at this time an abſolute freedom. Then ſaid Jeſus unto the Jews which believed on him, if ye continue in my words, then are ye my diſciples indeed. And ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free. They anſwered him we be Abraham's ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man: How ſayeſt thou, ye ſhall be made free? John viii. 31—33.

It is not very material to enquire, at preſent, who they were who made this reply to our Saviour; whether the believers before ſpoken of, who ſeem not to have owned him upon right grounds, or whether they were unbelieving Jews, who hypocritically joined themſelves with theſe new profeſſors, with intent of taking ſome private opportunity of killing him, Vid. Dr. Clarke's Paraphraſe upon this text. What we are concerned with is the reply itſelf.

If theſe Jews do not ſpeak here of civil temporal liberty, and of a freedom from all foreign juriſdiction, then we have no concern with them at preſent; but if they do (as it is generally ſuppoſed) they deſerve no regard at all: For then, what they here ſay is a downright contradiction of God himſelf in the ſolemn preamble to the law at Mount Sinai; I am the Lord thy God, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage. There is no relying upon the word of ſuch men as theſe. Notwithſtanding they aſk, how ſayeſt thou, ye ſhall be made free? if as they could be no freer than they were, they might at that time be downright ſlaves. For they, who ſcrupled not to contradict God himſelf, with reference to the time paſt, might well have aſſurance to deny a fact evident to every man's ſenſe and reaſon at that time. Our Lord indeed does not deny the truth of what they ſaid: It was to no purpoſe ſo to do. But with an unexampled firmneſs he proſecutes the ſubject he was upon: Jeſus anſwered them, verily I ſay unto you, whoſoever committeth ſin is the ſervant of ſin, ver. 34.

But though, the moſt expreſs declarations of ſuch men can never aſſure us of the truth, yet their angry reply to our Saviour, this fierce diſclaiming the charge of ſubjection, upon ſo ſmall, upon no occaſion at all, affords more than a preſumption they were not free at this time. An inſinuation of their being in ſubjection, if ſuch had been given, would have been treated with contempt, and not anſwered with indignation, if they had had all the power their proud hearts deſired.

6. There is another text hitherto omitted, which ſome may think deſerves notice. Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, and ſaid, What do we? for this man doth many miracles. If we let this man alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans ſhall come, and take away both our place and nation, John xi. 47, 48. Some may apprehend theſe words imply, that there was then no Roman government eſtabliſhed in Judea.

I preſume, there is no neceſſity of enquiring at preſent, into the views of this ſpeech. All I ſhall ſay by way of anſwer is, 1. That this ſpeech ſuppoſes that they were then in ſubjection to the Romans; otherwiſe, all mens believing on Jeſus could not have been any offence to the Romans, or be pretended to be ſo. 2. The meaning of theſe words is, that then the Romans would no longer protect them in their religion and laws, and treat them as ſubjects, but ſend an army to deſtroy them, as rebels and enemies.

A paſſage of Joſephus will illuſtrate this text. The Samaritans had obſtructed the Galileans in their way to Jeruſalem, and killed ſome of them. The chief men of Galilee complain to Cumanus the Procurator, and demanded juſtice. He took a bribe from the Samaritans, and let the matter paſs. The Galileans then being exaſperated, perſwaded the multitude of the Jews to betake themſelves to arms and aſſert their liberty. Servitude, they ſaid, was grievous in it ſelf, but to be inſulted under it was altogether intolerable. Joſephus ſays, that the chief men of Jeruſalem, dreading the iſſue, endeavoured by all means to appeaſe the people; and bid them, ſet before their eyes the utter ruin of their country, the conflagration of their temple, the captivity and ſlavery of themſelves, their wives and children; and as they would avoid theſe dreadful calamities, beſeeched them to alter their preſent deſigns, Antiq. l. xx. c. v. What is this, but the Romans coming and taking away both their place and nation? Which words, as I obſerved, imply a preſent ſubjection: and this ſtate they appear evidently to have been in, when that exhortation was given, which I have juſt tranſcribed from Joſephus.

I have now ſet before the reader the main paſſages of this period, concerning the power the Jews were poſſeſſed of in their own country. The ſum is, they practiſed their own religious rites, worſhipped at the temple and in their ſynagogues, followed their own cuſtoms, and lived very much according to their own laws. They had their high-prieſts, a council or ſenate, inflicted leſſer puniſhments; they could apprehend men, and bring them before the council, and if a guard of ſoldiers was needful, could be aſſiſted by them, upon aſking the governor for them: they could bind men and keep them in cuſtody: The council could ſummon witneſſes, take examinations, and when they had any capital offenders carry them before the governor. This governor uſually paid a regard to what they offered, and if they brought evidence of the fact, pronounced ſentence according to their laws. But he was the proper judge in all capital cauſes, for when the council of the Jews had had before them a caſe, which they pretended was of this kind, having prepared it, they go with it immediately to the governor, who reexamines it, and pronounces the ſentence.

Ver. 17. And he ſaid what manner of communications are theſe that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are ſad?] Chriſt can't from hence be ſuppoſed to confeſs his ignorance of their diſcourſe and thoughts; but like a traveller ſtriking in with company on the road uſhers in a diſcourſe from ſome outward marks, which he alledges as an excuſe for his intruſion into their company. The text is plainly this, The dejection of your countenance makes me ſuſpect that you are oppreſſed with ſome inward grief, which I ſhould be glad to alleviate or eaſe by my advice.

Ver. 18. ——— Art thou only a ſtranger in Jeruſalem, &c.] i. e. Art thou like one living in a far country, ignorant of the things well known to all that dwell in Jeruſalem.

Ver. 20. ——— To be condemned to death.] The original has it εἰς κρίμα θανάτου, To the ſentence of death; which they could not pronounce, but were obliged to apply to Pilate the Roman governor, that he ſhould pronounce it; ſee my Diſſertation at the end of the preceding chapter.

Ver. 25. ——— O fools and ſlow of heart! &c.] Hence ſays Dr. Whitby, we are to note, the limitation of the command in Matt. v. 22. and that to ſay, thou fool, is not always a tranſgreſſion; but only ſo when it is uſed without cauſe from an undue commotion of ſpirit, or a mind evily affected towards our brother.

Ver. 27. ——— He expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himſelf.] When Jeſus firſt came up with them he found them reaſoning concerning himſelf from the Scriptures; conſequently he took this opportunity to inſtruct them in the right interpretation of them, and to ſhew how all the types, figures and prophecies in the law, Prophets, and Pſalms (ver. 44.) were now accompliſhing in the perſon of Jeſus of Nazareth, whom they acknowledged to be a Prophet, mighty in deed and word before God and all the people: and convinced them that alſo he was the Meſſiah, and would certainly, as he had promiſed, riſe again from the dead.

Ver. 29. And they conſtrained him.] By their earneſt intreaties and deſire. So Lot is repreſented to conſtrain the Angels to lodge with him, Gen. xix. 3. So Jacob conſtrained Eſau to accept his preſents, Gen. xxxiii. 11. So Judges xix. 7, &c. &c.

Ver. 31. ——— He took bread and bleſſed it, and brake it, and gave it to them.] This is the text on which the Papiſts generally found their argument for communion in one kind, They argue thus: This, ſay they, Chriſt did when he celebrated the ſacrament; therefore, here alſo he celebrated the ſacrament, though in bread only; and, conſequently, it is ſufficient for the laity to receive bread, or one kind only in the ſacrament of the Euchariſt. But what proves too much, is known to prove nothing. Let it then be obſerved, that when Chriſt fed the four, and again the five thouſand in the wilderneſs, he likewiſe is recorded to bleſs the bread, and to brake it, and to give it to his diſciples to give to the multitude, ſee Matt. xiv. 19. Mark. vi. 41. and viii. 6. But, I believe, they won't venture to affirm this bleſſing of bread, &c. was a ſacramental bleſſing, or that Chriſt then celebrated the ſacrament before it was inſtituted. Yet this muſt be the abſurd tenet of thoſe, who will argue, that Chriſt's bleſſing of bread, &c. at Emmaus was ſacramental.

Again, Let it be remembred, that to make bread a ſacrament, it is even according to the Romiſh doctrine, abſolutely neceſſary, that Chriſt ſhould ſay, This is my body, which it is plain are not ſo much as intimated in this place. Yet I know that they generally reply, that theſe words are underſtood. But then, why may we not alſo underſtand that though only bread is mentioned, yet wine alſo is here underſtood; there is as much warrant for underſtanding one as the other; and conſequently this conceſſion will deſtroy their favourite invention of concomitance, in the Lord's ſupper. Alſo it may be urged, that if Chriſt here celebrated a ſacrament without wine; he alſo conſecrated without wine, which however, the Papiſts ſay, is never to be done.

Ver. 31. And their eyes were opened.] This is the oppoſite to what is ſaid before at his coming into their company but their eyes were held, ver. 16. ſo that the text muſt mean that their eyes were now opened or capacitated to ſee him in his own ſhape, in the ſame form as they had ſeen him in, when alive, before his crucifixion. Thus it is ſaid, that the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam to ſee the Angel, Numb. xxii. 31. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man to ſee the chariots of fire, 2 Kings vi. 17. and the Lord opened the eyes of the hoſt of the king of Aſſyria, ver. 20. which was with-held from ſeeing, or ſtruck blind, ver. 18. ſo that either Jeſus appeared to them in ſome form they had never ſeen him in, or the Divine Power threw in ſome impediment, or miraculouſly with-held their eyes from perceiving him, and then removing that impediment, opened their eyes that they again recollected his face, and knew him. For, Chriſt was deſirous no doubt to conceal himſelf from them for a ſeaſon, that he might the more freely diſcourſe with them; and when he had done that ſufficiently, he would be known to them for the confirmation of their faith; and when they had obtained the certain knowledge of him.

——— He vaniſhed out of their ſight.] He withdrew himſelf out of their ſight, as it is in the original ἄφαντος ἐγένετο, either by a ſudden change of place, or by a cloud caſt over his body; whence it is no more reaſonable to argue, that he had only an aëry body, than that he had the like when he hid himſelf, paſſing through the Jews, when they were about to ſtone him, John viii. 59.

Ver. 35. — In the way.] On the road to Emmaus.

——— How he.] i. e. The Lord Chriſt.

——— Breaking of bread.] See this argued above at ver. 30. in the notes.

Ver. 37 —— Suppoſed that they had ſeen a ſpirit.] i. e. A phantaſm, or a ſpirit, aſſuming the ſhape of Chriſt, and appearing to them in it; becauſe they heard no noiſe of any doors opening, or of feet moving towards them; and ſo, though they doubted not of Chriſt's reſurrection; ver. 34. Yet might they for theſe reaſons doubt of this appearance of him, in the midſt of them, without knocking at the door for entrance, or giving any indication of his coming into them. But to remove all ſuch apprehenſions, Chriſt appeals to his ſubſtance, ſaying,

Ver. 39. Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I my ſelf; handle me, &c.] Chriſt proves the veracity and ſubſtance of his body from the evidence of their ſight and touch; and the Apoſtles conſequently teſtify to the truth of the reſurrection of his body, as being that which their eyes had ſeen, and their hands had handled, 1 John i. 2.

——— A ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones as ye ſee me have.] Who ſhall preſume to queſtion the truth of our Saviour's argument; it therefore follows from this text, that evil ſpirits cannot aſſume ſuch a body as will not yield unto the touch, but only a mere phantom, or an aerial appearance of a body, which cannot cheat the touch and eyes of men; and moreover, that good ſpirits, if they can aſſume a more ſolid body, yet cannot put illuſions upon men in things belonging to their faith, or be ſent by God for ſuch ends.

Ver. 43. He did eat before them.] To ſhew that his body was truly raiſed and contained thoſe parts by which meat is chewed, received and dejeſted.

Ver. 44. ——— All things muſt be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moſes, and in the Prophets and in the Pſalms, &c.] See ver. 27. This was the diviſion of the Old Teſtament in our Saviour's time, which ſays Joſephus, was ſub-divided into twenty-two Divine Books; five books of Moſes, thirteen writings of the Prophets, and four books containing hymns to God, and documents of life, lib. 1. contr. Apion. The chief or firſt of which were the book of Pſalms.

Ver 45. — Then he opened their minds, &c.] By giving them now ſome firſt-fruits of that ſpirit of prophecy, which fell more plentifully on them at the day of Pentecoſt.

Ver. 48. —— And ye are witneſſes of theſe things.] For, Chriſt's reſurrection being a matter of fact, muſt be proved by the teſtimony of eye-witneſſes; ſee the following Diſſertation.

The great foundation of our hope of immortality, is the revelation of the Goſpel; and the great evidence of the truth of that revelation is the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt. Without the revelation of the Goſpel, our hope of immortality, according to mens different abilities in philoſophical ſpeculations, had continued diſputable; and, without the reſurrection of Chriſt, the proofs of the truth of the Goſpel-revelation had been finally fruſtrated. As therefore the truth of the Chriſtian Revelation, is of the greateſt importance to mens ſouls, in the whole; ſo the proof of the reſurrection of Chriſt, is of the greateſt importance towards ſecuring the certainty of that revelation, in particular. ——— By the light of nature, the Being and

Attributes of God, were certain and demonſtrable; the probability of a future ſtate was great and undeniable; the expectation of God's dealing with penitent ſinners mercifully, was reaſonable and hopeful.——But by the revelation of the Goſpel only, was this great hope ſecured to us; the pardon of ſin declared authentickly, by the authority of God; life and immortality brought to light by teſtimony, as well as by rational arguments; the rewards and puniſhments of eternity diſtinctly ſet forth; and the particular method of the final judgment affectionately repreſented to us. And,

As to the evidences of the truth of this revelation: By the Prophecies of the Old Teſtament, it was long before predicted: By the reaſonableſs of the doctrine itſelf it was made very credible: By the witneſs of our Lord and of his Apoſtles it was ſtrongly atteſted: By the conviction and ſilencing of its adverſaries, it was confirmed and eſtabliſhed: By many ſigns and wonders, and mighty works done by Chriſt in his life, it was for the preſent proved beyond contradiction: But this laſt evidence only, by the reſurrection of our Lord Jeſus from the dead, it was for ever aſcertained to all generations. For, had this laſt proof failed, all the reſt muſt have in courſe fallen with it. The Prophecies indeed would have appeared wonderful, but never could be fulfilled: The doctrine would have continued reaſonable, but its author periſhed: The Miracles of his life would have remained aſtoniſhing, but ſtill confuted by his death. His enemies would have continued to inſult him, as did the Jews; He ſaved others, himſelf he could not ſave. And his friends that loved his doctrine, and hoped for the ſalvation of God, could but have joined with his diſponding diſciples; we truſted it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael. In a word, as Paul expreſſes it, had not Chriſt riſen again, then had our whole preaching been vain, and your faith alſo in vain. Therefore,

The reſurrection of Chriſt being a fact of ſo great importance, on which the evidence of the truth of the whole revelation finally depended; it was neceſſary, in the wiſdom of providence, and in the reaſon of things, that the proof of this great fact, ſhould be made unanſwerably ſtrong. Therefore,

Let it be obſerved, that there was extraordinary care taken to make the proof of the fact it ſelf undeniable, That our Saviour did really riſe from the dead. For,

In the firſt place, the Prophecies in the Old Teſtament, did long before deliver an antecedent notice thereof. Thus we read in Pſ. xvi. 10. Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell; i. e. in the ſtate of the dead; neither wilt thou ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption.——That this was an expreſs prediction of our Saviour's reſurrection; the Apoſtles in their application of it in the Book of Acts, ſhew by the following argument. The words thus ſpoken by David muſt, of neceſſity, be meant either of himſelf, or of ſome other perſon. They could not be literally meant of himſelf; becauſe it was not true, that he was raiſed before he ſaw corruption. And if they were meant of any other perſon, the Jews themſelves, notwithſtanding all their prejudices, would readily acknowledge, that That other perſon ſo mentioned by way of eminence, could according to the analogy of the Prophetic Writings, be no other than the Meſſiah.— This argument is ſtrongly urged by Peter in the Acts, ch. ii. 29. Which is ſupported by the collateral evidence of Paul in Acts xiii. 36. Therefore theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption, were ſpoken, not of David himſelf, but of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

After this, and other ancient Prophecies, there were in the next place, plain notifications given by our Lord himſelf to his diſciples before his ſufferings; that they ſhould expect his riſing from the dead. And becauſe it was a matter of the greateſt importance, he therefore repeated this admonition to them ſeveral times; as before his transfiguration; Matt. xvi. 21. After his transfiguration; Matt. xvii. 9. At his laſt going up to Jeruſalem; Matt. xx. 17. Beſides which plain admonitions to his diſciples, he gave ſome obſcure hints of it to the whole people alſo: For, when the Jews required of him a ſign, at one time he anſwered, and ſaid unto them, Deſtroy this temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up; John ii. 19. And at another time, To an evil and adulterous generation there ſhall no ſign be given, but the ſign of the Prophet Jonas: For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, ſo ſhall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth; Matt. xii. 39. The deſign and uſe of which predictions, though not at all underſtood at the time they were ſpoken, is declared to us by the Evangeliſt: "When therefore he was riſen from the dead, his diſciples remembered that he had ſaid this unto them; and they believed the Scripture, and the word that Jeſus had ſaid; John ii, 22. And remember, ſaid the Angel to the perſons which came firſt to the ſepulchre, "Remember how he ſpake unto you——ſaying, the Son of man muſt be delivered into the hands of ſinful men, and be crucified, and the third day riſe again, and they remembred his words;" Luke xxiv. 6.

Further, In order to make the proof of his reſurrection ſtill more evident, providence had remarkably particularized the place, manner and circumſtances of his burial. For, "Joſeph of Arimathea begged his body, and wrapped it in fine linen, and laid it in his own ſepulchre," Mark xv. 42. and this was done in the preſence of ſeveral of Jeſus's followers; who thereupon reſolving to come and embalm him, were providentially directed to become witneſſes of many circumſtances attending his reſurrection.

Laſtly, The method taken by his very adverſaries to find evidence, as they thought of the impoſture, making the ſepulchre ſure, ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch, Matt. xxvii. 66. was deſigned by providence, on the contrary, to become a ſtrong proof of the truth of his reſurrection; taking away all pretence or poſſibility of that plauſible objection, that his diſciples came by night and ſtole him away.

Theſe are the principal inſtances of the care that was taken in the circumſtances going before our Lord's reſurrection, to render the proof certain and undeniable. But after his riſing again from the dead, the additional evidence of the truth of his being riſen is much greater, not only than what unbelievers, but even than believers themſelves without; without putting together the numerous circumſtances recorded in different places of Scripture, can eaſily imagine. For,

Firſt, An earthquake terrified the watch, and the appearance of an Angel made them become as dead men, Matt. xxviii. 2.

Secondly, The perſons who came with an intention to embalm the body, ſaw likewiſe an Angel, and were told by him, that their Lord was riſen from the dead; ver. 6. Immediately after this, Jeſus himſelf appeared to them and comforted them, ver. 9. to which John adds this particular circumſtance, ch. xx. 17. That when one of them embraced his feet, rejoicing and worſhipping him, upon his diſcovering himſelf who he was, he ſaid unto her, Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to my Father. But go to your brethren and —— tell them, that I am riſen from the dead, never to die any more, &c.

Thirdly, He appeared to the two diſciples going to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 13. and talked with them, and "expounded unto them in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himſelf."

Fourthly, He ſhewed himſelf to Peter alone, ver. 34; ſee alſo 1 Cor. xv. 5. Then to James, ver. 7. After that to ſeven of the Apoſtles together, John xxi. 2. Then to ten of them, Thomas only being abſent, John xx. 19. And a week after, to all the eleven, ver. 26. Thomas being preſent with them.

Laſtly, After theſe ſeveral more private appearances of our Lord to his Apoſtles, he was ſeen of above five hundred brethren at once, 1 Cor. xv. 6. And in this manner continued he for forty days together, ſhewing himſelf alive after his paſſion by many infallible proofs, &c. Acts i. 3. After which at mid-day in the preſence of all the Apoſtles, he was taken up from them viſibly into Heaven, ver. 9. and they were told by the Angels, ver. 11. what he alſo had told them before in his life-time, "that in like manner as they ſaw him go into Heaven, ſo from thence likewiſe ſhould they ſee him come to judge the world. Now,

Let us ſum up the evidence. We ſhall find, though it be given by ſo many different perſons; repeated at ſo many different times; diverſified with ſuch variety of circumſtances; yet all agreeing in ſuch a perfect uniformity as to the thing itſelf, there never was a more undeniable proof given of any matter of fact. Nevertheleſs,

He after this appeared again to Stephen in the midſt of his ſufferings; Acts vii. 55. and to Paul, as unto one born out of due time; 1 Cor. xv. 8. To which cloud of eye-witneſſes we might reaſonably add the miracles, which the Apoſtles wrought through his power and authority; and the gradual fulfilling of thoſe Prophecies concerning himſelf, his diſciples, and the Jewiſh nation, which he delivered both before and after his paſſion.

The truth of our Lord's reſurrection being thus atteſted by a multitude of witneſſes, and confirmed by ſuch a number of conſequent facts, it is hardly poſſible that the firſt preachers of his doctrine ſhould either themſelves have been deceived, or be deceivers of others; and we may now eaſily anſwer that obvious objection ſuggeſted Acts x. 40. "Why Chriſt after his reſurrection ſhew'd himſelf openly, not to all the people, but unto witneſſes only, choſen before of God." And the reaſon hereof is the ſame, as why in all other caſes God does not all that he is able to do, but all that is fit and right for him to do. There is in every means a certain fitneſs and proportion to the end it leads to; wherewith if men will not be ſatisfied, there can be no limits found to terminate their unreaſonable expectations, and to ſtop their groundleſs imaginations. God's wiſdom provided as many and unqueſtionable witneſſes of the reſurrection of Chriſt, as the nature of the thing required; as was ſufficient to make the fact unconteſtable; as was ſatisfactory to any reaſonable and unprejudiced perſon. And God is not obliged in juſtice nor goodneſs to work miracles for the ſake of obſtinate and vicious unbelievers. So that

I ſhall conclude with an obſervation about the manner of his riſing. We read in more than thirty paſſages of the New Teſtament, That God raiſed up our Lord from the dead, or that he was raiſed by the power of the Father; and yet in two or three other places it is no leſs plainly aſſerted, "That Chriſt raiſed up himſelf." Which different expreſſions, though they carry in them a ſeeming difficulty, are explained to us with the greateſt accuracy and exact diſtinctneſs by Chriſt himſelf in John x. 16. No man, ſaith he, taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of my ſelf: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again; this commandment (or commiſſion, or power) I have received of my Father.

A Diſſertation on the leproſy and the manner of its cure.

The leproſy is ſuppoſed to have been a diſeaſe, at firſt, peculiar to the Egyptians, and from them ſpread into Syria. But the leproſy provided againſt by the law of Moſes, was not ſo much a common diſeaſe, or a legal pollution, as a Divine Infliction for the puniſhment of ſome grievous ſin in the leprous perſon; for it is difficult to conceive how ſuch a peſtilent diſeaſe, as infected not only mens bodies, but the very walls of their houſes, and their garments, ſhould proceed merely from natural cauſes; and therefore it was always underſtood that the extraordinary hand of God was in ſome meaſure concerned in it. Conſequently,

They were not the phyſicians of the body, but the prieſts, who were appointed the judges to inſpect into this diſtemper, and to diſcern between a true leproſy and the reſemblance of it. And their knowledge became ſo penetrating in this matter, that they were even able to determine what was Divine in the leproſy, and what only proceeded from the conſtitution of their bodies, and a natural diſtemper. And it was very natural that the prieſts ſhould have the care of this inſpection; becauſe they had the charge of admitting them into the ſanctuary; moreover, there were certain rites, and ceremonies, and ſacrifices appointed for their cleanſing, if they were found leprous, committed to the inſpection of the prieſts to be ſeen done: And therefore, the judgment alſo of the diſeaſe was proper to them.

The leproſy generally appeared in one of theſe three forms; either as a bright ſpot in the skin; as a ſcab, or a tumour. A white ſpot riſing in the skin of the fleſh was eſteemed a violent ſymptom of the leproſy; but there being white ſpots in the fleſh that were not leprous, therefore, in order to give a right judgment, the prieſt was to inſpect into the circumſtances of the ſpot. If the hair in it was turned white, and it was not only a ſuperficial whiteneſs, but the ſpot ſeemed to have eaten deeper into the very fleſh, then it was to be judged a true leproſy, and the perſon infected was to be judged unclean, and commanded to be ſeparated from the congregation, and ſhut up by himſelf. But if the bright ſpot were not a perfect white, but ſomething duskiſh, it was ſuppoſed it might proceed from a leſſer ſort of foulneſs in the blood and skin, and therefore not a leproſy: And in this caſe the perſon was ſhut up by himſelf for ſeven days (becauſe in this ſpace of time there frequently happens a viſible alteration in diſeaſes) to ſee what change might be wrought if it were an ordinary diſeaſe, as well as to ſecure the ſuſpected perſon from defiling others, in caſe it ſhould prove a true leproſy. Then after the expiration of ſeven days, the prieſt was to inſpect again; and if the ſpot continued of the ſame colour, the caſe remaining dubious, he was to make a further trial, and ſhut up the ſuſpected perſon for ſeven days more; but when theſe ſeven days were alſo expired, and the ſpot remained, upon enquiry, of the ſame colour as at firſt, then the patient was pronounced clean, left at liberty, and admitted into converſation. But having been ſuſpected of leproſy, he was obliged to waſh his clothes; becauſe there was ſome kind of impurity in his blood, which broke out into his skin, though not infectious. A perſon, who had no other ſign of leproſy but a bright ſpot, if it appeared clear and bright, without a cloudineſs in it, was eſteem'd a leper.

The ſecond part of leproſy was a ſcab, which upon examination, after the perſon had been pronounced clean, being found to ſpread in the skin, it was an evident ſign of a leproſy. For it muſt be obſerved, that after a perſon had been pronounced clean by the prieſt, after a trial of fourteen days, he was obliged, if he found the ſcab to ſpread, to ſhew himſelf again to the prieſt upon pain of having his leproſy cleave to him for ever. And if, upon inſpection, the ſcab was found to ſpread in the skin, the perſon was abſolutely to be pronounced unclean.

The third ſort of leproſy was a tumour or ſwelling. Such a one ſo infected, if he was not ſo religious to go of himſelf, might be compelled by force to be examined by the prieſt; and if, upon examination, the riſing of the skin was white, and the hair was white, and more eſpecially if it had broken through the skin, and in the raw ſound fleſh there appeared white ſpots, there needed no further conſideration to pronounce it an undoubted and true leproſy, preying upon the very fleſh, and capable of deſtroying the whole body. But if the body was otherwiſe ſpread all over with ſcabs, this breaking out was not eſteem'd the plague of leproſy, being rather a relief to the body than a diſeaſe: But when the forementioned ſpots appeared in the ſound fleſh, it was an infallible ſign of a ſettled leproſy, nature not being able to throw out the ill humour into the skin, but it worked inward into the fleſh.

It often happened that a tumour or ſwelling of an ulcerous nature, after it had been cloſed or healed, broke out again, and upon this new irruption became a ſettled and inveterate leproſy, which was always to be accompanied with an exceeding red ſhining inflamation. But if the tumour or bile, did not ſpread, and eat into the fleſh, the perſon was reputed clean.

If a perſon was burnt by a coal, &c. and upon examination, it appeared that the wound had pierced into the fleſh, and the hair was become white, ſuch a perſon was judged unclean; otherwiſe it was reckoned no more than a common inflammation ariſing from the burning.

There was, beſides theſe leproſies of the body, another kind of leproſy peculiar to the head or beard, ſpreading it ſelf from the chin all over the face, except the eyes, and covered the neck, breaſt and hands, with a filthy ſcurf of the skin, which in Scripture-phraſe is called a ſcall. The ſame tokens were indicative of this, as of the abovementioned leproſies of the body, only that the hair in this was yellow, and not ſo thick as the white in the former leproſies. If it was doubtful whether the diſeaſe was a confirmed leproſy, the perſon was to be ſhut up ſeven days, to ſee what it would prove; and if, upon inſpection, there was no yellow hair, nor was the ſcall ſunk deep into the skin, it was ſuppoſed it was not the leproſy: But yet the perſon was not immediately to be diſcharged, and that the prieſt might form a right judgment, all the hair about the ſcall upon his head and beard, was ſhaven, only the place where the ſcall ſpread and appeared was not ſhaven; becauſe the prieſt was to obſerve of what colour the hair in it was. This being done, the ſuſpected perſon was ſhut up ſeven days more, when he was again to be examined on the ſeventh day; and if the ſcall did not ſpread into the skin, nor eat into the fleſh, he was obliged only to waſh his clothes, and ſo he was pronounced clean: But if the contrary ſymptoms appeared, he was declared a leper. If the hair fell off from the head, eſpecially the fore-part, and if there was a bright white ſore in the bald part, he was pronounced unclean. And,

When a perſon was thus convicted of being a leper, he was obliged to rend his clothes in token of his ſorrow, and that he might by that mark be diſtinguiſhed from other people, who uſed to wear their garments cloſe before. He was alſo obliged to go bare-headed, and to cover his lips, like a mourner, either with his hand, or with the skirt of his garment thrown over his head, proclaiming his own miſery, by loudly declaring himſelf to be unclean, unclean; that thereby the clean might be apprized of his uncleanneſs, refrain his company, and prevent the ſpreading of his pollution. And in this melancholly ſtate the unhappy perſon was ſhut without the camp (as in after-times they were excluded the cities) that no man might converſe with him, but ſuch as were leprous like himſelf. Which method was ſtrictly obſerved even when a king was leprous, as we read in the caſe of Izariah, king of Judah, who being ſtruck with a leproſy, dwelt in a ſeparate houſe apart by himſelf until the day of his death; ſee 2 Kings xv. 5.

Though there was ſomething natural in the leproſy that afflicted an human body; yet when it was found to ſtick to, and infect the garment, ſo as to appear and be ſeen in it, was always adjudged by the Hebrews to be miraculous, an extraordinary puniſhment inflicted by God, and a ſevere token of his diſpleaſure.——Theſe ſigns of leproſy in a garment, were the extreme greenneſs, or redneſs of the ſpots in it, and the ſpreading of them after they were firſt diſcovered. If ſuch a ſpot were found in a garment, or skin, as broad as a bean, it gave ſufficient ground to think it might be the leproſy; if it were not ſo broad, it was accounted clean. If, upon inſpection by the prieſt, the fore-mentioned tokens appeared, the garment was to be ſhut up ſeven days. Upon the ſeventh it was to be ſurveyed by the prieſt: If the ſpots were ſpread, and the unfortunate colours continued, it was judged a fretting corroding leproſy, that never could be got out of the part affected; and therefore it was to be burnt as no more fit for uſe. If the contrary ſigns appeared, the garment was to be waſhed and to be ſhut up for ſeven days more; and then upon the ſeventh day if the bad ſigns continued, the garment was immediately burnt. But on the contrary, if the diſeaſe, after the waſhing of the garment, had not ſpread, and the part affected had changed colour from green, or red, to duskiſh, the prieſt was to cut out that part of the garment where the ſpot was; and if no other part was tainted, that garment, after another waſhing, was reputed clean.

That the leproſy was in ſome meaſure a Divine Infliction, has been before mentioned; but it will appear much more ſo, when it is obſerved, that this eating plague would appear in the very ſtones and walls of their houſes, not like the contagion which now adheres to the houſes of thoſe who have the peſtilence; for, as the Rabbins obſerve, this ſore diſeaſe was inflicted firſt upon the houſes and garments, as a puniſhment for leſſer ſins; and if men continued in a ſtate of wickedneſs, then it invaded their bodies. So that it began in the houſes, which were not infected by the inhabitants, but the inhabitants by them. The ſigns by which a leproſy was diſcovered in a houſe, were much the ſame, as appeared in a human body. When an inhabitant began to ſuſpect that this plague was in his dwelling, he was bound to give notice of it to the prieſt, or elſe he was liable to be ſeverely puniſhed. But before the prieſt made his inſpection, all the houſhold-ſtuff was to be removed, and the inhabitants were to go out, that there might be nothing to hinder his exact ſurvey. The walls, pavement and roof were to be ſearched principally: And if the leproſy had ſo eaten into the ſtones as to have made a cavity in them, and theſe ſtrakes appeared greeniſh, or reddiſh, the prieſt was to ſee the houſe ſhut up, that none might contract a pollution by going into it; and if any perſon entred within the door of the houſe, while it remained under a ſuſpicion of being defiled, he contracted a defilement himſelf, under which he lay till night. And thus it was to continue ſeven days. Upon the ſeventh day the prieſt was to renew his inſpection, and if he found the plague ſpreading, he ordered the corrupted ſtones to be taken out and carried out of the city; and the reſt of the walls where no ſpots appeared were to be ſcraped, that if any contagion ſtuck to them it might be taken away, and the ſpreading of it prevented. Theſe ſcrapings were likewiſe carried out of the city into ſome unclean place, where the ſtones were before removed. The next thing was to put freſh untainted ſtones to ſupply the vacancies of thoſe taken out of the walls, and the walls were to be covered again with freſh plaiſter: But after all this precaution, if the marks of leproſy returned, the houſe was immediately to be pulled down, and all the materials of it to be carried out of the city. On the contrary, if the plague of leproſy had not ſpread, the prieſt pronounced the houſe clean; which after it had been cleanſed by the ſame rites, that were in practice to clean men, might be re-inhabited as before.

The Divine Rites of purifying a leper were as follows: When there were reaſons to believe that the man was freed from his leproſy, he ordered his friends to provide for him two birds (which our tranſlators call ſparrows in the margin of the Bible) that were clean, and accuſtomed to fly in the open air, in order for his purification.——The The firſt rite of cleanſing was the killing of one of the birds over an earthen veſſel filled one quarter full with ſpring water, according to the tradition of the ſcribes. And the ſame tradition obſerves, that the beſt and fatteſt of the two birds was killed over the water, till it was tinctured with the blood thereof; and then he digged a hole and buried the dead bird before the leper. Then he took a cedar ſtick of a cubit long, and tying the bird to it with its tail uppermoſt, together with an handful of hyſſop, and as much ſcarlet wool as ſhould weigh a ſhekel, he dipped the bird's tail and wings with the hyſſop and ſcarlet wool, in the water tinctured with the blood of the bird which had been killed, and ſprinkled the leper ſeven times, and then pronounced him clean, letting the living bird looſe into the open fields; or, in after-times we read, that the prieſt going into the city, threw the bird over the walls towards the wilderneſs, to intimate that the cured perſon was thereby admitted and reſtored to a free converſation with all his neighbours, as the bird was with the reſt of his kind. He was then pronounced clean, and after he had waſhed his clothes, and ſhaved off all his hair, and waſhed his whole body, he was admitted into the camp. But leſt there ſhould remain undiſcerned any part of the diſeaſe, he was not admitted into the tent, where his family inhabited, 'till after the expiration of ſeven days; when he was obliged to ſhave clean off all the hair of his body on what part ſoever it grew; and then having again waſhed his clothes and his whole body, (for which purpoſe in after-times there was a convenient place provided in the corner of the court of the women, called the room of the lepers) he was admitted free into his tent.

After all this ceremony he was, nevertheleſs to complete his purification by the offering ſome peculiar ſacrifices known by the name of the treſpaſs-offering, the ſin-offering, and the burnt-offering; for which purpoſe were provided two he-lambs, and one ewe-lamb without blemiſh, and of the firſt year. To each of theſe ſacrifices, there was a meat-offering appointed, conſiſting of a tenth part of an ephah of fine flower, i. e. an omer, which was unuſual at other times; for we read of no meat-offerings, ordered to accompany either treſpaſs-offerings or ſin-offerings; and was added in this caſe of purifying the leper to make him ſenſible of his peculiar mercy received from God, who alone could cure this diſeaſe, which his hand had inflicted. —— The meat-offering was to be mingled with oil, beſides there was to be a log, or about half a pint of oil ſtand in reſerve. All which things being prepared, the prieſt placed the man in the firſt place, at the eaſt end of the gate of the court of the Iſraelites (which afterwards was the gate of Nicanor,) with his face towards the ſanctuary. He was then to bring one of the he-lambs to the ſame place, and preſent him to the Lord for a treſpaſs-offering, that he might beg pardon of God, for ſuch ſins as he had ignorantly committed. Then he preſented the log of oil, and waved them both to and fro, up and down, and towards all the four corners of the world; or, as ſome will have it, only towards the eaſt. The lamb thus preſented, was brought to the door of the court, where the leprous man ſtood, who ſtretching his hands into the court, laid them upon this ſacrifice. Then the victim was ſlain in the court of the tabernacle, at the north-ſide of the altar of burnt-offering, and two prieſts received the blood of the lamb; one into an holy veſſel, with which he ſprinkled the altar; the other catched the blood in his right hand, which he poured into his left. Now the prieſt ſtanding within the court, at the entrance of it, and the man remaining ſtill without, thruſt his head within the gate, and the prieſt put ſome of the blood upon the tip of the man's ear; the thumb of his right hand; his right leg, and the toe of his right foot with the finger of his right hand. ——— A great Jewiſh doctor obſerves, that had the prieſt varied the leaſt in the performance of this ceremony, the leper could not have been cleanſed; becauſe there was no natural efficacy in all theſe particulars to cleanſe a leper; but it depended wholly on the will and pleaſure of God, and was therefore to be punctually obſerved and done. Then,

The prieſt was to pour part of the log of oil into the palm of his own left hand, and dipping the fore-finger of his right hand in it he ſprinkled it ſeven times; at every ſprinkling he dipt his finger in the oil, and directed it towards the Moſt Holy Place, where God dwelt. After this ſprinkling he returned to the man, and laid a little oil upon the former ſpots of blood, as a token of forgiveneſs by the blood, and of healing by the oil. But the remaining part of the oil in the prieſts left hand, was poured upon the head of the perſon that was to be cleanſed; and the remainder of the log of oil fell to the prieſts ſhare, who alone might eat it in the court of the tabernacle, after the whole ceremony was punctually finiſhed.

The ſhe lamb was the next thing ſlain for a ſin-offering; for as the attonement of the leper was begun by the treſpaſs-offering, ſo was it advanced by this.

The next ſacrifice was the other he-lamb for a burnt-offering, which was alſo attended with a meat-offering; and by this his attonement was completed, and he became ſo perfectly clean, as to be admitted to be partaker of the altar when the peace-offerings were ſacrificed. But,

It was the peculiar goodneſs of God, to make a merciful proviſion, that the poor ſhould not be charged with too coſtly ſacrifices, and yet partake of the benefit of them, as much as the rich. For the poor man, having gone through the above-mentioned purgations, was on the eighth day permitted to ſacrifice a lamb for a treſpaſs-offering. Inſtead of three tenth deals of flower, he was obliged to bring but one. And inſtead of the other two lambs, that the rich were to offer, God was contented with two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; but the ſame rites were equally obſerved upon poor and rich. And thus may be juſtified the command of our Saviour, when he bid the lepers go and ſhew themſelves to the prieſts, and offer their offerings according to the law of Moſes. To this Diſſertation on leproſy, it can't be improper to add an account, which alſo I have promiſed before.

Of the diſeaſes in general mentioned in Scripture.

This ſubject naturally falls within the deſign of this work, which is to explain whatever can raiſe any difficulties in reading the Scriptures. Nor can it be thought that the diſeaſes mentioned in Scripture, want their difficulties in regard of our preſent and local knowledge; for every country and every age have ſome peculiar to itſelf; which has employed the pens of ſome ſkilful phyſicians to write whole treatiſes upon this ſubject; eſpecially the famous Ader and Bartholine, from whom I have extracted the following account.

It is an unalterable rule of Divine Juſtice, that he only can be unhappy who is criminal; and that no pain is any further juſt, than as it is the puniſhment of ſin. As long as man continued innocent, he continued happy; and that nought might interrupt his happineſs, God had planted a tree in the terreſtrial paradiſe, whoſe fruit would have preſerved him from all ſorts of diſeaſes, and from death itſelf. As to the nature of this tree, it is not my immediate province to deliate; ſo I ſhall only obſerve, that the idea we have of the Divine Omnipotence, eaſily confirms our opinion of its uſe, and benefit. And what is certain, is, that ſin, the very Heathen being our judges, is the cauſe of all diſeaſes; and that man no ſooner became ſinful, but death came haſtily upon him, and a deluge of evils overflowed the earth. If then, we look upon diſeaſes as the puniſhments of the hand of God; (ſee 2 Sam. xxiv. Acts xii. 23. 2 Chron. xxi. 18. Gen. v. 3.) it will be eaſy to account for that aſſertion, that God is the author of all evils, (ſin only excepted) becauſe he makes uſe of them, in the common courſe of his providence, either to puniſh ſinners, or to preſerve the righteous from the corruptions of the world. And,

The Divine Juſtice often makes uſe of the devils as its inſtrument in the execution of its vengeance. It makes it their province to torment ſinners; ſo that they are the concealed inſtruments of natural diſeaſes, and the Goſpel gives us an account of many perſons that were poſſeſſed. But God does alſo make uſe of good Angels as his miniſters, as we read in the hiſtory of Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 25. Thus alſo in the fiſh-pool at Jeruſalem, there was an Angel which ſtirred the water in which the diſeaſed were cured. So that both good and bad angels are equally the executioners of the will of God, in the good and evil, which he ſends upon mankind. But

I ſhall not here ſpeak of the miraculous cures with which the Scriptures abound, of the reſurrection of the child, which Eliſha revived and brought to life, 1 Kings iv. of the cure of Naaman, who only waſhed himſelf ſeven times in the river Jordan, and was thereby cured of an inveterate leproſy, 2 Kings v. or, of that of Hezekiah, by the application of a pultis of figs, 2 Kings xxvi. The Goſpel is full of ſuch cures; for there we read of a man born blind cured with dirt, which, naturally ſpeaking, was more likely to put out his eyes than to open them; we there read of the lame reſtored, the ſick cured, the dead raiſed, and that with ſo much eaſe, and readineſs, as viſibly ſhews the finger of God. Therefore,

I ſhall only give a particular account of the different diſeaſes, which are mentioned in Scripture. As,

Barenneſs, this is a ſort of infirmity, formerly thought a reproach among the Hebrew women, as could be proved from many plain texts in the Old Teſtament, and for which reaſon a barren widow was to marry her huſband's brother, &c.

There is no part in the human body ſubject to a greater number of diſtempers than the eye. But blindneſs, or the loſs of ſight, which no art can cure, is the greateſt of them all. So that the number of blind people whom Jeſus Chriſt reſtored to ſight is a ſignal teſtimony of his Divine Power. Nevertheleſs, let it be granted when the ſight is loſt by a cataract, oculiſts can reſtore it by removing the cauſe; but this operation of removing a cataract is very different from the miracles of Jeſus.

A cancer is one of the moſt terrible diſeaſes in the world; and if it be not ſoon ſtopped, it makes a terrible progreſs; and therefore the Apoſtle Paul compares the diſcourſes of hereticks to a cancer, or gangrene, 2 Tim. ii. 17.

Caſtration was done either by bruiſing, treading on, cutting off, or pulling out the parts, which are appointed for the preſervation of the ſpecies. But this was ſo rigorouſly forbidden, that it was not lawful to offer up a caſtrated animal in ſacrifice, and it diſqualified a man for the prieſthood, Levit. xxii. 24.

Of deafneſs and dumbneſs it may be obſerved, that the tongue and ear have ſo much dependance upon one another, that they who are born deaf are conſequently dumb; which is the reaſon why the deaf man, whom Jeſus Chriſt cured, was alſo dumb; and it was a double miracle for a man that had never ſpoken, to ſpeak in a moment, without having had time to learn. For, the reaſon why they who are born deaf, are dumb, is, that they having never heard a word ſpoken, their tongues cannot pronounce any word; words being nothing elſe but an imitation of what we hear others ſay.

The Dropſy generally ſwells a patient very much, and makes him appear hideous to the ſight; this is the worſt ſort, and no doubt, the ſame that the man was afflicted with, whoſe cure is related in the Goſpel; Luke xiv.

Fevers, and their different ſorts, are ſo common, that they need no explanation. And as for the Gangrene; ſee Cancer above.

The Gonnorrhea is a diſtemper peculiar to men, and made thoſe unclean who were ſeized with it, and they were not ſuffered to enter into the temple.

The Gout moſt certainly is that violent pain in the feet, of which the Scripture ſaith Aſa died; 2 Chron. xvi. 12.

The Hemorrhoides, or Piles, are a loſs of blood, by the veins of the Anus. When they have not this effect, they cauſe a ſwelling in it, which is often extremely painful. It is believed, that this was the diſtemper with which God puniſhed the inhabitants of Azotus; 1 Sam. v. for having dared to detain the ark among them. This loſs of blood did not make the perſons afflicted with it unclean; but one of another kind, to which women are ſometimes ſubject, made them ſo as long as it continued. They were forbidden all the intercourſes of civil ſociety whilſt it laſted; and it is probable that the iſſue of blood, with which the woman afflicted, of whom Matthew ſpeaks, (ch. ix.) was of that kind, (ſee my note on the place) which made the woman unclean, becauſe ſhe preſented herſelf to Jeſus out of the city, came not before, but behind him, and privately touched the tufts of his robe; as knowing that it was forbidden her to touch any one at that time, or becauſe whatever ſhe did touch became immediately unclean; as her bed, and all the furniture ſhe made uſe of, was. Yet,

No diſtemper is more naſty and dreadful than the leproſy. The word is originally Greek, and may have been taken, either from the ſcales which a leproſy brings upon the body, or from its making the skin rough and full of pimples. But we muſt take care not to confound the leproſy with St. Anthony's fire, or tetters, or the itch, or with, what the French call, Mal S. Mein. For, the leproſy is ſo contagious, that the breath, or touch of the leper, communicates the diſtemper; and it is therefore a ſpecies of uncleanneſs under the law; ſee the preceding Diſſertation on this diſeaſe.

The Lunatic, whom Jeſus Chriſt cured, when his diſciples could not, was not cured of his Lunacy, but of the falling-ſickneſs, with which he was troubled. What his father ſays of his diſtemper, are the ſymptoms of it, as you may read in Matt. xvii. 15. And experience ſhews, that the epilepſy, or falling-ſickneſs, is a lunatic diſtemper, or is ſecretly affected by the motion of the moon; ſo that the fits come and go, according as the moon increaſes or decreaſes: But this lunatic was alſo poſſeſſed, as may be collected from this paſſage of Matt. xvii. 14, 15. compared with ver. 18. and Luke ix. 39. where this ſame ſon is repreſented to be poſſeſſed by a ſpirit; and from John x. 20. He hath a Devil and is mad, For, it is the common practice of this malicious ſpirit to enter with natural diſeaſes, and make them both more ſevere and more laſting. Hence Mr. Mede infers, that by Demoniacks, or perſons poſſeſſed of Devils, in the Goſpel, is meant only what we call Lunatics, Mad-men, and Melancholly Perſons. See Mede's Works, p. 29, 30.

Lycanthropy is not found by that term in Scripture, but the diſtemper it ſignifies is. For, it is a diſtemper ariſing from a black and burnt choler, which ſpreads itſelf all over the body, produces inward cancers, cauſes very ſharp pains, is very drying, changes the countenance, and paſſing from the body upon the mind, does in a manner turn a man into a beaſt. The French therefore call ſuch afflicted perſons, Loup garoux, i. e. Wolf-men. This was the diſtemper of Nebuchadnezzar, mentioned by Daniel; ſee my notes on the fourth chapter of that Prophet. And the diſtemper of the man, who is ſaid in the Goſpel to live among tombs, and to brake his chains, may be reduced to this head: But the Devil was alſo very inſtrumental in it. For, ſome of thoſe ſo affected, not only think themſelves changed into dogs, wolves, &c. but take up their fury and inclinations.

The Palſy is a relaxation of the nerves, ariſing from a cold humour, which fills them, and ſtops up the paſſage of the animal ſpirits. The ſoul governs the body by the nerves, and it is by them that ſhe becomes ſenſible of what happens to the body. But the Palſy breaks off this communication, and is a privation of both motion and ſenſe. The man who lay by the fiſh-pool for thirty-eight years together; John v. 5. and the man whom they let down before Jeſus Chriſt, through the roof of the houſe, Mark ii. 4. were both paralytick. But when we read Matt. viii. 6. we are only to underſtand, that the young man had loſt the uſe and motion of his limbs, and was as unable to come and preſent himſelf before Jeſus, as if he had been paralytick; for his diſtemper was a kind of Rheumatiſm.

The Phthiſick, or Conſumption, is a diſtemper which inſenſibly dries up the body, making it thinner and thinner till death puts an end to the miſery of the patient. The wicked Jehoram was puniſhed by God with this diſtemper, who having languiſhed two years in ſuch a manner that his bowels ſeemed to have fallen out; 2 Chron. xxi. 15. he died.

The Evangeliſt Luke relates the cure of a woman who had a ſpirit of infirmity eighteen years; ch. xiii. 11. But this was not ſo properly a diſtemper as a poſſeſſion; ſee Calmet, vol. 1. Diſſ. 23.

Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel reſtores a man's withered hand, which is a malady proceeding from a great weakneſs, or exhauſting of the veins and arteries, which produces an extraordinary leanneſs in the hand, and hinders the nerves and muſcles from performing their functions.

Worms become a ſort of diſtemper when the body is eaten up of them, which is the caſe of ſome fevers, when the blood is full of worms; and this was the diſtemper, which ſeized Herod, and cauſed him to die in the midſt of intolerable pains.

As to the diſtemper with which Job was tormented. I anſwer, that his body was reduced ſo low by the power of Satan, that he felt the ſame pains, which attend the moſt contagious diſtemper; God having given the Devil dominion over his ſervant for a time, that his patience might be the more ſignal and exemplary, in proportion to the greatneſs of the ſufferings he underwent.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

GOSPEL,
ACCORDING TO
St. JOHN.

The INTRODUCTION.

John the Evangeliſt was the brother of James the Great, and the ſon of Zebedee and Salome, born at Bethſaida. Several have believed that he was that diſciple of John the Baptiſt, who went with Andrew to Jeſus, and ſo much the rather, becauſe that other diſciple is not named: For John in his own writings modeſtly conceals his own name, though he is particular enough in the mention of others. He might be firſt a diſciple of John the Baptiſt, but his converſion to Chriſt is uncertain: Yet this we are aſſured of, that the miraculous draught of fiſhes at the command of Jeſus, made them all captives to his will and doctrine, as many as were preſent; and from that time John, with the reſt of his partners, became inſeparable companions and attendants of him, leaving his father and all worldly concerns to follow him. He was one of the firſt, and preſent at the cure of Peter's wiſe's mother; the raiſing of Jairus's daughter; and at the glorious transfiguration in the mount, with his brother James; ſee Mark i. 29. and Matt. xvii. 1.

Jeſus Chriſt when he called him to the Apoſtleſhip, gave him and his brother the name of Boanerges, i. e. the ſons of thunder; in regard of the ſtrength and greatneſs of their faith; and becauſe they were deſigned to publiſh the majeſty of God through all the world, not to fear the power of men, but to exalt themſelves above them. This ſirname was yet more eſpecially attributed to our Apoſtle John, who was indeed eminently the ſon of thunder; becauſe he ſo clearly taught the Divinity of Chriſt Jeſus in ſublime words, and hath made manifeſt the flaſhes of the truth of thoſe Divine Secrets, which, like clouds, deprive us of their ſplendor.

This Apoſtle was thought the youngeſt of all the Apoſtles, being no more than about twenty-five or twenty-ſix years old at the time of his admiſſion, or when he was called to the Apoſtleſhip: And the length of his life, after Chriſt's death, proves, that he was very young when he firſt became his diſciple. But he was equal in piety and wiſdom to thoſe who were much older. His holy life made him honourable in all the world, which was to him inſtead of old age, and his prudence inſtead of grey hairs.

He had in his youth ſuch a pure and blameleſs life, as is not ordinarily in others, till attain'd, by length of time, and long experience and exerciſe in virtue.

Jeſus Chriſt had a particular affection for him, and loved him more than any of his diſciples, inſomuch that when he ſpeaks of himſelf, it is by that ſpecial character, That he was that diſciple whom Jeſus loved. On which occaſion, Auſtin ſays, that he believes that Jeſus Chriſt ſhew'd him a particular kindneſs, that he might give the greater authority to thoſe great truths, which he was afterwards to deliver to the world in writing; and John deſerved this love, not only becauſe he loved Chriſt above all, but becauſe he was very peaceable and meek, and ſo extremely like Chriſt himſelf; ſee Hierom ep. 1. Aug. in Jo. h. 124.

John thought he gave his maſter a ſound proof of his love to him, in hindering a perſon, who was caſting out devils in the name of Chriſt, to do it; becauſe he was not of the number of Chriſt's diſciples, and then told Jeſus what he had done. But Jeſus, though he did not reprove him for it, as if he had been guilty of a fault, knowing that he did it out of true love and zeal to him, told him, by way of inſtruction, That there was no cauſe why he ſhould hinder him, though he did not conſtantly follow him, as they did; becauſe it was a ſign that he had ſome degree of faith in him, as the Saviour of the world; that he had a veneration for his name, which he uſed in ſo ſolemn a work; and that indeed he was of their party, and one of his diſciples, though he did not ſo openly profeſs it; becauſe none can do a miracle in my name, but he muſt ſpeak honourably of me, and in ſo doing, in ſome meaſure, act with us and for us. Again,

John ſhewed a particular reſpect and love for Jeſus, as well as his brother James did, when, ſeeing the incivility and ingratitude of the Samaritans to him, he deſired to call for fire from heaven, as Elias did, to conſume them, as unworthy to live, becauſe they denied reception to the Son of God. Nor can it be thought to proceed from any other motive than a ſingular affection to his maſter, when he deſired to ſit with his brother on his right hand, and on his left in his kingdom, being ambitious of a near enjoyment of him in his glory, and accounting it all his happineſs to have the marks of his favour, as well in the future as in this preſent life. He alſo was one of them, who a little before Chriſt's paſſion, asked him, when the ruin of the temple ſhould happen? which he had a little before told; Mark xiii. 34.

When our Saviour celebrated his laſt paſſover with his diſciples, at the end of which he delivered to them the Sacred Memorials of his death and ſufferings for them and all the world, John was ſent with Peter to find out a convenient place for it, and provide all things neceſſary for that ſolemn rite. Some of the Modern Greeks have hence affirmed, that it was at John's houſe where this laſt paſſover was kept; but there is not the leaſt ſhadow of truth for ſuch a conjecture: But though the perſon be not indeed named, there is ſufficient reaſon to believe it was the houſe of ſome other perſon; and it is ſcarcely imaginable, that John ſhould have an houſe at Jeruſalem, who was only a poor fiſherman on the ſea of Tiberias.

At this laſt paſchal ſupper, wherein Chriſt inſtituted, and left us the ſacramental pledges of his love, he gave John a particular mark of his love and favour, by ſuffering him to lean upon his boſom, as he uſually did, ſays Auſtin, when he eat with him. John repeats this circumſtance ſeveral times, and the more ancient and ſolid fathers, make many remarks upon it. They deduce from it a proof, or at leaſt a figure of that ſpiritual and ineffable communication of Divine Knowledge, which the Word imparted to him, that having been filled with the moſt ſublime truths and Heavenly Myſteries from the boſom of the Son of God, he might diſcover them to men by his Goſpel, Revelation and Epiſtles. They ſay that he related this particular favour, leſt men ſhould think he attributed to himſelf what he had received, or was the author of thoſe Divine Myſteries which were revealed to him by the Spirit of God. While John lay thus in his Saviour's boſom, Peter prompted him to ask Jeſus, who of them it was that ſhould betray him? To whom Jeſus ſignified by ſigns, that it was Judas Iſcariot the ſon of Simon. Hence Hierom ſays, that Peter durſt not put this queſtion to Jeſus.

Supper being ended, Jeſus retired into the olive-garden, called Gethſemane, attended by his diſciples; but he admitted only Peter, James, and John, to be witneſſes of his agony, and of that ſorrow he voluntarily endured to comfort us under our involuntary griefs. And,

When Jeſus was betrayed and delivered into the hands and power of the Jews, by the treachery and guidance of Judas, all the diſciples forſook their maſter, and fled for fear of perſecution, except John, ſays the ancient father Chryſoſtome; for, though the Evangeliſt Matthew declares expreſly, "that all the diſciples forſook him and fled," yet we could ſhew that ſuch general expreſſions in Scripture frequently admit of exceptions; and indeed it is not eaſy to imagine that John ſhould fly, and yet go along with Jeſus into the very palace of Caiaphas, as the Fathers believe he did in their comments on John xviii. 15, 16. underſtanding by the diſciple, that was known to the high-prieſt, and let Peter in, to be John the Evangeliſt, though there be no certain proof of it. And beſides, it ſeems probable, that John accompanied Chriſt in the former part of his ſufferings, whom alone, of all his diſciples, we find attending on him at his crucifixion, and there receiving that ſingular teſtimony of our Saviour's affection to him, in committing to his care the guardianſhip of his dear mother, and that with a charge to give her the honour and reſpect of his own mother: Which was faithfully and willingly accepted and executed by our Evangeliſt, who from that very hour or time, in which Chriſt died, took her to his own home, and provided for her ever after, though John did not depart from the croſs till he ſaw his maſter's body diſpoſed of and laid in a ſepulchre. So that

It is from this Evangeliſt, full of ſorrow and inexpreſſible grief we learn, that though the legs of the thieves that were crucified with him were broken; yet according to the types in Scripture, no bone of his was broken, but his ſide being pierced with a ſpear, as Zachary had foretold, ch. xii. 10. there guſhed out of it blood and water; and ſo as he had fulfilled all righteouſneſs while he was alive, ſo were the Prophecies of Scripture concerning the death of the Meſſiah, fulfilled in him.

Upon the day of Chriſt's reſurrection Mary Magdalene came early to the ſepulchre, and not finding Chriſt's body, which they came purpoſely to anoint, ſhe went immediately, in great haſte, to John and Peter to tell them of it, ſuppoſing that his body had been taken away by ſome unknown perſon to be hidden from them. This report much alarmed and ſurprized theſe two Apoſtles, who ran immediately to the place of burial to be fully informed of the truth thereof. In which courſe John outran Peter, and came firſt to the ſepulchre, and looking into the ſepulchre ſaw the linen clothes, wherein his body had been wrapped up, lying by themſelves, which when Peter came, and had conſidered on, they both concluded that his body was ſtolen, being ignorant as yet, that he was to riſe again from the dead, tho' they were afterwards convinced of it by Chriſt's frequent appearance to them; ſee John xx. 10.

Some few days after, John being fiſhing in company with other diſciples, ſaw Jeſus walking on the ſhore of the ſea of Tiberias, but in ſuch a form as not to be readily known to his diſciples at firſt, till John obſerving his method of diſcourſe, and getting a great draught of fiſh by his inſtructions about caſting their net, diſcovered him to be their Lord, and telling it to Peter, they all haſtned to ſhore that they might dine with him. And dinner being ended, John followed Chriſt along the ſhore, queſtioning Peter about the ſincerity of his love thrice, which being obſerved by Peter, he asked Jeſus, what ſhould become of John? ſuppoſing, that ſince that Apoſtle had always been his beſt beloved, he would particularly protect and defend him. To which Jeſus replied ſo ambiguouſly, that the diſciples began to think that John ſhould not die, but remain in the body till the Lord Jeſus ſhould come to judgment: And this opinion afterwards prevailed with many of the Ancient Fathers; but they are not to be followed any farther, than they write conformable to Holy Writ, wherein John himſelf tells us, that no ſuch thing was meant by it, but thoſe words had another ſenſe.

Clemens Alexandrinus writes, That after Chriſt's aſcenſion, Jeſus communicated the knowledge of his doctrines only to James the Great, John the Evangeliſt and Peter, who inſtructed the reſt, as they did the ſeventy, in the ſame: As alſo he notes, that altho'

Peter, James, and John, were preferred in this manner by Chriſt before the reſt of the Apoſtles, they did not challenge any pre-eminence to themſelves, but choſe James the juſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

Some time after the Apoſtles had received the gifts of the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, we read that Peter and John went up together to the temple to pray, and healed the beggar who had been lame from his mother's womb, Acts iii. 1--10. Which miracle filled the people with admiration, and prepared their ſouls to believe in the power by which it was done; but ſo enraged the rulers, that they ſeized upon the Apoſtles and caſt them into priſon, tho' they were diſmiſſed the next day with a ſtrict prohibition, never more to preach in the name of Chriſt. To which they declared, that they were appointed witneſſes by God of what they had heard and ſeen, and muſt obey God rather than man. Then being diſmiſſed with more threats, they went to their brethren and declared what had befallen them, and not long after, notwithſtanding the menaces of the Jewiſh rulers, they were again apprehended for preaching the Goſpel, and had certainly been put to death, had not Gamaliel, a learned Doctor of the law, by his prudent and weighty counſel, prevented the execution of their bloody deſign; but now the rulers added to their former prohibition and threats ſevere ſcourgings, and let them go. Afterwards,

The Chriſtians which reſided at Jeruſalem, except the Apoſtles, being diſperſed upon the execution of Stephen, and upon the account of the perſecution which followed the murder of this Holy Martyr; Philip the Deacon went down to Samaria, and by his preaching, converted and baptized many in that city; but becauſe the baptiſm adminiſtred by Philip did not confer the gifts of the ſpirit upon them, Peter and John were appointed to go down to give them, as many as were worthy, the Spirit by laying on of their Apoſtolical hands. He went, performed their duty, and in their return to Jeruſalem, preached in many villages of the Samaritans. After which time it is not known, how long John remained at Jeruſalem, only this is certain, that when Paul, three years after his converſion, went up to Jeruſalem, he found no other Apoſtles there but Peter and James the Leſs, therefore John was gone, but when and whither we are not able to learn from either Sacred or other writers. However,

We find him again in the council held at Jeruſalem, occaſioned by the diſpute at Antioch, concerning the legal rites impoſed on the Chriſtians by ſome, as neceſſary to ſalvation. In which council he acted as a pillar of the Church with authority, but ſeems to have inclined to the Jewiſh ſide, Gal. ii. 9. ſubmitting to the obſervation of the law in condeſcenſion to the weakneſs of the Jews. And Irenæus ſays, that he, according to the Jewiſh cuſtom, not only celebrated Eaſter upon the 14th day of the moon, but by his example, made it ſo to be celebrated a long time in the Aſian Churches, as of Divine Inſtitution. Again,

After this council we read no more of him till the perſecution of the Chriſtians by the Emperor Domitian. For the account, ſays Ellis du Pin, a learned Doctor of the Sorbon, given by Prochorus of him, is fabulous. Nor can we yield to that opinion, which ſays, he preached to the Jews in Parthia and India, upon no other proof, than becauſe Auſtin cites his firſt Epiſtle under the name of an Epiſtle to the Parthians, which is no proof at all, being ſaid upon no authority.

John, who as the other Apoſtles, went up and down the world preaching the word of God, did, about the year 62, make a journey to Jeruſalem to chooſe a Biſhop for that Church in the place of James the Leſs, who had been martyred not long before; for, Euſebius ſays, That all the Apoſtles, then alive (and moſt of them were yet ſurviving) met at Jeruſalem for that end, and elected Simeon the ſon of Cleophas, our Lord's kinſman, with one conſent. And,

In the diviſion, which was either made by lot, or by the direction of the Holy Spirit, in what parts of the world the Apoſtles ſhould ſeverally publiſh the Goſpel, it is conjectured, that Aſia the leſs fell to the lot of John the Evangeliſt; and therefore we read of his reſidence at Epheſus, the chief city of that country. But obſerve, that they are much miſtaken who pretend to conclude from this his reſidence, that he was the Biſhop of that See; for, ſince it can't be denied, that the Apoſtolic authority was ſuperior to that of Biſhops, he did not tye himſelf to the Church of Epheſus in particular, cular, but took care of all the Aſian Churches. And we are aſſured, that his abode at Epheſus, did not deprive Timothy of his epiſcopal authority, which Paul had conferred on him before John came thither; for the charity and humility of thoſe two Holy Men, made up all differences upon the account of their juriſdictions. The Biſhops of Aſia acknowledge Timothy for the firſt Biſhop of Epheſus in the council of Chalcedon; and it is evident, that the angel of the Church of Epheſus reproved by John in the Book of his Revelations, ch. ii. v. 1--6. was not the author himſelf, but ſome other perſon, created ſometime after he was baniſhed from thence.

Jerome ſays, that John founded and governed all the Churches in Aſia; and Tertullian adds, that he placed Biſhops in all that country, which can't be true literally, ſince both Paul and Peter founded many Churches in that Province, and, without doubt, ſettled Biſhops in ſeveral of them, as it has been obſerved above concerning Timothy's ſettlement at Epheſus. Yet thus far we may allow Jerom's account, in that John did really found the greateſt part of thoſe Churches, and ſettled or confirmed the reſt; and perhaps by reaſon of his great age, might put new Biſhops into moſt, if not all of them; for ſo long as the Apoſtles lived, they choſe the Biſhops into the Churches they preſided over, by the guidance of the Spirit.

Apollonius, who defended the Church in the beginning of the third age, tells us, that John raiſed a man from the dead at Epheſus, and depoſed a Prieſt of Aſia for writing the fabulous voyages of the Apoſtle Paul and Thecla, altho' the Author propoſed thereby to propagate the good fame of that Apoſtle; but he was condemned for attempting to impoſe his own fabulous work upon the world, under the name of the ſaid Apoſtle Paul. Epiphanius affirms, that he was carried into Aſia by the ſpecial conduct of the Holy Spirit, to oppoſe the budding hereſies of the Ebionites and Cerinthians, who taught and maintained, That Jeſus Chriſt was a mere man, during his abode among us in the fleſh. And on this occaſion Irenæus relates a ſtory of him, upon the tradition of Polycarp, John's diſciple, That coming one day to bathe himſelf, (not that he was accuſtomed ſo to do, but) by the inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, he met with the arch-heretick Cerinthus in the bath, whom he no ſooner ſpied, but he got himſelf away in all haſte, ſaying, Let us flee, leſt the bath fall upon our heads, for the enemy of God and his truth is in it; a good example of an Apoſtle teaching us to avoid the ſociety, and much more the correſpondence and converſation of thoſe, who abuſe by their action, or corrupt the truth by their falſe and impious gloſſes, or obſtinate and blaſphemous cavillings. Now,

This is all that we know of the Evangeliſt John, either from Scripture, or the Ancient Fathers, till the ſecond perſecution of the Church, which, according to the uſual account began in the ninety-fifth year of Chriſt, and fifteenth year of Domitian; and ended the next year with the death of that prince. This perſecution was moſt famous on account of the ſufferings, and I may ſay, martyrdom of John; the courage by which he conquered all the power of his perſecutors, ſhews, that the eternal word, which he preached to others, did really abide in him. 'Tis ſaid, that the calumnies which were laid againſt him before Domitian, repreſenting him to be a diſturber of the peace of the empire, cauſed him to order the pro-conſul of Aſia to ſend him bound to Rome, where he treated him with all the cruelty, rage could ſuggeſt; for, he commanded him to be put into a caldron of ſcalding oil, in the preſence of all the ſenate. But the Lord Jeſus, who, in the fleſh, had favoured him above all the Apoſtles, ſo preſerved him in the midſt of this danger, that he received and felt no harm, but as if he had only been anointed, as the athlete or wreſtlers were accuſtomed to be, he came out more vigorous and active than before, giving him thus the honour of martyrdom with ſuffering the torments of it, or leaving him in the power of men to hurt, much leſs to take away his precious life. And in this manner was accompliſhed that Prophecy of our Lord concerning John, That he ſhould drink of the cup of his paſſion. And hence it is, that the Ancients give him the title of a martyr; for tho' martyrdom had no power over him, yet he yielded his body to all its torments, and was willing to die for Chriſt; and as the children caſt by Nebuchadnezzar into the burning fiery furnace, were martyrs in their intentions, tho' the fire conſumed not their bodies, ſo was John really a martyr in will, tho' not in actual ſuffering, God ſaving him by his power, beyond his hopes or deſires from his enemies malice.

Domitian, tho' he was thus diſappointed, conſidered not the miracle, but ſince he could not do what he would, reſolved to puniſh him in as ſevere a manner as he was able, which was by baniſhment into the Iſle of Pathmos, which is one of the Iſles of the Sphorade's in the Ægean ſea; it was to this diſmal place that tyrant, ſent John the Evangeliſt to be employed, as malefactors were, in the laborious digging of mines. In this diſconſolate place, God filled his mind full of ſpiritual comforts, and as if he had been tranſlated from the earth to Heaven, opened the cabinet of glory to him, giving him thoſe excellent Revelations by ſeveral viſions, which are continued to us in the book bearing that name.

Some of the Ancients nevertheleſs, obſerving the myſteriouſneſs and obſcurity of that Divine Book, have doubted whether it ought to be admitted into the canon of Scripture; becauſe they were uncertain whether it were really John's writing or no; but this being made plainly to appear without contradiction, ſcarce any body, ſince the fourth age, hath ſcrupled to receive it as canonical Scripture. Dionyſius of Alexandria, who objected againſt the obſcurity of it, and doubted whether it was written by John the Apoſtle, or by ſome other of that name, reſpected it nevertheleſs, as a book penned by Divine Inſpiration, becauſe of the value others had for it; ſee Euſebius l. vii. c. 25. He was perſwaded it was not leſs admirable, becauſe it was obſcure; for, ſaith he, tho' I do not underſtand the words, yet, I believe, that ſome great myſteries lie couched under them. I do not pretend to judge of the verities, or meaſure their depths by the ſhallowneſs of my underſtanding, but attributing more to faith than reaſon, believe them to be above my apprehenſion, and reverence them the more, becauſe I don't comprehend them. And Jerom ſpeaks of this book with the ſame reſpect, in his 103 Epiſtle.

John in the time of this baniſhment, as an ancient father, Victorinus obſerves, ſeeing himſelf condemned to great pains and intolerable labour in old age, not able to undergo any hardſhips, deſpaired of life and hoped to die; but God undeceived them, by revealing to him, that he muſt propheſy before many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings; by which his enlargement was foreſhewn, which happened ſoon after; for, Domitian being ſlain, the ſenate diſanulled all his acts, and John was brought back from Pathmos under the mild reign of his ſucceſſor Nerva, and was permitted to return to Epheſus, where he ſpent his old age amongſt his affectionate friends; but he found Timothy dead, and the Biſhops of his Province deſired John to take upon him the care of the Church, which he accepted, and governed till the reign of Trajan, being ninety years old when he took this charge upon him; yet, notwithſtanding his age, he went many journies into the neighbouring provinces to ordain Biſhops, and to ſettle and confirm Churches, as occaſion required. In this perambulation, he made Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna, who had been his diſciple. And thus we may affirm with ſome of the Fathers, that John the Evangeliſt governed all the Churches of Aſia.

It was at Epheſus in Aſia, after his return from Pathmos, that John wrote his Goſpel. Epiphanius ſays, he was above ninety years old when he writ it. It was compoſed at the deſire of ſeveral of his ſcholars, almoſt all the Biſhops of Aſia, and all the faithful of the neighbouring provinces, who unanimouſly joined in a petition to him to give an authentic teſtimony to the truth. His modeſty and a timerous reſpect to thoſe profound truths he was obliged to treat of in caſe he wrote, made him ſomething backward to undertake the task, but the importunity of the Churches of Aſia, who ſeverally ſent their deputies, with their petitions, and the ſecret inſtinct of the Holy Spirit, forced him to venture upon it. He did not begin it till after much faſting and publick prayers, and pronounced the firſt words of it at the end of a deep viſion and revelation. In it he declares, the Divine Nature of Jeſus Chriſt, as the other Evangeliſts do his humanity, ſhews him to be the Son of God, and confutes Corinthus, Ebion, the Nicolaitans, and others, inſtruments of Satan, who had preach'd it up and down the world, that Jeſus Chriſt was not God, as well as man. He alſo ſupplies the defects of the other Evangeliſts, who had but ſparingly related the actions of Chriſt's firſt year of preaching. It was indeed written the laſt of the Divine Books, yet is the chief parts of the Scripture, and ſeals the reſt of the Evangeliſts, and the pillar by which God ſupports his Church againſt the undermining hereſies of the ancient Cerinthians, Arrian, &c. and modern Socinians, and the like ſorts of men. It is famous in all the Churches of the world, for its Spirituality and Divinity; and 'tis no wonder that a Goſpel, compoſed by the inſtinct of the Spirit, ſhould be all Spiritual. The firſt words of his Goſpel have begotten a mighty admiration of him, even by the Heathens themſelves. A Platoniſt ſays, That that ſentence, In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God, is worthy to be written in letters of gold, and ſet up in the moſt eminent places of all Churches, and another Platoniſt, nam'd Amelius, who liv'd in the third age, cites this place, as an admirable piece of philoſophy, equal to Plato's moſt divine notions; and ſeveral other Philoſophers, who were moſt admirable for learning, have admired it, and inſerted it in their works.

The Goſpel of John hath been always received as a canon, by the Church, and thoſe who reject it treated as Hereticks, under the name of Alogi, i. e. enemies to the Word. It was written in Greek by John himſelf, and ſome ſay the original manuſcript was at Epheſus in the ſeventh age. It was tranſlated into Hebrew in the fourth age, and is kept by the Jews in their library at Tiberias. Dioniſius of Alexandria gives this commendation of its ſtyle; That it is written, according to the ſtricteſt rules of the Greek tongue, with elegance of words, reaſonings and conſtruction: It hath nothing barbarous or improper, flat or vulgar in it, ſo that God gave him not only the knowledge of the myſteries he relates, but an ability to expreſs them fully and fairly. To this is added great plainneſs and ſimplicity.

Beſides the books before-mention'd, written by John, he hath three Epiſtles which at this day bear his name. The firſt (which Dionyſius of Alexandria joins in the encomium of his Goſpel above-cited) hath always been received by the Church without any ſcruples or objections. Auſtin cites it by the name of the Epiſtle to the Parthians. It is very famous in the Church, and a very ſavory writing to all, that reliſh true godlineſs, becauſe it treats quite through of Chriſtian Charity. It is very like his Goſpel, both for matter and ſtyle.

As for the two other Epiſtles, which are very ſhort, ſome have doubted whether they are canonical, and others have attributed to another John; and this diſpute continued till the end of the fourth age. But ſince both fathers and councils have agreed to receive them as the writings of this Apoſtle, becauſe they breath out the ſame charity and zeal againſt ſin, as John's other writings. Euſebius imputes it to his great humility, that he ſet his name to none of his books. In his Second Epiſtle, which is written to a lady, which ſome think is nam'd Electa; he commends her and her childrens piety, encourageth them to charity, exhorts them to perſeverance in good works, and perſwades them to ſhew a great abhorrence of falſe teachers and deceivers, neither being hoſpitable to them nor ſaluting them. He is ſo ſhort in his inſtructions, becauſe he deſign'd to ſee her ſhortly.

The third and laſt is directed to Caius, which ſome think to be one of Paul's diſciples; which, if true, it is more likely to be Caius of Derbe than of Corinth. In it John commends his hoſpitality to the faithful, and exhorts him to exerciſe it cheerfully to thoſe who are employed in the Church's ſervice. He condemns the ambition of Diotrephes; and threatens, when he comes, to puniſh his abuſive tongue ſeverely. He commends alſo Demetrius for his virtue, for which he was honour'd of all men. Some object againſt this Epiſtle the relation of Diotrephes, affirming, that no man would dare to oppoſe and affront an Apoſtle. But this was ſo frequent with the falſe teachers in the Primitive Church, that the objection is of no worth; for did they not do ſo frequently to Paul and Peter?

John takes not upon him the title of Apoſtle in theſe two letters, becauſe they ſeem written to private friends, but he calls himſelf an elder, from his great age, which perhaps was the title he gave himſelf. Jerom ſpeaks of John and the reſt of the canonical Epiſtles, that they are long and ſhort; ſhort in words, long in ſenſe and myſteries, which are ſo many and great, that few perſons but are dazzl'd by the view and contemplation of them.

John, by the Divine Permiſſion, liv'd to a very old age, it being not appointed that he ſhould ſuffer martyrdom, as Peter and James did, but to live long for the confirmation of the Goſpel. By reaſon of the length of his life he was brought to that weakneſs that he could not go to the Church or Chriſtian Aſſemblies, unleſs carried by his ſcholars; and not being able to make long diſcourſes, he only ſaid to the people, My dear children, love one another. They were weary of it at laſt, and telling him of it, he return'd this anſwer, worthy of the beloved diſciple: This is what our Lord hath commanded, and if we can do this we need do nothing elſe. He lived at Epheſus at this time, and remain'd there till the reign of Trajan, who ſucceeded Nerva in 98. Euſebius in his Chronicon ſays, He died in the third year of Trajan's reign, 68 years after Chriſt's death, in the 98th or 99th year of his age. He was buried at Epheſus in the city, where ſeveral fathers obſerve, that his tomb was then remaining in the Church, built to his honour and called by his name, but now chang'd into a Turkiſh moſque. Auſtin tells us, that a kind of duſt, like meal, continually iſſued out of his tomb, and when wiped away roſe again; which Gregory Biſhop of Tours affirms to have continued to his time, and that many miracles were done by it, curing diſeaſes by the application of it. Some ſay, that John, being in perfect health, cauſed his own ſepulchre to be made, and after it was dug and fitted, he went into it and died immediately. Others affirm that he went into it, and there fell on ſleep, never to wake again till the reſurrection; wherefore they cloſed up his tomb, and by his breathing it ſends out duſt. Auſtin ſays, this fable is not worthy of confutation, ſince Jeſus Chriſt in thus doing would then have deprived him of the favour that he granted Paul and Peter, to leave their bodies and be with him. For which reaſon it is that ſome hold, that God immediately raiſed him from his tomb, and tranſlated him to Heaven; where he is reſerved to come and bear witneſs for the truth, againſt antichriſt in the laſt time. Which opinion, though ſeveral of the Ancient Fathers embrac'd, yet not only Auſtin, but Polycrates, who was Biſhop of Epheſus about the year 160 or 180, and could not be ignorant of the death of John, put him in the number of thoſe Saints, who being dead, and their bodies remaining in the ſepulchre, waited for the reſurrection of the laſt day; which reaſon makes us reject the laſt opinion. The Latin Church and Church of England keeps this feſtival on December 27, according to the judgment of Jerom, Bede, in their martyrology, and the Roman Calendar. The Greek Churches keep it on the laſt day of June.

The Greeks ordinarily gives John the name of Divine, in imitation of ſeveral Fathers, and the council of Epheſus, which they took from the firſt words of his Goſpel. Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus, ſays, he wore a plate of gold upon his forehead, as a Prieſt of Jeſus Chriſt. This was a badge of honour which the firſt Biſhop of the Church wore, in imitation of the high-prieſts among the Jews.

Epiphanius aſſerts, that he obſerv'd, through his whole life a very ſtrict way of living, and worthy of him; that he never cut his hair, nor bath'd himſelf, nor eat any fleſh of any creature, and wore but one coat and a linnen garment, like his brother James.

The age of the Apoſtles concluded with the death of John. He left ſeveral ſcholars, the chief of which were Ignatius, Polycarp, and Papias Biſhop of Hierapolis. He is ſaid to have appeared to Gregory Biſhop of Neocæſarea, when he was young, and gave him a Creed, which is cited in the fifth general council.

The Ebionites of old attributed ſeveral writings to this Apoſtle, which they forged, viz. a book of his Voyages, which the Encratites made uſe of afterwards under the name of John's Acts: Which is thought to be compoſed by Lucius, the ordinary author of theſe falſe and impious books. Some cite under his name an Apocryphal Book, concerning the death and aſſumption of the virgin, but no man believes it to be his. Senenſis and Baronius produce a ſaying of Auſtin's, in his ſermons, wherein he affirms that John wrote nothing about the death of the Virgin Mary; but this ſermon is critically reſolved to be the compoſition of one Tulbertus Carnatenſis, by the Doctors of Louvain.

Gelaſius condemns in general all the writings attributed to John the Evangeliſt by Lucius, who wrote ſeveral acts under the names, and concerning the Apoſtles, and among others the acts of our Evangeliſt, which were received and eſteemed by the Manichees. And we find an hiſtory of John attributed to Melitus Biſhop of Laodicea, who admoniſhed all the Churches to reject the falſe accounts of that Apoſtle, ſpread among them by Lucius, the author of the Acts of John, Andrew and Thomas; but neither does this hiſtory by Melitus deſerve to be credited; no more does that written by Prochorus. Baronius affirms, that Cerinthus the arch-heretick, publiſhed falſe Revelations under the name of this Apoſtle; but he gives us no grounds for that aſſertion. And the Aſiatick Greeks have a liturgy which they call this Apoſtles; but it can't be proved, that he was any ways concerned in, or knew any thing of its compoſure. Nevertheleſs, we are certain that this Goſpel, which bears his name, is the work of the beloved diſciple John, as the great and learned Biſhop Huetius has proved beyond contradiction in his Demonſtatio Evangelica, (in prop. 1.) Where he ſays:

John the Apoſtle ſet about writing the Goſpel in his old age, and at the concluſion thereof, he plainly confeſſes himſelf to be the author of it; tho' without any probability it has been ſaid, that this particular was afterwards added to the Goſpel by one John, a Biſhop of Epheſus, after the death of the Evangeliſt, in the name of the Church of Epheſus. I ſuppoſe, becauſe ſome pious ſouls thought ſuch clear ideas of the Author's death could not be aſcribed to himſelf, without reſcuing the credit of the whole work. But this can bare no pretence of quarrel, for the Spirit that inſpired him with the Goſpel of truth, could alſo inform him of his own death. Others object againſt the genuineneſs of the concluſion of this Goſpel, becauſe the Author ſpeaks in the plural number, ſaying, And we know that his teſtimony is true; John xxi. 24. And therefore ſome infer, John can't be ſuppoſed to be the ſole Author, becauſe he ſpeaks of more than one concerned in that declaration. But this is mere cavilling, for nothing is more common than for Authors to ſpeak of themſelves in the plural. Thus Chriſt himſelf, ſays this ſame John, ſpeaking to Nicodemus, ſays, Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, we ſpeak that we do know. Beſides, it ſhould be obſerved in this particular text, on which the objection is founded, that the phraſe, we do know, does not only regard John the Author, but all the other diſciples, who were, together with him, witneſſes of thoſe things he had been relating; as if he had ſaid, "I myſelf, and the reſt of the diſciples, know thoſe things to be true, which I have teſtified of Chriſt." As for theſe paſſages wherein he endeavours to conceal himſelf, and only ſays, We ſpeak that we do know, and teſtify that we have ſeen; and This is the diſciple who bears witneſs of theſe things, and has written theſe things; are only farther proofs of his modeſty, who ſaid of himſelf at another time, when he had room to extol himſelf, only, There was leaning on Jeſus's boſom one of his diſciples whom Jeſus loved, John xiii. 23. But without multiplying words, he expreſly takes to himſelf the honour of this Evangelical compoſition, in the very laſt words of the Goſpel, ſaying, "There are alſo many other things, which Jeſus did, the which, if they ſhould be written every one, I ſuppoſe, that even the world itſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written," John xxi. 25. where the Author ſpeaks of himſelf in the ſingular number, which could not be done, if it had been the addition of ſome perſon in the name of the Church at Epheſus. Beſides, Juſtin Martyr, who lived in the next age to John the Evangeliſt, has proved himſelf a faithful and unexceptionable witneſs of the veracity of this Goſpel, from whence he has taken many paſſages; and in this he is ſoon after followed by Irenæus. Clemens Alexandrinus relates alſo, that he received by tradition, That John, the laſt of all the Evangeliſts, wrote the Goſpel of Chriſt's actions. But what is more remarkable, the ancient Heathen Philoſopher Amelius, a diſciple of Plato, deſcribing the origin of things, quotes the firſt words of this Goſpel, under the fictitious name of one Barbarus, or Barbarian.

As for his Epiſtles and book of Revelations, I ſhall prove their genuineneſs in their proper places. So that I ſhall only add in this place, That

This Goſpel conſiſts of four principal Parts, viz.

I. A deſcription of Chriſt, contained in the thirty ſeven former verſes of the firſt chapter.

II. A narration of the execution of his offices in his doctrine and miracles, related from the thirty-eighth verſe of the firſt chapter, to the end of the ſeventeenth.

III. The hiſtory of his ſufferings and death, contained in the eighteenth and nineteenth chapters.

IV. The hiſtory of his reſurrection, with the confirmation of it. As you will find it in the twentieth and twenty-firſt chapters.

CHAP. I.

1 The divinity, humanity, and office of Jeſus Chriſt. 15 The teſtimony of John. 39 The calling of Andrew, Peter, &c.

IN the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The ſame was in the beginning with God.

3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

4 In him was life, and the life was the light of men.

5 And the light ſhineth in darkneſs, and the darkneſs comprehended it not.

6 ¶ There was a man ſent from God, whoſe name was John.

7 The ſame came for a witneſs, to bear witneſs of the light, that all men through him might believe.

8 He was not that light, but was ſent to bear witneſs of that light.

9 That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

10 He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

11 He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

12 But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name:

13 Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

14 And the Word was made fleſh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth.

15 ¶ John bare witneſs of him and cried, ſaying, This was he of whom I ſpake, He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me.

16 And of his fulneſs have all we received and grace for grace.

17 For the law was given by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt.

18 No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him.

19 ¶ And this is the record of John, when the Jews ſent prieſts and Levites from Jeruſalem to aſk him, Who art thou?

20 And he confeſſed, and denied not; but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt.

21 And they aſked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he ſaith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he anſwered, No.

22 Then ſaid they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an anſwer to them that ſent us: what ſayeſt thou of thy ſelf?

23 He ſaid, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Make ſtraight the way of the Lord, as ſaid the prophet Eſaias.

24 And they which were ſent, were of the Phariſees.

25 And they aſked him, and ſaid unto him, Why baptizeſt thou then, if thou be not that Chriſt, nor Elias, neither that prophet?

26 John anſwered them, ſaying, I baptize with water: but there ſtandeth one among you, whom ye know not;

27 He it is, who coming after me, is preferred before me, whoſe ſhoes latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe.

28 Theſe things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

29 ¶ The next day John ſeeth Jeſus coming unto him, and ſaith, Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſin of the world.

30 This is he of whom I ſaid, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

31 And I knew him not: but that he ſhould be made manifeſt to Iſrael, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32 And John bare record, ſaying, I ſaw the Spirit deſcending from heaven, like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33 And I knew him not: but he that ſent me to baptize with water, the ſame ſaid unto me, Upon whom ſhalt thou ſee the Spirit deſcending and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizeth with the holy Ghoſt.

34 And I ſaw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

35 ¶ Again the next day after, John ſtood and two of his diſciples:

36 And looking upon Jeſus as he walked, he ſaith, Behold the Lamb of God.

37 And the two diſciples heard him ſpeak, and they followed Jeſus.

38 Then Jeſus turned, and ſaw them following, and ſaith unto them, What ſeek ye? They ſaid unto him, Rabbi, (which is to ſay, being interpreted, Maſter) where dwelleſt thou?

39 He ſaith unto them, Come and ſee. They came and ſaw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about the tenth hour.

40 One of the two which heard John ſpeak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peters brother.

41 He firſt findeth his own brother Simon, and ſaith unto him, We have found the Meſſias, which is, being interpreted, the Chriſt.

42 And he brought him to Jeſus. And when Jeſus beheld him, He ſaid, Thou art Simon the ſon of Jona: thou ſhalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation a ſtone.

43 ¶ The day following, Jeſus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and ſaith unto him, Follow me.

44 Now Philip was of Bethſaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

45 Philip findeth Nathanael, and ſaith unto him, We have found him of whom Moſes in the law and the prophets did write, Jeſus of Nazareth the ſon of Joſeph.

46 And Nathanael ſaid unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip ſaith unto him, Come and ſee.

47 Jeſus ſaw Nathanael coming to him, and ſaith of him, Behold an Iſraelite indeed, in whom is no guile.

48 Nathanael ſaith unto him, Whence knoweſt thou me? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou waſt under the fig-tree, I ſaw thee.

49 Nathanael anſwered and ſaith unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael.

50 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Becauſe I ſaid unto thee, I ſaw thee under the fig-tree, believeſt thou? thou ſhalt ſee greater things than theſe.

51 And he ſaith unto him, Verily verily I ſay unto you, Hereafter you ſhall ſee heaven open, and the angels of God aſcending and deſcending upon the Son of man.

Ver. 1. In the beginning.] i. e. Before the creation of the world, when there were neither temporal things, nor time, and when there was no other Being with God but his Eternal Son, who is here deſcribed by the word.

—— The Word.] A term which the Evangeliſt John makes uſe of to ſignify the Son of God, either in regard of his Being; for being one in eſſence with his Father, and diſtinct from him in his perſon, in this manner he doth outwardly repreſent him perfectly, as the word expreſſeth the thoughts and conceptions of the Soul. Or, be it in regard of his perſonal property of operating, as it were by the way of a word laying open the whole council of God, Pſ. ii. 7. and putting it into execution by his Almighty Word; that is to ſay, by the power of his Will, ſet forth outwardly. And that as well in the creation of the world, as in the law, and under the Goſpel; whereas the Father operates by way of hidden council, far from the work; and the Holy Ghoſt by way of internal vertue, reſiding in the work. Or, be it in regard of his office, being his Father's interpreter and meſſenger by the Goſpel of grace; John i. 18. Heb. i. 1. But whatſoever it be, it appears that the Evangeliſt John hath borrowed this name from the cuſtom of the Hebrews, who by the word of God, did mean God manifeſting himſelf by ſome notable operation and coming, as it were out of the places where his Glory lay hidden.

—— Was with God.] Whereby is noted the diſtinction of the ſons perſon, from the perſon of the Father.

— Was God.] i. e. Equal with God the Father both in eſſence and in glory; ſee Philip. ii. 6. wherein you have a diſtinct aſſertion of the unity of the Divine Eſſence.

That the Word is here properly ſtiled God, is evident from the context: For, when it is ſaid in the preceding words, The word was with God, and when this is repeated in the following verſe, the very Socinians own that the word God, ſignifies him who truly and properly is ſo. The Apoſtle then muſt either underſtand the ſame God as to eſſence, when he ſaith, the word was God, or leave all Chriſtians liable to a great and dangerous miſtake, by reaſon of the ambiguity of his expreſſion and words. Beſides the word God in this chapter is uſed eleven times in its proper ſenſe, nor can one inſtance be produced from the whole New Teſtament, where, in the ſingular number, it is uſed in any other ſenſe; is it then reaſonable to conceive, that it is here uſed, as ſome pretend, in that improper ſenſe, in which it can't be once more found in the often repetition thereof in this Goſpel, and the whole New Teſtament, rather than in that ſenſe, in which it is continually uſed in all other places? But this argument does not ſatisfy the Socinians, who reply;

It is very reaſonable to take the word God here, in the improper ſenſe, becauſe it is here ſaid, the ſame was in the beginning with God; whereas God properly taken, cannot be ſaid to be with God, i. e. with himſelf. To which,

It is anſwered, That nothing formally and in the ſame conception, can be ſaid to be with that which is one with itſelf; but yet that which is eſſentially the ſame; yet hath this title from an internal relation to another, as being God of God, or as having the Divine Eſſence communicated to it, may be ſaid to be with him: For the wiſdom of God is identically the ſame God, according to the old axiom, Quicquid eſt in Deo eſt ipſe Deus, Whatſoever is in God is God, and yet παρὰ αὐτῷ with him are wiſdom and power; Job xii. 13. I was with him ſays wiſdom; Prov. viii. 27——30. and all wiſdom is from the Lord and with him; Eccluſ. i. 1. Thus Philo the Jew, according to Euſebius, obſerves, that when God ſaith, he made man after the image of God; Gen. i. 27. ſpeaking as of another God, he ſpeaketh of, and πρὸς τὸν δεύτερον θεὸν ὅς ἐστιν ἐκείνου λόγος, i. e. To that ſecond God, who is his word. Again,

The Primitive Fathers do very plainly and frequently ſay, that the word was ſtrictly, and from all eternity in God the Father, and yet that before the creation of the world, there was a probole kai aporroia, i. e. a projection or efflux of this word from the Father, which made him, Logos prophorikos kai proelthon, i. e. a word emitted, or coming forth from the Father: But yet, as he did not ſo come forth as to be ſeparated from him, but was ſemper apud Deum et nunquam ſeperatus a patre, not ſeparated from the Father, they thought it was here ſaid againſt the Valentinians, that he was with the Father; ſee Dr. Bull, ſect. 1, 2.

Our argument alſo is ſupported by the third verſe; whence ariſeth this argument, That he who made all things is God in the proper acceptation of the word, Heb. ii. 4. for, by the Word here ſpoken of, " were all things made, and without him was not any thing made that was made; he in the beginning laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the works of his hands, Heb. i. 10, 11. he created all things viſible and inviſible;" Col. i. 16. he therefore muſt be God in the proper acceptation of the word. Moreover,

It is very plain and intelligible to an unbiaſſed reader, That the Apoſtle here deſigns to tell us what the Word was, and where, before he came into the world; and what, and where he was when he came into the world, as may appear from comparing his words in the context together thus:

In the beginning was the word, ver. 1.
The word was with God, ver. 1, 2.
The Word was God, ver. 1.
He was in the world, ver. 10.
He came to his own, ver. 11.
He dwelt with us, ver. 14.
The Word was made fleſh, ver. 14.

To what has been ſaid I ſhall add, that our orthodox interpretation of the word Logos, which maketh the Word truly God, and a firſt principle of the creation, agrees perfectly with what the Jews and ancient Philoſophers underſtood by that term. For,

Amongſt the Jews nothing was more common to Philo than to ſtile the Logos, God. The Targumiſts often ſtile him God; ſo Jacob is repreſented by the Chaldee Onkelos to ſay, The Word of Jehovah ſhall be my God; Gen. xxviii. 21. And again, in Levit. xxvi. 12. The ſaid Paraphraſt writes, My Word ſhall be to you for God the Redeemer. So as nothing was more frequent with Onkelos and all the Targumiſts, than to put the word of Jehovah, for Jehovah or the living God; for Dr. Allix in his judgment of the Jewiſh Church, ch. xii. gives above an hundred inſtances of this aſſertion, it is evident that the Evangeliſt here uſed the language of his nation, when he ſaid, The Word was God.

As for the concurrence of the ancient Philoſophers; Porphyry ſaith, that Plato extended the Divine Eſſence into three hypoſtaſes, viz. the Supreme God, called Optimus: And after him a ſecond God, the maker of all things. Plato himſelf bids us ſware " by God who is the governor of all things, and by the Father of him who is the Ruler, and the Cauſe:" Plato's Epiſt. vi. Zeno the Stoick ſaith, there are two principles of all things, Matter, which is the patient, and God the Word, who is the efficient, which being eternal goes through all matter, forming every thing.

In a word, not only the orthodox, but all the hereticks did anciently agree, That the Word was God, and was before all ages, and that the world was made by it; ſo Sardius in his Enucl. hiſt. l. 1. And as for the orthodox, there is ſcarce a remarkable writer, except Arnobius, who doth not inſiſt upon this text as a plain proof of the Divinity of Chriſt. Now from the premiſes, it is eaſy to interpret what follows in Ver. 2. The ſame was in the beginning with God.] i. e. That Divine Perſon, of whom I am, or intend, to ſpeak, neither began to be when he was born into the world, nor when the world and all things in it were made, for he then was, and ſo was not a creature, but was God of the ſame nature with him, though as to perſonality diſtinguiſhed from the Father.

Ver. 3. All things were made, &c.] i. e. By the Word, who was the maker of the world and all things in it; for the Father only commanded, and every thing was created by his Word. See Patrick upon the firſt chapter of Geneſis, and Ainſworth on the ſame. See alſo Calmet, Whitby, and the learned Maldonate on this text: And Col. i. 16.

Ver. 4. In him was life.] i. e. Eternal life, which was revealed by him to the world; To which he taught the way; 2 Tim. i. 10. Which he promiſed to believers; ch. x. 28. Which he purchaſed for them; ch. vi. 51, &c. Which he is appointed to give to them; ch. xvii. 2. And to which he will raiſe them up; ch. v. 29. As having life in himſelf, ver. 26. may be argued both from the like expreſſion, This is the promiſe that God hath given us eternal life, and that life is in his Son; 1 John v. 11. Whence he is ſtiled the true God and eternal life; ver. 20. the reſurrection and the life; ch. xi. 25. The way, the truth and the life; ch. xiv. 6. And from theſe words, at ver. 7. John came to bear witneſs of this light, that all men might believe on him, viz. to eternal life; 1 Tim. i. 16. for ſo John witneſſeth in ch. iii. 15——36. And this, ſays Dr. Whitby, anſwers the only objection againſt this interpretation, that the Evangeliſt ſpeaks not of the word incarnate, till ver. 14. and that, in that reſpect alone was he the teacher of eternal life, for John bare witneſs of him when he was the word incarnate; it was thus alſo he came into the world, and came to his own, and made believers the Sons of God; ver. 11, 12, 13. And yet all theſe things are ſpoken of him before it is ſaid, the Word was made fleſh; ver. 14. And hence

It follows, that this Life muſt be the light of men, by giving them the knowledge of this Life, and of the way leading thereto, and in which they that walk are ſaid to walk in the light; 1 John i. 7. to abide in the light; ii. 10. and to be the children of the light, according to the Apoſtle below, in ch. xii. 35, 36. compared with ch. viii. 12——ix. 5.——xii. 46. And then the words following, the light ſhineth in darkneſs, muſt reſpect the Heathen world, which is ſtiled darkneſs by the Apoſtle to the Epheſians, v. 8. See the note on Luke ii. 32. And it alſo reſpects the blind Jews; and the darkneſs muſt be ſaid not to comprehend it; becauſe the vicious part of the world would not own, but hated the light, and loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil, and ſo they were reproved by it; ch. iii. 19, 20, 21.

Ver. 6.—Whoſe name was John.] The Baptiſt.

Ver. 7. The ſame.] John the Baptiſt.

— To bear witneſs of the light, that all men through him might believe.] You ſee the deſign of John's Miſſion was not to a few people, or to a nation choſen of God, but he was ſent to prepare the hearts of all men to receive and believe in Chriſt.

Ver. 10. And the world was made by him.] i. e. The heavens and the earth and all things contained in them; therefore he was exiſting before any thing was made, conſequently before time, and is therefore eternal.

— And the world.] The men of the world own'd him not, either as their Maker or their Redeemer.

Ver. 11.— His own.] So he called the Jewiſh nation, to whom he was promiſed, and to whom only he was perſonally ſent; he being therefore ſtiled, a miniſter of the circumciſion for the truth of God, to confirm the promiſes made to the fathers, Rom. xv. 8. from whom according to the fleſh he came, Rom. ix. 5. and they received him not, or they generally would not own him for their Meſſiah, and their Saviour.

Ver. 12.— Power to become the ſons of God.] This privilege is well noted by Grotius to ſignify a right to the inheritance of the Saints; for, if children ſaith the Apoſtle, then are we heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17. a right to a bleſſed reſurrection, the Sons of God, being the ſons of the reſurrection, Luke xx. 36. a right to abide always in our father's houſe, John viii. 35. a right to a ſtate of immortality and incorruption, this ſonſhip including the redemption of the body from corruption, Rom. viii. 23.

Ver. 13. Who were born not of blood.] Here the Evangeliſt ſhews how we Chriſtians may be properly called the children of God; for ſays he, we are born, or become heirs to the heavenly inheritance, (ſee the preceding note.)

—— Not of blood.] Or, not by the rite of circumciſion, by which the Jews entered into covenant with God; for this rite was always attended with blood.

— Nor of the will of the fleſh.] Or, by carnal deſcent from their parents.

— Nor of the will of man.] i. e. Not by the adoption of man, who through defect of natural iſſue, adopts another for his ſon and heir.

— But of God.] i. e. Of the will of God, receiving us for his children through faith in Chriſt Jeſus; for we are all the ſons of God by that faith, Gal. iii. 26. and by his ſpirit ſanctifying us; for as many as are led by the ſpirit of God, they are the ſons of God, Rom. viii. 14.

Ver. 14 And the Word was made fleſh.] And the word of Jehovah, which is God, was made man, for ſo the word fleſh muſt be underſtood according to the uſual import of that phraſe, as may be ſeen by comparing this paſſage with Gen. vi. 12. Pſ. lvi. 5, 12. Iſa. lx. 5, 6. Jer. xvii. 5. Matt. xxiv. 22 Rom. iii. 20. And ſay the fathers, this phraſe is rather uſed in this place, to ſhew that Chriſt came to heal and recover from corruption that fleſh which, by the ſin of Adam, was made obnoxious to death and corruption, and that this fleſh which was ſo inſeparably united to the Divine Nature, muſt be capable of ſalvation, which was denied by ſeveral ancient hereticks.

— His glory] His miraculous power of doing ſuch works as none but himſelf could do.

— Full of grace.] Becauſe he was ſent to procure that pardon of ſin and juſtification, which the law could not give.

— And truth.] In oppoſition to thoſe types and ſhadows of ſpiritual bleſſings and good things to come, of which Chriſt exhibited the ſubſtance or the truth, Heb. x. 1, &c.

Ver. 16. — Grace for grace.] i. e. We have received of the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt to procure pardon for us, and of that fulneſs of the ſpirit which was in him without meaſure, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt.

Ver. 18. No man hath ſeen God at any time.] This is to be underſtood of his eſſence, or of that glorious light, in which he dwells; and to which no mortal eye can approach, 1 Tim. vi. 16.

— In the boſom of the Father.] i. e. In that ineffable place of glory.

Ver. 20. — But confeſſed.] This is a common and uſual repetition in the Hebrew, whereby is ſignified a free acknowledgment, without any equivocation or doubting; as you may read alſo in Acts xiii. 25.

Ver. 21. — Art thou Elias? &c.] The prieſts and Levites who had the care, and made the law their particular ſtudy, that they might be able to expound it to the people, knowing that the time was come, when the Meſſiah ſhould be revealed to the world according to the Prophecies of Gen. xlix. 10. and Daniel ix. 25, 26. though they could not releaſe themſelves from that ſtrong prejudice of education, which grew upon their nation, brought into ſubjection to the Romans, and prompted them to believe in, nor think upon any other Meſſiah than a temporal Prince, who might beat down all their enemies with the ſtrength of his might, and exalt the Jewiſh nation to the greateſt pitch of riches, honour and dominion, they neneverthleſs could not overlook the accompliſhment of the time, nor accuſe God in their hearts of falſifying his word in, nor fulfilling his promiſe to ſend the Meſſiah; and obſerving the ſtrict ſanctity of John the Baptiſt's life, and being obliged by the people to go and ask him this queſtion, Who art thou? ver. 19. But as they had a tradition, that Elias muſt firſt come in his own perſon, they ſaid to him, Art thou Elias? See Matt. xvii. 10. and when he anſwered them, no; they then poſitively asked him if he was not that Prophet, the Meſſiah, promiſed to their nation in Deut. xviii. 15. and he anſwered, no.

I know that ſome commentators have underſtood this laſt queſtion that the Jewiſh meſſengers did not ask him, whether he were the Meſſiah; ſee Diodati on this text, becauſe it is ſaid by John in the former verſe, I am not the Chriſt; therefore it is inferred they did not ask him after that poſitive declaration, ask him any more concerning that queſtion, whether he were the Chriſt? But how much ſoever appearance of reaſon this argument may carry at firſt ſight, it is quite empty, and miſtaken. For, did we only regard the gradation of their interrogatories, from the Prophet they generally expected ſhould precede the Advent of the Meſſiah, to that Prophet whom Moſes had commanded them to hear and worſhip, it would convince any reaſonable man that we are by that Prophet to underſtand the Meſſiah. But again let it be obſerved, that when it is ſaid that the Baptiſt denied he was Chriſt; the Prieſts and Levites are not yet introduced putting the queſtion, ſo that the twentieth verſe is a general anſwer to the general queſtion, Who art thou? in the preceding 19th verſe, anticipating the particular queſtions and anſwers in the 21ſt verſe, which are not different, but explicative of the nineteenth and twentieth verſes, in this manner:

The Jews ſent prieſts and Levites from Jeruſalem to ask John the Baptiſt, Who art thou. And they, the prieſts and Levites asked him, according to the purport of their meſſage, Art thou Elias? John anſwered, no. What then? Art thou that Prophet? and he anſwered, no. So he confeſſed, and denied not; but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt. Then ſaid they unto him, Who art thou then? This I take to be the import and true interpretation of this context.

Ver. 24. — Were of the Phariſees.] See the notes on Matt. ii. 7.

Ver. 26. — I baptize with water, &c.] See Matt. iii. 11.

Ver. 29. — Behold the Lamb of God] Whom God had appointed to make an expiation for ſin, and to take away the bond, and kingdom and puniſhment of it; by offering his own perſon in a ſacrifice acceptable to God: Prefigured by the daily ſacrificing of lambs under the law, the ſignification of all which, John here intimateth was to be accompliſhed in him. Tho' ſome interpreters draw their ſimilitude from the Paſchal Lamb.

Ver. 31. And I knew him not.] Not by ſight, before God had revealed him to me, when Chriſt came to my baptiſm, and did afterwards confirm it to me by the appearance of a dove, Matt. iii. 6. And this he ſaid to take away all ſuſpicion of contrivance between him and Chriſt; as if he had ſaid, there is no colluſion between us, ſeeing that I did not know him but only by Divine Revelation, which was given me, becauſe that I ſhould ſerve to make him known.

Ver. 32. — Bare record.] i. e. After the ſecond manifeſtation of Chriſt by the token of the dove.

Ver. 33. — With the holy Ghoſt.] By which baptiſm, receiveth its power to fulfil that which is repreſented by it.

Ver. 34. — Is the Son.] Such as the Prophets had declared ſhould be the Meſſiah; ſee Pſalm ii. 7, 12. Iſaiah ix. 5.

Ver. 36. — Lamb of God.] Here the alluſion is made to the Paſchal Lamb, and not to the ſacrifices as above, at ver. 29. becauſe the Paſchal Lamb ſavoured more of a ſacrament, in application of the expiation made them of an offering in making of it.

Ver. 42. — Cephas.] i. e. A ſtone, in Syriack; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 18.

Ver. 44. — Bethſaida.] A city ſituate upon the lake of Genneſaret in Galilee.

Ver. 45. Jeſus of Nazareth.] Or, Jeſus the Nazarene; for, this anſwers to that notable paſſage in the Evangeliſt Matthew, with which he cloſeth his ſecond chapter, and was omitted by me in the annotations, to be more elaborately enquired after in this place. Matthew in his Goſpel, ſpeaks of this name of Jeſus, as of a Prophecy, that he ſhould be called a Nazarene, and John here ſpeaks of it, as a thing commonly expected; that Jeſus, or their Meſſiah, the Saviour, was to be of Nazareth. But let it be firſt obſerved, that there were two ways of interpreting this of old.

Firſt, Tertullian, Adv. Marcion. l. 4. and Euſebius, Demonſtr. Evang. l. 7. c. 1. and ſome other Ancient Fathers, thought it was an alluſion to the Nazarites, a religious and ſeparate rank of perſons among the Jews, ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament. And more particularly, Jerom on the place tells us, that a Nazarene here, is to be interpreted a holy perſon; and that it is mentioned throughout all the writings of the Old Teſtament, that the Meſſias, our Lord Chriſt, was to be ſuch, and conſequently, that it might well and truly be ſaid, that the Prophets foretold concerning him, that he ſhould be called a Nazarene, i. e. a Holy Nazarite.

The ſecond way of interpreting theſe words among the Ancients was this, that they have reference to thoſe places where Chriſt is called Netzer, a Branch, as in Iſa. xi. 1, and 60, 21. Yea, Jerom himſelf, in Matt. ii. 23. who ſeemed to have fixed on the former way of interpretation, is inclined to think, that this Prophecy was taken out of the firſt verſe of the eleventh chapter of Iſaiah, and ſuch like places, that ſpeak of the Branch. Theſe were the two opinions of old, concerning this text, and they have been taken up by modern expoſitors both of the Church of Rome, and of the Reformed Perſwaſion. Among theſe latter are Grotius and Hammond, (to name no more,) the firſt whereof merits that title which the Greeks gave Alexander Aphrodiſæus, the ancienteſt commentator on Ariſtotle, viz. ὁ Ἐξηγητὴς, the interpreter, by way of eminency. For certainly, no man hath excelled him in giving the literal ſenſe and interpretation of Scripture. For this he is incomparable; and ſpeaks more good ſenſe in one line, than ſome others in a dozen long periods. The ſecond of theſe modern expoſitors is our countryman, one of the greateſt divines and criticks of this laſt age; a perſon of equal learning and piety, and therefore worthy to be (what he moſt eminently was) a ſon, or rather one of the fathers of the Church of England. The former of theſe excellent writers refers Ναζωραῖος, to the word Nazar ſeperavit, (he ſeparated,) whence the Nazarites are ſtiled, and ſo Chriſt, ſaith he, was foretold in the Old Teſtament to be an abſtinent mortified perſon, a true Nazarite. The ſecond refers the word Nazarene, to that ſacred and venerable title of Netzer, i. e. the Branch, often applied to the Meſſias, and thinks that our Evangeliſt ſpeaks of this here.

But I cannot ſubſcribe to either of theſe excellent perſons, in what they offer concerning the meaning of this word Nazarene. It is my perſwaſion, that neither of theſe references were intended by the Evangeliſt, and my reaſon is this, becauſe they are nothing at all to the purpoſe. Mark how the words are brought in, He came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophets, He ſhall be called a Nazarene. Is it not plain to any common underſtanding, that Nazarene refers to Nazareth, and that Chriſt ſhould be called the former, becauſe he dwelt in the latter? Certainly, there can be nothing more evident than this; and therefore it is impertinent here to talk of his being Netzer the Branch ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament, or of his being a Nazarite, which is no where ſaid of him. Or, if he were a Nazarite in any ſenſe (as Nazar may ſignify a holy ſeparate perſon, as our learned Lightfoot, and before him Beza and Heinſius, have obſerved on this place) yet this is nothing to the purpoſe, becauſe that word hath no reference at all to the city Nazareth, which is here ſpoken of. I have, therefore, ſometimes wondred, that very learned men have contented themſelves with theſe impertinent notions, and that they could prevail with themſelves to think, that either of theſe were the true meaning of the place. Can any man reconcile this to ſenſe, that the places in the Old Teſtament which foretel of Chriſt as the Branch, or as a Nazarite, (if there were any ſuch thing) were fulfilled in his dwelling in a town call'd Nazareth? Can any man of an accuracy of reaſon, ſee the accompliſhment of the one in the other, or find any affinity between theſe? But now if we take a Nazarene, for one of the city of Nazareth, or one that dwelt at Nazareth, the words are plain and eaſily underſtood, and any one may ſee the fulfilling of the Prophecy here ſpoken of. This then is that which I offer as my ſentiment concerning this controverted text, viz. that neither Chriſt being called Netzar, nor his being in any ſenſe a Nazarite, are ſo much as to be thought of in the 2d chap. of Matt. or in this place, which is an interpretation of the former; becauſe they are wholly impertinent and foreign in them both: But the true, genuine, and unforced meaning of the place is, that it was foretold of old by the Prophets, that our Saviour ſhould be called a Nazarene, i. e. a man of Nazareth, and accordingly when he came and dwelt in the city called Nazareth, that which was thus ſpoken by the Prophets was fulfilled. Here is no ſtraining of the words, here is no need of far-fetched criticiſms, but the ſenſe of the text is eaſy and obvious; and he that runs may read it and underſtand it. But,

You will aſk, where it is foretold, that he ſhall be called a Nazarene, i. e. one of Nazareth? Here then is the greateſt difficulty (if it may be called ſo) to prove that this was prophecied concerning Chriſt. Or rather, there are theſe two things to be proved before I can hope to gain the readers aſſent to what I have offered: Firſt, I muſt make it appear that this was foretold by the Prophets, viz. that Chriſt ſhould be called a Nazarene, i. e. a man of Nazareth: And ſecondly, I am obliged to ſhew that he actually was called ſo. Both theſe are very evident, inſomuch, that I cannot but wonder again, that expoſitors have overlooked a thing which is ſo plain and obvious. Firſt, it was foretold that our Saviour ſhould bear the name of a Nazarene, and that firſt as it is a name referring to a place, and ſecondly as it is a name of reproach, taken from his inhabiting in ſuch a place.

Firſt, It was foretold as a name derived from a place, as it denoteth our Saviour to be one of Nazareth. But you will aſk, Where doth any Prophet ſay that he ſhall be an inhabitant of Nazareth? I anſwer, This is not the very thing which the text aſſerts: And the obſerving of it will lead us to the right underſtanding of the words. It is not ſaid, it was ſpoken by one particular Prophet, but by the Prophets: By whom may be underſtood not only thoſe that were the Penmen of the Sacred Scripture (of whom afterwards) but others of a like Prophetic Spirit, who uſed to foretel the coming of the Meſſias, and particularly to aſſign the place of his general abode, as well as that of his birth and crucifixion. And therefore, though we find not in the Sacred Writings theſe expreſs terms, [He ſhall be called a Nazarene,] i. e. he ſhall be, and be called One of Nazareth, yet Matthew's words are true, that this was ſpoken by the Prophets, for it was the general ſaying among them, when the Jews enquired of them, where the Meſſiah's habitation ſhould be the greateſt part of his life, that it ſhould be at Nazareth, a town in Galilee. This was a received report among the Jews, and paſſed for a Prophetic ſaying, and thence the Evangeliſt makes uſe of it, and applies it here very appoſitely when he was relating how Joſeph, being warned of God, turned aſide into the parts of Galilee, and came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth. This, ſaith he, was ſpoken of long before by the Prophets, by the Holy Men that diſcourſed of the Meſſias his coming, and we have received it from them. For without doubt, they had many things delivered to them from the mouths of Prophetick Perſons, which were tranſmitted from age to age. Thus we find Jude quotes Enoch's Prophecy, which he had only by tradition, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thouſands of his Saints, ver. 14. And Paul makes mention of the Egyptian ſorcerers, Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. iii. 8. whoſe names are not found in Exodus, but were taken out of the traditions of the Jews. In like manner Matthew quotes that here, which was reported to have been ſaid by certain Prophets of old, whoſe predictions were delivered from one to another. It is not improbable, that Matthew had by tradition, ſuch a Prophecy as in expreſs ſyllables foretold that our Saviour ſhould be called a Nazarene, i. e. he ſhould have his name from Nazareth, the place where he was to dwell, for 'tis very likely that This, no leſs than the place of his nativity, Bethlehem, was predicted by ſome Inſpired and Prophetick Men.

The next thing I am to prove, is, that this Prophetick Rumour which prevailed among the Jews was actually fulfilled, i. e. that our Bleſſed Maſter was called a Nazarene, or one of Nazareth, as that name hath reference to the place of his habitation. It cannot eſcape our obſervation, that it is particularly recorded, and that ſundry times, not only in the four Goſpels, but in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that Chriſt was called Jeſus of Nazareth, and that this was a name given by all ſorts of perſons. He was called ſo by the multitude, Luke xviii. 37. and more expreſly and emphatically, in Matt. xxi. 11. This (ſay they) is Jeſus, the Prophet of Nazareth of Galilee: He had this name given him by his friends and followers, by his Apoſtles and diſciples, as you read in Luke xxiv. 19. And here, in John i. 45. Acts ii. 22. and iv. 10. and x. 38. and xxvi. 9. The ſame name was attributed to him by his profeſſed enemies, Mark xiv. 67. John xviii. 5. Acts vi. 14. and more eſpecially, by Pilate his judge, who fix'd this title on the croſs, Jeſus of Nazareth king of the Jews, John xix. 19. And as for the other titles ſet over him, mentioned by the reſt of ther Evangeliſts, they were but abbreviatures of this. Obſerve farther, that the Angels of Heaven called him by this name, Mark xvi. 6. and ſo did the Devils, Mark i. 23. Luke iv. 34. Laſtly, he is thus named by Himſelf, Acts xxii. 8. where we find that even from Heaven he was pleaſed to own this title; I am Jeſus of Nazareth, ſaith he to the furious Saul. Now, is not this very remarkable, and much to our preſent purpoſe, that his being of Nazareth conſtantly gave the denomination to him? He hath his name from no other place, unleſs it be from Galilee, Matt. xxi. 12. and Nazareth was part of that Galilee, ſo that in a manner it was the ſame name. He ſhall be called a Nazarene, ſaid the Prophets; and behold, he was ſo. In Nazareth he was bred up, and thence he had his name: Which you ſee is moſt particularly and ſignally taken notice of in the Evangelical Writings: As it were to tell us that the Prophecy concerning this name of Chriſt was really fulfilled.

We have now paſſed the Boine, we have overcome that great difficulty (for ſo it was thought by ſome, and looked upon as inſuperable) viz. the proving that Chriſt's being called a Nazarene, (i. e. one of Nazareth) was in that very notion and ſenſe both foretold and fulfilled. Let us now proceed to vanquiſh this ſeeming difficulty by other arguments.

Secondly then, we are to conſider this Name, as it is a Name of Reproach, and ſo I ſhall ſhew that it was foretold by the Prophets, even the very Prophets who were Penmen of the Old Teſtamennt, that our Lord ſhould be called by this name, and likewiſe that he was ſo called in way of aeproach. The firſt of theſe is to be proved only in a general way from the Old Teſtament, where it is often declared, that holy and righteous perſons ſhall meet with reproachful words from the mouths of wicked men, that it is their uſual lot in this world to ſuffer in their names and reputations, to be ſcoffed at and defamed by that ſort of people, and to be repreſented as perſons loathed and forſaken by God. More particularly of our Saviour 'tis ſaid, that he ſhall be a deſpiſed and contemptible perſon in the eyes of men. I am a worm, and no man, a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people. All they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn, they ſhoot out the lip, they ſhake the head, &c. Pſal. xxii. 6, 7. And again, For thy ſake I have born reproach, ſhame hath covered my face, Pſal. lxix. 7. The reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me, ver. 9. They that ſit in the gate ſpeak againſt me, ver. 12. It is univerſally granted that David was a type of Chriſt, and what he here ſaith is ſpoken alſo of Him whoſe repreſentative he was. This, no man who is acquainted with the Bible, and the genius of it, will ſo much as think of denying; yea, he will acknowledge, that that whole 22d Pſalm is more eſpecially and peculiarly applicable to our Saviour, and 'tis certain, that he rehearſed either all, or part of it, when he hung on the croſs. Of this deſpiſed Jeſus ſpeaks that Evangelical Prophet, His viſage was marred more than any man, and his form more than the ſons of men, Iſa. lii. 14. He hath no form nor comelineſs: and when they ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that they ſhould deſire him. He is deſpiſed and rejected of men: they hide as it were their faces from him: he is deſpiſed, and they eſteem him not, ch. liii. 2, 3. Thus it was plainly foretold, Chriſt our Redeemer ſhould be deſpiſed and reproached, and ſpoken againſt, in which general predictions this particular one is included, viz. that he ſhould be deſpiſed and defamed becauſe of the meanneſs of the place of his habitation: He ſhall be called a Nazarene, he ſhall be reproached and vilified by reaſon of his education and abode in that town. Although the Prophecies which I have alledged, are ſpoken generally and at large, yet this is clear and undeniable, that if the title of Nazarene was uſed by Chriſt's enemies, as a mark of their deſpiſing and rejecting him (which I ſhall make good anon,) then even this particular name was implied and contained in the general prediction concerning him. Or, take it thus, tho' theſe individual words ſet down by the Evangeliſt [He ſhall be called a Nazarene] are no where found in the writings of the Prophets, yet the ſenſe and meaning of them are there, which is ſufficient; as in Acts x. 42. Peter alledges this as teſtified by all the Prophets, that through Chriſt's name, whoſoever believeth in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins; and yet among all the Prophets there is not one extant that hath theſe words, which he here delivereth. He ſpeaks not the very words, but the ſenſe of the Prophets; and ſo doth Matthew, chap. ii. 25. he tells us, that it was ſpoken of by the Prophets that Chriſt ſhall be called a Nazarene, which very words though they do not occur in any Prophetick writer of the Old Teſtament, yet the meaning and import of them is to be found in thoſe writings, as I have ſhewed; for there we read that Chriſt, as well as his followers, ſhall be deſpiſed and rejected, defamed and reproached, which is the true ſenſe and meaning of theſe words [He ſhall be called a Nazarene.] Thus the written word of God atteſts, that he was to be called by this name. But perhaps the Prophecies which were by tradition ſpake expreſly of this appellation, and foreſignified to the Jews that this individual title of Nazarene ſhould be made uſe of, and applied to the Meſſias when he came into the world; to which alſo it is likely Matthew here refers, as hath been ſaid before.

The next thing to be proved is, that this Prophecy was actually fulfilled. And here firſt more generally (taking this name for a name of reproach and ignominy) we can prove, that it was fully accompliſhed in that our Saviour was actually reproached, miſcalled, defamed, when he was here upon earth. They traduced his birth and parentage; they derided him for his ſuppoſed father's trade, and perhaps his own, as if it were ſome great blemiſh, ſome unpardonable crime to be of an honeſt calling. His life was accuſed of debauchery and prophaneneſs, he was aſperſed as a glutton and a wine-bibber, he was reproached as a wilful violater of the ſabbath; yea, whatſoever he ſaid or did, was matter of their oblequy and ſlander. All ranks of men conſpired to revile the Bleſſed Jeſus. He was mocked at by the Sanhedrim, by their great Doctors and Rabbies, men of beard and gravity; he was alſo flouted at by the giddy multitude, by the common rabble, and baſer ſort of people. The prieſts fiercely cried out againſt him, and treated him as ignominiouſly as they uſed to do the ſcape-goat when it was to be packed away into the wilderneſs. The laity endeavoured to ſurpaſs their inſtructers, and doubled their ſpight againſt the Holy Jeſus. Relations diſgraced and abuſed him. He is not only beſides himſelf, but he is poſſeſſed, if you'll believe the Phariſees: He doth all his miracles by art magick, by a confederacy with the prince of Devils and apoſtate ſpirits. In the Jewiſh conſiſtory he is impeached of blaſphemy; in the civil court, of ſedition and treaſon: And laſtly, when he hung upon the croſs, they charged him with deſpair and utter diſtruſt of God. Thus from his firſt entrance into the world, till his going out of it, he was the conſtant ſubject of mens ſlanders and reproaches. This Prophecy therefore in the text was in the general fulfilled, in that he was thus egregiouſly reproached and traduced. This prediction, [He ſhall be called a Nazarene] is made good, for he was called by all thoſe names, which ſignify diſgrace and reproach, and this is one of them.

Beſides, it was accompliſhed in a general way, in as much as Chriſt's diſciples and followers were treated after the ſame manner; for what was done unto them is interpreted to be done unto Chriſt himſelf. This, I ſuppoſe, will not be denied, and therefore we are only briefly to recount the ill uſage in this kind which they met with. In the Evangelical hiſtory we are informed that the Apoſtles and diſciples of Jeſus were a deſpiſed ſort of men, that they were moſt unworthily aſperſed and vilified, that they were loaden with all obloquies and ſlanders. Paul ſpeaking of himſelf and his fellow Apoſtles, acquaints us, that they were reviled and defamed, made as the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things, 1 Cor. iv. 12, 13. And thoſe that ſucceeded theſe firſt worthies of the Church fared no better. It was confidently reported by their enemies that they worſhipped an aſſes-head, whence they had the name of Aſinarii. It was ſaid, that they met together before the ſun roſe to murder their own infants, and that they then crammed themſelves with their warm fleſh, and glutted themſelves with their reeking blood; and that when this was done, theſe canibals, theſe devourers of their own kind proceeded to acts of filthineſs and inceſt; yea, and that at all other times they lived in the practiſe of the moſt flagitious ſins, the moſt execrable villanies. From the writings of the Pagans, and of thoſe that apologized for the Chriſtians, we are aſcertained that all manner of falſities were invented by the enemies of Chriſtianity, and thrown upon the profeſſors of it. Theſe poor vile abject creatures ſtood expoſed to the ſhock of their injurious tongues, and received all the filth which their exulcerated minds could vomit forth upon them. To give you an example of the higheſt improvement of theſe mens malicious reviling, they had the impudence and effrontery to faſten upon the Chriſtians even the commiſſion of thoſe villanies, which they acted themſelves; thus when Nero had ſet Rome on fire, he laid the fact upon theſe innocents, as both Tacitus and Suetonius tell us. It came to this at laſt, that the very name of Chriſtian, without any addition whatſoever, was a ſufficient reproach. When they called any man a Chriſtian, it was as much as to ſay he was a criminal of the higheſt nature. Thus in general, the Prophecy here mentioned by the Evangeliſt is accompliſhed, the Chriſtians, and in them Chriſt himſelf, were deſpiſed and rejected; they had all the names and marks of reproach faſtned upon them. Though they were aggrandized by the moſt honourable titles given them by God, yet they were debaſed and vilified by the worſt of appellations conferred upon them by men. In this large ſenſe the Prophecy is true, they were called Nazarenes; they, as well as our Lord himſelf, the great and noble inſtitutor of Chriſtianity, were loaded with contumelies and reproaches.

But more particularly, we are to prove the accompliſhment of this Prophecy, by ſhewing you that this individual name of Nazarene, or one of Nazareth, was uſed as a reproachful appellative towards Chriſt, and towards his followers. We muſt know then, that though Nazareth be called a city in that place of Matthew, yet all agree, that it was a mean and poor one, and rather deſerved (if we look upon it in itſelf) to be called a village. Which is no unuſual thing in Scripture, where we find places that have the name of cities are alſo called villages, as in Joſ. xix. 7. 1 Chron. iv. 32. And in the New Teſtament, ſmall towns or villages are ſometimes ſtiled, ϖόλεις & κωμοϖόλεις, Matt. ix. 35. Mark i. 38. Of Bethlehem we may particularly obſerve, that 'tis called ϖόλις a city, in Luke ii. 4. but Κώμη a village, in John vii. 42. We meet with the like in other Authors: So Bethſura is called a city by Joſephus, Antiq. Jud. l. 12. c. 14. and in the ſame place, Κώμη a village or town. Thus, Nazareth, though it have the name of a city, yet it was but a mean town, or rather a village: whence it was ſaid, in the context, as it follows in the 46th verſe, in a proverbial way, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? It was, as appears by this common ſaying, a ſorry contemptible place, and yielded no inhabitant of any note and worth, unleſs you will reckon mechanicks and poor tradeſmen to be ſuch.

A Nazarene, a man of Nazareth, was generally a deſpiſed perſon among them. Hence it may be reaſonably inferr'd, that thoſe who had a mind to diſgrace and defame our Saviour Chriſt, uſed to reproach him with a title taken from this poor little town, and to call him a Nazarene, a man that belonged to that little village, and conſequently was ſome pitiful fellow. But this, you will ſay, is conjecture only. I deny it, and give this reaſon for it, viz becauſe it is plainly grounded on Scripture. For we read in Acts xxiv. 5. that Paul was accuſed by that ſmart orator Tertullus, for being a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes, i. e. of the Chriſtians, who were called ſo from Chriſt Jeſus of Nazareth, their firſt founder and maſter. He being bred in that ſorry town, was in way of contumely called a Nazarene, by thoſe that diſliked his doctrine and inſtitutions. And from him his followers derived that name, and had it frequently given them by thoſe that hated their way of religion, eſpecially when they ſolemnly undertook to accuſe them before great ones, as Tertullus did the Apoſtle here before Felix. That Chriſt and thoſe, who profeſſed Chriſtianity, were uſually branded with the name of Galileans (they being of that country for the moſt part) is evident from Luke xxiii. 6. Acts ii. 7. Yea, the name laſted till ſome hundreds of years after Chriſt, as may be gathered from Julian the apoſtate's crying out, (when he was ſtruck by an unſeen hand,) O Galilean, thou haſt vanquiſhed me, meaning without doubt the Bleſſed Jeſus, who was now ſeated at the right hand of God in Heaven. Not only Paul is called a bald pate Galilean by Lucian, Γαλιλαῖος ἀναφαλαντίας, in Philopatr. but all the primitive Chriſtians were generally ſtigmatized with the title of Galileans by Julian, Porphyrius, and other enemies of the Chriſtian Religion. Now,

This muſt be ſaid with truth, that when they called Chriſt a Galilean, and when they gave his followers that name, it was the ſame as if they had called them Nazarenes; becauſe Nazareth was ſo noted a place in Galilee. But, which is yet cloſer to our preſent buſineſs, the primitive Chriſtians were more particularly and emphatically ſtiled Nazarenes from that town of this name in Galilee, where Jeſus was brought up and dwelt the greateſt part of his life. This is with great evidence teſtified and confirmed by Epiphanius, who not only tells us, that there was a ſort of hereticks called Nazarenes, but that the orthodox Chriſtians alſo bore that name. He aſſures us, (Adv. Hæreſ. l. 1. Hæreſ. 29.) that theſe were commonly known by the name of Nazarenes, and that they had no other noted name among their adverſaries and oppoſers. Yea, at this day the Jews call the Chriſtians Notzerim, as we are informed by Druſius on Acts xxiv. 5. and there is no body I believe, will think that Grotius falſifies, when he ſaith the Mahometans at this day ſtile the Chriſtians Nazarenes, Grot. in Acts xxiv. 5. It is undeniable then, that both Chriſt, and his followers, bore the name of Nazarenes, and thus was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by the Prophets, (i. e. either generally by thoſe that were writers of the Old Teſtament, or particularly and expreſly by ſome other Prophets that were of great note among the Jews, and whoſe ſayings were delivered down to poſterity,) viz. that Chriſt ſhould be called a Nazarene. He was really and truly called ſo. Among other ignominious names, this very particular one of Nazarene, i. e. a man of Nazareth, was frequently given him. For this word Ναζωραῖος here, and in Mark x. 47. and other places (whatever ſome have fancied of it) is as much as Ναζαρεθαῖος, "one of Nazareth." The former word is but an abbreviature of this latter, which is no unuſual thing in the ſtile and language of Scripture, as thoſe who are converſant in the Hebrew and Greek text know very well. Indeed the laſt ſyllable eth in Nazareth, is but a bare termination, and this (as all Grammarians will confeſs) is variable, and conſequently the adjective from this ſubſtantive may be Ναζαραῖος, or Ναζαρηνός, as it is in Mark i. 24. and Luke iv. 34. as well as Ναζαρεθαῖος, the eth being not of the eſſence of the word. The text then may be either rendred thus, "He ſhall be called a Nazarean, or a Nazarene," as we find it tranſlated, or a Nazarethite. It is not material which of theſe words we uſe, only it is to be remembred, that we are to underſtand by it "one of Nazareth," one of that ſmall contemptible village, one that was undervalued and deſpiſed becauſe of his riſe and habitation there. Such was our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour, he was ſcorned and contemned as a poor ſilly villager. But Matthew an inſpired Author aſſures us, that it was foretold by the Prophets, that he ſhould be deſpiſed and reproached, and ſpoken againſt; in which general predictions is included the ſenſe and meaning of this particular one, "he ſhall be called a Nazarene: for this calling him a Nazarene, or one of Nazareth," is an evident token of their deſpiſing him, and is a downright reproaching and ſpeaking againſt him.

Thus I have given you my thoughts concerning this text of Scripture, and have attempted to offer to you the plain and genuine meaning of it; and ſo far as I can judge, it is impertinent and incoherent, it is trifling and ridiculous, to interpret it in either of the ſenſes mentioned in the beginning of this diſcourſe. If we do ſo, the connection of the words is illogical, irrational and abſurd. This is my preſent apprehenſion of this place; and if I be miſtaken, let it be remembred, that I have been offering a notion about a controverted text, not deciding a point of faith, and conſequently there is no great danger in the miſtake, ſays Dr. Edwards.

Ver. 49. — Thou art the ſon of God, thou art the king of Iſrael.] Theſe two titles ſignify the ſame thing in the Jewiſh phraſe, and ſeem to be the two titles given by them to the Meſſiah.

Ver. 51. Hereafter ſhall ye ſee the heavens opened, and the Angels, &c.] Chriſt here ſeems to allude to Jacob's ladder, mentioned in Gen. xxviii. 12, 13. on the top of which ſays Maimonides, was the Divine Majeſty, and the Angels aſcending to receive his commands, and deſcending to execute them; Chriſt therefore, by theſe words, ſeems to inform them, that the miracles which they ſhould ſee performed by him, ſhould declare the Divine Majeſty preſent with him, and giving him thoſe commands he was to execute by his prophetic office, as clearly as if they had ſeen the Angels of God, aſcending and deſcending on him. So that, as Dr. Whitby obſerves, they who inadvertently advertently infer this to the Day of Judgment, did not conſider this was to happen ἀπαρτὶ within a little while; and they who refer it to Chriſt's paſſion and reſurrection, muſt ſhew how the Angels did then aſcend and deſcend on Chriſt in the ſight of the Apoſtles.

Now ſeeing that this chapter principally contains a deſcription of the union of the human and Divine Nature in the perſon of Jeſus of Nazareth, before we paſs from this important ſubject, I preſume it would be proper to add to what has been annotated in this chapter, a review of the Doctrine and Faith here deſcribed, by laying together "thoſe accounts which we find in the Old Teſtament of the Word, or Logos, before he was made fleſh;" their accompliſhment in the perſon of Jeſus of Nazareth; as alſo "enquiring into the time when, and the manner how, the Word was made fleſh; "and conſidering the two extremes here united, and the union of theſe extremes in the one perſon of the Word made fleſh. All which particulars are neceſſary to be known and rightly diſtinguiſhed by warrantable proofs in order to confute the unbelieving Jew, and the blaſphemous Socinian. But before I proceed,

Let it be previouſly obſerved, That the word Logos, uſed by our Evangeliſt in the firſt verſe, &c. and tranſlated into Engliſh by the common ſound of the Word, is a Greek word which does not properly ſignify a word compoſed of ſyllables; for the Greeks in ſuch caſes made uſe of the word rhema, i. e. an articulate word; but Logos was uſed by the Apoſtle in a ſublimer ſenſe, in the ſame degree, as the Hebrews uſed devar, and the Chaldees, memra, which ſignify the ſermon, the oration, the mind or will of man: Becauſe as man contrives and executes his works by his internal ſpeech, or the natural reaſoning of the mind, called the oration and word of the mind; ſo, as the Evangeliſt here declares, God operates all things, not in that mortal way by putting to his hand, but by the inſtrumency of his ſole Word, who is a real perſon and the only interpreter of his Divine Father's Counſel, even as the ſpeech of a man is the interpretation of his mind: Which Word of God was called by the ancient Jews Reſchith, the beginning of God's ways, or the Wiſdom of God, as our Evangeliſt deſcribes him in the firſt verſe, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. So that by the Word here is meant not the created, but the creating Word of God, the ſecond of the three Perſons that bear record in Heaven, who when made fleſh, became the Father's Orator, or Interpreter of the Divine Will to men, thro' the Goſpel. Nor,

As I have ſhewn above in the notes, were the Gentile Philoſophers ignorant of this interpretation of the Logos: And therefore the Evangeliſt makes uſe of that term, by choice, as known to all the learned world, to ſignify the Redeemer's Divine Nature; for if the Evangelical Idea of this word Logos had been of his own invention, he would have explained himſelf, like a good and ingenious writer, to propagate the knowledge of this term, but he knew there was ſo little reaſon for ſuch an explication, that he mentions it as a term commonly accepted to denote a real and proper perſon, or a living, intelligent and free principle of action; all which will more clearly appear from what I promiſed to ſhew, that the ancient Jews both underſtood that the Logos was God, and the promiſed Meſſiah.

Dr. Alix, in his Judgment of the ancient Jewiſh Church; and Galatinus (de Arcanis Catholicæ Veritatis) plainly demonſtrate, that the ancient Jews had the ſame opinion of the Logos, or the Word, afterwards made fleſh, as of the one eternal God. For,

They acknowledged that the Logos, was El, Elohim, Elſhaddai, Adonai, Theos, Kyrios, the God of hoſts, the King of Glory; nay, moreover, they aſcribed to him the incommunicable name of God, Jah and Jehovah, which expreſſes in one word the eſſence, ſelf-exiſtence, eminence, independence, immutability, omnipreſence and eternal exiſtence, and is the proper name of the firſt cauſe of all that exiſts: And therefore we read in the Oracles of God, that the Almighty claims this name as his peculiar name, for men to know him by, Hoſ. xii. 5. and to debar all other beings from that honour, for he will not give his glory to another; Iſa. xl. 8. Thus the names and titles of God given to the Logos prove, that they who gave them believed him to be God. And

They aſcribed unto the Word, the Divine Power of Creation, Providence and Redemption in its full latitude. So that when John writes that all things were made by the Word, he was not delivering a new doctrine, but added this clauſe, to explain to them, who were acquainted with the common opinion of the Jews in his time, that he treated in that context of the ſame Logos, or Word, to whom they, the Jews, aſcribed the works and operations of God; as if he had ſaid, This Logos, or Divine Word, is not a conception or invention of my own, but it is he, to whom without blaſphemy ye properly give the titles and names of your God, and by whom all things have been made, in the beginning of the creation; ſee Gen. i.

This is he to whom we are to aſcribe alſo, all the appearances of Jehovah, or of the Angel of Jehovah, to the Patriarchs and Prophets, and Holy Perſons recorded in thoſe Sacred Books of the Old Teſtament: For they ſay, that the Father never appeared but by his Shechinah, which is his Logos, called his Angel, or Meſſenger: Thus John ſaith, No man hath ſeen God at any time, the only begotten Son, who is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him! John i. 18. as our Lord ſays, Not that any man hath ſeen the Father, ſave he who is of God, he hath ſeen the Father! John vi. 46. Thus, according to them, it was the Logos of Jehovah who appear'd to Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, &c. but moſt often to Moſes, times paſt number, eſpecially in the Burning Buſh, and when he gave the law from Sinai, till the Logos tranſlated him at laſt (according to Philo) or till his ſoul was taken out of his body by a kiſs of the Memra, or by the decree of the Word of Jehovah; as the ancient Jews believ'd.

I know the Socinians object that the ancient Jews aſcribe to the Word what was ſaid or done by a created Angel, and particularly that only ſuch an one appear'd in the Burning Buſh; for that Stephen, following Moſes, calls him the Angel of Jehovah: Nay, others too account him only a created Angel, but who repreſented the Perſon of God. But for anſwer, 'tis certain the Angel is call'd Jehovah both by Moſes and Stephen, and aſſerts himſelf, ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, which no mere creature durſt ſay. Beſides, the word Angel, or Meſſenger, denotes rather the office than the nature of thoſe Spirits; and therefore that name may well be given to the Word as the deſtin'd Mediator, the Angel of God's Preſence, who had ever the care of the Church committed to him, and by whom the Father always communed with men; for ſays God to Moſes, My Angel ſhall go before thee, and my Preſence ſhall go with thee; Exod. xxxii. 14. but the Logos is juſtly call'd Jehovah God.

The Socinians alſo object that not the Logos, or Word, but a created Angel, gave the law from Mount Sinai, who is call'd God, becauſe he ſpoke in God's name; for that the law was ordained by Angels; Gal. iii. 19. But for anſwer, as the ancient Jews themſelves firmly believ'd that the law was given by Jehovah himſelf, by them call'd the Memra, the Logos, or Word; ſo likewiſe that Deut. xxxiii. 2. when Jehovah came from Sinai, he came with ten thouſand of his Saints, when from his right hand went a fiery law: For the Logos, or Word, in his appearances was uſually attended with Angels as his Miniſters; therefore thoſe words, δι' Ἀγγελων, The law was ordained by Angels, ſhould be tranſlated, among Angels (as the ſame Greek prepoſition διὰ πολλῶν μαρτυρῶν, is tranſlated, 2 Tim. ii. 2. among many witneſſes) or in preſence of the Angels as the witneſſes of that glorious tranſaction.

The ancient Jews alſo affirm that it was the Logos who appeared as Jehovah to Balaam and to Joſhua before Jericho who paid him Divine Honours, to Gideon alſo and Samſon's parents, to Samuel, &c. But that after he had appeared glorious at the ſolemn dedication of the temple, and had put an end to the former theocracy by ſetting up kings of David's race in an hereditary ſucceſſion; or as others expreſs it, after the Logos, or Word, was ſettled as King of Iſrael in his throne on the mercy-ſeat between the cherubim in the Holy of Holies of Solomon's temple, as his reſting place, 2 Chron. vi. 41. He is but ſeldom found in other places while that temple ſtood, at leaſt we have but few inſtances, ſuch as when the Logos appeared to Elijah, a ſecond Moſes, on Mount Horeb, who appeared alſo with Moſes to the Logos, or Word made fleſh at his transfiguration on Mount Tabor. So likewiſe

In the viſions of Micajah, Ezekiel and Iſaiah, as ſitting on a throne high and lifted up, as our Evangeliſt expounds the laſt, ſaying, Theſe things ſaid Iſaiah, when he ſaw his glory, and ſpake of him! John xii. 41.

He appear'd afterwards to Zechariah with miniſtring Angels attending him, and he is diſtinguiſh'd by his name Jehovah, and by his character as the Angel or Meſſenger of Jehovah; for tho' the ancient Jews plainly diſtinguiſh the Logos Meſſiah from God, who ſends him and anoints him, yet they call him alſo Jehovah God.

They alſo believ'd that the Logos made all the promiſes to the Church, denounced all the threatnings on the viſible Church and on the world, brought about all the deliverances of his peculiar people, and executed all the judgments on their enemies, that are aſcribed to Jehovah in the Old Teſtament; as could be fully proved, if needful in this place.

From all which we can ſafely conclude, that they plainly owned the Memra, the Logos, the Word, to be a Divine Perſon and the true God, and not an attribute only of God, as the modern Unitarians ignorantly affirm: The Jews ſay in their Prayers, Deus eſt unus non unicus, i. e. God is one, but not alone; he is not a ſolitary God; ſo Philo explains it, that they believed the unity of the Godhead was not to be reduced to number; that indeed God is one, but without excluding his image, his Logos, from being one with the Father and Spirit; for that the Logos (or Word) is the Shechinah and the Jehovah, having all the Divine Attributes and Properties, as ſhall hereafter be ſhewn, aſcribed unto him. Hence

In like manner, as I ſaid before, the ancient Jews believed that the ſame Divine Logos, or Word, was the expectation of Iſrael, the promiſed Meſſiah; as we learn from their applying to him all the things foretold of the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament. Now,

I begin with the firſt and grand promiſe of the Bleſſed Seed of the woman that ſhould deſtroy the works of Satan, and recover mankind from the fall, by the craft and ſubtilty of the Devil, to the favour of God; who therefore, muſt ſurely be greater than Satan. He was the object of the faith, and hope of the ancient and pious inhabitants of the world before the flood; nor had thoſe that lived after the flood any other object, until he was revealed to Noah, as Jehovah the God of Shem, and to Abram as Jehovah the God of glory, who was to bleſs all nations, and often appeared to him with a viſible Shechinah or effulgent glory, and alſo in a human ſhape, as a prelude or aſſurance of his future incarnation, particularly in the vale of Siddim, and afterwards at Mamre, when the Logos Meſſiah din'd with him and allowed him to plead in behalf of Sodom. He ſaved Iſaac on the altar, and wreſtled with Jacob at Peniel; ſo dying Jacob invoked him, as the Goel Redeemer or the Angel that redeemed him from all evil, whom Jacob calls the God of his fathers; and Job was certain that his Redeemer Goel liv'd, whom he calls God; and dying Jacob foretels that the ſcepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor the law-giver from between his feet until Shiloh come.

Indeed the modern Jews deny that the word Shiloh ſignifies the Meſſiah, and affirm that the word ſhebet, tranſlated by us a ſceptre, or inſtrument of rule, ſignifies alſo a rod the inſtrument of chaſtiſement; and they argue, that even though Shiloh ſhould import the Meſſiah, the meaning would be only that their chaſtiſement by the diſperſion ſhould not ceaſe till the Meſſiah come, by whom they hope to be reſtored to their own land, and not before. But they are confuted by Onkelos, who thus tranſlates the words, There ſhall not be taken away from Judah one having the principality, nor the ſcribe from the ſons of his children, till the Meſſiah ſhall come! with which the Targums of Jeruſalem and Jonathan exactly agree; and the word Shiloh being derived from the Hebrew Shilejah, Secundina, or the after-birth (called the Secundina from the tranquility of the child in the womb.) Rabbi Bechai, a Talmudiſt, comments on it thus; "Shiloh is his ſon, who ſhall be born from the after-birth of a woman, according to the way of all that are born, therefore Shiloh is the Meſſiah, ſo called either as the tranquille, i. e. the peaceable, and author of eternal tranquility; or, becauſe he ſhould be born from the after-birth of a woman only, after a ſingular manner, without the operation or concurrence of a man. But be this as it will, in all the Targums, and in the ancient Hebrew book, called Bereſchith Rabba, Shiloh is called the king Meſſiah.

So God inſpired Balaam to ſpeak of him as, "the ſtar to come out of Jacob, and the ſceptre to riſe out of Iſrael, to ſmite the corners of Moab, and to deſtroy (or rather to bear rule over) all the children of Seth," Numb. xxiv. 17, 19. Which Prophecy is thus rendred by the ancient Onkelos, "A king ſhall riſe out of the houſe of Jacob, and the Meſſiah ſhall be anointed out of the houſe of Iſrael, who ſhall rule over all the ſons of men;" for all the ſons of men ſince the flood are the children of Seth, which ſhews that the Meſſiah's kingdom was to be univerſal. Nay, Moſes Maimonides, a moſt learned Spaniſh Jew, who flouriſhed about A. D. 1160. in his Melakim, cap. xi. § 1. (whom the modern Jews own to be the greateſt man ſince the Patriarch Moſes) interprets theſe words thus, A ſceptre ſhall riſe out of Iſrael! This is the king Meſſiah; and ſhall ſmite the corners of Moab! This is king David, 2 Sam. viii. 2. And he ſhall bear rule over the children of Seth! This is the king Meſſiah, of whom it is written, He ſhall have dominion from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, Deut. xviii. 15—19. Moſes the Patriarch alſo bore witneſs of him as the great Prophet of the Church, or the Mediator; but after Moſes we find not many hints of him till David's time, except as above in his appearances.

2. God afforded the royal Prophets David and Solomon a more ample diſcovery of the Redeemer, the Logos made fleſh; and David is the firſt that calls him the Meſſiah, the Chriſt, the anointed, and alſo the ſon of Jehovah, ſaying, Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee, Pſal. ii. 7. viz. by vertue of his mediatorial office to which he was to be anointed in the fulneſs of time; (for theſe words don't intimate the communication of the Divine Nature, or Perſonality from the Father to the Son by eternal generation, as will appear in the ſequel.) But tho' the modern Jews apply it wholly to David without any typical meaning, the Targums are of our ſide, and agree with us alſo in applying to the Meſſiah, Pſ. xlv. and lxxii. and cx. Nay, there is not one text that we apply to Chriſt, but what the ancient Jews alſo applied to him, as I will undertake to prove from their old Authors.

Solomon next deſcribes the Meſſiah as the wiſdom or Logos of God, by whom Jehovah created all things, Prov. iii. 19. according to the ancient Jews; and brings him in ſpeaking of himſelf, Prov. viii. 22, &c. and Prov. xxx. 4. What is his name, and what is his ſon's name? Which the ancient Jews ſometimes referred to the nation of Iſrael, call'd by them the firſt-born of God, but at other times to the Logos Meſſiah mentioned in Pſ. ii. but here is a real difference between the Father and the Son, whoſe names cannot be told but according to Revelation. Likewiſe the Song of Solomon is prophetical of him as the bridegroom of the Church, being an improvement of Pſ. xlv, and was by the ancient Jews tranſmitted unto us as a part of canonical Scripture; nay, even the modern Jews own its Divine Authority, tho' they differ from the Chriſtians, and the old Jews, in the ſpiritual and myſtical meaning thereof.

3. The other Prophets before the captivity followed the ſame path; for Iſaiah repreſents the Meſſiah exalted on his throne attended by the Seraphim, who proclaimed him the thrice holy, holy, holy Jehovah, Iſa. vi. 1, 3. and the places are numberleſs in that book concerning the Meſſiah's perſon, his natures and mediatorial office, his humiliation and exaltation, and ſo plainly expreſs'd, that ſeveral Jews have been converted to Chriſtianity by the force of them. The other Prophets alſo mention him in lofty ſtrains, particularly Jeremiah, who delivered that eminent Prophecy, Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Behold the days come, ſaith Jehovah, that I will raiſe unto David a righteous branch, and this is his name whereby he ſhall be called (or whereby they ſhall call him) Jehovah Zidkenu, the Lord our righteouſneſs! Which the old Talmudiſts expound of the Meſſiah: againſt which the modern Jews object, that Jeremiah ſays, not they ſhall call him, but he ſhall call him and read it thus, this is his name who ſhall call him, viz. Jehovah Zidkenu, making it the name of him who calls, not of the called. But they corrupt the original by falſe pointing; for they turn the word Jicreu, they ſhall call, into Jicrea, He ſhall call; and the Septuagint renders it, they ſhall call him, and ſo doth Jonathan's Targum: Nay, Jeremiah himſelf refutes them, ſaying, ch. xxxiii. 16. and This is he who ſhall call her, even Jehovah Zidkenu, who v. 15. is ſaid to call or invite her, the Jewiſh nation, intimated by the feminine particle la. They alſo object, that in the old Jewiſh traditions, not only the Meſſiah, but Moſes alſo and Iſrael are called Jehovah, nay, Jeruſalem alſo is called Jehovah Shammah, Ezek. xlviii. 35. But in thoſe traditions, Moſes and Iſrael are only called Elohim, (a name ſometimes applied to Angels, to ſtrange gods, to idols and even to dæmons) and never Jehovah; and Jeruſalem is not called Jehovah with the adjective juſt, in the ſame manner as God and his Meſſiah are ſo called, as Jehovah Zedek, the Lord righteous, Pſal. cxxix. 4. which intimates his eſſence, quality and truth; whereas Jeruſalem has only a local adverb ſhammah, which ſignifies there; ſo that the Prophet means not that the city is Jehovah, but that Jehovah is there, or exiſts in the Heavenly Jeruſalem by his ſpecial glory.

4. During and after the captivity, Ezekiel among the firſt captives in Chaldea points at Chriſt, ſaying, I will ſet up one ſhepherd over them, even my ſervant David, and I Jehovah will be their God, and my ſervant David their prince, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, &c.

Daniel in his interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, Dan. ii. 44. 45. foretels the kingdom of Chriſt, that ſhall break all other kingdoms, and ſhall ſtand for ever: ſo Nebuchadnezzar beholding in the furnace four men walking in the midſt of the fire without hurt, ſaid, the form of the fourth is like the Son of God, Dan. iii. 25. or of an Heavenly Divine appearance, the Logos Meſſiah himſelf then appearing in a human ſhape for the comfort of the Jews, and for the converſion of that ſtubborn monarch. So in the night viſions, Daniel beheld one like the Son of man, Dan. vii. 13, &c. come with the clouds of Heaven to the ancient of days, and there was given him dominion and glory, and an everlaſting kingdom, &c. And the Angel Gabriel explain'd Daniel's viſion of the ſeventy weeks, Dan. ix. 24, &c. that ſhall be accounted for in the ſequel.

Haggai and Zechariah ſpeak of him as the true Zerobabel the founder and finiſher of God's Church, as a prieſt upon his throne, and the council of peace was between them both, viz. Jehovah and the Logos Meſſiah, Zech. iii. 8. iv. 6, &c. vi. 12, 13.

Malachi, the laſt, ſpeaks in God's name, Mal. iii. 1. Behold I will ſend my Angel, or meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before me, or the way of my face; and the Lord whom you ſeek ſhall ſuddenly come to his temple, even the Angel of the covenant whom ye delight in; which is owned by Moſes Maimonides to be ſpoken of the king Meſſiah. And again the Meſſiah promiſed as the Sun of righteouſneſs to ariſe with healing in his wings. Theſe are the glorious accounts of the Meſſiah; and all theſe lofty deſcriptions of him in the Old Teſtament, are by the ancient Jews, applied to the ſame Divine Perſon of the Memra, the Shechinah, the Wiſdom, the Logos or Word, who according to them was to be God's Meſſiah, and the Author of thoſe glorious atchievements as mediator, whom they called the bridegroom of the ſynagogue. Therefore this being made out, we are to ſhew how his humiliation in the fleſh is intimated in the Old Teſtament. For,

Philo informs us, that the old ſynagogue owned the Meſſiah not only to be a Divine Perſon ſubſiſting from eternity, but alſo that he was to be manifeſted in the fleſh, and born at Bethlehem, according to the Prophecy, Mic. v. 2. which ſhould be thus tranſlated, and thou Bethlehem Ephrata, ſhalt be chief among the thouſands of Judah, for out of thee ſhall he come forth that is to be ruler in Iſrael. Nay, when Meſſiah was born, the ſcribes, conſulted by king Herod, frankly own'd it; upon which, bloody Herod murder'd the innocents there; and Jonathan interprets it thus, out of thee ſhall come forth before me, the Meſſiah who ſhall exerciſe ſovereign power over Iſrael. Nay, we know the Sanhedrim's opinion: For when Jeſus applied to himſelf a certain Prophecy of the Meſſiah, ſaying, Hereafter ſhall you ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of Heaven! Matt. xxvi. 63, 64, 65. compared with Dan. vii. 13. Luke xxii. 70. The high-prieſt rent his clothes, calling Jeſus a blaſphemer, and they all ſaid, Art thou the Son of God? for whom the clouds, the chariot of the Divinity ſhould be prepared to attend his triumph? As the Jews then believed. So with reſpect to his incarnation, they believed that he is repreſented as the ſeed of the woman, the ſeed of Abraham as the Meſſiah, the Chriſt, the anointed; but the Divine Logos could not be anointed. He is expreſs'd by the names of David and Solomon, Eliakim and Zerobabel, his types as the great ſhepherd; for God ſays, Awake, O ſword, againſt my ſhepherd! Zech. xiii. 7. Alſo as a man, and the Son of man, according to Pſ. viii. explain'd Heb. ii. 6, &c. typify'd by Ezekiel as the ſon of man, and foretold by Daniel, ch. vii. 13. and by Iſa. ch. vii. 14. ſaying, Jehovah himſelf ſhall give you a ſign, Behold a virgin ſhall conceive and bear a ſon, and ſhall call his name Immanuel.

The Prophet Micah likewiſe aſſerts the incarnation; Therefore will he give them up until the time that ſhe, who travelleth, has brought forth! Mic. v. 3. And the Meſſiah ſays by his type, Pſ. xxii. 9, 10. But thou art he who took me out of the womb —— Thou art my God from my mother's belly. And as for the ſufferings of Chriſt or his humiliation, we need only conſult the ſaid Pſ. xxii. Zech. xii. 10. Iſa. li. 7. to liii. and laſt; as all Chriſtians are taught not only from John xii. 38. and Rom. x. 16. but alſo from the interpretations of the ancient Jews: Whereas,

The modern Jews not expecting a ſuffering Meſſiah, but a reigning, a glorious triumpher in temporal pomp and power, have rejected the interpretations of the ancients, and ſtrain the Prophecies of Chriſt's ſuffering to Joſiah, or Jeremiah, or to the whole nation of Iſrael: But Jonathan, or the Authors of his Targum, could not be influenced by the firſt Chriſtians, nor by the later Jews, but have honeſtly given the plain true opinion of the great ſynagogue in their time concerning the Meſſiah, which came to be all accompliſhed in Jeſus of Nazareth.

But ſome of the modern Jews knowing that their ſtraining of texts will not baffle the truth, have fooliſhly feigned two Meſſiahs, and both yet to come, viz. Meſſiah Ben-Ephraim, or Ben-Joſeph, and the other Meſſiah Ben-David, and that the firſt (who is to be the forerunner of the ſecond) is the ſuffering one to fight and overcome Gog, and after that to be ſlain by one Armillus, the great enemy of the Church, who ſhall pierce with his ſword the Meſſiah Ben-Joſeph. But that Meſſiah Ben-David, ſucceeding the other, ſhall kill Armillus, reſtore the kingdom to Iſrael, and reign in the higheſt ſplendor. But ſure any one may ſee the ſtrait they are drove to; for their having recourſe to ſuch a poor ſhift, diſcovers the poor cauſe that wants it, invented only to evade what they cannot anſwer: For it is a meer fable without the leaſt pretence of any foundation in Holy Scripture or the writings of the ancients, who knew well the old traditions of their nation, and never heard of two Meſſiahs.

From all which we may ſee, that in the Old Teſtament the Meſſiah was foretold to be a real man, which the ancient Jews well underſtood, and believed: So that I now proceed to ſhew, that the foreſaid accounts in the Old Teſtament, are fully accompliſhed in the perſon of Jeſus of Nazareth, according to the New Teſtament; wherein,

1. Jeſus of Nazareth is repreſented as the one eternal God, and

2. As the real and promiſed Meſſiah or Chriſt. For,

The names of God; are adapted to him: Thus, when when the Phariſees confeſs'd, that Chriſt ſhould be the ſon of David, Matt. xxii. 43, 44: Jeſus replied, how then doth David in ſpirit call him Lord, ſaying, Jehovah or the Lord ſaid unto my Lord, or Adonai; for the Word was God, or the Greek, Theos; and Chriſt is God over all bleſſed for ever, and Theos or God, manifeſted in the fleſh, the true God and eternal life, the Lord of Glory, the bleſſed and only Potentate, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords: Nay, even the incommunicable name Jehovah belongs to him; for what is ſaid of Jehovah in the Old Teſtament is aſcribed to him in the New, particularly Pſ. lxviii. 18.

compared with Eph. iv. 8, 9, 10. and Pſ. cii. 25, &c. compared with Heb. i. 10, &c. ſo Iſa. vi. 3. compared with John xii. 41.

The Divine Attributes or Properties of God alſo, as Heb. i. 12. his unchangeableneſs with reſpect to his Divine Nature; ſo his independance and omnipotence, as when he ſays, I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the Ending, who was, and is, and is to come, the Almighty! Rev. i. 8. compared to Iſa. xli. 4. Rev. ii. 23. He is omniſcient, John ii. 24, 25. xxi. 17. and omnipreſent; for he promiſed at parting, Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world; and aſſerted his eternity, ſaying, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own ſelf, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was:" John xvii. 5. And in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily, being the brightneſs of the Father's glory, the expreſs image of his Perſon;" Philip. ii. 6.

The Divine Works and Operations are aſcribed to him as to the efficient cauſe: Thus creation; for all things were made by the "Logos, or Word, in Heaven and earth, viſible and inviſible, thrones, dominions, principalities or powers; all things were created by him and for him:" John i. 3. compared with Col. i. 16. So the general Providence of God is aſcribed to him; for "he upholdeth all things by the word of his power as the Logos; and as he is before all things, ſo by him all things conſiſt:" And the glorious works of man's Redemption in all its parts; for the Redeemed are his Elect, into whoſe hearts he ſends the Holy Ghoſt, which none but God can do; ſee Matt. xiv. 31.

He is alſo to be worſhipped with all Divine Honours; for even as Mediator, he ſays, John v. 22. "The Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men ſhould honour the Son even as they honour the Father;" for that the Son or the Mediator is Immanuel: So the Apoſtle proves by Iſa. xlv. 23. that we ſhall all ſtand before the Judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, "Unto me every knee ſhall bow, every tongue ſhall ſwear;" Phil. ii. 10, 11. which he applies more plainly to Chriſt, who was exalted, "that in the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in Heaven and on earth, and under the earth, and every tongue ſhould confeſs that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, to the glory of God the Father;" who when he brought his firſt-begotten into the world, the Mediator Immanuel, ſaid, "Let all the Angels of God worſhip him!" Heb. i. 6. compared with Pſal. xcvii. 7. As it is written, "Worſhip him all you Elohim." Therefore he is worſhipped equally with the Father in baptiſm, and Spirit and in the Chriſtian Benediction, and we pray to him; for Stephen was ſtoned, ſaying, "Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit!" For as we believe in God we muſt believe alſo in him, who is the author and finiſher of our faith, the Lord our Righteouſneſs and Strength, being the eternal Word as well as real Man. And now this being proved, I ſhall only add a few particulars to what has been ſaid, to evince, that this Divine Perſon was the Meſſiah.

The Apoſtle ſhews that Jeſus is the promiſed ſeed; Gal. iii. 16. of the woman, by ſhewing he was the "ſeed of Abraham;——for to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made; he ſaith not, and to ſeeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy ſeed which is Chriſt;" Heb. vii. The ſame Apoſtle ſhews how Jeſus the Son of God is the true Melchizedek-Melech-Salem the King of Righteouſneſs, the King of Peace, the Prieſt of the Moſt High God. And he is frequently call'd the ſeed of David, the Redeemer Goel; and Peter ſays, Acts iii. 22. "Moſes truly ſaid unto the Fathers, a Prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you of your brethren like unto me:" So Paul at Antioch proves him at large to be the Meſſiah declared to be the Son of God by his reſurrection, Acts xiii. Our Evangeliſt alſo aſſerts him to be the Logos, or Word, made fleſh; and, as it was foretold, He was the child born of the Bleſſed Virgin at Bethlehem, the true Eliakim who opens and ſhuts at pleaſure, "who has ſwallowed up death in victory, 1 Cor. xv. 54. the ſtone whom the builders rejected, and is become the head of the corner, as he aſſerts of himſelf;" Rev. iii. 7. and Peter proves it by his reſurrection according to the Prophecies of David and Iſaiah, Acts iv. 11. And was he not introduced into his miniſtry by the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs? John i. 23. And did not he enter Jeruſalem as the King of Zion riding on an aſs according to the Prophecy? Zech. ix. 9.

In ſhort, the promiſed Meſſiah, his Mediatoral Office as the Prophet, prieſt and King of the Church, both his natures, all his conduct in both his ſtates of humiliation and exaltation, are exactly recounted in the New Teſtament as repreſented in the Old Teſtament.

Therefore, if the promiſed Meſſiah is already manifeſted in the fleſh, he muſt be our Jeſus of Nazareth; for the time of the Meſſiah's being manifeſted in the fleſh is now elapſed 173 years, as will appear by the following computation. For,

We are to fix the time when the Logos, or Word, was made fleſh according to the Old Teſtament, when Mark Antony and Octavianus got the conſent of the Roman ſenate to lead Herod I. to the capitol of Rome between them, and there created him King of the Jews, before the Chriſtian Æra commenced forty Years, or A. M. 3964. in the year of the Julian Period 4674. And Herod, by the help of the Romans, took in Jeruſalem three years after, and having deſtroyed the Aſmonæan or Maccabæan royal race, he reigned alone: For though Herod was a Jew in religion, he was only a proſelyte, but by nation a noble Idumæan or Edomite. So then the ſceptre was departed from Judah. Beſides,

The Meſſiah was to come while the ſecond temple ſtood as was foretold, Hag. ii. 7. Mal. iii. 1. Now that temple, firſt founded by Zerobabel, was not deſtroyed by Herod I. but only enlarged, beautified and fortified; ſo that ſtill it went by the name of the Temple of Zerobabel, and was deſtroyed with the Holy City by the Romans, A. D. 69. or A. M. 4073. Jul. Per. 4783. after which the Jews were gradually diſperſed over all the earth. Now,

According to the Prophecies, the incarnation of the Word or Logos muſt happen between thoſe dates: For thus we have the time reduced from the inauguration of Herod I.

In the year of the Julian Period 4674 } or A. M.—3964 }
To the number of years ——— 109 } ——— 109 }

For the total is Jul. Period 4783 Total A. M. 4073
when the Romans burnt the temple. But

We are more nicely directed to the year when the Word was made fleſh by the famous Prophecy of Daniel's ſeventy weeks; Dan. ix. 20, &c. For while he was at prayer, God ſent the Angel Gabriel to fly ſwiftly, and touch him about the time of the evening oblation, ſaying, O Daniel, ſeventy weeks are determin'd upon thy people and upon the Holy City, &c. All which I have particularly ſet forth before in the notes to the ſecond chapter of Luke, to which I ſhall refer my readers for an exact computation of thoſe ſeventy weeks, &c. So that here I ſhall only add,

That as the day of his birth is not certainly fixed in Scripture, the learned have differ'd about it: For ſome of the old eaſtern Chriſtians obſerv'd it on the 6th of January; ſome in September about the time of the Jewiſh feaſt of tabernacles; ſome on the 22d of April, and others on the 22d of May. But the weſtern Churches have agreed upon the 25th of December, which is injoin'd by the Church of Rome with a ſevere penalty, tho' without warrant from God's Holy Scripture, which is to be accounted the only rule of faith and life; and which alone teacheth us in what manner the Word was made fleſh, or the incarnation of Chriſt.

By fleſh here we mean not the human body only, but the whole human nature often expreſs'd by fleſh in Scripture; Gen. vi. 12. Pſalm lxv. 2. Iſa. xl. 6. lxvi. 16. liii. 10. And

In his conception we ſhould conſider three principles, the paſſive, the material, and the active principle.

The paſſive Principle was the Virgin Mary, tho' poor, yet royally deſcended of the tribe of Judah and line of David; a Virgin betroth'd to her couſin Joſeph, but the marriage not conſummated; that ſo the legitimacy of Chriſt's birth and her virginity might be certain by the teſtimony of her Bridegroom, who took care to maintain her and her ſon.

The material Principle of Chriſt's conception was not the eſſence of the Logos converted into a human nature; for that is the Godhead and repugnant to fleſh. Nor, for the ſame reaſon, can it be call'd the eſſence of the Holy Ghoſt; nor any thing immediately created in Heaven and ſent into the Virgin's womb; for that the Scripture intimates nothing of it. But it was the ſeed of the Bleſſed Virgin, whence Chriſt is call'd the ſeed of the woman, even that ſeed propagated from Adam and Eve down to the Virgin Mary, through the progenitors of Jeſus Meſſiah.

The active Principle is the Holy Trinity; for we find this work aſcrib'd to the Father as having prepar'd a body for Chriſt; Heb. x. 5. and to the Logos himſelf who aſſumed the form of a ſervant; Phil. ii. 7. but by way of appropriation to the Holy Ghoſt by the Angel Gabriel, Luke i. 35. But the Holy Ghoſt was the chief actor, it was he that ſeparated a certain portion of the Virgin's ſubſtance to form the body of Chriſt, affording it a capacity of formation; purged that Virgin-ſeed, from natural unwholeſomneſs or dregs from which in time ſin might reſult, that ſo he might be born an Holy Thing: And ſo by degrees the Holy Ghoſt formed that part of the Virgin's ſubſtance, into a well-ſhaped human body, and when it was duly organized and animated, He infuſed into it a rational life or a human ſoul; for it is God that forms the ſpirit of man within him, Zech. xii. 1.

The Holy Ghoſt having united the human ſoul and body in the Virgin's womb, the Logos aſſumed that complete human nature into a perſonal union with himſelf inſeparably; and though we know not the nice moment of that aſſumption, we are ſure it muſt be after Gabriel's annunciation.

The incarnation of Chriſt includes alſo his birth or nativity, according to the promiſes and types of the Old Teſtament, and the hiſtory of it in the New (Luke ii. and Matt. i.) wherein God is ſaid to have ſent his Son made of a woman, made under the law, born a child ſubject to the law of Moſes, born of a poor Virgin as a root out of a dry ground, the firſt-born of his mother (not that ſhe bore any more children but none before him) born truly as other men are, his mother having travel-pains like other women, born like unto us in all things except ſin; born at Bethlehem according to the prediction, born in the ſtable of an inn among beaſts, laid in a manger for want of a cradle, and for want of a nurſe the Virgin wrapped him in ſwadling-clouts. All which circumſtances ſhew the truth of his human nature and his profound humiliation: And he is expreſly reckoned among the firſt-born that open the womb; for when he was preſented in the temple, the Evangeliſt Luke ii. 22, 23. ſays, As it is written in the law of the Lord, every male that openeth the womb ſhall be called holy to the Lord!

But though the Virgin Mother was not free from original ſin, her only Son was. For, ſaid the Angel to Mary, That Holy Thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God; whoſe birth was notified by a great Angel to the ſhepherds, who heard it ſung by a large choir of Angels, and went to viſit this new-born king of the Jews; as the ſtar directed the three magi, or kings, to viſit and congratulate his high-birth, the news of which terrified King Herod and all in Jeruſalem. Thus the day ſpring from on high that hath viſited us, Luke i 78. God ſending forth his Son made of a woman, Gal. iv 4. For, The Word was made fleſh and dwelt among us. Therefore,

It follows that we conſider the union of theſe extremes in the one perſon of the Word made fleſh. And herein, let it be obſerved,

1. That the extremes united are the Logos or Word, and fleſh or the human nature. The Logos or Word, the ſecond perſon in the Godhead, or the Divine Nature of Chriſt, is the one extreme: Not the Divine Nature conſidered in its latitude, or as in the whole Trinity without regard to Perſonality; for then not the Word only, but the Father and Spirit had been made fleſh: Nor could the Mediator in that caſe be a Perſon, becauſe he could not have received his Perſonality from the Divine Nature in its latitude that has no Perſonality; nor from the human nature, as will ſhortly appear.

But the Divine Perſon of the Word is united to the human nature, or has aſſumed it into union with himſelf, from whence the Mediator has his Perſonality, which reſults not from his two natures, but from the Perſon of the Word; yet ſo as not to exclude the Divine Nature; becauſe the Perſon of the Word is the Divine Nature, whereby God is ſaid to be manifeſted in the fleſh: Therefore, though the Divine Nature is incarnated, it is only in the Perſon of the Word preciſely; not the Father, becauſe then the Mediator had been both Father and Son; nor the Spirit, becauſe the Anointer and Anointed had been the ſame, contrary to Iſa. lxi. 1. The Spirit of Jehovah God is upon me, becauſe Jehovah hath anointed me, &c. for though the works of God out of himſelf, or in the creature, are common to the three Perſons as to the operation, yet not as to the term or object of the operation; or though the three Perſons were concerned in the operation of the human nature, yet the aſſumption of it was peculiar to the ſecond Perſon, who being the middle Perſon in the Trinity, became the Mediator between God and man by a participation of both natures.

The other extreme united is not a human perſon, but the human nature, which was aſſumed by the Divine Perſon of the Word, and the whole human nature in all its conſtituent parts neceſſary and like unto us in all things except ſin, but without human Perſonality: For though that human nature was a ſingular intelligent ſubſtance, it can no more, than a ſeparate ſoul, be called a perſon; for that a human perſon is a complete ſubſiſtence of itſelf, and cannot be the part of another perſon or ſubſiſtence; whereas the human nature aſſumed is a part of the Mediator Immanuel, and not a complete ſubſiſtence. For two perſons cannot be united, no more than two trees: But as we take the branch of one tree to graft it into another tree, not into another branch; ſo the human nature was grafted into the Divine Perſon of the Word: And though that human nature was in all things, except ſin, not only like unto us, but even the ſame with us, yet it was without human perſonality; otherwiſe Chriſt would have been a human perſon, which he is not, tho' he has all that conſtitutes a man except human perſonality, whereby a man muſt ſubſiſt of himſelf, and is not, nor can be, the part of another perſonal ſubſiſtence. Nor is this any leſſening of the dignity of Chriſt's human nature; for as it is more honourable in a branch to be ingrafted into a noble ſtock than to be growing or ſubſiſting alone; even ſo the human nature of Chriſt, the Branch of Jehovah, needs not Perſonality, or diſtinct ſubſiſtence, to make him perfect, and is exalted above a human perſon by this perſonal union, nay, above the Angels; and though Chriſt's human nature is not complete without the Perſon of the Word, or cannot ſubſiſt of itſelf alone, yet it is highly honoured by being for ever joined to the Perſon of the Word as a neceſſary part of the Mediator Immanuel.

Therefore, this extreme is deſtitute of all perſonality, not only of that which is proper to mankind, but even of any communicated perſonality from its union with the Logos, as the Lutherans ſay. For then, Chriſt's human nature would not only be a perſon, but a Divine Perſon too; and the Divine Perſonality of the Logos being the Divine Eſſence, the human nature would be alſo the Divine Eſſence by ſuch a communication, which is highly abſurd. Yet, the union is ſufficiently perſonal by the relation of the human nature to the Divine Perſon of the Logos, whereby they conſtitute the one Perſon of the Mediator. So that when we read that in him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily! Let it be noted, That there is no mention here of Perſonality, but of the Godhead, which is not ſaid to dwell in the human nature, but in him, or in the whole perſon of Chriſt, and that alſo bodily, or with his fleſh: So that the ſenſe is; That in the one Perſon of the Mediator Immanuel, the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells, or cohabits with fleſh, or the human nature. But,

Tho' the human nature of Chriſt is not a human perſon, or has not a diſtinct perſonal ſubſiſtence, it has a ſubſtantial exiſtence, and while he dwelt on earth, was a real and true human nature like unto us in all things, except ſin, and is now as real in his exalted ſtate; for a diſtinct ſubſiſtence is not properly requiſite in the nature, but in the perſon. Which brings me to conſider,

The union of theſe extremes is called the perſonal or hypoſtatical union, by which the two extremes united conſtitute the one perſon of the Mediator.

The nature of this union is a certain ineffable relation of the Word to the human nature, by which this ſame human nature, is the peculiar human nature of the Word. But this cannot be repreſented by any logical term, becauſe of its ſublimeneſs.

Nor can the manner of this union be better expreſs'd than as by the ancients, who, ſteering between the rocks of error, (that of the Neſtorians affirming two perſons to be

be in Chriſt, and that of the Eutychians affirming a third nature made up of the two ;) were wont to ſay, that in Immanuel the two natures were joined without divulſion, without ſeparation, in the ſame one perſon of Chriſt, and without mutation or confuſion of the two natures : Therefore this union is not of the ſame eſſence, like the union of the three perſons in the Holy Trinity with reſpect to the ſame Divine Eſſence —— nor natural, like the union of matter and form —— nor merely habitual, like that between two friends —— nor made by the mere omnipreſent efficacy of the Logos —— nor only myſtically, or by the preſence of God's grace, as between Chriſt and believers. But it is a plain perſonal union, as the human nature aſſumed coaleſceth in the ſame perſon with the Logos or Word aſſuming, without any confuſion or change of the properties of each nature ; or, it is a union of natures, though not a natural union ; it is a perſonal union, though not a union of perſons ; and the ſafeſt expreſſion is, a ſupernatural and inconceivable union, the incarnation of the Son of God, which the ancients repreſented by the plain ſimilitude of three perſons preparing one garment which is to be worn by one of them : So the father, word and ſpirit prepared the human nature, which the Word aſſumed unto union with him, appropriating it to himſelf, ſo prepared by the Trinity ; and the activity of the Word is expreſs'd in Scripture ſtile, when 'tis ſaid, The Word was made fleſh, came in the fleſh, aſſumed the form of a ſervant, did partake of fleſh and blood, took upon him, not the nature of Angels, but the ſeed of Abraham. And

It appears from the premiſes, that the incarnation is reſtrain'd to one of the three perſons in his perſonal propriety ; that this was the ſecond perſon of the Trinity, but that the Divine Nature received no change by the aſſumption of the human nature ; that no ſubſiſtence or perſonality reſults from this indiviſible and indiſſolveable union ; for Chriſt's perſonality is in his Divine Nature only.

This union remains indiviſible and indiſſolvable for ever ; nay, it was not diſturbed even in the grave, when the human ſoul of Chriſt was ſeparated from his body ; for both his ſoul and body during the ſeparation, ſtill retained their relation to the Logos or Divine Nature of Chriſt ; the body being ſtill the body of the Logos, and the ſoul ſtill the ſoul of the Logos : and therefore David ſeeing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt, that his ſoul was not left in hades (or the ſtate of the dead) neither his fleſh did ſee corruption. Much leſs did this union ceaſe in the aſcenſion of Chriſt, by laying down his body ; for the two Angels told the Apoſtles at his aſcenſion, this ſame Jeſus, who is taken up from you into Heaven, ſhall ſo come in like manner as you have ſeen him go into Heaven.

The truth of this perſonal union has been bitterly oppoſed by the Jews and falſe Chriſtians, who object, 1. That Jeſus of Nazareth was a man ; therefore not God : But that follows not, becauſe the Scripture ſays the contrary. Obj. 2. Then two contrary natures were in Chriſt : Whereas they are not contrary but only diverſe, which may be united. Obj. 3. Then Chriſt's human nature would be a monſter : But by no means, becauſe perſonality is not neceſſary to conſtitute the nature. Obj 4. God could neither ſuffer nor die. But tho' his Godhead could not, the perſon of Chriſt could ſubject his human nature to ſuffering and death. Obj. 5. Then an eſſential change had happened in God, which is abſurd : But this union is only a perſonal relation that makes no change in the nature aſſuming Obj. 6. If it was true, why did not the other Evangeliſts, Matthew and Luke, declare it ? But they have declared it, tho' not ſo profeſſedly as John ; for that their principal undertaking was to give the hiſtory of his humanity.

But we that believe original ſin, the neceſſity of an atoning Mediator, and the plain accounts of him in Holy Scripture, deſpiſe thoſe poor cavils, pity the blind cavillers and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, the Word made fleſh, the Son of God, the Mediator Immanuel.

CHAP. II.

1 Chriſt turneth water into wine, 12 departeth into Capernaum, and to Jeruſalem, 14 where he purgeth the temple of buyers and ſellers. 19 He foretelleth his death and reſurrection. 23 Many believed becauſe of his miracles, but he would not truſt himſelf with them.

AND the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee ; and the mother of Jeſus was there.

2 And both Jeſus was called, and his diſciples, to the marriage.

3 And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jeſus ſaith unto him, They have no wine.

4 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come.

5 His mother ſaith unto the ſervants, Whatſoever he ſaith unto you, do it.

6 And there were ſet there ſix waterpots of ſtone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece.

7 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he ſaith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feaſt. And they bare it.

9 When the ruler of the feaſt had taſted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was (but the ſervants which drew the water knew) the governor of the feaſt called the bridegroom,

10 And ſaith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth ſet forth good wine ; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worſe : but thou haſt kept the good wine until now.

11 This beginning of miracles did Jeſus in Cana of Galilee, and manifeſted forth his glory ; and his diſciples believed on him.

12 ¶ After this, he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his diſciples, and they continued there not many days.

13 ¶ And the Jews paſſover was at hand, and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem,

14 And found in the temple thoſe that ſold oxen, and ſheep, and doves, and the changers of money, ſitting:

15 And when he had made a ſcourge of ſmall cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the ſheep, and the oxen ; and poured out the changers money, and overthrew the tables ;

16 And ſaid unto them that ſold doves, Take theſe things hence; make not my Fathers houſe an houſe of merchandiſe.

17 And his diſciples remembred that it was written, The zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up.

18 ¶ Then anſwered the Jews, and ſaid unto him, What ſign ſheweſt thou unto us, ſeeing that thou doſt theſe things?

19 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Deſtroy this temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up.

20 Then ſaid the Jews, Forty and ſix years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?

21 But he ſpake of the temple of his body.

22 When therefore he was riſen from the dead, his diſciples remembred that he had ſaid this unto them: and they believed the ſcripture, and the word which Jeſus had ſaid.

23 ¶ Now when he was at Jeruſalem at the paſſover, in the feaſt-day, many believed in his name, when they ſaw the miracles which he did.

24 But Jeſus did not commit himſelf unto them, becauſe he knew all men,

25 And needed not that any ſhould teſtify of man: for he knew what was in man.

Ver. 1. And the third day.] viz. From the time in which Simon is ſaid before in chap. i. 42. to come to Chriſt.

——— In Cana of Galilee.] This is particularized to diſtinguiſh it from another Cana, which was in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 8. —— xvii. 9. whereas this was in the tribe of Aſſur, which was ſituate in Galilee; as alſo it appears from Joſh. xix. 28. and probably, ſays Dr. Whitby, this was the place of abode of Alpheus or Cleophas, whoſe wife was Mary, the ſiſter of the mother of our Lord, for, it is conjectured, that this marriage-feaſt was in the houſe of this Cleophas; becauſe we read that the mother of our Lord was there uncalled, by reaſon of her near relation to them, whereas Chriſt and his diſciples are bid to the wedding, ver. 2. And again, becauſe the mother of Jeſus acts the part of a friend to the bridegroom, in being ſo ſolicitous for the ſupply of the wine, ver. 3.—Note, Grotius on this place gives it as his opinion, that Joſeph was now dead, becauſe there is no mention made of him at this feaſt, where, according to the cuſtom of his nation, he muſt have been, if alive.

Ver. 4. —Woman, what have I to do with thee?] The ancient father Irenæus is of opinion, that Jeſus ſpoke this by way of reprehenſion, becauſe that ſhe was guilty of ſome fault or error, in prompting her ſon to do this miracle unſeaſonably, lib. iii. ch. xviii; ſee alſo Chryſoſtom, Eutychius, Theophylact, and the modern commentator Maldonate on this text, who agree in the ſame interpretation.

——— Mine hour is not yet come.] The time for manifeſting my glory by my miracles, ver. 11. is not yet come, and ſo I am not bound to have regard to thy ſolicitations in this thing. But it ſhould be obſerved, how the ancient Gregory Nyſſen, paraphraſes this Scripture; "Woman, ſays he, what have I to do with thee? I have begun to gather diſciples, and to act as one ſent from God, and is not the hour of my exemption from thy authority yet come?" See Dr. Whitby in Loc. See alſo below, the notes on ver. 11.

Ver. 6.——After the manner of purifying of the Jews.] This relates to the Jewiſh cuſtom of waſhing their hands conſtantly before meals.

Ver. 9.———The governor of the feaſt called the bridegroom.] The governor of the feaſt was one who was appointed to bleſs what was provided; ſo that having taſted of this miraculous wine, when he had bleſſed it, and ſent it about, he ſpake to the bridegroom, &c. for φωνεῖν, may be properly tranſlated in this place, to ſpake to.

Ver. 10.———When men have well drank.] From hence ſome ludicrous reprobates have taken opportunity to upbraid Jeſus with encouraging of drunkenneſs, becauſe he ſtored the company with ſo much new wine after they had well drank. But theſe cavillers, not to call them worſe, have forgot, or never at leaſt conſider, That the goodneſs of God provideth an abundance of all things, and that he is nevertheleſs free from the ſin, which corrupt man incurs by his abuſe of his bleſſings and providential comforts. If therefore any of the company of this marriage-feaſt in Cana of Galilee, were guilty of exceſs in drinking, Chriſt was not to blame, becauſe he acted as God; but they, the drunkards, were alone in the tranſgreſſion; becauſe they ſinned without the fear of God.

Ver. 11.————Manifeſted his glory.] This was the end or reaſon, why Chriſt Jeſus turned the water into wine; He did not do it, becauſe his mother commanded him, nor to ſatisfy the greedy appetites of thoſe who had well drunken; but, having lately called his Apoſtles, to confirm them in his faith, by ſhewing them his power of working miracles, which is here ſtiled his glory; and accordingly, they believed on him, when they had ſeen this miracle, which manifeſted forth his Divine Power.

Ver. 15.———He made a ſcourge of ſmall cords.] See Matt. xxi. 14. and Mark xi. 17. Beſides it is not improper to obſerve, That Chriſt by making a whip of bullruſhes, which could hurt no-body, ſeemed to inſinuate, that his diſciples ſhould not uſe external force to take away the abuſes of men relating to his worſhip. And by calling the temple his father's houſe, he diſtinguiſheth himſelf from other Prophets, who ſometimes ſtile God their God, Iſa. lvii. 21. but never their father.

Ver. 24, 25. He knew all men, &c.] This is an ample teſtimony of the Divinity of Chriſt; for who can know the ſecrets of the hearts of all men, except God alone; ſee 1 Kings viii. 39. Pſ. xxxiii. 15.

CHAP. III.

1 Chriſt teacheth Nicodemus the neceſſity of regeneration, 14 of faith in his death. 16 The great love of God towards the world. 18 Condemnation for unbelief. 23 The baptiſm, witneſs, and doctrine of John concerning Chriſt.

THERE was a man of the Phariſees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews:

2 The ſame came to Jeſus by night, and ſaid unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do theſe miracles that thou doſt, except God be with him.

3 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Verily verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God.

4 Nicodemus ſaith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the ſecond time into his mothers womb and be born?

I.Mynde ſculp.^t

As Moses lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderneſs, even so was the Son of Man lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal Life. John. III. 14, 15.

5 Jeſus anſwered, Verily verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

6 That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh; and that which is born of the Spirit, is ſpirit.

7 Marvel not that I ſaid unto thee, Ye muſt be born again.

8 The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: ſo is every one that is born of the Spirit.

9 Nicodemus anſwered and ſaid unto him, How can theſe things be?

10 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Art thou a maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things?

11 Verily verily I ſay unto thee, We ſpeak that we do know, and teſtify that we have ſeen; and ye receive not our witneſs.

12 If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how ſhall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?

13 And no man hath aſcended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven.

14 ¶ And as Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, even ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up:

15 That whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life.

16 ¶ For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

17 For God ſent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be ſaved.

18 ¶ He that believeth on him, is not condemned: but he that believeth not, is condemned already, becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

19 And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil.

20 For every one that doth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved.

21 But he that doth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought in God.

22 ¶ After theſe things came Jeſus and his diſciples into the land of Judea, and there he tarried with them, and baptized.

23 ¶ And John alſo was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, becauſe there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.

24 For John was not yet caſt into priſon.

25 ¶ Then there aroſe a queſtion between ſome of Johns diſciples and the Jews, about purifying.

26 And they came unto John, and ſaid unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bareſt witneſs, behold, the ſame baptizeth, and all men come to him.

27 John anſwered and ſaid, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

28 Ye your ſelves bear me witneſs, that I ſaid, I am not the Chriſt, but that I am ſent before him.

29 He that hath the bride, is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which ſtandeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly becauſe of the bridegrooms voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled.

30 He muſt increaſe, but I muſt decreaſe.

31 He that cometh from above, is above all: he that is of the earth, is earthly, and ſpeaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven, is above all.

32 And what he hath ſeen and heard, that he teſtifieth; and no man receiveth his teſtimony.

33 He that hath received his teſtimony, hath ſet to his ſeal, that God is true.

34 For he whom God hath ſent, ſpeaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure unto him.

35 The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.

36 He that believeth on the Son, hath everlaſting life: and he that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

Ver. 1. There was, &c.] At Jeruſalem.

——— A ruler of the Jews.] One of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim; ſee John vii. 50.

Ver. 2. The ſame.] This is οὗτος in the original, and might more properly be tranſlated by he, i. e. Nicodemus, who came to converſe with Jeſus by night, covertly or in ſecret, leaſt he ſhould offend his colleagues, and be expelled from his place in the great council of the nation, wherein one day or other, he might hope to be of ſervice to Jeſus and his followers.

——— We know that thou art a teacher come from God, &c.] As this could not include the knowledge or belief of his brethren, the Phariſees and rulers of the Sanhedrim; becauſe it is poſitively ſaid afterwards, that they did not believe on him, John vii. 48. Therefore the original, οἴδαμεν, i. e. we know; may chiefly relate to Nicodemus, and only ſignify I know, as it often doth; or, at moſt, I, and theſe other diſciples that follow thee, know; ſee the introduction to this Goſpel, and the note on ch. xxi. 24. It may alſo be taken imperſonally, and ſignify it is, or by thy works it may be known; as when the blind man hereafter ſaith, we know, that God heareth not ſinners, ch. ix. 31. See Matt. xxvi. 2. Luke xx. 21. Rom. ii. 2. iii. 19. vii. 14. 1 Cor. viii. 4. 1 Tim. i. 8.

——— Except God be with him.] This plainly proves, that the works which Nicodemus had ſeen, or heard to be done by Jeſus, were of that excellency as to demonſtrate and convince him, that his power exceeded all that men or Devils could do.

Ver. 3. Jeſus, &c.] Obſerving, that this ruler of the Jews, was captivated by and pinned his faith upon his miracle-working-power, not taking the leaſt notice of the excellency and power of his doctrine, which is able to change the hearts, and reform the lives of men, anſwered and ſaid to him; Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, this confeſſion of thine is not unto ſalvation, it is not ſufficient to render thee a true member of that kingdom, I am to erect; for thou muſt not only acknowledge and believe, that I am a teacher come from God; but thou and all men, before ye can be heirs of my kingdom, muſt be born again, i. e. be renewed in mind, will, and affections by the co-operation of the Holy Spirit, and ſo become new creatures.

——— He cannot ſee the kingdom of God.] Both this phraſe, and that at ver. 5. ſignify no more than to be real members of that kingdom; and to enjoy the bleſſings belonging to them who are ſo born again.

By kingdom, here is meant that ſpiritual kingdom, which was to be erected by the Meſſiah, and into which men enter by baptiſm; whence, it muſt follow, that no man is indeed a member of Chriſt's kingdom, who is not truly regenerate, "If ye continue in my word, ſaith Chriſt, then are ye my diſciples indeed," John viii. 31 And "if any man, ſaith the Apoſtle, hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his," Rom. viii. 9.

Note alſo, that our Bleſſed Saviour, "who needed not that any ſhould teſtify of man, for he knew what was in man;" ch. ii. 25. ſeems in this phraſe, particularly to put Nicodemus in mind of that preſumptious, falſe, and pernicious conception of the Jewiſh doctors, the ſcribes and Phariſees, who thought they had a title to the kingdom of God, and bleſſings of it, as being the ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh, and to convince him that they vainly promiſed to themſelves and to their followers, the Iſraelites, a portion on that account in the world to come. I ſay, Jeſus aſſures Nicodemus, that ſuch preſumptions are falſe, and that none can enter into the kingdom of God, unleſs he firſt become a new creature.

Ver. 5. ——— Except a man be born of water.] Our Saviour here ſpeaks of baptiſmal regeneration; for though water, is ſometimes put to ſignify or repreſent the purifying operations of the Holy Spirit; yet to be born of water is a phraſe, not once uſed in Scripture, for being born of the ſpirit; but it is very properly uſed of that baptiſm, which is the laver of regeneration, Tit. iii. 5.

——— And of the Spirit.] i. e. Except a man receive by the ſacramental waſhing of baptiſm, the grace of the Holy Spirit, which is thereby conferred on all believers, purifying our hearts from all worldly and carnal luſts, and enabling us to live a ſpiritual life, according to the doctrine of Chriſt. And here,

Let it be obſerved, that whereas the queſtion between Chriſt and Nicodemus, was, about that which was requiſite to fit a man to enter into the kingdom or Church of God, and make him partaker of the bleſſings of the Goſpel; and Chriſt has declared that baptiſm by water, is the ordinary means of entring into that kingdom, Mark xvi. 16. compared with John iv. 1. and Matt. xxviii. 19. Acts x. 47, 48. So here Chriſt ſpeaks of baptiſm by water, as a rite neceſſary for the entrance of adult perſons into his kingdom; ſee our Diſſertation on baptiſm, in the courſe of this work.

Ver. 6. — That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh.] This alludes to that vain-boaſting of the Jews, who valued themſelves, for being of the ſeed of Abraham, and on that account alone thought themſelves entitled to eternal life. But Chriſt tells Nicodemus in this text, that their hopes were vain, that it was not ſufficient for them to have Abraham for their father; for unleſs they concurred with the Spirit of God, and ſhould be renewed in their ſouls, by doing the will of the God of Abraham, they could not be ſaved.

Ver. 8. The wind bloweth where it liſteth.] Here our Saviour compares the operation of the Holy Spirit to the blowing of a natural wind: For, ſays he to Nicodemus, Thou heareſt the ſound of the wind when it rattles about thy ears, and by that diſcerneſt the thing itſelf, but yet thou canſt not tell whence it cometh nor whither it goeth, though it came certainly from one place, and as certainly goeth to another: ſo is it with every one that is born of the ſpirit; for, the effects produced in him by the Holy Spirit plainly ſhew his preſence, and a great change in him, and he, the penitent himſelf, perceives it, but the operations of the ſpirit producing this change, are not perceptible to others, nor is the renewed perſon always able to perceive and diſtinguiſh them from the inward workings of his own mind.

Ver. 10 ——— Art thou a maſter of Iſrael? &c.] Jeſus upbraids Nicodemus with ignorance; becauſe, as he was a ruler, ſo he was a teacher, διδάσκαλος, in Iſrael, who were accuſtomed to ſay of their own baptized proſelytes, that they were as new-born babes; and of wiſdom, that it comes from above; ſee Selden de Jure Natural. lib. 2. c. 4.

Ver. 11. ——— Ye receive not our witneſs.] Ye do not believe and confeſs that truth, which I confirm with miracles.

Ver. 12. If I have told you earthly things.] Or, ſuch things, as the new birth or regeneration, which I have illuſtrated to you by ſimilitudes taken from your common practice and earthly inventions: How can I expect you will believe me when I tell you of my deſcent from Heaven, and my aſſumption of the human nature, which cannot be thus familiarly repreſented to your ſenſes by any thing you do upon earth?

Ver. 13. And no man hath aſcended unto Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of man who is in Heaven.] The Jewiſh Targum, in Cant. 1. 5, 11, 12. endeavours to contradict this Scripture, by ſaying, that Moſes aſcended into the high heavens; but this is contrary to the revealed account of that Prophet, which carries him no higher than Mount Sinai. But this is moſt true of Chriſt, as I have proved at large in the notes at the end of ch. i.

——— Who is in Heaven.] According to his Divine Nature; ſee the notes at the end of ch. i.

Ver. 17. For God ſent not his Son ——— to condemn the world, but that the world by him might be ſaved.] This alſo was to acquaint Nicodemus of that thoughts which the Jews harboured of the goodneſs of God, viz. that the world was at firſt made for their ſakes only, 2 Eſd. vi. 55, &c. And alſo that the redemption of it was only deſigned for their particular good, and that the Meſſiah would come and ſubdue and condemn the nations whom he hated for their ſakes, were too narrow and unbecoming the Wiſdom, Juſtice, Goodneſs, and Mercy of God; and therefore tells him in the text, That God was ſo far from hating or condemning all other nations, that he had ſent him the Meſſiah into the world to ſave them all, and conſequently to die for them.

Ver. 19. — Darkneſs more than light.] See the notes on Luke ii.

Ver. 22. And he baptized.] Only as John had done into the faith of the Meſſiah which was to come, and with that baptiſm of repentance which prepared the Jews for the reception of his kingdom; otherwiſe this will not conſiſt with Matt. xvi. 20. and xvii. 9. Where he forbids his diſciples to publiſh him to be the Chriſt till he was riſen from the dead.

Ver. 23. Much water.] Becauſe the Jews uſed to dip the bodies to be baptized, which ceremony required much or deep water.

Ver. 34.——By meaſure.] i.e. Sparingly; ſee Ezek. iv. 16. Jer. xxx. 11. xlvi. 28. So to give without meaſure, is to beſtow a thing in the greateſt affluence and without reſtraint.

CHAP. IV.

1 Chriſt talketh with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth himſelf unto her: 27 His diſciples marvel: 31 He declareth to them his zeal to God's glory: 39 Many Samaritans believe on him: 43 He departeth into Galilee, and healeth the ruler's ſon that lay ſick at Capernaum.

WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Phariſees had heard that Jeſus made and baptized more diſciples than John,

2 (Though Jeſus himſelf baptized not, but his diſciples)

3 He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee.

4 And he muſt needs go through Samaria.

5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his ſon Joſeph.

6 Now Jacobs well was there. Jeſus therefore being wearied with his journey, ſat thus on the well: and it was about the ſixth hour.

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jeſus ſaith unto her, Give me to drink.

8 For his diſciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.

9 Then ſaith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou being a Jew, askeſt drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.

10 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, If thou kneweſt the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldſt have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

11 The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, thou haſt nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then haſt thou that living water?

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himſelf, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, Whoſoever drinketh of this water ſhall thirſt again:

14 But whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt: but the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing up into everlaſting life.

15 The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirſt not, neither come hither to draw.

16 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

17 The woman anſwered and ſaid, I have no husband. Jeſus ſaid unto her, Thou haſt well ſaid, I have no husband:

18 For thou haſt had five husbands, and he whom thou now haſt, is not thy husband: in that ſaidſt thou truly.

19 The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet.

20 Our fathers worſhipped in this mountain; and ye ſay, that in Jeruſalem is the place where men ought to worſhip.

21 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye ſhall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem worſhip the Father.

22 Ye worſhip ye know not what: we know what we worſhip: for ſalvation is of the Jews.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and in truth: for the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him.

24 God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit, and in truth.

25 The woman ſaith unto him, I know that Meſſias cometh which is called Chriſt: when he is come, he will tell us all things.

26 Jeſus ſaith unto her, I that ſpeak unto thee, am he.

27 ¶ And upon this came his diſciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man ſaid, What ſeekeſt thou? or, Why talkeſt thou with her?

28 The woman then left her water-pot, and went her way into the city, and ſaith to the men,

29 Come, ſee a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Chriſt?

30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

31 ¶ In the mean while his diſciples prayed him, ſaying, Maſter, eat.

32 But he ſaid unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

33 Therefore ſaid the diſciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat?

34 Jeſus ſaith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that ſent me, and to finiſh his work.

35 Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harveſt? behold, I ſay unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harveſt.

36 And he that reapeth, receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that ſoweth, and he that reapeth, may rejoice together.

37 And herein is that ſaying true, One ſoweth, and another reapeth.

38 I ſent you to reap that whereon ye beſtowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entred into their labours.

39 ¶ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him, for the ſaying of the woman, which teſtified, He told me all that ever I did.

40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they beſought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

41 And many more believed, becauſe of his own word:

42 And ſaid unto the woman, Now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſaying: for we have heard him our ſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world.

43 ¶ Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee:

44 For Jeſus himſelf teſtified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.

45 Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, having ſeen all the things that he did at Jeruſalem at the feaſt: for they alſo went unto the feaſt.

46 So Jeſus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain noble man, whoſe ſon was ſick at Capernaum.

47 When he heard that Jeſus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and beſought him that he would come down and heal his ſon: for he was at the point of death.

48 Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Except ye ſee ſigns and wonders, ye will not believe:

49 The noble man ſaith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

50 Jeſus ſaith unto him, Go thy way; thy ſon liveth. And the man believed the word that Jeſus had ſpoken unto him, and he went his way.

51 And as he was now going down, his ſervants met him, and told him, ſaying, Thy ſon liveth.

52 Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend: and they ſaid unto him, Yeſterday at the ſeventh hour the fever left him.

53 So the father knew that it was at the ſame hour, in the which Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thy ſon liveth; and himſelf believed, and his whole houſe.

CHAP. V.

1 Jeſus on the ſabbath-day cureth him that was diſeaſed eight and thirty years: 10 The Jews therefore cavil, and perſecute him for it: 17 He anſwereth for himſelf, and reproveth them, ſhewing by the teſtimony of his Father, 32 of John, 36 of his works, 39 and of the ſcriptures, who he is.

AFTER this there was a feaſt of the Jews, and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem.

2 Now there is at Jeruſalem by the ſheep-market a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue, Betheſda, having five porches.

3 In theſe lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water.

4 For an angel went down at a certain ſeaſon into the pool, and troubled the water: whoſoever then firſt after the troubling of the water ſtepped in, was made whole of whatſoever diſeaſe he had.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6 When Jeſus ſaw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that caſe, he ſaith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man anſwered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another ſteppeth down before me.

8 Jeſus ſaith unto him, Riſe, take up thy bed, and walk.

9 And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the ſame day was the ſabbath.

10 ¶ The Jews therefore ſaid unto him that was cured, It is the ſabbath-day; it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11 He anſwered them, He that made me whole, the ſame ſaid unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

12 Then aſked they him, What man is that which ſaid unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

13 And he that was healed, wiſt not who it was: for Jeſus had conveyed himſelf away, a multitude being in that place.

14 Afterward Jeſus findeth him in the temple, and ſaid unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto thee.

15 The man departed, and told the Jews that it was Jeſus which had made him whole.

16 And therefore did the Jews perſecute Jeſus, and ſought to ſlay him, becauſe he had done theſe things on the ſabbath-day.

17 ¶ But Jeſus anſwered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

18 Therefore the Jews ſought the more to kill him, becauſe he not only had broken the ſabbath, but ſaid alſo, that God was his Father, making himſelf equal with God.

19 Then anſwered Jeſus and ſaid unto them, Verily verily I ſay unto you, The Son can do nothing of himſelf, but what he ſeeth the Father do: for what things ſoever he doth, theſe alſo doth the Son likewiſe.

20 For the Father loveth the Son, and ſheweth him all things that himſelf doth: and he will ſhew him greater works than theſe, that ye may marvel.

21 For as the Father raiſeth up the dead, and quickneth them: even ſo the Son quickneth whom he will.

22 For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.

23 That all men ſhould honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him.

24 Verily verily I ſay unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into condemnation; but is paſſed from death unto life.

25 Verily verily I ſay unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear ſhall live.

26 For as the Father hath life in himſelf; ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf;

27 And hath given him authority to execute judgment alſo, becauſe he is the Son of man.

28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice.

29 And ſhall come forth, they that have done good, unto the reſurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the reſurrection of damnation.

30 I can of mine own ſelf do nothing; as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is juſt; becauſe I ſeek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath ſent me.

31 If I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true.

32 ¶ There is another that beareth witneſs of me, and I know that the witneſs which he witneſſeth of me is true.

33 Ye ſent unto John, and he bare witneſs unto the truth.

34 But I receive not teſtimony from man: but theſe things I ſay, that ye might be ſaved.

35 He was a burning and a ſhining light: and ye were willing for a ſeaſon to rejoice in his light.

36 ¶ But I have greater witneſs than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me.

37 And the Father himſelf which hath ſent me, hath born witneſs of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor ſeen his ſhape.

38 And ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath ſent, him ye believe not.

39 ¶ Search the ſcriptures, for in them ye think, ye have eternal life, and they are they which teſtify of me.

40 And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.

41 I receive not honour from men.

42 But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43 I am come in my Fathers name, and ye receive me not: if another ſhall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

44 How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and ſeek not the honour that cometh from God only?

45 Do not think that I will accuſe you to the father: there is one that accuſeth you, even Moſes, in whom ye truſt.

46 For had ye believed Moſes, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me.

47 But if ye believe not his writings, how ſhall ye believe my words?

Ver. 1. After this there was a feaſt of the Jews.] This was the feaſt of the paſſover, requiring the appearance of all the adult males at the temple, Deut. xvi. 16.

Ver. 2. —— Betheſda.] Or, the houſe of mercy, ſo called, becauſe of the mercy of God ſhewn there in the cure of the diſeaſed.

Ver. 8. Ariſe, take up thy bed and walk.] Where obſerve, that Chriſt does not require faith in this cripple, becauſe he had ſeen, and perhaps heard of none of his miracles; but he requires of him to do that on the ſabbath, which was contrary to the letter of the law, to ſhew he was a Prophet, who by their own rules had power to require what was contrary to the ceremonial reſt of that day; and to inſtruct them that to do this, not in contempt of the law, or for bodily advantage, but as a publick teſtimony of the great goodneſs of God to us, tended rather to the ſanctification, than to the prophanation of the ſabbath; that day being ſanctified for that very end, that men might employ it in glorifying and praiſing God for his benefits.

Ver. 17. My Father worketh hitherto.] God the Father hath continued ever ſince the creation of the world to preſerve and govern it, and to do thoſe things, which tend to his glory, and the good of his creatures even on the ſabbath-day; and in imitation of him, I do my wondrous works of mercy, to the glory of his name on that day alſo, which being Divine, and done by his power and aſſiſtance, ſhew that I do nothing in them contrary to his will.

Ver. 18. — He ſaid that God was his Father.] Or, his own Father; a Father in a peculiar manner proper to him alone.

—— Making himſelf equal with.] In nature, as a ſon is equal in nature with his own father; ſee the Diſſertation on the incarnation of the Son of God, at the end of the notes on the firſt chapter.

Ver. 19. —— The ſon can do nothing of himſelf, but what he ſeeth the Father do, &c.] Jeſus obſerving, that the Jews accuſed him of being a falſe prophet, becauſe he in this peculiar manner ſtiled God his Father, undertakes to ſhew, firſt, That he exerciſed this prophetical office according to the will of the Father; and ſecondly, that he confirmed it by miracles done by the power of God reſiding in him. Chriſt therefore, ſeems here only to ſpeak of his prophetick office, and of the doctrine which he taught and confirmed by miracles; and not of his eſſential power: (1.) Becauſe as to his eſſential power, the action of the Father and of the Son, being one and the ſame both as to power and time, he cannot properly be ſaid to do nothing of himſelf, or to do nothing but what he ſees the Father do. (2.) Becauſe, as to ſpeak nothing of himſelf, is to ſpeak nothing of his own inſtinct, and will, without commiſſion from God. So to do nothing of himſelf, is to do nothing without commiſſion from, and knowledge of the will of God that he ſhould do it, and ſo reſpecteth his prophetick office, and the things done in confirmation of it; and then the words following, unleſs he ſee the Father doing them, muſt bear this ſenſe, unleſs he, by the Spirit of the Father reſiding in him, ſee that the Father would have them done by him; for what the Father ποιῇ, would have done, he doth according to his will, or as he would have them to be done. And this import of the words ſeems to be confirmed:

1ſt, From the following words: for the Father loveth the Son, ϗ πάντα δείκνυσιν αὐτῷ ἃ αὐτὸς ποιεῖ, and ſheweth him all things which he (the Son) doeth; and he will ſhew him greater works than theſe, (which are to be done by him, even that of raiſing the dead, ver. 21.) For, becauſe we receive all our knowledge from our eyes or ears, therefore Chriſt ſpeaking of the execution of his prophetick office, uſeth theſe metaphors, declaring, that he ſpake and teſtified what he had ſeen, ch. iii. 11. what he had ſeen with the Father, ch. viii. 38. and ſo the Baptiſt ſaith, What he hath ſeen, he teſtifies: And again, that he ſpake what he had heard from the Father, ch. viii. 26, 40—xv. 15. And, becauſe they who teach or declare things, do by that ſhew them to us; therefore Chriſt uſeth this metaphor here, and ſaith, ch. viii. 28. I do nothing of my ſelf, but as my Father hath taught me, ſo I ſpeak: And again, ch. xii. 49, 50. I have ſpoken nothing of my ſelf, but as the Father who ſent me, gave me commandment what I ſhould ſay and ſpeak; the things therefore which I ſpeak, as the Father ſaid to me, ſo I ſpeak. Now that he ſpake this with reſpect to the ſpirit of Propheſy, with which he was anointed, and by the Father ſent to preach the Goſpel to the poor, &c. Luke iv. 18. the Baptiſt teacheth in theſe words, What he hath ſeen and heard, that he teſtifies; for he whom God hath ſent, ſpeaketh the words of God; for the Father giveth not him the Spirit by meaſure, ch. iii. 32, 34. And he himſelf intimates, by ſaying, ch. xiv. 10. The words that I ſpeak to you, I ſpeak not of my ſelf; the Father abiding in me, he doth the works.

2dly, That he ſaid truly, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, he proves from the Divine Works of God the Father had given him power to do; tho' he was to do them after his reſurrection and advancement to his Kingdom, viz. the reſurrection of the dead, and the future judgment: And therefore adds,

Ver. 21. As the Father raiſes the dead, and quickneth them, ſo the Son quickneth whom he will.] This is more than ever was ſaid of any Prophet or Apoſtle, that he did ſuch works at his will; and here chiefly reſpects Chriſt, not acting as a Prophet, but as a King ſitting at the right hand of power; and this being an action repreſented as proper to God, who ſaith, "I am, and there is none beſides me; I kill, and make alive," Deut. xxxii. 39. 1 Sam. ii. 6. A work to be performed by his ſole power, Matth. xxii. 29. Acts xxvi. 8. and by the ſtrength of his power, Eph. i. 19. who is a God quickning the dead, Rom. iv. 17. Hence it is evident, that Chriſt, who will not only raiſe our mortal bodies, but alſo make them, "like to his own Glorious Body, by that power by which he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf," Philip. iii. 21. muſt be God; and that the Father, by giving him to have life in himſelf, as he hath it in himſelf, ver. 26. muſt have given him the fulneſs of the Deity from which this power is inſeparable.

Ver. 22. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to his Son.] Seeing this judgment is committed to him, 'tis evident, ſaith Woltzogenius, that he cannot be God the higheſt, becauſe he reigns, and judges by his own power derived from none; and yet he owns, that in this judgment is comprehended, totum Regimen, & divinum totius Mundi Imperium, "an entire government, and divine empire over the whole world, and eſpecially over the whole Church of God," from whence it is demonſtrable, that he muſt be God: For this government muſt be attended with a power of raiſing all them from the dead whom he ſhall place before his Judgment-ſeat, and with the perfect knowledge, not only of the actions of all men from the beginning of the world, but alſo of their ſecret thoughts; ſince otherwiſe he cannot "bring every ſecret thought and work into judgment, nor bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, or manifeſt the ſecrets of the heart, 1 Cor. iv. 5. or judge every man according to his works, 2 Cor. v. 10. He alſo muſt be omnipreſent and omniſcient, even the Searcher of all hearts, that he may know, and anſwer the prayers of all his ſervants in all corners of the earth, as the Socinians grant he doth; and Almighty, that he may be able to ſupply all their wants, aſſiſt, and enable them to do every where the greateſt miracles in his name, defend, and preſerve them againſt all the powers on earth, and even the gates of hell, raiſe, and condemn their enemies, with the devil and his angels, to eternal deſtruction from his preſence, and alſo crown his ſervants with everlaſting glory. Now, how all theſe things can be done by a mere creature, is as difficult to conceive as any myſtery of the Bleſſed Trinity. I anſwer therefore in that diſtinction of the ſchools, that the Principium quod, or the perſon thus judging is the Son of man, ver. 27. This judgment being to be exerciſed by the Man Chriſt Jeſus, Acts xvii. 31. but the Principium quo, i. e. the power or the principle by which he does it, is the whole fulneſs of the Deity, individually united to his human nature, or the Word made fleſh, John i. 14. This therefore hinders not, but he to whom this judgment is thus given, may be God of God.

Ver. 23. That all men may honour the Son as they honour the Father.] That is, ſaith Woltzogenius, That they owning this dignity and power, per quam Deo equalis eſt, "by which he is equal to God, may give him that obedience, honour and worſhip, which is due to a Divine and Heavenly King;" "for that the honour and worſhip due to Chriſt, is Divine Honour, is evident from this, That it is ſuch, qualis Patri debetur, as is due to the Father; to whom by the conſent of all men, belongs Divine Worſhip:" And hence he proves, That Chriſt is to be worſhipped with invocation; "Becauſe, he who refuſes to pray to him, doth not honour him as he honours the Father; in this, ſaith he, conſiſt the higheſt honour we give to the Father, that we own him for the chief monarch, and Lord of all things, in whoſe power is our ſalvation and deſtruction; and therefore by prayer, endeavour to obtain from him the enjoyment of good things, and the deliverance from evil: Qui hæc eadem in Chriſto agnoſcit & eum ſic colit, is honorat & colit eum ſicut Patrem; "He that owns theſe things to belong to Chriſt, and doth thus worſhip him, he honoureth the Son as he doth the Father;" ſo he. Now, can he be equal to God who is only a creature, or be worthy of Divine Worſhip who is no God? The precept being plain, and owned by Chriſt himſelf, "The Lord thy God is one Lord, and (therefore) thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve, Deut. vi. 13. Matth. iv. 10. Can he, who ſaid, Thou ſhalt worſhip no other gods but me, and I will not give my Glory to another, Iſa. xlii. 8. himſelf appoint, that any creature ſhould be worſhipp'd as God, or have that honour, worſhip and obedience, in which his Glory doth conſiſt? It is therefore no unjuſt imputation to call them idolaters, who give this worſhip to one, who, ſay they, is by nature only man, ſeeing they do the very thing charged on the heathen idolaters; i. e. they worſhip them which by nature are no gods, Gal. iv. 8. and do that to a creature which God requires to be done to himſelf, viz. that they ſhould glorify him as God, Rom. i. 21. and do that with which god upbraided his own people, viz. "the worſhipping a new god which their own fathers had not known, Deut. xxxii. 17." If you ſay here, they give him the ſame worſhip, but not as the firſt, but only as the intermediate cauſe of our ſalvation. It may be eaſily replied, "That then they cannot honour him as they honour the Father, and much leſs, as the chief Monarch, and Lord of all things: Moreover, I enquire whether this middle cauſe be created, or uncreated; if uncreated, he is by nature God, and ſince there is but one God, of the ſame eſſence with the Father; but if created, they muſt be guilty of idolatry, who give him the ſame worſhip with the Father, and therefore give the creature the worſhip due to the Creator.

Ver. 25. The hour — now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live.] That Chriſt here ſpeaks not only of a ſpiritual reſurrection from the death of ſin, is evident, (1.) Becauſe he ſpeaks of it as a thing ſhortly future; whereas, the ſpiritual reſurrection was in ſome already paſt (2.) Becauſe he promiſes this reſurrection not to them that ſhould hear his Word, but φωνῆς, his voice; and that he ſpeaks of a proper reſurrection, appears, (1.) From the gradation he here makes from the reſurrection of ſome, to the reſurrection of all, ver. 28. (2.) Becauſe he adds, That they who hear, ſhall live; and that becauſe the Son, whoſe voice they hear, hath life in himſelf, ver. 26. I therefore think, that our Lord ſpeaks of that hour, when, he riſing from the dead, many bodies of the Saints aroſe with him, Matth. xxvii. 52, 53.

Ver. 26. He hath given the Son to have life in himſelf.] i. e. The power of raiſing whom he will, ver. 21. Hence tho' the Apoſtles, and others, raiſed men from the dead, 'tis ſaid of none of them, that they had life in themſelves; becauſe they did this, not by their own, but by the power of Chriſt. Note alſo, that the ſame thing is in both places, ſaid both of the Father and the Son; for it is not ſaid, the Father hath Life from himſelf, the Son in himſelf, but both have Life, ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himſelf; and that as the Father, ſo the Son quickneth whom he will: Now the operations follow the eſſence; ſo that where the ſame operation is, there muſt be the ſame eſſence.

Ver. 27 Becauſe he is the Son of man.] i. e. The Meſſias, to whom all power and dominion is given, Dan. vii. 13, 14 and of whom the Jews ſaid, that he ſhould raiſe the dead; R. Eliezer, c. 34. p. 38. or, becauſe he took the human nature on him, he ſuffered in it, and by that paſſion became the author of ſalvation to all that obey him; Heb. v. 8, 9. And laſtly in that nature only could he be a viſible Judge.

Ver. 29. And they that have done evil into the reſurrection of condemnation.] This ſeems to have been ſpoken in oppoſition of that Phariſaical doctrine, which taught that the reſurrection pertained only to the juſt; ſee Joſeph. de bell. Jud. lib. ii. c. 12. And that the wicked and antedeluvian ſinners were to be excluded from it.

Ver. 31. — Of my ſelf.] i. e. Without any atteſtation from God.

——— My witneſs is not true.] I could not be a true Prophet, becauſe God never ſends any Prophet to men, without ſufficient teſtimonies, that he was ſent from him; ſee the notes on ver. 19.

Ver. 32. There is another.] viz. John the Baptiſt, whom you counted as a Prophet; Matt. xiv. 5. xxi. 26. and upon that account received his baptiſm. And according to your own rules, "He is to be owned as a Prophet to whom a Prophet gives his teſtimony."

Ver. 36. — Which the Father hath given me to do, &c.] By giving him his ſpirit and his power together with his eſſence; John iii. 34, 35. xiv. 10.

Ver. 37. — Beareth witneſs of me.] By a voice from heaven, ſaying, this is my beloved Son; and by the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon me, in the Shechinah or bright light, which is the ſymbol of his preſence, and by the works he has enabled me to do.

Ver. 39. Search the Scriptures.] Or, Ye ſearch the Scriptures. I won't contend which of theſe tranſlations are moſt grammatical; but I muſt obſerve that the firſt is agreeable to, and confirmed by, Origen, Chryſoſtom, and Auſtin; ſee Whitby on the place. And if the ſecond be more acceptable to ſome readers, let it not be forgot, that if the Jews did truly think, the doctrine of life eternal was therein contained, that they by ſearching might find it there, it muſt be to them a ſufficient rule of faith: And if this belief had been erroneous, now certainly was the time to correct in them ſo pernicious an error.

Ver. 40. Ye will not come to me.] i. e. Tho' ye have ſeen the characters propheſied of the Meſſiah accompliſhed in me, ye do not believe in me, which ſhews that your infidelity is the reſult, not of ſimple ignorance, but of wilful obſtinacy.

Ver. 42. Another ſhall come in his own name.] As we read one Barchochebas did afterwards, working no miracles.

Ver. 46. — He wrote of me.] See Deut. xviii. 17, &c.

CHAP. VI.

1 Chriſt feedeth five thouſand men with five loaves and two fiſhes: 15 Thereupon the people would have made him king: 16 But withdrawing himſelf, he walketh on the ſea to his diſciples: 21 reproveth the people flocking after him, and all the fleſhly hearers of his word: 32 declareth himſelf to be the bread of life to believers: 66 Many diſciples depart from him: 68 Peter confeſſeth him: 70 Judas is a devil.

AFTER theſe things Jeſus went over the ſea of Galilee, which is the ſea of Tiberias.

2 And a great multitude followed him, becauſe they ſaw his miracles which he did on them that were diſeaſed.

3 And Jeſus went up into a mountain, and there he ſat with his diſciples.

4 And the paſſover, a feaſt of the Jews, was nigh.

5 ¶ When Jeſus then lift up his eyes, and ſaw a great company come unto him, he ſaith unto Philip, Whence ſhall we buy bread that theſe may eat?

6 (And this he ſaid to prove him: for he himſelf knew what he would do)

7 Philip anſwered him, Two hundred peny-worth of bread is not ſufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 One of his diſciples, Andrew, Simon Peters brother, ſaith unto him,

9 There is a lad here, which hath five barley-loaves and two ſmall fiſhes: but what are they among ſo many?

10 And Jeſus ſaid, Make the men ſit down. Now there was much graſs in the place. So the men ſat down, in number about five thouſand.

11 And Jeſus took the loaves, and when he had given thanks, he diſtributed to the diſciples, and the diſciples to them that were ſet down; and likewiſe of the fiſhes, as much as they would.

12 When they were filled, he ſaid unto his diſciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be loſt.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

14 Then thoſe men, when they had ſeen the miracle that Jeſus did, ſaid, This is of a truth that prophet that ſhould come into the world.

15 ¶ When Jeſus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himſelf alone.

16 And when even was now come, his diſciples went down unto the ſea,

17 And entred into a ſhip, and went over the ſea towards Capernaum: and it was now dark, and Jeſus was not come to them.

18 And the ſea aroſe, by reaſon of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty, or thirty furlongs, they ſee Jeſus walking on the ſea, and drawing nigh unto the ſhip: and they were afraid.

20 But he ſaith unto them, It is I, be not afraid.

21 Then they willingly received him into the ſhip: and immediately the ſhip was at the land whither they went.

22 ¶ The day following, when the people which ſtood on the other ſide of the ſea, ſaw that there was none other boat there, ſave that one whereinto his diſciples were entred, and that Jeſus went not with his diſciples into the boat, but that his diſciples were gone away alone:

23 (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias, nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks)

24 When the people therefore ſaw that Jeſus was not there, neither his diſciples, they alſo took ſhipping, and came to Capernaum, ſeeking for Jeſus.

25 And when they had found him on the other ſide of the ſea, they ſaid unto him, Rabbi, when cameſt thou hither?

26 Jeſus anſwered them and ſaid, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Ye ſeek me, not becauſe ye ſaw the miracles, but becauſe ye did eat of the loaves and were filled.

27 Labour not for the meat which periſheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlaſting life, which the Son of man ſhall give unto you: for him hath God the Father ſealed.

28 Then ſaid they unto him, What ſhall we do, that we might work the works of God?

29 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent.

30 They ſaid therefore unto him, What ſign ſheweſt thou then, that we may ſee and believe thee? what doſt thou work?

31 Our fathers did eat manna in the deſert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

32 Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Moſes gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.

33 For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

34 Then ſaid they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread.

35 And Jeſus ſaid unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me, ſhall never hunger; and he that believeth on me ſhall never thirſt.

36 But I ſaid unto you, that ye alſo have ſeen me, and believe not.

37 All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me; and him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.

38 For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that ſent me.

39 And this is the Fathers will which hath ſent me, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it up again at the laſt day.

40 And this is the will of him that ſent me, that every one which ſeeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlaſting life: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day.

41 The Jews then murmured at him, becauſe he ſaid, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

42 And they ſaid, Is not this Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph, whoſe father and mother we know? how is it then that he ſaith, I came down from heaven?

43 Jeſus therefore anſwered and ſaid unto them, Murmur not among your ſelves.

44 No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day.

45 It is written in the prophets, And they ſhall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.

46 Not that any man hath ſeen the Father, ſave he which is of God, he hath ſeen the Father.

47 Verily, verily I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlaſting life.

48 I am that bread of life.

49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderneſs, and are dead.

50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.

51 I am the living bread, which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever: and the bread that I will give, is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world.

52 The Jews therefore ſtrove amongſt themſelves, ſaying, How can this man give us his fleſh to eat?

53 Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.

54 Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day.

55 For my fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

56 He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

57 As the living Father hath ſent me, and I live by the Father: ſo, he that eateth me, even he ſhall live by me.

58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread, ſhall live for ever.

59 Theſe things ſaid he in the ſynagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

60 Many therefore of his diſciples, when they had heard this, ſaid, This is an hard ſaying, who can hear it?

61 When Jeſus knew in himſelf, that his diſciples murmured at it, he ſaid unto them, Doth this offend you?

62 What and if ye ſhall ſee the Son of man aſcend up where he was before?

63 It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing: the words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life.

64 But there are ſome of you that believe not. For Jeſus knew from the beginning, who they were that believed not, and who ſhould betray him.

65 And he ſaid, Therefore ſaid I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.

66 ¶ From that time many of his diſciples went back, and walked no more with him.

67 Then ſaid Jeſus unto the twelve, Will ye alſo go away?

68 Then Simon Peter anſwered him, Lord, to whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life.

69 And we believe, and are ſure that thou art that Chriſt, the Son of the living God.

70 Jeſus anſwered them, have not I choſen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?

71 He ſpake of Judas Iſcariot the ſon of Simon: for he it was that ſhould betray him, being one of the twelve.

Before we enter upon the Annotations of this chapter, it will be neceſſary to obſerve, That the Papiſts make uſe of a part of it between the fifty-firſt and ſixty-firſt verſes, to ſupport their doctrines of tranſubſtantiation and real corporeal preſence, or that the natural ſubſtance of Chriſt's fleſh is properly eaten by us in the ſacrament of his body and blood: For, they ſay, that the eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood of Chriſt, muſt be underſtood in the literal and proper ſenſe. Therefore,

I caution all ſincere Chriſtians, who religiouſly take the word of God as their proper guide in the way of ſalvation, That they may not do, as the Papiſts have done, fail in their knowledge when they read this chapter, by only reading a ſmall part, without conſidering the context: But read the whole chapter, and upon mature conſideration you will find out our Bleſſed Saviour's deſign: Nor can this be done any otherwiſe than by obſerving what ſort of people he had to do with, and what was the occaſion of this converſation between him and them: What was the fundamental cauſe of their prejudices againſt him; and with what arguments and applications he laboured to remove thoſe prejudices. For,

It will then appear that they were men whoſe belly was their God, and who minded earthly things; that they followed Chriſt for the loaves; that he diſappointed their hopes; that they were angry at it, and altered their opinion of him upon it; that their earthly mindedneſs was the reaſon why they now liked him not, but ſet themſelves to cavil at all his ſayings; that to take them off from the cares and pleaſures of this preſent life, he laid before them better and greater things, the means and hopes of eternal life: Finally, that he calls the means and cauſes of bettering our minds, and bringing us to everlaſting life, meat and drink; and our believing and obeying his doctrine, eating and drinking. And then, no doubt, but ſuch a proſpect as this muſt create our aſſent, that in particular, he calls the belief of his death and paſſion for the ſins of the world, and the ſaving fruits of that faith, eating his fleſh and drinking his blood: And we ſhall find that there is no more reaſon to imagine, that his fleſh ſhould be eaten and his blood drank in the proper and corporeal ſenſe, than that he ſhould make himſelf bread to be eaten by us, as men are accuſtomed to eat bread: But that there is throughout good reaſon to underſtand, by that eating and drinking, ſpiritual actions only, which the whole ſtrain of his diſcourſe ſhews, that he oppoſed to that corporeal feeding which they were ſo inordinately ſolicitous after. Beſides,

Our bleſſed Lord has ſo explained himſelf to this purpoſe, that I can't think any unprejudiced perſon can forbear yielding to the evidence of theſe ſcattered intimations; when he ſaith, This is the work (ἔργον) of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent, ver. 29. which every one muſt confeſs is our Saviour's own interpretation of ver. 27. Labour not for the meat that periſheth, but, &c. The like may be obſerved of ver. 35. He that believeth on me ſhall never thirſt;——He that believeth on me hath everlaſting life. The like may be obſerved in ver. 36. and ver. 40. Theſe are remarks which it behoves every ſincere enquirer to make. For, when not only the occaſion given Jeſus to uſe theſe terms of eating and drinking, which was their following him for their bellies, ſhews theſe terms to be alluſive; but, as if that were not plain enough, he likewiſe now and then added the plain and proper meaning of thoſe alluſions: So that, I think, none but ſuch as are wilfully miſtaken, obſtinately prejudiced by education, or party, can interpret theſe expreſſions as if they were not alluſive, when once they have made or heard theſe obſervations fairly ſtated; and eſpecially when it is remembred, that, when our Saviour found ſome of his diſciples to adhere to the carnal notions of the Jews, he thought fit for their more abundant ſatisfaction, to explain his own meaning once for all in ver. 62, 63. as you will find it proved hereafter.

I know it is replied, that our Saviour ſpoke of eating and drinking in their carnal and literal ſenſe; becauſe, though the Jews had taken offence at thoſe aſſertions, he repeated the expreſſions. But in theſe repetitions, as at ver. 51. we muſt conſider, that he added the expreſſion of drinking his blood to the former of eating his fleſh, as a more plain intimation of that violent death, which he was to ſuffer for us, than that former ſaying, of giving his fleſh for the life of the world. And ſo, though he kept ſtill to the alluſion, yet he repreſented more fully than he had done before, what kind of death he was to ſuffer.

I know that the Church of Rome pretends to prove the contrary by a conſtant and univerſal tradition. For, Nicholas Sanders (de Euchar. p. 23.) tells us, That to deny theſe words words to be underſtood of the Euchariſt, is contrary to the inſtruction and authority of all antiquity. And Maldonate dares to ſay, with more aſſurance than truth, that all the antient Fathers acknowledge it; ſee his notes on John vi. But whether it be ſaid only by theſe, or by a great many more, I can't think that they were of that belief; it muſt only be looked upon as a cuſtom of ſpeaking, which ſome men have gotten, who having a cauſe to ſerve, find it as eaſy to ſay, Thus ſaith all antiquity, all the antient Fathers, as Thus ſaith the Scripture, when perchance they can't fairly quote either one or the other, to ſupport a tittle of their hypotheſis. And in this caſe I am well aſſured, that the Church of Room abuſe their readers, for I can ſhew that all the Fathers were not of their mind.

Clemens Alexandrinus, (Pædag. l. i. c. 6.) ſuppoſes theſe expreſſions, to eat the fleſh of Chriſt, and to drink his blood, to be as figurative as that of Paul, to feed with milk; and tells us, upon this occaſion, that the word is variouſly allegorized, being called meat, and fleſh, and nouriſhment, and bread, and blood, and milk; and that our Lord is all theſe things for our enjoyment who believe in him. Now, I am perſuaded, you will not ſay that this Father interpreted the words under debate of the Euchariſt.

Tertullian, to ſhew that theſe words, the fleſh profiteth nothing, do not make againſt the reſurrection of the fleſh, ſaith, (in his de reſurrect. carnis, c. 36, 37) That we are to be directed to the ſenſe of what is ſaid by the ſubject matter of it. For becauſe they thought his ſaying hard and intolerable, as if he intended his fleſh ſhould be truly eaten by them; he to ſhew that the cauſe of life and ſalvation was ſpiritual, premiſed this, that the ſpirit quickneth; and then added, the fleſh profiteth nothing, that is, in reſpect of quickning. And then he ſhews what he means by the Spirit. The words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life. As he had ſaid alſo before, he that heareth my words, and believeth in him that ſent me, hath eternal life, and ſhall not come into condemnation, but hath paſſed from death to life. Therefore making his word to be the quickning principle; ſince his word is ſpirit and life, he called his word alſo his own fleſh; for the word was alſo made fleſh: and therefore in order to life, it is to be hungred after, and devoured by hearing, and to be chewed again by the underſtanding, and to be digeſted by faith. And afterwards he affirms, that our Lord all along urged his intent by an allegory. So that Tertullian was ſo far from thinking theſe Paſſages to refer to the Euchariſt, that I am in ſome doubt whether he underſtood them with any ſpecial reference to the death of Chriſt.

Origen alſo interprets fleſh and blood in like manner: For, ſays he, (in Levit. hom. 7.) By the fleſh and the blood of his word, as with pure meat and drink, he refreſheth all mankind. And (in Matt. tract. 12.) elſewhere he ſpeaketh to the ſame purpoſe.

Athanaſius likewiſe ſeems to me to be of the ſame opinion, who ſpeaking of the literal ſenſe in which the Jews underſtood our Saviour, hath theſe words, (in illud evang. Quicumque dixerit.) For how could his Body ſuffice for ſo many to eat of, that it ſhould become nouriſhment for the whole world? It is, ſays he, for this reaſon that he mentioned the Son of man's aſcending into Heaven, that he might draw them off from the corporeal notion. Which teſtimony, as it manifeſtly ſhewed his judgment to be, that our Saviour did not require the proper eating of his natural Body; ſo it contains a very probable argument, that he did not underſtand thoſe words of eating his Sacramental Body. For if he had ſo underſtood them, it had been very accountable that the Body of Chriſt, i. e. his ſacramental Body, was ſufficient for the nouriſhment of the whole world. And by removing all corporeal notions of eating and drinking, he ſeemed to eſtabliſh only a ſpiritual notion.

But Hierom is plain and full to this purpoſe, beyond all contradiction, as I am perſuaded. For thus he ſpeaks, (in Pſal. 147.) When Jeſus ſaith, he that eateth not my fleſh, and drinketh not my blood, although it may be underſtood in a myſtery, (i. e. as I think, of the Euchariſt) yet the truer ſenſe is, that the Body of Chriſt, and his Blood, is the word of the ſcriptures, is divine doctrine.— And therefore he continues not long after in this manner; If when we hear the word of God; the word of God, and the fleſh of Chriſt, and his Blood is poured into our ears, and we think of ſomething elſe, into how great a danger do we run? Afterwards comparing it to manna, which was ſaid to give that taſte to every man which he liked beſt. So, ſaith he, in the fleſh of Chriſt; which is the word of doctrine, that is, the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures; as we would have it, ſo we receive food. If thou art holy, here thou findeſt comfort. Hierom could not have been more expreſs, if he had been to maintain this interpretation againſt an adverſary.

Nor does the paraphraſe of Euſebius come much behind Hierom's interpretation. For he makes our Saviour's explication, v. 63. to run as if he had ſaid; (contr. marcel. lib. 3. c. 12.) Do not think that I ſpeak of that fleſh which I carry about me, as if you ought to eat that, or that I command you to drink my ſenſible and corporeal blood. You well underſtand that the words which I ſpeak to you, are ſpirit and life. So that, as Euſebius goes on, his words and doctrines are fleſh and blood, of which whoever conſtantly partakes, he being nouriſhed with heavenly bread, as it were, ſhall partake of the heavenly life. He that ſays this, and knows what he ſays, could hardly ſuppoſe that the Euchariſt was particularly intended by our Saviour in theſe paſſages.

I ſhall trouble you with no more inſtances of this kind, theſe being ſufficient to ſhew that all the antients did not underſtand thoſe words of the Euchariſt. And now I will make no difficulty to grant that the other opinion is not deſtitute of all authority, but has the countenance of ſome fathers to ſupport it. For we do not pretend to any ſuch privilege of ſpeaking, as to ſay, we have all the fathers, in a caſe where we have not every one.

But this I muſt needs ſay, That thoſe fathers who, as far as I have yet diſcovered, ſeem to ſpeak moſt expreſly in favour of the ſacramental ſenſe, do not come up to the peremptorineſs and clearneſs of thoſe who are for the ſpiritual ſenſe. Now,

Auſtin in his diſputations againſt the Pelagians urging theſe words, except ye eat the fleſh, &c. ſeems to ſuppoſe, that it was a direct and proper command to receive the Euchariſt, under the penalty of damnation, and in another place he urges it for the neceſſity of communicating infants; yet, I think, he is not clear for this ſenſe, in any other cauſe. But there is this very great prejudice againſt his authority in this matter, that elſewhere, viz. out of the heat of that controverſy, he gives clearly another ſenſe of theſe words, and ſpeaks of them as if they were reductive only to the Euchariſt. Mark therefore what he ſays, (Tract. 26. in John) "Therefore by this meat and drink, he would have us to underſtand the ſociety of his body and members, that is, the Holy Church, conſiſting of his predeſtinated, and called, and juſtified, and glorified Saints and faithful. And preſently after; The ſacrament of this thing, that is, of the unity of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, is in ſome places every day, in other places upon certain days prepared upon the Lord's Table, and received from the Lord's Table; by ſome to life, by ſome to deſtruction. But the thing it ſelf, of which it is the ſacrament, is for life to every man, for deſtruction to no man, whoſoever he be that partakes of it." By which words it is evident, that Auſtin did not here underſtand, that eating of the fleſh, and drinking of the blood of Chriſt, to which ſalvation is promiſed; of ſacramental eating, but of being incorporated into the viſible Church of Chriſt; and this, becauſe he ſays, The ſacrament of this thing may be received to deſtruction; and becauſe he expreſly ſays, That this meat and drink is the ſociety of the Body of Chriſt, conſiſting of his predeſtinated, &c. members.

And that therefore he would not have ſcrupled to ininterpret eating by believing; ſince 'tis faith by which we are united to the Body of Chriſt, no reaſonable man will queſtion. However, we have his own word for it, who upon that ſaying of our Saviour, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent, Goes on thus, (id. Tract. 25.) This therefore is to eat that food which periſheth not, but endureth to everlaſting life. To what purpoſe doſt thou make ready thy teeth and thy belly? Believe, and thou haſt eaten. Afterwards he puts both together; (id. Tract. 26.) Let him come and believe, and be incorporated, that he may be quickned.

Which words of his are the more remarkable, becauſe in that place he profeſſedly treats of the expoſition of this chapter. Where alſo upon that ſaying, "He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him, he diſcourſeth thus, (tract. 26 in John,) This it is to eat that food, and drink that drink, viz. to dwell in Chriſt, and to have Chriſt dwelling in me. And therefore he that dwelleth not in Chriſt, and in whom Chriſt dwelleth not, undoubtedly doth not ſpiritually eat his fleſh, nor drink his blood, although he doth carnally and viſibly preſs with his teeth, the ſacrament of his body and blood; but he rather eats and drinks the ſacrament of ſo great a thing to his condemnation; becauſe, being impure, he hath preſumed to come to Chriſt's ſacraments, which none worthily receives who is not pure; of which 'tis ſaid, Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God." Whence it is manifeſt, that in Auſtin's judgment, to eat the fleſh of Chriſt, and to drink his blood, was to eat and drink it ſpiritually, ſo as good and holy men only do partake thereof, not all that do preſs the ſacrament thereof with their teeth. And it is further obſervable, that if to eat that food, and drink that drink, be as Auſtin ſays, to dwell in Chriſt, and to have Chriſt dwell in us; then all holy perſons do conſtantly eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of Chriſt; becauſe they ſtill dwell in Chriſt, and Chriſt in them; but they are not always receiving the ſacrament, and therefore, Auſtin could not underſtand theſe words properly of the Euchariſt.

And that theſe were not ſudden notions of his, appears from this, that we find them elſewhere, and particularly in his book of the city of God, towards the end; which book he finiſhed juſt before his death. There he hath theſe words; (lib. 21. c. 25.) "For neither are they to be ſaid to eat the body of Chriſt, becauſe neither are they to be accounted amongſt his members. For to omit other things, they cannot be both the members of Chriſt, and the members of an harlot. Laſtly, himſelf ſaying, He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him, ſheweth what it is to eat the body of Chriſt, and drink his blood, not by the ſacrament, but verily and indeed; for this is to dwell in Chriſt, ſo as that Chriſt dwelleth in him. For his ſpeaking this, was as if he had ſaid; he that dwelleth not in me, and in whom I dwell not, ſhould not ſay or think that he eateth my fleſh, or drinketh my blood. Now the perſons here ſpoken of, were Chriſtians of vicious lives, who yet received the ſacrament, and continued in the communion of the Church to the laſt. But ſince Auſtin, denying that they eat the body of Chriſt in truth, even when they received the ſacrament; does alſo affirm, that Chriſt ſpake of receiving his body in truth only, when he ſaid, he that eateth my fleſh, &c. it ſeems evidently to follow, that when Auſtin wrote theſe paſſages, he did not underſtand thoſe places in John of ſacramental eating. Finally, by comparing this place with the former, it is plain alſo, that to eat and drink Chriſt ſpiritually, and to eat and drink him in truth and reality, was in Auſtin's judgment all one; and conſequently that we may really eat the fleſh of Chriſt, and drink his blood, though we do it not corporeally.

But after all, though I verily think that I could make out a title to the conſent of all the fathers, with vaſtly more probability than thoſe who claim it for the other opinion; yet, ſuppoſe that they have the three or four, and as many more as they can name with any colour; what would they get by it, if notwithſtanding, theſe fathers did not believe, that the natural fleſh of Chriſt was properly eaten, and his blood properly drank by the faithful in the Euchariſt? What if they believed the ſubſtance of bread and wine to remain in the ſacrament, and that Chriſt himſelf could be fed upon by the mind only; and therefore that theſe words themſelves, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, &c. though ſpoken of the ſacrament, were not properly but figuratively to be underſtood? If this be ſo, they have loſt their main cauſe, and have taken a great deal of pains to be where they were at firſt; and this diſpute, whether the Church has always underſtood the Euchariſt to be directly intended by our Saviour in the mentioned paſſages, is loſt as to any advantage that tranſubſtantiation can get by it.

That the ſubſtance of bread and wine remain after conſecration, is manifeſt from Cyprian, ad Cæcilium; and that Chriſt is fed upon by the mind only, from Baſil, in Eſai. c. 3. to whom I refer you, that I may not be over-tedious; eſpecially ſince for the preſent, one teſtimony of Auguſtin may ſerve the turn. Obſerve therefore theſe words of his, concerning the expoſition of Scripture-Phraſes; (De doctr. Chriſt. lib. 3. c. 16.) "If the ſaying be preceptive, either forbidding a wicked action, or commanding to do that which is good, it is no figurative ſaying. But if it ſeems to command any villany or wickedneſs, or to forbid what is profitable and good, it is figurative. This ſaying, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; ſeems to command a villainous or wicked thing. It is therefore a figure, enjoining us to communicate in the paſſion of our Lord, and to lay it up in dear and profitable remembrance, that his fleſh was crucified and wounded for our ſakes." The vaſt pains that have been taken to avoid this teſtimony, are a convincing argument that prejudice may grow to that ſtrength, as to be invincible. You will confeſs, I doubt not, that this paſſage ſo plainly ſhews Auſtin's perſwaſion in this matter, that as it needs no words to illuſtrate it, ſo it is capable of no anſwer to the purpoſe.

To come to a concluſion. As I have ſhewn that ſeveral fathers did not underſtand the mentioned words of our Saviour, as ſpoken of the Euchariſt; ſo I could ſhew, that very many doctors of the Roman communion have declared againſt it; amongſt whom Cardinal Cajetan, for his ſingular merit, and becauſe I have referred to his reaſons in my notes, ought to be particularly remembred. In his commentary upon ver. 53. Verily verily I ſay, &c. he comes to ſpeak of a third ſenſe, viz. of ſacramental eating by worthy receivers; "and, ſays he, the ſenſe is this; except ye really eat the fleſh of the Son of man in the ſacrament of the hoſt, and drink his blood in the ſacrament of the chalice, you have no life in you. So that according to this ſenſe, not only the ſacrament of baptiſm, but the ſacrament of the Euchariſt alſo, under both kinds is neceſſary to ſalvation. But the uſage of the Church is repugnant to this ſenſe, ſince ſhe does not give the communion to infants at all, nor to the people under both kinds; and not only the uſage, but the doctrine of the Church too, becauſe ſhe teaches that 'tis ſufficient to ſalvation, to communicate under the ſpecies of bread. And tho' this authority be ſufficient to ſhew, that the text does not deliver a precept of receiving the ſacrament in both kinds, and conſequently that it does not deliver a precept of eating and drinking the ſacrament of the Euchariſt; yet the Bohemians —— are not ſatisfied, but produce this text for themſelves againſt our uſage and doctrine, ſaying, that if our Lord had not treated of receiving the ſacrament in theſe words, he would not have diſtinguiſhed between eating and drinking, leaſt of all between eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood; but ſince he ſo accurately diſtinguiſheth between theſe things, he inſinuates his diſcourſe to be concerning the reception of the Euchariſt, &c. But, ſays the Cardinal, theſe things are eaſily thrown off; by obſerving that in this very chapter Jeſus ſaid not long before, He that cometh to me ſhall never hunger, and he that believeth in me ſhall never thirſt. For in theſe words which, it is plain, do not belong to the ſacrament of the Euchariſt, our Lord clearly diſtinguiſhes hunger from thirſt, which is equivalent to his diſtinction between eating and drinking. For hunger refers to eating, and thirſt to drinking. Therefore from the diſtinction between eating and drinking, no ſolid argument can be drawn to infer the diſcourſe to be of the ſacrament of the Euchariſt. In like manner the diſtinction between fleſh and blood, availeth nothing to their purpoſe, but rather againſt them; becauſe the fleſh is not diſtinguiſhed from the blood after any ſort, but only as they are ſeparated; as meat from drink. But 'tis evident, that the real ſeparation of the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, in the ſacrament, is repreſented only; but in the death of Chriſt it was actual, and according to the thing itſelf. And if it be urged that the fleſh and the blood are here diſcourſed of under the notion of meat and drink, and not according to what they were in their own nature, and that for this reaſon, the diſcourſe runs upon the fleſh in the ſacrament, and the blood in the ſacrament, ſeparated one from another. The anſwer to this is afforded by what has been already ſaid, viz. that our Lord had ſpoken of himſelf before, as of one that takes away hunger, and of one that takes away thirſt; and yet 'tis not alſo inferred from hence, that he ſpake of himſelf as under that ſpecies of the ſacrament, whereby he takes away hunger, and that ſpecies of the ſacrament whereby he takes away thirſt. For he diſcourſes of the fleſh and blood, which were parted at his death, as they are to be embraced by the mind, being the meat and drink of the ſoul: becauſe unleſs our ſpirit be ſuſtained by the death of Chriſt as by meat, and be delighted with it as drink, there is not the life of the ſpirit in us. So that

As for that doctrine, that Chriſt is properly eaten in the Euchariſt, I ought to be excuſed, if I can by no means believe it; or elſe thoſe Fathers muſt be condemned, who believed the Capernaites to be a perverſe ſort of men, for turning our Saviour's words in this chapter, to ſo inhuman and abſurd a ſenſe, as if he had exhorted them to eat a man's fleſh, according to the propriety of thoſe words. For no man can ſay, that this is either inhuman or abſurd, who believes the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation, and that Chriſt is properly eaten in the Euchariſt. And for what I can ſee, this chapter of John, inſtead of affording a ſolid argument for that concluſion, when it comes to be well conſider'd upon the grounds of reaſon and authority, does at laſt yield a terrible objection againſt it.

Having thus obviated that common and boaſted argument which the Papiſts pretend to ſtrengthen by the conſtant and univerſal conſent of all antiquity, which aſſertion I have proved vain and falſe by the premiſes, in as much as regards our preſent interpretation; I ſhall now proceed to give you our own ſenſe of the whole chapter, and to ſupport it with ſound reaſon, and good and unexceptionable authority. Thus,

When our Bleſſed Saviour is here introduced by an evangelical proſopopeia, we are to obſerve that the firſt narrative is that of his miraculous feeding the five thouſand in the wilderneſs; at which the people were ſo overjoyed, that they reſolved with one conſent, to make Jeſus a king, but our Lord refuſed the honour, and withdrew to Capernaum to avoid the ſame. The people followed him to that city, on the next day: So that he reſolved to take a more effectual courſe to ſtop their deſign, and thus began to reprove them for their worldly-mindedneſs, and to call them off from the pleaſures of this life, that they might follow after heavenly things, and thereby eternal life.—This method had its deſired effect: For, their ſtomachs turned ſo againſt him, that they began in earneſt to cavil at his ſayings, and even to diſparage his miracles by ſetting up the manna wherewith Moſes had fed their fathers, againſt his feeding them the day before with his miraculous loaves. Whereupon

He inculcated two things upon them with great earneſtneſs: The one was, That they might gain eternal life by him and his doctrine, which he therefore called, the bread of life, and the bread that came down from Heaven. And therefore, that it was a vain thing in them to challenge him with Moſes's giving their fathers that bread from Heaven; which ſerved only to ſuſtain a mortal life.———The other was this, That they, the Jews, had ſufficient evidence of his coming from God; but that they were obſtinate and believed not; becauſe of their worldly prejudices againſt him. And then he adds, as a conſequence of theſe premiſes, That God had committed no other perſons to his effectual care; to convince and ſave them, but ſuch only who were diſpoſed to receive and embrace the truth with an honeſt mind; and that he himſelf was not bound by his miſſion, or otherwiſe to conquer the obſtinacy of unteachable men.

Notwithſtanding all which, the worldly-minded Jews in their fooliſh and prejudiced cavillings at his words; and becauſe in alluſion to the loaves he had multiplied, and to the manna, they had juſt boaſted of he had called himſelf the bread of life: And in purſuance of ſuch figurative expreſſions, he did alſo ſignify by eating his fleſh and drinking his blood, our belief in him, and our truſt in his death, &c. they exclaimed againſt him, as if he had, in the literal ſenſe of theſe words, offered his fleſh to be eaten; and ſome of his diſciples, not being yet ſtrengthened in faith underſtood him in the ſame manner with the Jews, and, though the goodneſs of the meek Jeſus ſtooped ſo low as to explain himſelf to theſe diſciples, they left him, becauſe he freely rebuked their inſincerity. This gave him an opportunity to prove the conſtancy of his twelve Apoſtles; for, he permitted them to go or ſtay with him as they ſhould chuſe, ſhewing withal that he underſtood who were ſincere and who were not ſo.

This is the ſum of the chapter which ſhall ſet forth at large in this form:

Ver. 1, &c. After theſe things Jeſus went over the ſea of Galilee, which is the ſea of Tiberias, &c.] Where we may gather, that the Evangeliſt intended that his readers ſhould underſtand him to ſay, "I ſhall not mention thoſe miracles, which Jeſus wrought between the paſſover laſt mentioned, (ch. v. 1.) and that which is now approaching, (as at ver. 4. of this ch.) excepting that only of the loaves; which, though it be reported by all the other Evangeliſts; yet they have omitted that diſcourſe upon it, which he had with the Jews. The occaſion of it was this. He went in a boat with his diſciples, over that part of the lake of Genezareth in Galilee, which waſheth the city Tiberias, and a great multitude, of whom were ſome diſeaſed perſons, Luke xi. 11. followed him on foot, Matt. xiv. 13, whom he cured in the deſert, where they overtook him, Luke xi. 11. at the time when he was inſtructing his diſciples on a mountain in that deſert.

It was now near the time when the Jews kept their feaſt of the paſſover, on which occaſion the country people flocked from all parts to Hieruſalem, many of which coming that way joined themſelves in company with thoſe that followed Jeſus; which he obſerving, and being ſolicited by his Apoſtles, to bid them depart and provide refreſhment for themſelves, reſolved to maniſeſt forth his glory, and ſaid to Philip, "I have a deſire to feed this multitude, tell me therefore, where thou thinkeſt we can buy bread ſufficient for this purpoſe in the wilderneſs?' This was aſked, not that Jeſus was at a loſs what to do, but to prove the faith of the man Philip, who was none of the forwardeſt to believe; ſee ch. xiv. 9. Then Philip, not expecting a miracle anſwered; "all the ſtock we have, ſhould it amount to two hundred-pence, will not buy bread enough for every one of theſe, ſo much as to taſte a little off." But Andrew interpoſing ſaid, "That they had five loaves and two ſmall fiſhes:" By which he ſeemed to believe, that his maſter could multiply that little proviſion in ſome manner to ſatisfy the great concourſe of people preſent. So Jeſus commanded the twelve Apoſtles to diſpoſe the men in order upon the graſs, of which there was great plenty at that time of the year, (ſee ver. 4.) and the Apoſtles, not doubting of the event, ranked the men in order, and found that they were about five thouſand. And when Jeſus had bleſſed the little food, i. e. the loaves and fiſhes, by thanking the great Creator and Preſerver of all things; he, with his own hands, delivered ſo many portions of it to the twelve, and commanded them to divide themſelves to adminiſter to the multitude; by which act the bread and fiſh were ſo marvelouſly encreaſed, that every one of that great company had as much as he deſired to eat, which being acknowledged by them all, that they were filled, he bade the twelve to gather up the fragments, &c. So every one of them filled his basket with what was left, which amounted to twelve baskets full of broken food, which was an evidence of the unqueſtionableneſs of the miracle, and that no juggle had been put upon the people's ſtomachs, ſince there remained ſo much to be ſeen after they had all eaten. Wherefore thoſe men, being convinced of the miracle, called to mind how Moſes fed their fathers in the wilderneſs with manna, and foretold that God would raiſe up a Prophet like unto him of their brethren; and now they concluded that this was that Prophet, and the perſon that was to deliver them from the Romans, as Moſes had delivered their anceſtors from the Egyptians, &c. ſince he, as well as Moſes, could, in the greateſt extremity ſupply them with what proviſions they ſhould need. Nor did they reſt in bare or empty words, they were convinced that Jeſus was that Prophet, becauſe of his power to work miracles, and were coming to make him their king, whether he would or not. Which Jeſus perceiving, he firſt ſent away his own diſciples, almoſt forcing them into the boat that brought them thither, and promiſed to be with them before they came to the other ſide, (ver. 17. Mark vi. Matt. xiv.) So being thus rid of his diſciples, who were pleaſed with the reſolutions of the people, and ready enough to join with them in the affair, to make their maſter, a king; he more eaſily ſatisfied and diſperſed the multitude: And ſo, without any followers, he returned to the mountain to pray by himſelf; but the day was juſt a cloſing, when the diſciples arrived upon the ſhore, and entred into the boat to paſs over towards Capernaum; and by this time it was quite dark, yet tho' Jeſus was not come to them, they, as he had ſaid, believed he would overtake them before they came to the other ſide, and launched out into the ſea, which grew ſo very tempeſtuous with a contrary wind, Mark vi. 48. that after they had toiled much on their oars, till the fourth watch of the night, they ſailed not above twenty-five or thirty furlongs; at which time they beheld Jeſus walking upon the ſea, as if he were paſſing by the ſhip; and not yet knowing him, they took him to be an apparition, and were afraid; ſee Matt. xiv. 16. But he did not ſuffer them to be diſmayed long, for he ſpoke to them and ſaid, it is I, be not afraid; and they received him gladly, believing that all things would go well now he was with them in the ſhip. Nor were they deceived. For, tho' they had made ſo little progreſs before, yet now the ſhip came preſently to the place whither it was bound.

The next day it was diſcovered that Jeſus was alſo gone, but the people knowing that at the time of the diſciples departure, in the evening before there was no other boat than that in which they were ſailed without their maſter; they alſo took ſhipping on board of thoſe boats, arrived at Tiberias that morning, and ſailed for Capernaum, where they hoped to find Jeſus, though they could not conceive by what means he ſhould be got thither. Therefore, when they were alſo croſt the ſea of Tiberias, and found Jeſus, they deſired to know by what miracle he got thither ſo ſoon? But,

Jeſus without ſatisfying their curioſity in this matter, turned his diſcourſe to things of greater moment, and anſwered them in this manner: "I certainly know, that ye do not follow me for the true end of thoſe miracles, which I work, which is, that ye might believe in me, and obtain everlaſting life; but merely for that preſent benefit, which you hope to receive by them, as you did yeſterday, when you did eat and were filled, ver. 11, 12. Therefore I would have you know, that my view in feeding your bodies, was to prepare your minds and hearts, to receive the doctrine I ſhall now deliver by way of advice, that you be not too ſolicitous after the periſhable food of this life, to prolong a life which muſt ſhortly end; but ſtrive to obtain that vertue and knowledge, which is the food of ſouls, and the means of living happily for ever, when this life ſhall be no more. You ſhould follow the Son of man for ſuch things as theſe, the Father having ſhewed him by the wonderful works which he hath given him power to do in your ſight for the relief of the body, to be the perſon, whoſe property it is to convey theſe graces and bleſſings to the ſouls of men."

Then the multitude grew angry, and ſhewed their diſguſt at this ſpiritual doctrine in this reply, "We who have the law of Moſes, do already know what works God requires; and can'ſt thou tell us, what will be more pleaſing to him than our keeping the law?" Yes, ſaith Jeſus, I can tell you, the law and the Prophets were your whole duty heretofore; but God hath now raiſed up that Prophet, whom Moſes foretold ſhould be like unto him, and commanded you to hear; for, God hath ſent his Son into the world to reveal a better doctrine, and to preſcribe a better life than Moſes did, and that work pleaſing to God, and neceſſary to your ſalvation, which you muſt now henceforward reſolve to do; therefore you muſt believe in him whom God hath ſent, and take his word for your ſecurity in doing all that he requires. But,

They were now ſo ſtrangely prejudiced againſt Jeſus, becauſe he called them off from the cares of this world to a Heavenly Life, and a better hope; that they no longer remembred, or at leaſt they ſet at nought the late miracle which had drawn them after him, and inſpired them with thoughts to make him their king, in ſo much that they replied in theſe or the like terms: "If thou pretendeſt to a better or higher doctrine than Moſes taught, why doſt not thou ſhew us equal, if not greater ſigns and wonders than he wrought in confirmation of his miſſion from God, that we may ſee them, and believe thee for their ſake? What doſt thou perform anſwerable to ſuch a mighty faith, as thou requireſt of us? 'Tis true, that in our need yeſterday thou ſatisfied above five thouſand hungry men in the wilderneſs, by a miraculous encreaſe of five ſmall loaves and two fiſhes. But what is that compared to Moſes, who, for forty years ſucceſſively, fed the whole hoſt of Iſrael, and their wives and children, not with earthly bread or food, as thou gaveſt to us, but with manna, or bread from Heaven, as we are taught in Pſalm lxxviii, 25."

This ſudden change drew ſuch a reply from Jeſus as upbraided them of unbelief, ſuppoſing that theſe men wanted not any further evidence of his coming from God; telling them, that they ought not to compare the manna which their fathers had eat in the wilderneſs, with the bread which he had given them the day before, but rather with that ineſtimable bleſſing, which God had now beſtowed on them, in ſending down from Heaven his own ſon, and giving him for the life of the world. And in this he purſued his conſtant deſign, of taking off their affections from worldly, and directing them to Heavenly things; for, he anſwered them to this effect; whereas you magnify Moſes for giving your fathers bread from heaven; I tell you, it came not from that Heaven, which is the region of immortality, the manſion of the Saints in bliſs; but only from that region of the air, which, tho' it be alſo called Heaven, ſhall wax old, and at laſt periſh with the earth. But now God offereth unto you, by his ſon, that, which, in the moſt excellent ſenſe, is Heavenly Bread, and which indeed cometh down from the place where his majeſty dwelleth. And whereas you extol Moſes for preſerving the lives of your fathers for the ſhort ſpace of forty years: You may conſider it was but a ſhort life at longeſt, which that bread ſerved to ſuſtain, compared with that true bread, which God hath now ſent unto you, becauſe it can preſerve you to eternal life. Moreover the bread which Moſes gave your fathers, did indeed feed a great many; yet they were but a very few in compariſon; for, that which I ſpeak of, is ſufficient to feed and to give eternal life to the whole world.

This ſpeech wrought ſo mightily upon the multitude, that they with one conſent replied, "Lord, we deſire no other bread than this, which thou ſo highly magnifieſt, give us but ſuch bread always as this, and we without any more ado, ſhall believe thee."

Jeſus anſwered, if you underſtand me aright, you have your wiſh. I do not now diſcourſe of thoſe ſigns, which you deſire to ſee, before you believe (for you have had ſigns in abundance already) but I lay before you the far greater benefits which you will gain by believing in me, than your fathers had from Moſes. I tell you therefore, in a word, I am the bread of everlaſting life; and he that believeth in me, and ſubmitteth to my doctrine, hath the bread and water of life, and ſhall hunger and thirſt no more; for he ſhall need no other means of obtaining everlaſting life, than to become my diſciple. And herein, do not think that I take that for granted, which I ought to prove; for, you have already ſeen enough to convince you, that I ſpake the truth. But as I told you before, (ver. 26.) ſigns and miracles will not work true faith in you, ſo long as you follow me for loaves and fiſhes or temporal benefits, and have not learned to prefer ſpiritual good things, and everlaſting life above meat and drink, and all the enjoyments of this world whatſoever.

So that the reaſon why you believe me not, is, becauſe you are not prepared by a good and honeſt heart to receive the truth. And now I tell you, that the Father, who would have all be ſaved, does not expect that I ſhould give a good account of any other perſons, but ſuch as are of a towardly and teachable diſpoſition. Theſe he hath committed to my ſpecial care; and they will learn of me, and not one of them ſhall want means requiſite of his conviction and inſtruction. But though I came to ſave the world, (ver. 51.) I am not bound to bring thoſe to faith, and to ſalvation, that obſtinately ſet themſelves againſt all that evidence, which is ſufficient for honeſt minds. For,

In this matter, as well as in all others, I do what is as much the Father's will, as mine own. And I came from Heaven to do it, and cannot depart from it. Therefore take heed to what I now ſhall tell you: And I declare that it was his pleaſure to commit to my care, all perſons of honeſt and well-diſpoſed minds, that not one of them ſhould be loſt; but that I ſhould do all things which ſhould bring them to faith and repentance, and ſhould take care of their ſalvation from the firſt to the laſt; even till I ſhall raiſe them from the dead at the laſt day. For,

It was his decree alſo, that every one, who ſeeing the works that I do, (ver. 36.) and attentively conſidering the evidence, whereby it appears that I came from God, does thereupon believe and follow my doctrine; that he, I ſay, ſhould have everlaſting life, and that I ſhould, for that end, raiſe him up at the laſt day. Now, as my Father doth not expect that I ſhould ſave any but thoſe, who believe and obey the Goſpel; ſo neither doth he expect that I ſhould bring any to faith, but thoſe, who are of teachable diſpoſitions. But, if men obſtinately ſet themſelves to oppoſe all means of conviction and reformation, it was no part of the truſt committed to me by the Father, to reclaim them, notwithſtanding their incorrigibleneſs. But,

This diſcourſe of Jeſus was ſo far from working a reformation in this obſtinate multitude, that they began to murmur at him. For they all this time were full of expectation, That Jeſus would give them bread from Heaven, as they urged Moſes had done for their fathers, (ver. 34.) But now they plainly underſtood, that by the bread of life coming down from Heaven, which he ſpake of, he meant himſelf and his doctrine, (ver. 35.) and that inſtead of feeding their bodies, he promiſed them everlaſting life; which they were not greatly concerned about, as it appears throughout their whole converſation. And upon this diſappointment, they again ſet themſelves to uſe him with the greateſt diſparagement and contempt; ſaying, "why doth this man, whom we know to be the ſon of Joſeph and Mary pretend ſuch things of himſelf? How could he come from Heaven, who was born into this world by the natural way of other mens births, and in as mean circumſtances, as moſt men are?"

Jeſus replied to theſe cavils, ſaying, "Loſe no time by raiſing difficulties about my perſon and doctrine: There is another work that lies upon your hands, which is at preſent more ſeaſonable and neceſſary for you, than to ſtrain for objections againſt what I ſay, and that is to mend your tempers; to ſhake off your worldly ſpirits; to propoſe for your end eternal life; and ſincerely to deſire the knowledge of that way which leads to it. For, if you are not thus qualified, all my ſayings and works will never convince you of the truth: For, the Father did not ſend me into the world, with any other charge than that I ſhould do what is abundantly ſufficient to ſave men of plain honeſty, and ſincere intention: Therefore you muſt, to reap the benefit of my coming, endeavour after theſe good depoſitions, and if by the grace of God you acquire them, then you will preſently and readily underſtand and embrace the truth of my Goſpel; but till then you entangle your ſelves to no purpoſe. So that it is my wholeſome advice, that you ſhould leave off objecting and diſputing, till you have learnt plain duties, and how you may become honeſt men. And I tell you again, I will take care that no ſuch honeſt well-meaning perſons ſhall want abundant means of conviction and ſalvation, but they ſhall be my peculiar charge, from the time they are ſo diſpoſed, till I, coming in the majeſty of my power, ſhall raiſe them up to eternal glory, at the laſt day, when I ſhall judge the world, and reward all men according to their deeds. Nor do I ſpeak this of myſelf. This is no new doctrine; for,

All theſe admonitions I have now given you, are warranted by your old Prophets; who have foretold that when the kingdom of Chriſt, the Meſſiah ſhall begin to be eſtabliſhed upon earth, men ſhall not want any reaſonable means of conviction for the ſaving of their ſouls; becauſe God will then vouchſafe to appear more remarkably to inſtruct men, than ever he did ſince the world began: And therefore if any man remains in his unbelief, or refuſes to obey, it cannot be for want of means to make him wiſe unto ſalvation, but for want of an humble and honeſt mind, and a ſincere intention, without which, God ſpeaking to men, by his own ſon, will have no ſucceſs upon them, but leave them as bad as they were before. But becauſe God is a maſter in whom nothing can be wanting to inſtruct; every one that deſireth to know the truth, and to be ſaved, will ſubmit to the doctrine of his ſon, and become his diſciple. The meaning of that Scripture, They ſhall be all taught of God, is not, that any man ſhall be immediately taught by the Father: For the will of the Father is not thus to be manifeſted to any of you; it being the privilege of the only begotten Son, intimately to know his mind, without the mediation of any other perſon, (ch. i. 18.) Therefore,

Take notice of what I, the only begotten Son, who am ſent from the Father ſhall now declare unto you. The will of my Father, which by me he makes known to you, is this, that he who receiveth my doctrine, firmly believing it, and ſubmitting his heart and ſoul to it, ſhall as ſurely obtain everlaſting life, as if he were poſſeſſed of it already. And therefore as I told you before, you are to look upon, and believe me to be the true bread of life, whereof I have been ſpeaking to you; for I came down from Heaven to guide you and nouriſh you unto everlaſting life. Which ſhould make you concerned to attend my inſtructions, inſtead of deſiring ſuch bread as Moſes gave your fathers in the wilderneſs, which ſerved only to ſuſtain a ſhort life in this world, for they are dead long ago that eat it; (ver. 31——34) But I bring you food from Heaven, which whoſoever eateth, it ſhall preſerve him to everlaſting life: For I bring you a doctrine, the belief and obedience whereof, will avail to your ſalvation; and I, who bring it, am come with the higheſt authority to require your faith, and with Divine Teſtimonies of my authority to juſtify your faith; ſo that there is nothing wanting to ſecure your ſalvation, but forwardneſs on your own parts to eat this heavenly food, which I invite you to feaſt upon, now that it is brought down to you from Heaven, and is as near you, as that bread wherewith I fed you yeſterday in the wilderneſs. I add, that nothing is wanting, but that you would think who it is, whom God hath ſent to you, and of how much concern that meſſage is to your ſouls, which I bring you from Heaven, and how abundantly God hath teſtified, that I am come from him to give you everlaſting life: And that conſidering theſe things, you would do like reaſonable men, believe what I ſay, and receive my doctrine into your very hearts and ſouls, and give thanks to God for his unſpeakable gift. And

When I tell you that I am the living bread which came down from Heaven, and which he that eateth of, ſhall live for ever: As you are to underſtand this with reſpect to all that doctrine, which I deliver; ſo eſpecially with reſpect to that part of it; that I am come into the word to lay down my life for the ſalvation of mankind. And as I came for this end, ſo will I give my body to death for the life of the world: Which is an infinitely greater benefit, than either your fathers received from Moſes, when he gave them manna to eat; or than you received from me yeſterday, when you were filled with that proviſion I made for your bodies, by my miracle-working power. Upon this

The Jews diſputed againſt him with greater violence, the greater part of them taking his laſt words, the bread which I will give is my fleſh, &c. in a groſs ſenſe; as if he had promiſed to give them his fleſh to eat with their teeth, and to ſwallow it down their throats, as their forefathers had eaten the manna, and as they themſelves, on the day before, had eaten the miraculous bread and fiſhes in the wilderneſs. And now thinking they had gained ſome advantage over him, they exclaimed as if he had ſpoken abſurdly, and inhumanly, and taught his diſciples to devour mens fleſh. Nevertheleſs, Jeſus was ſo far from explaining himſelf now, that he vehemently repeated his doctrine under ſuch expreſſions and figurative ſpeeches, as their obſtinacy had hitherto given him juſt occaſion to uſe; only to ſignify that he was to die a violent and bloody death for the ſalvation of mankind: For now to the former expreſſion of eating his fleſh, he adds another of drinking his blood; affirming at the ſame time, that except they did this, they muſt not expect eternal life: As if he had ſaid, Except ye believe the merit of that ſacrifice, which I ſhall offer for the ſins of the world, and own me for your Saviour, in dying a painful and ignominious death for your ſakes, and learn charity and patience, and humility and reſignation to the will of God, by my ſufferings, ye have not ſpiritual, nor ſhall ye have eternal life. But he, who is ſo far from rejecting me, and being offended at me; becauſe of that painful death which I am to ſuffer, that he doth on the other hand, receive all that Divine Inſtruction, which it does afford, and turns it into ſpiritual nouriſhment, by learning the high diſpleaſure of God againſt ſin, and his infinite love towards mankind; and the vanity of this world, and the worth of his own ſoul, and the neceſſity of repentance, and of a godly life; my death ſhall be to him a means of that eternal life, to which I ſhall raiſe him at the laſt day, as certainly as if he were now in actual poſſeſſion thereof. So that the doctrine concerning my death and ſufferings, which will be the greateſt ſtumbling-block and offence to unbelievers, is the moſt excellent meat and drink, becauſe it is the food of ſouls, when it is received with a firm and efficacious faith; and will ſecure alſo the reſurrection of the body to everlaſting life. And therefore he that believeth my death to be a ſacrifice for the ſins of the world, and does thereby learn that duty which it teacheth, and receive that comfort, which it affordeth, he will love me, and devote himſelf entirely to my ſervice, becauſe I have thus humbled myſelf; though that be the reaſon for which ſuch as you will be violently prejudiced againſt me. And on the other ſide he ſhall be peculiarly beloved and cared for by me: For, though in love to mankind, I am to be made an offering for ſin; yet it is a peculiar care I ſhall expreſs towards thoſe, who have a true ſenſe of my ſufferings in their behalf, who make a right uſe of them, and return that thankfulneſs and obedience, which their faith requires; (ſee 1 Tim. iv. 10.) and one remarkable expreſſion (and that of ſufficient weight to impreſs upon your minds what I ſay) of my peculiar love towards every ſuch believer, is what I have told you already; and I do carneſtly repeat it again, As ſure as the Father, who ſent me, will raiſe me from the dead; ſo ſurely will I raiſe up every one to everlaſting life, who believeth my doctrine, and liveth by faith: Mark therefore what I ſaid to you at firſt, (ver. 33—35.) That I am that true bread from Heaven; wherewith the manna that your Father eat, and the bread which you eat yeſterday are not to be compared: For, they were good for nothing but to preſerve a mortal life for a ſhort time: Whereas he that feedeth upon the Word and Doctrine, which God hath ſent you from Heaven, ſhall be raiſed from the dead, to aſcend thither, and to live there for ever.

Thus ended Jeſus's diſcourſe, which he ſpoke in publick in the ſynagogue at Capernaum, taken the occaſion of his alluſion from the peoples following him out of the wilderneſs for the ſake of the loaves; (ſee ver. 24, 25, 26.) in the whole teaching them to ſeek after the things which are above, and to be more deſirous of the ſpiritual and Heavenly Benefits of his miracles, than of the bodily relief, which they had found by them. But becauſe he had expreſſed his mind in this figurative way, and was by many underſtood, as if he had commanded to them the eating of his fleſh, and the drinking of his blood in the literal ſenſe: Therefore many, even of thoſe, who had for ſome time followed him, talked among themſelves, as if theſe ſayings of their maſter, muſt needs be offenſive to the ears of all perſons that had a ſenſe of humanity; and as for themſelves, that they knew not what to make of them, neither did they deſire him to explain himſelf further; but he, by his Divine Spirit, knowing what they muttered among themſelves, applied himſelf to them in particular, and upbraided them in this manner for taking ſo unreaſonable an offence againſt him. For, ſays he,

When you ſhall ſee me aſcend up to Heaven, it will not ſeem ſtrange to you that I am come down from thence; and, becauſe even then it will remain neceſſary that you ſhould eat my fleſh and drink my blood; you may be ſure, I do not mean, that groſs feeding upon my fleſh, and drinking my blood, in which you underſtand what I have ſaid; for my body will be then too far removed from the converſation of mortal men, to be capable of being ſo uſed. No, when I ſpeak to you of the conditions of obtaining everlaſting life, though I have now expreſſed them, by eating my fleſh and drinking my blood; yet you had reaſon to underſtand me of ſpiritual actions, which do indeed tend to the bettering of the inward man. For, they are ſuch things only that feed the ſoul, and can preſerve it to eternal life: But to this purpoſe the fleſh profiteth nothing: No, not my own fleſh, though you ſhould eat it as groſly as you underſtand my ſayings. For, even ſuch an eating would be but bodily nouriſhment, and could have no influence upon the mind. But if you would know what thoſe things are that better the ſoul, (and it is my buſineſs to call you off from that ſolicitous care you take of your mortal bodies, to mind your ſouls, and to provide for a Bleſſed Reſurrection;) If, I ſay, you would know what things are proper for the improvement of the mind, they are the words that I ſpake unto you; they are thoſe precepts of an Heavenly Life, and thoſe promiſes of eternal life, which I have laid before you, that faith, which I require you to have in my death, and that example of doctrine, charity and humility, which I require you to follow. Theſe are the ſpiritual means of renewing your minds: And, therefore, means alſo of preparing you for eternal life. But, no wonder that you wreſt my words to that your abſurd interpretation of eating mine own fleſh; for there are ſome amongſt you that diſlike my doctrine, and are quite tired of following me, only waiting for an opportunity to leave me. For, as ſoon as any man profeſſed himſelf his diſciple, Jeſus knew how he ſtood affected towards him; (ſee John ii. 23, 24, 25.) And he did not only know, who of the multitude, which followed him, would revolt, but likewiſe which of the Apoſtles would betray him; (ſee ver. 36.) Therefore Jeſus added, Becauſe I knew that there were ſome ſuch among you, I have thought fit to tell you before; (ſee ver. 37—39—44.) that my doctrine would never be heartily embraced and treaſured up in their hearts, whom God had not prepared for its reception by enduing them with a mind willing to learn; and with a prevailing deſire of obtaining God's favour, and eternal life. Now,

It was upon this cloſe application of Chriſt's doctrine to the conſciences of thoſe inſincere diſciples of his, that they, finding themſelves diſcovered, and that it was to no purpoſe to diſſemble, reſolved to take off the maſk and no longer pretend to be his diſciples, and went off from him without more ado. Which Jeſus obſerving, took this occaſion, both to ſhew that ſome of his diſciples were ſincere, and that he cared not to be followed by any but thoſe that were willing; and therefore he ſaid to the very twelve he had choſen to accompany him in his miniſtry, and to preach the Goſpel to all nations, "you ſee I do not compel men to follow me; but I let as many depart as are minded to go away. Now what ſay you? for, ye alſo may take your choice. Will ye ſtill continue my diſciples, or follow the example of theſe men, and go away?" Whereupon

Peter, who was the moſt forward ſpeaker in his maſter's cauſe, anſwered for himſelf and the other Apoſtles. "Lord our greateſt concern is, to attain eternal life; and we believe that thou alone art able to guide and bring us to it. For, we underſtand that thoſe very words of thine, with which theſe men were ſo unreaſonably offended, do ſhew us the neceſſity of believing thy words and doctrine, (as thou haſt ſaid before cap. ver. 63.) that we may live for ever, and we have already arrived to this faith by ſeeing thy mighty works, and hearing thy divine doctrines; for, by theſe teſtimonies we are convinced, beyond all doubt, that thou art the promiſed Meſſiah; and whereas theſe men call thee the ſon of Joſeph, we aſſuredly believe that thou art the Son of that God who giveth life to all, and will give eternal life to all that believe in thee. This as our ſteadfaſt faith and firm hope. But

As this was ſpoken in the name, and, as Peter thought, with the aſcent and conſent of all his fellow Apoſtles: Jeſus, to ſhew that he was as well acquainted with the hearts of his twelve Apoſtles, as with thoſe of the mixt multitude of his diſciples (ver. 64) anſwered them, to this purpoſe. What one of you hath ſaid in behalf of all, is true of all but one. I have indeed choſen you twelve before all my other diſciples, to be my chief companions and Miniſters; but there is one of you who already hates me, and is treacherouſly bent to do me miſchief. For, ſays the Evangeliſt, though he did not mention Judas Iſcariot the ſon of Simon, who was afterwards the traytor; tor; yet he meant him, and not any other of the Apoſtles.

Thus having concluded the paraphraſe upon this ſixth chapter of John, without which the unweary reader can ſcarce overcome thoſe difficulties which are contained in the figurative part thereof, I hope it will appear plain to every unbiaſſed Chriſtian, into whoſe hands it may be diſperſed. But for his greater ſatisfaction, I ſhall now give my reaſons for the former paraphraſtical interpretation by way of notes on thoſe paſſages, which have been moſt controverted and wreſted by the Church of Rome, to ſupport their favourite doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation. Therefore,

Ver. 30. They ſaid therefore unto him, What ſign ſheweſt thou then, that we may ſee, and believe thee? What doſt thou work?] This is a ſudden turn of a giddy multitude (ſee the premiſes) and ſo ſurprizing that Grotius does not allow thoſe that ſaid this to be the ſame multitude as were the day before fed in the wilderneſs. But I can ſee no reaſon for his opinion; for, the Evangeliſt plainly ſeems to continue the relation, as of the ſame perſons; and it is no unuſal thing for men, either to keep or alter their perſuaſions, as they are led by their prejudices and intereſts. And our Saviour told thoſe that had been fed in the wilderneſs, that they followed him for wordly advantages, and not for inſtruction in ſpiritual and heavenly matters, ver. 26. ſo that finding themſelves diſappointed, it was not unlikely that they would fall in their opinion of him. To which we may add, that one main deſign of his following diſcourſe was to ſhew, That external evidence was not ſufficient to create faith, without the inward preparation of a ſincere and honeſt mind, which was very pertinent to the caſe of thoſe men who were made confident that Jeſus was that Prophet, by the late miracle, 'till they found that his doctrine was contrary to their wordly affections. For which reaſons, I have choſe to continue the diſcourſe in the paraphraſe above, as the text ſeems to direct, i. e. between Jeſus and the ſame perſons that ſpeak to him at ver. 25. rather than to ſubſtitute other ſpeakers, for which there is neither authority of the text, nor any need upon the account of avoiding inconvenience.

Ver. 34 Then ſaid they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread.] They are ſtill the ſame perſons that ſpeak; for there is no reaſon yet to ſuppoſe the contrary. And by this ſaying, it ſeems they underſtood Jeſus as if he had ſpoken to them of bread from heaven, in the literal and groſs ſenſe, and by giving that to them, from day to day, had promiſed to make them live for ever upon this earth, ſo that from his laſt words, they ſeemed to conceive ſome better hope of him again, and that he would continue to fill their bellies miraculouſly every day. Therefore they ſpake to him now with more reſpect. So hard it was even for Jeſus to bring them to any underſtanding, or ſenſe of things that concerned their minds, though he would lead them thereunto, by alluſion to things grateful to their ſenſes. And this indeed was the general temper of the Jews in our Saviour's days, who were alſo in this reſpect rather worſe than their forefathers. And it ſhould be eſpecially remarked, that it was juſt ſuch another anſwer, as the Samaritan woman made to a like ſpeech of our Lord in ch. iv. 5, 13, 14, 15.

Ver. 36. But I ſaid unto you, That ye alſo have ſeen me, and believe not.] Theſe perſons, of whom our Lord ſaid that they believed not, were thoſe very men, who, the day before, having ſeen the miracles which he did, ſaid, this is of a truth that Prophet that ſhould come into the world: whereby it ſhould ſeem that then they believed, but that their minds were now changed, tho' upon no other reaſon, than that they now perceived his great deſign was, to feed their minds with good doctrine, and not to pamper their bodies. Which is a plain inſtance, how great an hindrance worldly-mindedneſs is to true faith; ſince in this caſe, the ſame evidence which convinced theſe men, while they took our Saviour to be a benefactor to their bodies, had loſt all its force with them, when they once perceived that his great buſineſs was to ſave their ſouls. Some, even of our Lord's diſciples alſo were of this diſpoſition; and it had the ſame effect upon them, as may be obſerved in ver. 64.

Ver. 37. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me; and him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.] It ſeems very reaſonable to interpret theſe phraſes of the Father's, giving ſome to Chriſt, and drawing them, by what our Lord ſaid at ver. 26. that theſe men followed him, becauſe they did eat of the loaves, i. e. not from a ſincere deſire of learning the truth and attaining eternal life, but for worldly ends: for, on the one ſide, the luſts of theſe men were the cauſe of their unbelief; and, on the other ſide, our Saviour ſays, that all who are given and drawn by the Father, would believe and become his diſciples, and none elſe: Therefore the Father gives thoſe only to Chriſt, who are prepared by an honeſt heart, and willingneſs to learn the truth. The phraſe is an alluſion to what is often ſeen amongſt us, i. e. to a man's committing the care of educating of an hopeful and promiſing child to a wiſe and skilfull maſter, with an expectation that thereby the child ſhould be well inſtructed, and might prove a comfort and a bleſſing to his parents. Notwithſtanding, it is not denied that theſe expreſſions alſo imply the preparations of the heart to be from the Lord: Neither does this hinder, but that our Lord muſt be underſtood to have done what was fit, to prepare thoſe whom he found to be ſo averſe, as theſe men were; (ſee the notes on ver. 25.) But the meaning is properly, that if men obſtinately perſiſted in their ſenſual and worldly prejudices againſt the truth, God had provided no remedy for ſuch men. And therefore, as Chryſoſtom ſhews, we muſt not argue in this manner. If every one whom the Father draweth, or giveth, cometh to Chriſt and none elſe; then thoſe whom the Father giveth not, are diſcharged of all fault, and cannot juſtly be accuſed. For, ſays he, theſe are vain words and mere pretences; ſince the free choice of our own wills muſt go to the effecting of this matter: For, to be taught, and to believe, depends much upon our own chuſing.

Ver. 39. And this is the Father's will which hath ſent me, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it up again at the laſt day.] Where note, that altho' the wicked ſhall be raiſed up at the laſt day, by the power of Jeſus, as well as the juſt: Yet when the reſurrection is ſimply mentioned, it is commonly underſtood of the reſurrection to eternal life, which is the reſurrection of the juſt. So that when our Lord ſpake here of the reſurrection at the laſt day, he put them out of all doubt, that he meant not to pamper their bodies, and to take care for their pleaſures in this life; but that he ſpake to them of a better life hereafter, and of the means whereby to attain it.

Ver. 40. And this is the will of him that ſent me, that every one which ſeeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlaſting life; and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day.] Here to ſee the Son, who is Jeſus our Saviour, ſignifies the ſame, as in ver. 36. i. e. ſeeing his miracles, and all his other teſtimonies of a Divine Authority, which were diſcernible in him; only θεωρᾶν, ſeems to denote an attentive conſideration of them, which is proper to ingenuous and honeſt men, and will certainly produce faith. Whereas ἑωράκατε in ver. 36. may ſignify that careleſs and ſuperficial ſight of his works, proper to thoſe men in whom prejudice ſo prevailed, that they ſaw, and yet believed not. Now, that our Saviour does here and elſewhere, repeat his doctrine concerning this inward work of God, viz. an honeſt and godly diſpoſition, is an argument that he laid great ſtreſs upon it; and that indeed this was the main thing they were to take pains about with themſelves. For, the outward evidence was given them, whether they would or not; but the inward preparation, without which the outward evidence could do them no good at all, muſt in ſome part be their own work, as well as God's; as it plainly appears from Chriſt's ſpeaking to them ſo much about it as he did. For, if it was not their own fault that they were not inwardly prepared; and if it was impoſſible for them to do any thing conſiderable towards it; his reproof gainſt God had ſeemed ſomewhat unreaſonable and unjuſt, and if they had ſo underſtood it, they had not been wanting to tell him ſo.

Ver. 44. No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him; and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day.] The ancient and eloquent Greek father Chryſoſtom obſerves, that the Manichees ſtrennouſly maintained from this text, That nothing was in our own power; for, ſaid they, If a man comes to him, what needs he to be drawn? But, ſays he, this does not take away all power over our own actions, but rather ſhews that we ſtand in need of God's help, and that not every negligent perſon, but he that takes great pains with himſelf will come to Chriſt; ſee the true ſenſe of this verſe in the paraphraſe, and in the notes on ver. 27.

Ver. 45. It is written in the Prophets, and they ſhall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.] This relateth to the 54th chapter of Iſaiah, containeth a deſcription of God's gracious care and providence over his Church; one inſtance whereof, ver. 33. is this; And all thy children ſhall be taught of God. Which muſt needs imply theſe two things: 1. That God would reveal that truth which the Church ſhould profeſs; and this was eminently done by the Son of God himſelf coming down Heaven to make it known, and by the Holy Ghoſt inſpiring the Apoſtles afterward. 2. That God would abundantly ſatisfy men by Divine Teſtimonies, that he had ſent his Son into the world for that purpoſe. For theſe reaſons, all that believe in Chriſt, are taught of God. Now the force of our Saviour's argument, from this prediction, lies in this: If God hath promiſed to reveal to men the knowledge of ſaving truth, and to convince them that he doth reveal it; then no man to whom this revelation is made, ſhall want ſufficient means of inſtruction and conviction; and conſequently, every man that is not under the power of worldly luſts and intereſts, will be effectually wrought upon by them. And this freedom from ſuch prejudices, our Lord here calls hearing and learning of the Father, which is the ſame with being given or drawn to Chriſt, the phraſe uſed before; and this intimates that it is ſomething we do towards the preparing our ſelves; and that we may alſo hinder it: For hearing and learning, are voluntary actions. A man may ſtop his ears againſt inſtruction, and alienate his mind from what is ſuggeſted to him: Therefore ſomething men may do to attain that honeſt heart which the Divine Inſpiration worketh: They may alſo quench this work of the Holy Spirit. The meaning of the whole is, as if our Lord had ſaid; you muſt have God for your maſter, before you can be the diſciples of the Son: You muſt be prepared by thoſe qualities, which there is no need of a new revelation to teach you, before you are fit to receive that doctrine which the Son brings. And now it is plain, that theſe very ſpeeches and reaſonings of our Saviour, tended to prepare them for conviction and faith: For by ſhewing them the great need of a teachable ſpirit in hearing and learning of God; and what bleſſings the want of this diſpoſition would bereave them of, and by repeating and inculcating upon them, that great concernment of the reſurrection at the laſt day; he did what was moſt proper in it ſelf to diſpoſe them to a better mind, to weaken their prejudices, and to make them attend to thoſe teſtimonies of his coming from God, which they had already ſeen, inſtead of deſiring more ſigns, which in the temper they were in at preſent, would have done them no good, if they had been granted.

Ver. 47. Verily verily I ſay unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlaſting life.] This ſaying of our Saviour, explains all that he ſays about the neceſſity of eating, &c. ſhewing clearly, that he meant the believing of his doctrine, and being conformed to it in heart and life. For if he that believeth, ſhall obtain everlaſting life; then he eateth Chriſt, according to his meaning in this chapter, that believeth in him.

Ver. 48. I am that bread of life.] Here our Lord again calleth himſelf bread, thereby implying what he afterwards expreſſed, that he is to be eaten. Now, moſt certainly we are in ſuch a ſenſe to eat Chriſt, as that is wherein he is bread. But no man will ſay, that Jeſus was, or is, or can be properly bread; therefore it is not eating him literally and properly, that can be here meant, but only believing on him, which is by the ſame figure called eating, whereby he called himſelf bread.

Ver. 50. This is the bread, which cometh down from Heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.] This is the firſt paſſage where our Saviour, in purſuance of that figure of calling himſelf bread, expreſſeth believing in him, (ver. 35. 47.) by eating him. In the 35th verſe, where he alſo calls himſelf the bread of life, he did not purſue the figure throughout, by ſaying, he that eateth me, but, he that cometh to me, i. e. who is my diſciple, ſhall never hunger; and, he that believeth on me, (not he that drinketh me) ſhall never thirſt: Which makes it very plain, that by eating, we are here to underſtand believing; not a corporeal, but a ſpiritual action. And becauſe it does not yet appear, that he limits the object of believing, we are therefore to underſtand him as ſpeaking of the neceſſity of receiving his whole doctrine, and ſubmitting to it in heart and life; which, whoſoever does, ſhall not die, but live for ever in Heaven.

Ver. 51. I am the living bread, which came down from Heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever: and the bread that I will give, is my fleſh which I will give for the life of the world.] Without doing great violence to our Saviour's words in this place, they cannot be ſo underſtood, as if he promiſed to turn bread into his fleſh, for the life of the world; as they muſt ſuppoſe, who would ground the Roman doctrine of tranſubſtantiation upon this place. For if ſome ſuch change were here to be underſtood, it muſt be quite contrary, viz. a change of his fleſh into bread; inaſmuch as he calls himſelf the living bread, and ſays, That the bread which he would give was his fleſh, that he would give for the life of the world. If therefore it be inſiſted upon, that the words are to be properly underſtood; and that therefore a change muſt be ſuppoſed, of one ſubſtance into another, it muſt not be of bread into the ſubſtance of Chriſt's fleſh, but of Chriſt's fleſh into the ſubſtance of bread: which interpretation, I think, no body has ever yet been ſo unreaſonable as to contend for. What account therefore is to be given of theſe words, but this, that our Saviour having hitherto purſued a figurative way of ſpeaking, upon the occaſion ſo often mentioned, went on in the ſame way of expreſſion, to lay before them that principal doctrine of the Goſpel, that Chriſt was to die for the ſalvation of mankind: which is the plain ſenſe of giving his fleſh to be bread for us: for he gave his fleſh for the life of the world, when he gave himſelf to the death for us all: and his fleſh ſo given, is bread to us, becauſe his death is the means of our living for ever.

And whereas Chriſt mentioned the giving of his fleſh for the life of the world, as a future thing; and likewiſe the giving of his fleſh to be bread; it does not follow, that becauſe the former was to be performed upon the croſs only, therefore the latter was to be performed only in the Euchariſt. This, I ſay, does not follow, unleſs it could be proved that he promiſed, in thoſe words, to give us his natural fleſh to be eaten properly in the Euchariſt; which I have ſhewn is impoſſible to be proved from hence. Still therefore we are to underſtand, not a corporal, but a ſpiritual eating: and whereas our Saviour ſaid, The bread which I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world; the meaning is this, that his fleſh ſhall be given for the life of the world, once for all; but the ſpiritual food, or nouriſhment, which his fleſh ſo given ſhould afford, would be given evermore, not only in the Euchariſt, but in the whole miniſtration of the Goſpel, which holds forth the death of Chriſt to be believed, and offers the bleſſed fruits and advantages thereof to all that are diſpoſed to partake of them.

It is alſo objected againſt this interpretation, That if the doctrine of our Lord's Paſſion, and the believing of it be here meant, no reaſon can be given, why our Saviour ſhould ſpeak in the future tenſe, The bread which I will give, is my fleſh: ſince this ſpiritual food was no leſs given before the incarnation and Paſſion of Chriſt, than afterward; for the Patriarchs lived, and were nouriſhed by faith. And therefore if ſpiritual eating be only intended, Chriſt ſeemed to promiſe a new thing, which yet he had given of old: ſo that his promiſe is to be underſtood, of giving his natural fleſh to be eaten, which was never done before the Euchariſt. This is the objection: and a very ſtrange one it muſt needs be to him that ſhall conſider, 1. That our Saviour ſpeaketh in the future tenſe, to the woman of Samaria, where yet the expreſſion is acknowledged to be figurative, and the meainng of it to be believing: Whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt; but the water that I ſhall give him, [δώσω] ſhall be in him a well, &c. Now, would not this be rare arguing; our Lord ſays, I will give water: therefore he promiſed ſomething that he had never given before; therefore ſpiritual drinking, or believing, is not meant, becauſe the Patriarchs believed of old, therefore the promiſe is to be taken literally and properly? And yet this is that very argument to prove the literal ſenſe in this verſe. But then, 2. Our Lord ſpeaks of the neceſſity of preſent eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood in the 53d and 54th verſes. And therefore the argument from the future tenſe, to prove that he ſpake properly of the Euchariſt, is inſufficient. 3. Suppoſing that all had been future, and that ſomething was promiſed, more than had been formerly given; yet it follows not that Chriſt ſpake properly of the Euchariſt, much leſs of giving his fleſh properly to be eaten there. For although the fathers believed of old, yet the doctrine of the Paſſion was never clearly underſtood by the faithful before our Saviour's time, no, nor as yet by his own diſciples. Our Saviour did now and then mention it, and here he gave them ſome intimations of it, which they underſtood not then ſo well as they did afterwards. [See the note on ver. 53.] Himſelf ſaid to them; Many Prophets and righteous men have deſired to ſee thoſe things that ye have ſeen, and have not ſeen them; and to hear thoſe things that ye hear, and have not heard them; Matth. xiii. 17. And yet his diſciples hitherto had attained to a very imperfect knowledge of Chriſtianity, to what they had afterwards. Although therefore the good men of old were juſtified by faith, and ſaw the promiſes afar off, and had ſome general intimations of the Goſpel; yet whether the particular objects of our faith, were not a new thing worthy of Chriſt's promiſe, I leave indifferent men to judge.

Laſtly, It has been ſaid, that the natural fleſh of Chriſt was to be given, or offered upon the croſs ſubſtantially or properly, for the life of the world, and therefore the ſame fleſh was to be given with the ſame propriety, to be bread for us, and to be eaten by us, viz. in the Euchariſt. To which I anſwer, 1. As before, that this arguing will conclude more than they deſire who urge it. For if the former clauſe is to be underſtood in the ſame ſtrictneſs and propriety of words with the latter clauſe, then the fleſh of Chriſt was to become bread properly. For he ſaid, the bread which I will give, is my fleſh. But, 2. It is much more reaſonable to underſtand the giving of his fleſh to be bread, according to the meaning of this kind of expreſſions throughout the whole diſcourſe: And our adverſaries do acknowledge, that thoſe paſſages, I am the bread of life; he that eateth of this bread, ſhall live for ever; that is, all of this kind from ver. 32. to this very clauſe in ver. 51. are to be underſtood of ſpiritual eating, i. e. of believing. Since therefore our Saviour gave no manner of intimation that he changed his ſtile, there is more reaſon to interpret thoſe words, of giving his fleſh to be bread, and of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, in a ſenſe agreeable to that wherein eating Him is to be underſtood all along, before, than to underſtand them properly, that is to ſay, of bodily eating; although it is the fleſh of Chriſt which is given to be eaten, that fleſh which was ſubſtantially and properly given for the life of the world.

Ver. 53. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Except ye eat the fleſh, &c.] If it be asked, Why our Saviour ſtill perſiſted in a figurative and alluſive way of expreſſion, although he ſaw their groſs, and perhaps wilful miſtake of his former words? [ver. 52.] It may be anſwered, That he knew good reaſon for it, tho' the reaſon be not left upon record. However, a probable conjecture ought to ſuffice in ſuch a caſe as this, where the objection is, That no account can be given of it. I anſwer therefore, That our Lord did not think fit to foretel the ignominious death he was to ſuffer upon the croſs, ſo publickly as he foretold his reſurrection. Sometimes he told his diſciples that he was to ſuffer, and be killed, [Matt. xvi.] but to others he intimated it obſcurely, with intention that they might afterwards remember what he ſaid, rather than that they ſhould underſtand it preſently. But neither to the multitude, nor to his diſciples, did he clearly ſignify the reaſons and ends of his paſſion; this ſeeming to be one of thoſe things that they could not bear now, but which the comforter ſhould reveal to them afterward. It may therefore be ſaid, That our Lord did not deliver the doctrine concerning the death he was to ſuffer, and the Bleſſed Fruits thereof to all believers, in ſuch-like plain words and expreſſions, as I have endeavoured to uſe in the Paraphraſe, becauſe he uſed to conceal the former from the people, and reſerve the clear manifeſtation of the latter, till after his reſurrection and aſcenſion, when theſe ſayings would be brought to remembrance, and better underſtood than they were at firſt. But one may ask, Why did he not at leaſt tell theſe men, that theſe were ſtill but expreſſions of ſpiritual things, by way of alluſion to things ſenſible? To which I anſwer, That he did thus explain himſelf to his diſciples preſently after, and that upon occaſion of this groſs miſtake, [ſee ver. 62, 63.] and nothing appears to the contrary, but that this explication was made in the ſynagogue, in the hearing of all. But whether it was ſo or not, 'tis ſufficient for us that he explained himſelf as he did to the diſciples.

In the mean time, Cardinal Cajetan's argument, that this place cannot be underſtood of the Euchariſt, becauſe then it would infer a neceſſity of the peoples receiving the cup, is an argument ad homines, plain and ſtrong. Neither is it to be avoided, by pretending that Chriſt does not ſpeak of the ſpecies either of bread or wine, but of the things contained under them; and therefore that becauſe whole Chriſt is contained under one kind, the condition of eternal life is fulfilled, by receiving him under either kind: For they that receive him under the ſpecies of a wafer, or a morſel of bread only, which is to be eaten, cannot with any modeſty be ſaid to drink his blood; which is yet made as neceſſary as eating his fleſh. We grant, that eating and drinking being taken as figurative expreſſions, do ſignify the ſame thing, viz. believing; and we ſay, that believing, when it is expreſſed by eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, refers to that particular object of faith, the death of Chriſt, ſignified by the ſeparate mention of his body and blood. But eating and drinking being taken properly, do not ſignify the ſame thing. If therefore our Saviour is to be underſtood properly, of receiving him in the Euchariſt, by eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood: The words are plain, beyond all diſpute, that he is to be received by drinking his blood there, as well as by eating his fleſh: Which ſince the Church of Rome denies to the laity; the Cardinal had good reaſon not to underſtand theſe words of the Euchariſt, being concerned, as he was, to make the beſt of all thoſe uſages which he found in his Church. And yet I doubt this great man hath not quite delivered that Church from all the reproof this very text has for their half-communion. For although theſe words are not to be underſtood properly of the Euchariſt; yet, I think, what Grotius ſays, cannot be reaſonably denied, viz. that here is a tacit alluſion to the Euchariſt. And if that be true, the text even thus taken, will condemn their withholding the cup from the laity. For the alluſion muſt conſiſt in this, that, as according to the inſtitution of the Euchariſt, the Holy Bread, and Cup, were ſeparately taken to ſhew forth the violent death of Chriſt; ſo in theſe words of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, the believing of his meritorious death, and following the example of his patience, &c. is expreſſed by the ſeparate mention of his fleſh and blood, and therefore of eating the one, and drinking the other. Which alluſion is ſo apt, that I ſhould not wonder, if it inclines thoſe that inquire no further, to believe that our Saviour here ſpeaks of the Euchariſt. But ſince the ſeparate taking of the Holy Bread, and the Holy Cup in the Euchariſt on the one ſide, and the ſeparate mention of his fleſh and blood on the other, is that in which the alluſion conſiſts, it is utterly deſtroyed by the pretended concomitance, i. e. by giving the body and blood, not as ſeparated, but as united; or by giving the body and blood to be eaten; not the fleſh to be eaten, and the blood to be drunk. In ſhort, as our Saviour did ſacramentallly repreſent his death, by taking the Holy Bread, and the Holy Cup, ſeparately, and giving them ſeparately; ſo he did in words, alluding to that ſacrament, repreſent the ſame death, i. e. by the diſtinct mention of his fleſh and blood; and he repreſented alſo the neceſſity of faith in his death, under the diſtinct expreſſions of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood. And therefore, they who in the Euchariſt pretend to give both kinds in one, deſtroy the reaſon why theſe words allude to the Euchariſt. But if they ſay, that our Saviour here ſpeaks properly of the Euchariſt, nothing can be more evident, than that they openly condemn themſelves, in denying that to the people, which, as they ſay, he required in proper and expreſs terms, and that is, the drinking of his blood.

And in truth, they deſtroy the ſignificancy of the ſacrament, which is no otherwiſe a repreſentation of our Lord's death, than as it repreſents the ſeparation of his fleſh and blood. And then I deſire them to tell me, how they can be ſaid to commemorate the death of Chriſt, by receiving a ſacrament that ſhews forth the ſeparation of his body and blood, who do not receive them ſeparated, but united? Paul concluding the end of the ſacrament, from the inſtitution of it, ſaid, As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do ſhew the Lord's death till he come: The reaſon whereof is exceeding plain, viz. becauſe the ſeparation of the blood from the body, is ſhewn, by the diſtinct taking of the bread and the cup, to eat the one, and drink the other. But this reaſon is ſo confounded by the half-communion, and the doctrine of concomitance, that the inſtitution is not only contradicted, but, I fear, the ſacrament is denied to them that receive one kind only; and that they have not ſo much as an half-communion, inaſmuch as they do not receive a ſacrament that ſhews the death of Chriſt.

Ver. 54. Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, &c.] Becauſe our Lord continues in his ſpeech, to make a ſeparate mention of his fleſh and blood; it follows, that he ſtill ſpeaks of his death, and the particular doctrine concerning his death, which would be entertained with the greateſt difficulty, viz. that he was a ſacrifice for the ſins of the world; and therefore a Saviour, becauſe crucified, &c. The lively belief whereof is, that which our Lord means by eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood; and not eating and drinking the ſacrament of his body and blood; which a man may do to his condemnation. And therefore, although Auſtin ſometimes underſtood theſe words of the Euchariſt, yet he did not ſo underſtand them, as if every one who partakes of the Euchariſt, does alſo eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of Chriſt; for he manifeſtly denied that the wicked were partakers of the very body of Chriſt, though they partook of the ſacrament of his body: And yet 'tis impoſſible but they muſt do the one as well as the other, if it be true, that the proper ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt is in the ſacrament, as the Church of Rome pretends. And by conſequence, if this corporal eating be intended, it ſeems clearly to follow, that no man who partakes of the Euchariſt can be damned: Which is certainly very falſe, and therefore corporal eating cannot be meant here, but only ſpiritual eating. And ſo Auſtin underſtood it, although he applied theſe words ſometimes to the Euchariſt, inaſmuch as he denied that the wicked do eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of Chriſt, although with their mouths they take the ſacrament of his body and blood. But becauſe this ſpiritual eating, which is neceſſary to ſalvation, is by no means confined to the participation of the Euchariſt; and becauſe many do not partake ſpiritually in the body and blood of Chriſt, that yet do partake of the ſacrament, I cannot underſtand why our Saviour ſhould ſpeak here directly and properly of the Euchariſt; and therefore I adhere to the ſenſe of thoſe fathers who interpret this place, and thoſe that follow, of ſpiritual actions only.

Ver. 55. For my fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.] He continues to diſtinguiſh the fleſh from the blood, and therefore ſtill ſpeaks of his Paſſion, giving ſome kind of pre-eminence to faith in his death, above the belief of other particular doctrines, though that would be admitted with greateſt difficulty.

Ver. 56. He that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.] His purſuance of the ſame expreſſion, ſtill ſhews that he ſpeaks of the ſame thing, viz. believing his death to be a ſacrifice, &c. And here he intimates, that his ſufferings, which would be a ſtumbling-block to unbelievers, would be an effectual engagement to all good men to love him; and that their fervent love, and humble gratitude, would be rewarded with his eſpecial love. For as God's dwelling in men, ſignifies his gracious Preſence amongſt them, and his delight in doing them good; ſo their dwelling in him, ſignifies their love to him, and conſtant attendance upon the doing of his Will, and the delight they have in knowing themſelves to be always in his preſence.

Ver. 57. As the living Father hath ſent me, and I live by the Father: ſo he that eateth me, even he ſhall live by me.] Here our Bleſſed Saviour ſeems to leave the ſpecial conſideration of his ſufferings, and death, and to ſpeak now of his whole doctrine, as he had done before; for, as by eating his fleſh and drinking his blood, we are to underſtand believing the merit and inſtruction of his death, &c. ſo by eating him, we are taught before at ver. 35, 47, 50, to underſtand believing him in general, i. e. believing all his doctrine.

Ver. 58. This is that bread which came down from Heaven; not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead: he that eateth of this bread, ſhall live for ever.] From theſe words it appears that our Saviour Chriſt concludes the premiſes with returning to the ſame thing, and by uſing the ſame expreſſions which he began withal (ſee ver. 32, 35, 50.) which is eaſily proved from his ſpeaking all along in the ſame figurative ſtile, and in thoſe ſame expreſſions of eating and drinking, perpetually alluded to the manna and the loaves in the wilderneſs; which, it is to be remembred, gave occaſion to all this diſcourſe.

Ver. 63. It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing; the words that I ſpake unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life.] To explain theſe words more intelligibly, it will be neceſſary to collate them with the context in the ſixty-firſt and ſixty-ſecond verſes preceding: For, our Lord perceiving how groſsly the Jews, and ſome of his own diſciples underſtood thoſe expreſſions, of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, did upon this occaſion explain his own meaning as fully as he did to Nicodemus in the point of regeneration. For Nicodemus having ſaid, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the ſecond time into his mother's womb and be born? Jeſus anſwered, Verily, verily, I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh, and that which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit. Which was as much as to ſay, the fleſh profiteth nothing, (as it is expreſſed in this Scripture we are explaining) "And if you were by a ſtrange miracle to be born again the natural way, by this fleſhly birth, you would come again only into a mortal life: For, that fleſhly birth would not avail you for everlaſting life." In the very ſame manner the Bleſſed Jeſus repeated thoſe ſayings, which the Jews, and ſome of his own diſciples were offended at in this chapter; and again explains them in the ſame manner, ſaying, It is the ſpirit that quickneth; the fleſh profiteth nothing, &c. which being compared to the anſwer to Nicodemus now mentioned and explained, can yield no other meaning by the light that anſwer affords, than ſuch as I have expreſſed above in the paraphraſe on this chapter and verſe.

As for the ſixty-ſecond verſe, it might be intended as an anſwer to that particular exception againſt him, mentioned at the 42d verſe. That he was the ſon of Joſeph, and could not therefore reaſonably pretend to come down from Heaven; to which if our Lord referred, his words are a proper anſwer, That when they ſhould ſee him aſcend into Heaven; they would no longer doubt of the truth of his coming from thence. But, I rather think thoſe words refer to that great offence which ſome of his own diſciples took againſt him, that he ſhould ſpeak of their eating of his fleſh and drinking of his blood; for they were his diſciples only that ſaw him aſcend. And when they ſhould know that he was in Heaven, they could not, without great ſtupidity, think that he would give them his fleſh to eat, and his blood to drink, in that groſs ſenſe wherein they underſtood him.

Ver. 68. — Thou haſt the words of eternal life.] This is a confirmation of my interpretation of ver. 63. For, Peter here ſeems plainly to repeat our Lord's ſenſe almoſt in the ſame words; The words that I ſpake unto you, they are life; or, the words of eternal life: As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, we do not underſtand thee in that groſs and abſurd ſenſe to which theſe men have perverted thy words; for we perceive, that thou ſpakeſt of thoſe doctrines and revelations, by which we are to be guided to eternal life. But if Peter had underſtood our Saviour in the ſame ſenſe, as the unbelieving Jews are repreſented to have done, and as his revolted diſciples underſtood him, his anſwer would certainly have been to this purpoſe; "whatever appearance there is of inhumanity and contradiction in giving thy fleſh to be eaten, and thy blood to be drank for the life of the world; yet we believe, that we ſhall eat thy natural fleſh, and drink, &c. becauſe thou haſt ſaid it: For, though this ſharp ſaying ſtaggered thoſe men that are gone off, yet it does not ſtagger us at all." Such an anſwer, I ſay, would have beſt ſuited the character of the Apoſtle Peter, had he taken Chriſt's words in the literal and carnal ſenſe; but as he did not ſpeak in theſe, or ſuch like terms, but only in the words of the text, I think, a reaſonable man muſt acknowledge, that Peter did not underſtand our Saviour's expreſſions, as the perverſe Jews, and weak diſciples had underſtood them. And conſequently in the next verſe,

Ver. 69. And we believe and are ſure, that thou art that Chriſt, the Son of the living God.] Peter ſhews us what he and his fellow-diſciples underſtood by eating, viz. believing, and Jeſus had expreſſed himſelf before, at ver. 47. Where note, that as Chriſt approved of this anſwer by Peter, in the name of the believing diſciples, it is I believe, more ſafe to follow Peter's interpretation, with our Saviour's approbation, than to follow any boaſting arguments of the Church of Rome without it, whoſe defenders pretend in vain, to make this chapter ſubſervient to their erroneous doctrines of Tranſubſtantiation, and the corporeal preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt. Againſt whom I ſhall always endeavour to defend the true Scripture-Doctrine; and therefore ſhall now add, what I promiſed in my notes on the ſix and twentieth chapter of Matthew.

A Diſſertation on Tranſubſtantiation, and the Corporeal Preſence of Chriſt, in the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper.

IN handling of this argument, I ſhall proceed in this plain method.

I I ſhall conſider the pretended grounds and reaſons of the Church of Rome for that doctrine.

II. I ſhall produce our objections againſt it.

FIRST, I will conſider the pretended grounds and reaſons of the Church of Rome for this doctrine. Which muſt be one or more of theſe five. Either, 1ſt. The authority of Scripture. Or, 2dly. The perpetual belief of this doctrine in the Chriſtian Church, as an evidence that they always underſtood and interpreted our Saviour's words, This is my body, in this ſenſe. Or, 3dly. The authority of the preſent Church to make and declare new articles of faith. Or, 4thly. The abſolute neceſſity of ſuch a change as this in the ſacrament, to the comfort and benefit of thoſe who receive this ſacrament. Or, 5thly. To magnify the power of the prieſt in being able to work ſo great a miracle.

1ſt. They pretend for this doctrine the authority of Scripture in thoſe words of our Saviour, This is my body. Now to ſhew the inſufficiency of this pretence, I ſhall endeavour to make good theſe two things.

1. That there is no neceſſity of underſtanding thoſe words of our Saviour in the ſenſe of Tranſubſtantiation.

2. That there is a great deal of reaſon to underſtand them otherwiſe.

Firſt, That there is no neceſſity to underſtand thoſe words of our Saviour in the ſenſe of Tranſubſtantiation. If there be any, it muſt be from one of theſe two reaſons. Either becauſe there are no figurative expreſſions in Scripture, which I think no man ever yet ſaid; or elſe, becauſe a ſacrament admits of no figures; which would be very abſurd for any man to ſay, ſince it is of the very nature of a ſacrament to repreſent and exhibit ſome inviſible grace and benefit by an outward ſign and figure: And eſpecially ſince it cannot be denied, but that in the inſtitution of this very ſacrament our Saviour uſeth figurative expreſſions and ſeveral words which cannot be taken ſtrictly and literally. When he gave the cup he ſaid, This cup is the New Teſtament in my blood, which is ſhed for you and for many for the remiſſion of ſins. Where firſt, the cup is put for wine contained in the cup; or elſe if the words be literally taken, ſo as to ſignify a ſubſtantial change, it it is not of the wine but of the cup; and that, not into the blood of Chriſt but into the New Teſtament or new covenant in his blood. Beſides, that his blood is ſaid then to be ſhed, and his body to be broken, which was not till his paſſion, which followed the inſtitution and firſt celebration of this ſacrament.

But that there is no neceſſity to underſtand our Saviour's words in the ſenſe of Tranſubſtantiation, I will take the plain conceſſion of a great number of the moſt learned writers of the Church of Rome in this controverſy, de Euch. l. 3. c. 23. Bellarmine, in 3. diſ. 49. qu. 75. ſect. 2. Suarez and (in 3. part. diſp. 180. qu. 75. art. 2. c. 15.) Vaſquez do acknowledge Scotus the great ſchoolman to have ſaid, that this doctrine cannot be evidently proved from Scripture: And Bellarmine grants this not to be improbable; and Suarez and Vaſquez acknowledge (in ſent. l. 4. diſt. 11. q. 1. n. 15.) Durandus to have ſaid as much. (in 4. ſent. q. 5. & quodl. 4. q. 3.) Ocham, another famous ſchoolman, ſays expreſly, that the doctrine which holds the ſubſtance of the bread and wine to remain after conſecration, is neither repugnant to reaſon nor to Scripture. (in 4. ſent. q. 6. art. 2.) Petrus ab Alliaco Cardinal of Cambray ſays plainly, that the doctrine of the ſubſtance of bread and wine remaining after conſecration is more eaſy and free from abſurdity, more rational, and no ways repugnant to the authority of Scripture; nay more, that for the other doctrine, viz. of Tranſubſtantiation, there is no evidence in Scripture. (in canon. Miſſ. Lect 40.) Gabriel Biel, another great ſchoolman and divine of their Church, freely declares, that as to any thing expreſs'd in the canon of the Scriptures, a man may believe that the ſubſtance of bread and wine doth remain after conſecration: And therefore he reſolves the belief of tranſubſtantiation into ſome other revelation, beſides Scripture, which he ſuppoſeth the Church had about it. (in Aquin. 3. part. qu. 75. art. 1.) Cardinal Cajetan confeſſeth that the Goſpel doth no where expreſs that the bread is changed into the body of Chriſt; that we have this from the authority of the Church; nay, he goes farther, that there is nothing in the Goſpel which enforceth any man to underſtand theſe words of Chriſt, this is my body, in a proper and not a metaphorical ſenſe; but the Church having underſtood them in a proper ſenſe they are to be ſo explained: Which words in the Roman edition of Cajetan are expunged by order of Pope (Ægid. Connink. de ſacram. q. 75. art. 1 n. 13.) Pius V. Cardinal (de ſacram. l. 2. c. 3.) Contarenus, and (Loc. Theolog. l. 3. c. 3.) Melchior Canus, one of the beſt and moſt judicious writers that Church ever had, reckon this doctrine among thoſe which are not ſo expreſly found in Scripture. I will add but one more, of great authority in the Church, and a reputed martyr, (contra captiv. Babylon. c. 10. n. 2.) Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, who ingenuouſly confeſſeth, that in the words of the inſtitution, there is not one word from whence the true preſence of the fleſh and blood of Chriſt in our maſs can be proved: So that we need not much contend that this doctrine hath no certain foundation in Scripture, when this is ſo fully and frankly acknowledged by themſelves.

Secondly, If there be no neceſſity of underſtanding our Saviour's words in the ſenſe of Tranſubſtantiation, I am ſure there is a great deal of reaſon to underſtand them otherwiſe. Whether we conſider the like expreſſions in Scripture; as where our Saviour ſays he is the door, and the true vine (which the Church of Rome would mightily have triumph'd in, had it been ſaid, this is my true body). And ſo likewiſe where the Church is ſaid to be Chriſt's body; and the rock which followed the Iſraelites to be Chriſt, 1 Cor. x. 4. They drank of that rock which followed them, and that rock was Chriſt: All which, and innumerable more like expreſſions in Scripture, every man underſtands in a figurative, and not in a ſtrictly literal and abſurd ſenſe. And it is very well known, that in the Hebrew language things are commonly ſaid to be that which they do ſignify and repreſent; and there is not in that language a more proper and uſual way of expreſſing a thing to ſignify ſo and ſo, than to ſay that it is ſo and ſo. Thus Joſeph expounding Pharaoh's dream to him, Gen. xli. 26. Says, the ſeven good kine are ſeven years, and the ſeven good ears of corn are ſeven years; that is, they ſignified or repreſented ſeven years of plenty; and ſo Pharaoh underſtood him, and ſo would any man of ſenſe underſtand the like expreſſions; nor do I believe that any ſenſible man, who had never heard of Tranſubſtantiation being grounded upon theſe words of our Saviour, this is my body, would upon reading the inſtitution of the ſacrament in the Goſpel ever have imagined any ſuch thing to be meant by our Saviour in thoſe words; but would have underſtood his meaning to have been, this bread ſignifies my body, this cup ſignifies my blood; and this which you ſee me now do, do ye hereafter for a memorial of me: But ſurely it would never have enter'd into any man's mind to have thought, that our Saviour did literally hold himſelf in his hand, and give away himſelf from himſelf with his own hands.

Or whether we compare theſe words of our Saviour with the ancient form of the paſſover uſed by the Jews from Ezra's time, as (Dialog. cum Tryph. p. 297. edit. Pariſ. 1639.) Juſtin Martyr tells us, τȣ̃το τὸ πάσχα ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν καὶ ἡ καταφυγὴ ἡμῶν, this paſſover is our Saviour and our refuge; not that they believed the Paſchal Lamb to be ſubſtantially changed either into God their Saviour who delivered them out of the land of Egypt, or into the Meſſias the Saviour whom they expected and who was ſignified by it: But this lamb which they did eat did repreſent to them, and put them in mind of that ſalvation, which God wrought for their fathers in Egypt, when by the ſlaying of a lamb, and ſprinkling the blood of it upon their doors, their firſt-born were paſſed over and ſpared; and did likewiſe foreſhew the ſalvation of the Meſſias, the Lamb of God that was to take away the ſins of the world.

And nothing is more common in all languages than to give the name of the thing ſignified to the ſign. As the the delivery of a deed or writing under hand and ſeal is called a conveyance or making over of ſuch an eſtate, and it is really ſo; not the delivery of mere wax and parchment, but the conveyance of a real eſtate; as truly and really to all effects and purpoſes of law, as if the very material houſes and lands themſelves could be and were actually delivered into my hands: In like manner, the names of the things themſelves made over to us in the new covenant of the Goſpel between God and man, are given to the ſigns or ſeals of that covenant. By baptiſm Chriſtians are ſaid to be made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, Heb. vi. 4. And by the ſacrament of the Lord's Supper, we are ſaid to communicate, or to be made partakers of the body of Chriſt which was broken, and of his blood which was ſhed for us, that is, of the real benefits of his death and paſſion. And thus Paul ſpeaks of this ſacrament, 1 Cor. x. 16. The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? But ſtill it is bread, and he ſtill calls it ſo, ver. 17. For we being many are one bread and one body; for we are partakers of that one bread. The Church of Rome, might, if they pleaſed, as well argue from hence, that all Chriſtians are ſubſtantially changed firſt into bread, and then into the natural body of Chriſt by their participation of the ſacrament, becauſe they are ſaid thereby to be one bread and one body. And the ſame Apoſtle in the next chapter, after he had ſpoken of the conſecration of the elements ſtill calls them the bread and the cup, in three verſes together, As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ver. 26. Whoſoever ſhall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, ver. 27. But let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup, ver. 28. And our Saviour himſelf when he had ſaid, this is my blood of the New Teſtament, immediately adds, at ver. 29. But I ſay unto you, I will not henceforth drink of this fruit of the vine, until I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom, that is, not till after his reſurrection, which was the firſt ſtep of his exaltation into the kingdom given him by his Father; when the Scripture tells us, he did eat and drink with his diſciples. But that which I obſerve from our Saviour's words, is, that after the conſecration of the cup, and the delivering of it to his diſciples to drink of it, he tells them that he would thenceforth drink no more of the fruit of the vine, which he had now drank with them, till after his reſurrection. From whence it is plain, that it was the fruit of the vine, real wine, which our Saviour drank of and communicated to his diſciples in the ſacrament.

Beſides, if we conſider that he celebrated this ſacrament before his paſſion, it is impoſſible theſe words ſhould be underſtood literally of the natural body and blood of Chriſt; becauſe it was his body broken and his blood ſhed, which he gave to his diſciples; which if we underſtand literally of his natural body broken, and his blood ſhed, then theſe words, this is my body which is broken, and this is my blood which is ſhed, could not be true, becauſe his body was then whole and unbroken, and his blood not then ſhed; nor could it be a propitiatory ſacrifice (as they affirm this ſacrament to be) unleſs they will ſay that propitiation was made before Chriſt ſuffered: and it is likewiſe impoſſible that the diſciples ſhould underſtand theſe words literally, becauſe they not only plainly ſaw that what he gave them was bread and wine, but they ſaw likewiſe as plainly that it was not his body which was given, but his body, which gave that which was given; not his body broken and his blood ſhed, becauſe they ſaw him alive at that very time, and beheld his body whole and unpierced; and therefore they could not underſtand theſe words literally: if they had, can we imagine that the diſciples, who upon all other occaſions were ſo full of queſtions and objections, ſhould make no difficulty of this matter? nor ſo much as ask our Saviour, how can theſe things be? that they ſhould not tell him, we ſee this to be bread and that to be wine, and we ſee thy body to be diſtinct from both; we ſee thy body not broken, and thy blood not ſhed.

From all which it muſt needs be very evident to any man that will impartially conſider things, how little reaſon there is to underſtand thoſe words of our Saviour, this is my body, and this is my blood, in the ſenſe of Tranſubſtantiation; nay, on the contrary, that there is very great reaſon, and an evident neceſſity to underſtand them otherwiſe. I proceed to ſhew, 2dly. That this doctrine is not grounded upon the perpetual belief of the Chriſtian Church, which the Church of Rome vainly pretends as an evidence, that the Church did always underſtand and interpret our Saviour's words in this ſenſe. For,

Tho' the Fathers do, and that with great reaſon, very much magnify the wonderful myſtery and efficacy of this ſacrament, and frequently ſpeak of a great ſupernatural change made by the divine benediction, which we alſo readily acknowledge. They ſay indeed, that the elements of bread and wine, do by the divine bleſſing, become to us the body and blood of Chriſt: yet they likewiſe ſay, that the names of the things ſignified are given to the ſigns; that the bread and wine do ſtill remain in their proper nature and ſubſtance, and that they are turned into the ſubſtance of our bodies; that the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament is not his natural body, but the ſign and figure of it; not that body which was crucified, nor that blood which was ſhed upon the croſs, and that it is impious to underſtand the eating of the fleſh of the Son of man, and drinking his blood literally: all which are directly oppoſite to the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and utterly inconſiſtent with it. I will ſelect but ſome few teſtimonies of many which I might bring to this purpoſe. See Juſtin's Apol. 2. p. 98. edit. Pariſ. 1636. Irenæus, lib. 4. c. 34. and lib. 5. c. 2. Oecumeius in 1 Pet. c. 3. Tertull. adv. Marc. l. 4. & de Anima. Origen on Matt. xv. and Lev. x. Cyprian ep. 63. Auſtin adv. Adimant. & Enarrat. in pſal. 3. and pſal. 98. Tract. 50. in Johan. Ep. 23. See the Romiſh Canon Law de conſecr. diſt. 2. hoc eſt. Gratian de conſecr. diſt. 2. utrum; and again Auſtin's treatiſe de doctr. Chriſtiana. By wine the blood of Chriſt is ſhewn, (or repreſented) but when in the cup water is mingled with wine, the people is united to Chriſt. So that according to this argument wine in the ſacramental cup is no otherwiſe changed into the blood of Chriſt than the water mixed with it is changed into the people, which are ſaid to be united to Chriſt.

I omit many others, and paſs to Auſtin in the fourth age after Chriſt. And I the rather inſiſt upon his teſtimony, becauſe of his eminent eſteem and authority in the Latin Church; and he alſo calls the element of the ſacrament the figure and ſign of Chriſt's body and blood. In his Book againſt Adimantus the Manichee, we have this expreſſion, our Lord did not doubt to ſay, this is my body, when he gave the ſign of his body. And in his explication to the third Pſalm, ſpeaking of Judas, whom our Lord admitted to his laſt ſupper, in which (ſays he) he commended and delivered to his diſciples the figure of his body; language which would now be cenſured for hereſy in the Church of Rome. Indeed he was never accuſed of hereſy, as Cardinal Perron ſays Origen was, but he talks as like one as Origen himſelf. And in his Comment on the 98th Pſalm, ſpeaking of the offence which the diſciples took at that ſaying of our Saviour, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, &c. he brings in our Saviour ſpeaking thus to them, ye muſt underſtand ſpiritually what I have ſaid unto you; ye are not to eat this body which ye ſee, ſee, and to drink that blood which ſhall be ſhed by thoſe that ſhall crucify me. I have commended a certain ſacrament to you, which being ſpiritually underſtood will give you life. What more oppoſite to the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, than that the diſciples were not to eat that body of Chriſt which they ſaw, nor to drink that blood which was ſhed upon the croſs, but that all this was to be underſtood ſpiritually and according to the nature of a ſacrament? For that body he tells us is not here but in Heaven, in his Comment upon theſe words, "Me ye have not always. He ſpeaks (ſays he) of the preſence of his body; ye ſhall have me according to my providence, according to majeſty and inviſible grace; but according to the fleſh which the word aſſumed, according to that which was born of the Virgin Mary, ye ſhall not have me: therefore becauſe he converſed with his diſciples forty days, he is aſcended up into Heaven, and is not here."

In his 23d Epiſtle; "If the ſacraments (ſays he) had not ſome reſemblance of thoſe things whereof they are ſacraments, they would not be ſacraments at all; but from this reſemblance they take for the moſt part the names of the things which they repreſent. Therefore as the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt is in ſome manner or ſenſe Chriſt's body, and the ſacrament of his blood is the blood of Chriſt; ſo the ſacrament of faith (meaning baptiſm) is faith. Upon which words of Auſtin there is this remarkable gloſs in their own canon law; the heavenly ſacrament which truly repreſents the death of Chriſt, is called the body of Chriſt, but improperly: Whence it is ſaid, that after a manner, but not according to the truth of the thing, but the myſtery of the thing ſignified; ſo that the meaning is, it is called the body of Chriſt, that is, it ſignifies the body of Chriſt:" And if this be Auſtin's meaning, I am ſure no Proteſtant can ſpeak more plainly againſt Tranſubſtantiation. And in the ancient canon of the maſs, before it was changed in compliance with this new doctrine, it is expreſly call'd, "a ſacrament, a ſign, an image, and a figure of Chriſt's body." To which I will add that remarkable paſſage of Auſtin cited by Gratian, "that as we receive the ſimilitude of his death in baptiſm, ſo we may alſo receive the likeneſs of his fleſh and blood; that ſo neither may truth be wanting in the ſacrament, nor Pagans have occaſion to make us ridiculous for drinking the blood of one that was ſlain."

I will mention but one teſtimony more of this Father, but ſo clear a one as it is impoſſible any man in his wits that had believed Tranſubſtantiation could have utter'd. It is in his Treatiſe de Doctrina Chriſtiana; where laying down ſeveral rules for the right underſtanding of Scripture, he gives this for one. If (ſays he) the ſpeech be a precept forbidding ſome heinous wickedneſs or crime, or commanding us to do good, it is not figurative; but if it ſeem to command any heinous wickedneſs or crime, or to forbid that which is profitable and beneficial to others, it is figurative. For example, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you: This ſeems to command a heinous wickedneſs and crime, therefore it is a figure; commanding us to communicate of the Paſſion of our Lord, and with delight and advantage to lay up in our memory that his fleſh was crucified and wounded for us. So that, according to Auſtin's beſt skill in interpreting Scripture, the literal eating of the fleſh of Chriſt, and drinking his blood, would have been a great impiety; and therefore the expreſſion is to be underſtood figuratively; not as Cardinal Perron would have it, only in oppoſition to the eating of his fleſh and blood in the groſs appearance of fleſh and blood, but to the real eating of his natural body and blood under any appearance whatſoever: For Auſtin doth not ſay, this is a figurative ſpeech wherein we are commanded really to feed upon the natural body and blood of Chriſt under the ſpecies of bread and wine, as the Cardinal would underſtand him; for then the ſpeech would be literal, and not figurative: But he ſays, this is a figurative ſpeech wherein we are commanded ſpiritually to feed upon the remembrance of his Paſſion.

To theſe I will add but three or four teſtimonies more in the two following ages.

The firſt ſhall be of Theodoret, who ſpeaking of that Prophecy of Jacob concerning our Saviour, he waſhed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes, hath theſe words, as we call the myſtical fruit of the vine (that is, the wine in the ſacrament) after conſecration the blood of the Lord, ſo he (viz. Jacob) calls the blood of the true vine (viz. of Chriſt) the blood of the grape: But the blood of Chriſt is not literally and properly, but only figuratively the blood of the grape, in the ſame ſenſe as he is ſaid to be the true vine; and therefore the wine in the ſacrament after conſecration is in like manner not literally and properly, but figuratively the blood of Chriſt. And he explains this afterwards, ſaying, that our Saviour changed the names, and gave to his body the name of the ſymbol or ſign, and to the ſymbol or ſign, the name of his body; thus when he had call'd himſelf the vine, he call'd the ſymbol or ſign his blood; ſo that in the ſame ſenſe that he call'd himſelf the vine, he call'd the wine, which is the ſymbol of his blood, his blood: For, ſays he, he would have thoſe who partake of the Divine Myſteries not to attend to the nature of the things which are ſeen, but by the change of names to believe the change which is made by grace; for he who called that which by nature is a body wheat and bread, and again likewiſe called himſelf the vine, he honoured the ſymbols with the name of his body and blood: not changing nature but adding grace to nature. Where you ſee he ſays expreſly, that when he called the ſymbols or elements of the ſacrament, viz. bread and wine his body and blood, he made no change in the nature of the things, only added grace to nature, that is, by the Divine Grace and bleſſing he raiſed them to a ſpiritual and ſupernatural virtue and efficacy.

The ſecond is of the ſame Theodoret in his ſecond Dialogue between a Catholick, under the name of Orthodoxus, and an Heretick, under the name of Eraniſtes; who maintaining that the humanity of Chriſt was changed into the ſubſtance of the Divinity (which was the hereſy of Eutyches) he illuſtrates the matter by this ſimilitude, As, ſays he, the ſymbols of the Lord's body and blood are one thing before the invocation of the prieſt, but after the invocation are changed and become another thing; ſo the body of our Lord after his aſcenſion is changed into the Divine Subſtance. But what ſays the Catholick Orthodoxus to this? Why, he talks juſt like one of Cardinal Perron's Hereticks, "Thou art, ſays he, caught in thy own net: Becauſe the myſtical ſymbols after conſecration do not paſs out of their own nature; for they remain in their former ſubſtance, figure and appearance, and may be ſeen and handled even as before. He does not only deny the outward figure and appearance of the ſymbols to be changed, but the nature and ſubſtance of them, even in the proper and ſtricteſt ſenſe of the word ſubſtance; and it was neceſſary ſo to do, otherwiſe he had not given a pertinent anſwer to the ſimilitude urg'd againſt him.

The next is one of their own Popes, Gelaſius, who brings the ſame Inſtance againſt the Eutychians; ſurely, ſays he, "The ſacraments which we receive of the body and blood of our Lord are a Divine Thing, ſo that by them we are made partakers of a Divine Nature, and yet it ceaſeth not to be the ſubſtance or nature of bread and wine; and certainly the image and reſemblance of Chriſt's body and blood are celebrated in the action of the myſteries, that is, in the ſacrament. To make this inſtance of any force againſt the Eutychians, who held that the body of Chriſt upon his aſcenſion ceaſed and was changed into the ſubſtance of his Divinity, it was neceſſary to deny that there was any ſubſtantial change in the ſacrament of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Chriſt. So that here is an infallible authority, one of their own Popes expreſly againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

The laſt teſtimony I ſhall produce is of Facundus an African Biſhop, who lived in the 6th Century; upon occaſion of juſtifying an expreſſion of one who had ſaid that Chriſt alſo received the adoption of ſons; he reaſons thus: "Chriſt vouchſafed to receive the ſacrament of adoption both when he was circumciſed and baptized: and the ſacrament of adoption may be called adoption, as the ſacrament of his body and blood, which is in the conſecrated bread and cup, is by us called his body and blood: Not that the bread, ſays he, is properly his body and the cup his blood, but becauſe they contain in them the myſteries of his body and blood; hence alſo our Lord himſelf called the bleſſed bread and cup which he gave to his diſciples his body and blood." By theſe plain teſtimonies which I have cited, and I might have brought a great many more to the ſame purpoſe, it will upon conſulting and comparing of them with each other appear evident beyond all denial that Tranſubſtantiation hath not been the perpetual belief of the Chriſtian Church. And this likewiſe is acknowledged by many great and learned men of the Roman Church. For Scotus in Sent. l. 4. Diſt. 11. Q. 3. acknowledgeth, that this doctrine was not always thought neceſſary to be believed, but that the neceſſity of believing it was conſequent to that declaration of the Church made in the Council of Lateran under Pope Innocent the III. And Tonſtal Biſhop of Durham alſo yields, that before the Lateran Council men were at liberty as to the manner of Chriſt's preſence in the ſacrament. (de Euchar. l. 1. p. 146.) But Alphonſus a Caſtro ſays plainly (de Hæreſ. l. 8.) that concerning the tranſubſtantiation of the bread into the body of Chriſt, there is ſeldom any mention in the ancient Writers.

Moreover we can give an account of the particular time and occaſion of the coming in of this doctrine, and by what ſteps and degrees it grew up and was advanced into an article of faith in the Romiſh Church. The doctrine of the corporal preſence of Chriſt was firſt ſtarted upon occaſion of the diſpute about the worſhip of images, in oppoſition whereto the Synod of Conſtantinople about the year DCCL did argue thus, That our Lord having left us no other image of himſelf but the ſacrament, in which the ſubſtance of bread is the image of his body, we ought to make no other image of our Lord. In anſwer to this argument the ſecond Council of Nice in the year DCCLXXXVII did declare, that the ſacrament after conſecration is not the image and antitype of Chriſt's body and blood, but is properly his body and blood. So that the corporal body of Chriſt in the ſacrament was firſt brought in to ſupport the ſtupid worſhip of images: And indeed it could never have come in upon a more proper occaſion, nor have been applied to a fitter purpoſe. See Bellarmine de Euchariſt. l. 1. c. 1. which agrees moſt exactly with the account which I have given of the firſt riſe of this doctrine, which began with the corporal preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament and afterwards proceeded to Tranſubſtantiation.

And as this was the firſt occaſion of introducing this doctrine among the Greeks, ſo in the Latin or Roman Church Paſchaſius Radbertus, firſt a Monk, and afterwards Abbot of Corbey, was the firſt broacher of it in the year DCCCXVIII.

Concerning which Rabanus Maurus, Archbiſhop of Mentz, about the year DCCCXLVII. reciting (Epiſt. ad Heribaldum. c. 33) the very words of Paſchaſius wherein he had deliver'd this doctrine, hath this remarkable paſſage concerning the novelty of it; ſome, ſays he, of late, not having a right opinion concerning the ſacrament of the body and blood of our Lord, have ſaid that this is the body and blood of our Lord which was born of the Virgin Mary, and in which our Lord ſuffered upon the Croſs, and roſe from the dead: Which error, ſays he, we have oppos'd with all our might. And yet no cenſure paſſed upon this learned Biſhop; for that which is now the great burning Article in the Church of Rome, and eſteemed by them one of the greateſt and moſt pernicious hereſies, tho' he declared the ſame to be an error broached by ſome particular perſons. But,

Afterwards in the year MLIX, when Berengarius in France and Germany had raiſed a freſh oppoſition againſt this doctrine, he was compelled to recant it by Pope Nicholas and the council at Rome, in theſe words, "That the bread and wine which are ſet upon the altar, after the conſecration, are not only the ſacrament, but the true body and blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and are ſenſibly, not only in the ſacrament, but in truth, handled and broken by the hands of the prieſt, and ground or bruiſed by the teeth of the faithful." But it ſeems the Pope and his council were not then ſkilful enough to expreſs themſelves rightly in this matter; for the gloſs upon the canon law ſays expreſly, (Gloſs. Decret. de conſecrat. diſt. 2. in cap. Ego Berengarius.) "That unleſs we underſtand theſe words of Berengarius (that is in truth of the Pope and his council) in a ſound ſenſe, we ſhall fall into a greater hereſy than that of Berengarius; for we do not make parts of the body of Chriſt." The meaning of which gloſs I cannot imagine, unleſs it be this, that the body of Chriſt, though it be in truth broken, yet it is not broken into parts (for we do not make parts of the body of Chriſt) but into wholes: now this new way of breaking a body, not into parts, but into wholes (which in good earneſt is the doctrine of the Church of Rome) though to them that are able to believe Tranſubſtantiation, it may, for any thing I know, appear to be ſound ſenſe; yet to us that cannot believe ſo, it appears to be ſolid nonſenſe.

About twenty years after, in the year MLXXIX, Pope Gregory the VIIth began to be ſenſible of this abſurdity; and therefore in another council at Rome made Berengarius to recant in another form, viz. "That the bread and wine which are placed upon the altar are ſubſtantially changed into the true and proper and quickning fleſh and blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and after conſecration are the true body of Chriſt, which was born of the Virgin, and which being offered for the ſalvation of the world, did hang upon the croſs, and ſits on the right hand of the Father. See Waldenſ. tom. 2. c. 13.

So that from the firſt ſtarting of this doctrine in the ſecond council of Nice, in the year DCCLXXXVII, till the council under Pope Gregory the VIIth in the year MLXXIX, it was almoſt three hundred years that this doctrine was conteſted, and before this miſ-ſhapen monſter of Tranſubſtantiation could be licked into that form in which it is now ſettled and eſtabliſhed in the Church of Rome. Here then is a plain account of the firſt riſe of this doctrine, and of the ſeveral ſteps whereby it was advanced by the Church of Rome into an article of faith. Yet the gentlemen in the oppoſition are not aſhamed to beg the queſtion, and paſſing over what has been ſaid, patch up the following anſwer, which they call an unanſwerable demonſtration. Thus

It is replied, That if it had not always been the doctrine of the Church, whenever it had attempted firſt to come in, there would have been a great ſtir and buſtle about it, and the whole Chriſtian world would have roſe up in oppoſition to it: which, ſay they, cannot be ſhewn, therefore it muſt of neceſſity have been the perpetual belief of the Church in all ages.

An argument more worthy to be laughed at than deſerving of a ſerious anſwer, coming after plain hiſtorical proof to the contrary. Read the premiſes immediately before; and they muſt convince any honeſt and well-diſpoſed Chriſtian, that this doctrine was not brought in till about the beginning of the ninth age, and that it did not take firm root nor was fully ſettled and eſtabliſhed, till towards the end of the eleventh. And this was the moſt likely time of all other, from the beginning of Chriſtianity, for ſo groſs an error to appear; it being, by the confeſſion and conſent of their own hiſtorians, the moſt dark and diſmal time that ever happened to the Chriſtian Church, both for ignorance, and ſuperſtition, and vice. It came in together with idolatry, and was made uſe of to ſupport it: A fit prop and companion for it. And indeed, what tares might not the enemy have ſown in ſo dark and long a night; when ſo conſiderable a part of the Chriſtian world was lull'd aſleep in profound ignorance and ſuperſtition? And this agrees very well with the account which our Saviour himſelf gives in the parable of the tares, of the ſpringing up of errors and corruptions in the field of the Church. While the men ſlept, the enemy did his work in the night, ſo that when they were awake, they wondred how and whence the tares came; but being ſure they were there, and that they were not ſown at firſt, they concluded the enemy had done it. Yet,

For all this, there were not wanting great, pious, and learned men, whom I have quoted, to make a conſiderable oppoſition to this error at its firſt appearance. I have already named Rabanus Archbiſhop of Mentz. To whom I may add Heribaldus Biſhop of Auxerres in France, Jo. Scotus Erigena, and Ratramnus commonly known by the name of Bertram, who at the ſame time were employed by the Emperor Charles the Bald to oppoſe this growing error, and wrote learnedly againſt it. Beſides,

It is evident from the records of former ages, for above 500 years together, that this was not the ancient belief of the Church; and plain alſo, that this doctrine was afterwards received in the Roman Church; ſo that tho' we could not tell how and when it came in, yet it would be the wildeſt and moſt extravagant thing in the world, to ſet up a pretended demonſtration of reaſon, againſt plain experience and matter of fact. This is juſt Zeno's demonſtration of the impoſſibility of motion againſt Diogenes walking before his eyes. For this is to undertake to prove that impoſſible to have been, which moſt certainly was. Juſt thus the ſervants in the parable might have demonſtrated that the tares were wheat, becauſe they were ſure none but good ſeed was ſown at firſt, and no man could give any account of the punctual time, when any tares were ſown, or by whom; and if an enemy had come to do it, he muſt needs have met with great reſiſtance and oppoſition; but no ſuch reſiſtance was made, and therefore there could be no tares in the field, but that which they called tares was certainly good wheat. But,

It is the common way of reaſoning among the papiſts, when they are beat out of their ſophiſms, to reſolve the argument into the authority of their Church. And this in truth is the ground into which the moſt of the learned men of their Church did heretofore, and many do ſtill reſolve their belief of this doctrine: See Scotus as cited before.

But if this doctrine be obtruded upon the world merely by virtue of the authority of the Roman Church, and the declaration of the council under Pope Gregory the VIIth, or of the lateral council under Innocent the IIId, then it is a plain innovation in the Chriſtian doctrine, and a new article of faith impoſed upon the Chriſtian world. And if any Church hath this power, the Chriſtian faith may be enlarged and changed as often as men pleaſe; and that which is no part of our Saviour's doctrine, nay, any thing though never ſo abſurd and unreaſonable, may become an article of faith, obliging all Chriſtians to the belief of it, whenever the Church of Rome ſhall think fit to ſtamp her authority upon it: Which would make Chriſtianity a moſt uncertain and endleſs thing.

Then they pretend the neceſſity of ſuch a change as this in the ſacrament, to the comfort and benefit of thoſe who receive it. But there is no colour for this, if the thing be rightly conſider'd: Becauſe the comfort and benefit of the ſacrament depends upon the bleſſing annexed to the Inſtitution. And as water in baptiſm, without any ſubſtantial change made in that element, may by the Divine Bleſſing accompany the inſtitution, be effectual to the waſhing away of ſin, and ſpiritual regeneration; ſo there can no reaſon in the world be given why the elements of bread and wine in the Lord's Supper may not, by the ſame Divine Bleſſing accompany this inſtitution, make the worthy receivers partakers of all the ſpiritual comfort and benefit deſigned to us thereby, without any ſubſtantial change made in thoſe elements, ſince our Lord hath told us, that verily the fleſh profiteth nothing. So that if we could do ſo odd and ſtrange a thing as to eat the very natural fleſh, and drink the blood of our Lord, I do not ſee of what greater advantage it would be to us, than what we may have by partaking of the ſymbols of his body and blood, as he hath appointed in remembrance of him. For the ſpiritual efficacy of the ſacrament doth not depend upon the nature of the thing received, ſuppoſing we receive what our Lord appointed, and receive it with a right preparation and diſpoſition of mind, but upon the ſupernatural bleſſing that goes along with it, and makes it effectual to thoſe ſpiritual ends for which it was appointed.

And the laſt pretended ground of this doctrine is, to magnify the power of the Prieſt in being able to work ſo great a miracle; as they love moſt abſurdly and blaſphemouſly to ſpeak, to be able every day to make God himſelf.

But this is to pretend to a power above that of God himſelf, for he did not, nor cannot make himſelf, nor do any thing that implies a contradiction, as Tranſubſtantiation evidently does in their pretending to make God. For to make that which already is, and to make that now which always was, is not only vain and trifling, if it could be done, but impoſſible, becauſe it implies a contradiction.

So that from the whole you ſee I do not now object againſt a doctrine which hath a fair probability of Divine Revelation on its ſide; for that would weigh down all objections which did not plainly overthrow the probability and credit of its divine revelation: but I object againſt a doctrine by the mere will and tyranny of men impoſed upon the belief of Chriſtians, without any evidence of Scripture, and againſt all the evidence of reaſon and ſenſe. Therefore

1. I will begin with the ſtupidity of this doctrine. I remember that Tully, who was a man of very good ſenſe, inſtanceth in the conceit of eating God as the extremity of madneſs, and ſo ſtupid an apprehenſion as he thought no man was ever guilty of. De Nat. Deorum, l. 3. "When we call, ſays he, the fruits of the earth, Ceres, and wine, Bacchus, we uſe but the common language; but do you think any man ſo mad as to believe that which he eats to be God?" It ſeems he could not believe that ſo extravagant a folly had ever entred into the mind of man. It it is a very ſevere ſaying of Averroes the Arabian philoſopher, (who lived after this doctrine was entertained among Chriſtians) and ought to make the Church of Rome bluſh, if ſhe can: "I have travelled, ſays he, over the world, and have found divers ſects; but ſo ſottiſh a ſect or law I never found, as is the ſect of the Chriſtians; becauſe with their own teeth they devour their God whom they worſhip." It was great ſtupidity in the people of Iſrael to ſay, Come, let us make gods; but it was civily ſaid of them, Let us make gods that may go before us, in compariſon of the Church of Rome, who ſay, Let us make a god that we may eat him. So that upon the whole matter I cannot but wonder that they ſhould chuſe thus to expoſe faith to the contempt of all that were endued with reaſon.

2. It is very ſcandalous likewiſe upon account of the real barbarouſneſs of this ſacrament and rite of our religion, upon ſuppoſition of the truth of this doctrine. Literally to eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and to drink his blood, Auſtin, as I have ſhewed before, declares to be a great impiety. And the impiety and barbarouſneſs of the thing is not in truth extenuated, but only the appearance of it, by its being done under the ſpecies of bread and wine: for, the thing they acknowledge is really done, and they believe that they verily eat and drink the natural fleſh and blood of Chriſt.

3. This doctrine ſhould be avoided upon account of the danger of Idolatry; which they are certainly guilty of, if this doctrine be not true, and ſuch a change as they pretend be not made in the ſacrament; for if it be not, then they worſhip a creature inſtead of the Creator God bleſſed for ever. Or if the change could be poſſible, yet they can never be certain that it is, and conſequently are always in danger of Idolatry: And that they can never be certain that ſuch a change is made, is evident; becauſe, according to the expreſs determination of the council of Trent, that depends upon the mind and intention of the Prieſt, which cannot certainly be known but by revelation, which is not pretended in this caſe. Thus the great ſcandal this doctrine brings upon Religion and its monſtrous abſurdities, makes it unſupportable to any religion.

CHAP. VII.

1 Jeſus reproveth the ambition and boldneſs of his kinſmen: 10 goeth up from Galilee to the feaſt of tabernacles: 14 teacheth in the temple: 40 Divers opinions of him among the people: 45 The Phariſees are angry that their officers took him not, and chide with Nicodemus for taking his part.

AFTER theſe things, Jeſus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry, becauſe the Jews ſought to kill him.

2 Now the Jews feaſt of tabernacles was at hand.

3 His brethren therefore ſaid unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy diſciples alſo may ſee the works that thou doſt.

4 For there is no man that doth any thing in ſecret, and he himſelf ſeeketh to be known openly: If thou do theſe things, ſhew thy ſelf to the world.

5 For neither did his brethren believe in him.

6 Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, My time is not yet come: but your time is alway ready.

7 The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, becauſe I teſtify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

8 Go ye up unto this feaſt: I go not up yet unto this feaſt, for my time is not yet full come.

9 When he had ſaid theſe words unto them, he abode ſtill in Galilee.

10 ¶ But when his brethren were gone up, then went he alſo up unto the feaſt; not openly, but as it were in ſecret.

11 Then the Jews ſought him at the feaſt, and ſaid, Where is he?

12 And there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for ſome ſaid, He is a good man: others ſaid, Nay; but he deceiveth the people.

13 Howbeit, no man ſpake openly of him, for fear of the Jews.

14 ¶ Now about the midſt of the feaſt, Jeſus went up into the temple, and taught.

15 And the Jews marvelled, ſaying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?

16 Jeſus anſwered them, and ſaid, My doctrine is not mine, but his that ſent me.

17 If any man will do his will, he ſhall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I ſpeak of my ſelf.

18 He that ſpeaketh of himſelf, ſeeketh his own glory: but he that ſeeketh his glory that ſent him, the ſame is true, and no unrighteouſneſs is in him.

19 Did not Moſes give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me?

20 The people anſwered and ſaid, Thou haſt a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?

21 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

22 Moſes therefore gave unto you circumciſion, (not becauſe it is of Moſes, but of the fathers) and ye on the ſabbath-day circumciſe a man.

23 If a man on the ſabbath-day receive circumciſion, that the law of Moſes ſhould not be broken; are ye angry at me, becauſe I have made a man every whit whole on the ſabbath-day?

24 Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

25 Then ſaid ſome of them of Jeruſalem, Is not this he whom they ſeek to kill?

26 But lo, he ſpeaketh boldly, and they ſay nothing unto him: do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Chriſt?

27 Howbeit we know this man whence he is: but when Chriſt cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

28 Then cried Jeſus in the temple as he taught, ſaying, Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of my ſelf, but he that ſent me is true, whom ye know not.

29 But I know him, for I am from him, and he hath ſent me.

30 Then they ſought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, becauſe his hour was not yet come.

31 And many of the people believed on him, and ſaid, When Chriſt cometh, will he do more miracles than theſe which this man hath done:

32 ¶ The Phariſees heard that the people murmured ſuch things concerning him: and the Phariſees, and the chief prieſts ſent officers to take him.

33 Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that ſent me.

34 Ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come.

35 Then ſaid the Jews among themſelves, Whither will he go, that we ſhall not find him? will he go unto the diſperſed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?

36 What manner of ſaying is this that he ſaid, Ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come.

37 In the laſt day, that great day of the feaſt, Jeſus ſtood and cried, ſaying, If any man thirſt, let him come unto me, and drink.

38 He that believeth on me, as the ſcripture hath ſaid, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water.

39 (But this ſpake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him ſhould receive: for the holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe that Jeſus was not yet glorified)

40 ¶ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this ſaying, ſaid, Of a truth this is the prophet.

41 Others ſaid, This is the Chriſt. But ſome ſaid, Shall Chriſt come out of Galilee?

42 Hath not the ſcripture ſaid, That Chriſt cometh out of the ſeed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?

43 So there was a diviſion among the people becauſe of him.

44 And ſome of them would have taken him; but no man laid hands on him.

45 ¶ Then came the officers to the chief prieſts and Phariſees; and they ſaid unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers anſwered, Never man ſpake like this man.

47 Then anſwered them the Phariſees, Are ye alſo deceived?

48 Have any of the rulers, or of the Phariſees believed on him?

49 But this people who knoweth not the law are curſed.

50 Nicodemus ſaith unto them, (he that came to Jeſus by night, being one of them)

51 Doth our law judge any man before it hear him, and know what he doth?

52 They anſwered and ſaid unto him, Art thou alſo of Galilee? Search and look: for out of Galilee ariſeth no prophet.

53 And every man went unto his own houſe.

Ver. 2. Now the Jews feaſt of tabernacles was at hand.] This was one of the feaſts to which all the Jewiſh men ought to have gone up to Jeruſalem to celebrate in the temple; (ſee Exod. xxiii. 16. Lev. xxiii. 34. Deut. xvi. 13. and xxxi. 10.) being inſtituted in commemoration of their fore-fathers living forty years in tents in the wilderneſs in their return out of Egypt; ſo all the Jewiſh nation did afterwards once a year repreſent that, by leaving their houſes, and dwelling ſeven days, in tabernacles or tents, (Levit. xxiii. 34.) beginning on the fourteenth day of September, or as ſome compute it, October. See my Diſſertation on the feaſts of the Jews, at the end of John.

Ver. 6. — My time is not yet come.] i. e. Ye cannot conceive the glory which is purpoſed or prepared for me, for I am to be exalted from the earth, and ſeated at the right hand of the Father, who will give me a name, which is above all names; ſee Mark xvi. 19. Acts vii. 56. and Philip. ii. 9. But I muſt ſuffer many things, before the time cometh in which I ſhall conſummate my glory.

Ver. 8. — Unto this feaſt.] See above the notes on ver. 2.

Ver. 11. At the feaſt.] See the notes as above, at ver. 2.

Ver. 19. — None of you keepeth the law.] Here Chriſt argues with the Jews upon a parity of reaſon; that is to ſay, "If I have broken the law in curing a man with my word alone on the ſabbath-day; certainly, I may juſtly accuſe you of a breach of the ſabbath, when with much pains and manual operation, you circumciſe a man on that day;" ſee the connection, at ver. 22, 23.

Ver. 21. —— I have done one work.] Cured the paralitick, ch. v. 9.

Ver. 25. Some of them.] Citizens of Jeruſalem, who knowing how the rulers and prieſts and Phariſees, had threatned to take Jeſus and put him to death, if he ſhould come up to the feaſt, were the more amazed to find that he ſpake boldly, and that they ſaid nothing unto him.

Ver. 27. —— No man knoweth whence he is.] This was not true, and was only the talk of the ignorant multitude; or, they might allude to the words of the Prophet Micah, Whoſe goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting, Mic. v. 2. CHAP. VIII.

1 Chriſt delivereth the woman taken in adultery: 12 He preacheth himſelf the light of the world, and juſtifieth his doctrine; 33 anſwereth the Jews that boaſted of Abraham, 59 and conveyed himſelf from their cruelty.

JEſus went unto the mount of Olives:

2 And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he ſat down, and taught them.

3 And the ſcribes and Phariſees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had ſet her in the mids,

4 They ſay unto him, Maſter, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

5 Now Moſes in the law commanded us, that ſuch ſhould be ſtoned: but what ſayeſt thou?

6 This they ſaid, tempting him, that they might have to accuſe him. But Jeſus ſtooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

7 So when they continued asking him, he lift up himſelf, and ſaid unto them, He that is without ſin among you, let him firſt caſt a ſtone at her.

8 And again he ſtooped down, and wrote on the ground.

9 And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conſcience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt; even unto the laſt: and Jeſus was left alone, and the woman ſtanding in the midſt.

10 When Jeſus had lift up himſelf, and ſaw none but the woman, he ſaid unto her, Woman, where are thoſe thine accuſers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 She ſaid, No man, Lord. And Jeſus ſaid unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and ſin no more.

12 ¶ Then ſpake Jeſus again unto them, ſaying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me, ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall have the light of life.

13 The Phariſees therefore ſaid unto him, Thou beareſt record of thy ſelf; thy record is not true.

14 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Though I bear record of my ſelf, yet my record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.

15 Ye judge after the fleſh, I jndge no man.

16 And yet if I judge, my judgment is true: for I am not alone, but I and the Father that ſent me.

17 It is alſo written in your law, that the teſtimony of two men is truth.

18 I am one that bear witneſs of my ſelf, and the Father that ſent me, beareth witneſs of me.

19 Then ſaid they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jeſus anſwered, Ye neither know me, nor my Father: if ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo.

20 Theſe words ſpake Jeſus in the treaſury, as he taught in the temple: and no man laid hands on him, for his hour was not yet come.

21 Then ſaid Jeſus again unto them, I go my way, and ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall die in your ſins: whither I go, ye cannot come.

22 Then ſaid the Jews, Will he kill himſelf? becauſe he ſaith, Whither I go, ye cannot come.

23 And he ſaid unto them, Ye are from beneath, I am from above: ye are of this world, I am not of this world.

24 I ſaid therefore unto you, that ye ſhall die in your ſins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye ſhall die in your ſins.

25 Then ſaid they unto him, Who art thou? And Jeſus ſaith unto them, Even the ſame that I ſaid unto you from the beginning.

26 I have many things to ſay, and to judge of you: but he that ſent me is true; and I ſpeak to the world thoſe things which I have heard of him.

27 They underſtood not that he ſpake to them of the Father.

28 Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, When ye have lift up the Son of man, then ſhall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of my ſelf; but as my Father hath taught me, I ſpeak theſe things.

29 And he that ſent me, is with me: the Father hath not left me alone: for I do always thoſe things that pleaſe him.

30 As he ſpake theſe words, many believed on him.

31 Then ſaid Jeſus to thoſe Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my diſciples indeed;

32 And ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free.

33 ¶ They anſwered him, We be Abrahams ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man: how ſayeſt thou, Ye ſhall be made free?

34 Jeſus anſwered them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever committeth ſin, is the ſervant of ſin.

35 And the ſervant abideth not in the houſe for ever: but the Son abideth ever.

36 If the Son therefore ſhall make you free, ye ſhall be free indeed.

37 I know that ye are Abrahams ſeed; but ye ſeek to kill me, becauſe my word hath no place in you.

38 I ſpeak that which I have ſeen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have ſeen with your Father.

39 They anſwered and ſaid unto him, Abraham is our Father. Jeſus ſaith unto them, If ye were Abrahams children, ye would do the works of Abraham.

40 But now ye ſeek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham.

41 Ye do the deeds of your Father. Then ſaid they to him, We be not born of fornication; we have one Father, even God.

42 Jeſus ſaid unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: for I proceeded forth, and came from God; neither came I of my ſelf, but he ſent me.

43 Why do ye not underſtand my ſpeech? even becauſe ye cannot hear my word.

44 Ye are of your father the devil, and the luſts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him. When he ſpeaketh a lye, he ſpeaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.

He that was born blind restored to Sight.

John. IX.

45 And becauſe I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46 Which of you convinceth me of ſin? And if I ſay the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47 He that is of God, heareth Gods words: ye therefore hear them not, becauſe ye are not of God.

48 Then anſwered the Jews, and ſaid unto him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and haſt a devil?

49 Jeſus anſwered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father, and ye do diſhonour me.

50 And I ſeek not mine own glory: there is one that ſeeketh and judgeth.

51 Verily verily I ſay unto you, If a man keep my ſaying, ye ſhall never ſee death.

52 Then ſaid the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou haſt a devil. Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou ſayeſt, If a man keep my ſaying, he ſhall never taſte of death.

53 Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makeſt thou thy ſelf?

54 Jeſus anſwered, If I honour my ſelf, my honour is nothing: it is my Father that honoureth me, of whom ye ſay that he is your God:

55 Yet ye have not known him; but I know him: and if I ſhould ſay, I know him not, I ſhall be a liar like unto you: but I know him, and keep his ſaying.

56 Your father Abraham rejoiced to ſee my day: and he ſaw it, and was glad.

57 Then ſaid the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and haſt thou ſeen Abraham?

58 Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily verily I ſay unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.

59 Then took they up ſtones to caſt at him: but Jeſus hid himſelf, and went out of the temple, going through the midſt of them, and ſo paſſed by.

CHAP. IX.

1 The man that was born blind reſtored to ſight: 8 He is brought to the Phariſees: 13 They are offended at it, and excommunicate him: 35 but he is received of Jeſus, and confeſſeth him. 39 Who they are whom Chriſt enlightneth.

AND as Jeſus paſſed by, he ſaw a man which was blind from his birth.

2 And his diſciples asked him, ſaying, Maſter, who did ſin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?

3 Jeſus anſwered, Neither hath this man ſinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God ſhould be made manifeſt in him.

4 I muſt work the works of him that ſent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work.

5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.

6 When he had thus ſpoken, he ſpat on the ground, and made clay of the ſpittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,

7 And ſaid unto him, Go waſh in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, ſent.) He went his way therefore, and waſhed, and came ſeeing.

8 ¶ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had ſeen him, that he was blind, ſaid, Is not this he that ſat and begged?

9 Some ſaid, This is he: others ſaid, He is like him: but he ſaid, I am he.

10 Therefore ſaid they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

11 He anſwered and ſaid, A man that is called Jeſus, made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and ſaid unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and waſh: and I went and waſhed, and I received ſight.

12 Then ſaid they unto him, Where is he? He ſaid, I know not.

13 ¶ They brought to the Phariſees him that aforetime was blind.

14 And it was the ſabbath-day when Jeſus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

15 Then again the Phariſees alſo asked him how he had received his ſight. He ſaid unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I waſhed, and do ſee.

Ver. 5. Moſes in the law.] Levit. xx. 10.

Ver. 15. Ye judge after the fleſh.] Ye form ſuch a judgment of me, as is ſuggeſted to you from my bodily appearance; for you only conſider me as a poor, infirm, and indigent perſon; not knowing whence I am, nor whither I go: your carnal eyes cannot penetrate my Divine Nature; ver. 14. compared to ver. 23.

— I judge no man.] Or, as Maldonate obſerves, I have teſtimony of no man; which interpretation is confirmed by the words at the 17th verſe.

Ver 42. — I proceeded forth, &c.] According to Pſal. ii. 7. Heb. v. 4, 5.

Ver. 48. — Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan.] This may be ſuppoſed to be a reprimand for his converſing with the Samaritans, as you have read in John iv. 9, &c.

Ver. 55. — And he ſaw it, &c.] See Luke x. 24. and Heb. xi. 1—13.

16 Therefore ſaid ſome of the Phariſees, This man is not of God, becauſe he keepeth not the ſabbath-day. Others ſaid, How can a man that is a ſinner, do ſuch miracles? And there was a diviſion among them.

17 They ſay unto the blind man again, What ſayeſt thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He ſaid, He is a prophet.

18 But the Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his ſight, until they called the parents of him that had received his ſight.

19 And they asked them, ſaying, Is this your ſon, who ye ſay was born blind? how then doth he now ſee?

20 His parents anſwered them, and ſaid, We know that this is our ſon, and that he was born blind:

21 But by what means he now ſeeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age, ask him, he ſhall ſpeak for himſelf.

22 Theſe words ſpake his parents, becauſe they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confeſs that he was Chriſt, he ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue.

23 Therefore ſaid his parents, He is of age, ask him.

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and ſaid unto him, Give God the praiſe: we know that this man is a ſinner.

25 He anſwered and ſaid, Whether he be a ſinner or no, I know not: one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I ſee.

26 Then ſaid they again to him, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

27 He anſwered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear: wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye alſo be his diſciples?

28 Then they reviled him, and ſaid, Thou art his diſciple; but we are Moſes diſciples.

29 We know that God ſpake unto Moſes: as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

30 The man anſwered and ſaid unto them, Why, herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes.

31 Now we know that God heareth not ſinners: but if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth.

32 Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33 If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

34 They anſwered and ſaid unto him, Thou waſt altogether born in ſins, and doſt thou teach us? And they caſt him out.

35 Jeſus heard that they had caſt him out; and when he had found him, he ſaid unto him, Doſt thou believe on the Son of God?

36 He anſwered and ſaid, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?

37 And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou haſt both ſeen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.

38 And he ſaid, Lord, I believe. And he worſhipped him.

39 ¶ And Jeſus ſaid, For judgment I am come into this world: that they which ſee not, might ſee; and that they which ſee might be made blind.

40 And ſome of the Phariſees which were with him, heard theſe words, and ſaid unto him, Are we blind alſo?

41 Jeſus ſaid unto them, If ye were blind, ye ſhould have no ſin: but now ye ſay, We ſee; therefore your ſin remaineth.

Ver. 2. — Who did ſin, this man, or his parents?] The diſciples did not ſuppoſe that original ſin was the cauſe of the man's being born blind; but only that his parents might have begot him in the time of uncleanneſs; which was a ſin by the law of Levit. xx. 18. which was thought to have ſo ill an influence upon the child, as to render it obnoxious to leproſy or mutilation, and ſo might be the cauſe of a perſon's blindneſs. See Theodoret in Levit. qu. 21.

Ver. 3. — The works of God.] The power which God hath to create and make every thing and perſon as he pleaſes. To give ſight to whom he will, and to make whom he pleaſes blind, by leaving an imperfection in the plaſtick matter unrectified.

Ver. 4. I muſt work the works of him, &c.] I muſt ſhew forth his power in performing works which none but God can do, by giving ſight to one born blind, &c.

Ver. 7. — The pool of Siloam.] This ſpring diſcharged it ſelf into a double courſe or pool; the lower was called the pool of fleeces; Neh. iii. 15. the upper was called the pool of Siloah, which properly ſignifies ſent; the waters being, by the Divine Providence, ſent from the bowels of the earth into it.

Ver. 13. — To the Phariſees.] i. e. The council chiefly conſiſting of that ſect.

Ver. 22. — Excluded from the ſynagogue.] Or, excommunicated.

Ver. 31. God heareth not ſinners.] We are not hereby to underſtand that the ears of God are ſhut to the prayers of us ſinners; but only that God will not ſuffer falſe prophets, who ſpeak from themſelves, and yet pretend to come from God, to work miracles, ſuch as are only in the Divine Power to effect.

Ver. 32. — That any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.] Blindneſs being the effect of a diſeaſe, may be cured; but the Jews knowing that neither Moſes nor the Prophets had ever cured a man born blind, confeſſed that it could be the work of God alone; and therefore reckoned it to this day, to be one of the ſigns of the Meſſiah, to open the eyes of the blind; Midraſh. in Pſal. clxvi. 8. And this is alſo the purport of the next verſe.

The other texts in this chapter, which may ſeem to want explaining, being what are already explained in the Diſſertation on the incarnation of Chriſt, after the firſt chapter of John, or as they are ſuch as frequently occur, ſhall be, where neceſſary, illuſtrated in the courſe of this work.

CHAP. X.

1 Chriſt is the door, and the good ſhepherd: 19 Divers opinions of him: 24 He proveth by his works that he is Chriſt the Son of God: 39 eſcapeth the Jews, 40 and went again beyond Jordan, where many believed on him.

VErily verily I ſay unto you, He that entreth not by the door into the ſheep-fold, but climbeth up ſome other way, the ſame is a thief and a robber.

2 But he that entreth in by the door, is the ſhepherd of the ſheep.

3 To him the porter openeth; and the ſheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own ſheep by name, and leadeth them out.

4 And when he putteth forth his own ſheep, he goeth before them, and the ſheep follow him: for they know his voice.

5 And a ſtranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of ſtrangers.

6 This parable ſpake Jeſus unto them: but they underſtood not what things they were which he ſpake unto them.

7 Then ſaid Jeſus unto them again, Verily verily I ſay unto you, I am the door of the ſheep.

8 All that ever came before me, are thieves and robbers: but the ſheep did not hear them.

9 I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaved, and ſhall go in and out, and find paſture.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to ſteal, and to kill, and to deſtroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

11 I am the good ſhepherd: the good ſhepherd giveth his life for the ſheep.

12 But he that is an hireling and not the ſhepherd, whoſe own the ſheep are not, ſeeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the ſheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and ſcattereth the ſheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, becauſe he is an hireling, and careth not for the ſheep.

14 I am the good ſhepherd, and know my ſheep, and am known of mine.

15 As the Father knoweth me, even ſo know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the ſheep.

16 And other ſheep I have, which are not of this fold: them alſo I muſt bring, and they ſhall hear my voice; and there ſhall be one fold, and one ſhepherd.

17 Therefore doth my Father love me, becauſe I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

18 No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of my ſelf: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.

19 ¶ There was a diviſion therefore again among the Jews for theſe ſayings.

20 And many of them ſaid, He hath a devil, and is mad; why hear he him?

21 Others ſaid, theſe are not the words of him that hath a devil: Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

22 ¶ And it was at Jeruſalem the feaſt of the dedication, and it was winter.

23 And Jeſus walked in the temple in Solomons porch.

24 Then came the Jews round about him, and ſaid unto him, How long doſt thou make us to doubt? If thou be the Chriſt, tell us plainly.

25 Jeſus anſwered them, I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in my Fathers name, do bear witneſs of me.

26 But ye believe not; becauſe ye are not of my ſheep, as I ſaid unto you.

27 My ſheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me.

28 And I give unto them eternal life, and they ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any pluck them out of my hand.

29 My Father which gave them me, is greater than all: and none is able to pluck them out of my Fathers hand.

30 I and my Father are one.

31 Then the Jews took up ſtones again to ſtone him.

32 Jeſus anſwered them, Many good works have I ſhewed you from my Father; for which of thoſe works do ye ſtone me?

33 The Jews anſwered him, ſaying, For a good work we ſtone thee not; but for blaſphemy, and becauſe that thou, being a man, makeſt thy ſelf God.

34 Jeſus anſwered them, It is not written in your law, I ſaid, ye are gods?

35 If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the ſcripture cannot be broken.

36 Say ye of him, whom the Father hath ſanctified, and ſent into the world, Thou blaſphemeſt; becauſe I ſaid, I am the Son of God?

37 If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not.

38 But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him.

39 Therefore they ſought again to take him: but he eſcaped out of their hand,

40 And went away again beyond Jordan, into the place where John at firſt baptized; and there he abode.

41 And many reſorted unto him, and ſaid, John did no miracle: but all things that John ſpake of this man, were true.

42 And many believed on him there.

What is neceſſary to be explained in this chapter, may be ſeen already done in the parallel Scriptures of the preceding Goſpels. See the Diſſertation on Chriſt's incarnation, after the firſt chapter of John; and Luke i. 32.

CHAP. XI.

1 Chriſt raiſeth Lazarus four days buried. 45 Many Jews believe. 47 The chief Prieſts and Phariſees gather a counſel againſt Chriſt. 49 Caiaphas propheſieth. 54 Jeſus hideth himſelf. 55 At the Paſſover they enquire after him, and lay wait for him.

NOW a certain man was ſick, named Lazarus of Bethany, the town of Mary and her ſiſter Martha.

2 (It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whoſe brother Lazarus was ſick.)

3 Therefore his ſiſters ſent unto him, ſaying, Lord, behold, he whom thou loveſt is ſick.

4 When Jeſus heard that, he ſaid, This ſickneſs is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5 Now Jeſus loved Martha, and her ſiſter, and Lazarus.

6 When he had heard therefore that he was ſick, he abode two days ſtill in the ſame place where he was.

7 Then after that, ſaith he to his diſciples, Let us go into Judea again.

8 His diſciples ſay unto him, Maſter, the Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee; and goeſt thou thither again?

9 Jeſus anſwered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he ſtumbleth not, becauſe he ſeeth the light of this world.

10 But if a man walk in the night, he ſtumbleth, becauſe there is no light in him.

11 Theſe things ſaid he: and after that, he ſaith unto them, Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of ſleep.

12 Then ſaid his diſciples, Lord, if he ſleep, he ſhall do well.

13 Howbeit Jeſus ſpake of his death: but they thought that he had ſpoken of taking of reſt in ſleep.

14 Then ſaid Jeſus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

15 And I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there (to the intent ye may believe) nevertheleſs, let us go unto him.

16 Then ſaid Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow-diſciples, Let us alſo go, that we may die with him.

17 Then when Jeſus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

18 (Now Bethany was nigh unto Jeruſalem, about fifteen furlongs off.)

19 And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

20 Then Martha, as ſoon as ſhe heard that Jeſus was coming, went and met him: but Mary ſat ſtill in the houſe.

21 Then ſaid Martha unto Jeſus, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died.

22 But I know, that even now whatſoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.

23 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Thy brother ſhall riſe again.

24 Martha ſaith unto him, I know that he ſhall riſe again in the reſurrection at the laſt day.

25 Jeſus ſaid unto her, I am the reſurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet ſhall he live;

26 And whoſoever liveth, and believeth in me, ſhall never die. Believeſt thou this?

27 She ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Chriſt the Son of God, which ſhould come into the world.

28 And when ſhe had ſo ſaid, ſhe went her way, and called Mary her ſiſter ſecretly, ſaying, The Maſter is come, and calleth for thee.

John . XI .

29 Aſſoon as ſhe heard that, ſhe aroſe quickly, and came unto him.

30 Now Jeſus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31 The Jews then which were with her in the houſe, and comforted her, when they ſaw Mary that ſhe roſe up haſtily, and went out, followed her, ſaying, She goeth unto the grave, to weep there.

32 Then when Mary was come where Jeſus was, and ſaw him, ſhe fell down at his feet, ſaying unto him, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died.

33 When Jeſus therefore ſaw her weeping, and the Jews alſo weeping which came with her, he groned in the ſpirit, and was troubled,

34 And ſaid, Where have ye laid him? They ſay unto him, Lord, come and ſee.

35 Jeſus wept.

36 Then ſaid the Jews, Behold how he loved him.

37 And ſome of them ſaid, Could not this man which opened the eyes of the blind, have cauſed that even this man ſhould not have died?

38 Jeſus therefore again groning in himſelf, cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a ſtone lay upon it.

39 Jeſus ſaid, Take ye away the ſtone, Martha, the ſiſter of him that was dead, ſaith unto him, Lord, by this time he ſtinketh: for he hath been been dead four days.

40 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldſt believe, thou ſhouldſt ſee the glory of God?

41 Then they took away the ſtone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jeſus lift up his eyes, and ſaid, Father, I thank thee that thou haſt heard me.

42 And I knew that thou heareſt me always: but becauſe of the people which ſtand by, I ſaid it, that they may believe that thou haſt ſent me.

43 And when he thus had ſpoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44 And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Looſe him, and let him go.

45 Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had ſeen the things which Jeſus did, believed on him.

46 But ſome of them went their ways to the Phariſees, and told them what things Jeſus had done.

47 ¶ Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, and ſaid, What do we? for this man doth many miracles.

48 If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and nation.

49 And one of them named Caiaphas, being the high-prieſt that ſame year, ſaid unto them, Ye know nothing at all,

50 Nor conſider that it is expedient for us, that one man ſhould die for the people, and that the whole nation periſh not.

51 And this ſpake he not of himſelf: but being high-prieſt that year, he propheſied that Jeſus ſhould die for that nation:

52 And not for that nation only, but that alſo he ſhould gather together in one, the children of God that were ſcattered abroad.

53 Then from that day forth, they took counſel together for to put him to death.

54 Jeſus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderneſs, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his diſciples.

55 ¶ And the Jews paſſover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jeruſalem before the paſſover, to purify themſelves.

56 Then ſought they for Jeſus, and ſpake among themſelves, as they ſtood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not come to the feaſt?

57 Now both the chief prieſts and the Phariſees had given a commandment, that if any man knew where he were, he ſhould ſhew it, that they might take him.

Ver. 1.——Lazarus of Bethany.] See the note on ver. 44.

Ver. 2. It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment.] This is by moſt interpreters thought to be ſpoken of Mary Magdalen: But I can't ſubſcribe to that belief; becauſe when Luke had ſpoken of a woman, who anointed not our Lord's head, as this Mary did but his feet only, ch. vii. 46. he proceeds, ch. viii. to mention Mary Magdalen, giving a character of her not from what ſhe had done to Chriſt, but from the good he had done to her, ſaying, It was that Mary out of whom he had caſt ſeven devils, ver. 2. Which alſo is the character of her in Mark xvi. 9. Nor ſeems it for our Saviour's honour to have been ſo converſant with one, who had been a noted harlot, tho' ſhe had now repented of that lewdneſs, or ſuch an ardent lover of her, as he was of this Mary, ver. 5.

Ver. 4.——This ſickneſs is not to death, but, &c.] Jeſus declares that God did not deſign to take Lazarus by this ſickneſs out of the world, as he does other men by death; but, that ſo it was permitted, that Lazarus ſhould appear to men to die, that the Son of God might be glorified by ſhewing his Almighty Power in raiſing him from the dead; that thereby he might prove what he had declared before, That the Father hath given to the Son to have life in himſelf, and to quicken whom he will; ch. v. 22—26.

Ver. 6.——He abode two days ſtill in the ſame place.] Before he would go to Bethany, neither did he arrive there till the fourth day, ſee ver. 17. that there might be no ſuſpicion of fraud or contrivance; and that all pretence of his being only in a ſwoon or delignium, might be taken away; ſee ver. 15—34—39.

Ver. 11.——Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth.] Here note, that ſleep, or to ſleep, in the Scripture phraſe, ſignifieth death, or to die; ſee Deut. xxxi. 16. 2 Sam. vii. 12. Pſ. xiii. 3. and lxxvi. 5. Dan. xii. 2. And it is generally ſaid of the kings of Iſrael and Judah, that they ſlept with their fathers. And perhaps the ancient Jews might uſe this metaphor as the Apoſtle to the Theſſalonians uſes it (1 Theſſ. iv. 13.) in oppoſition to the Heathens, who having no expectation of the reſurrection of the body, ſtiled death a perpetual ſleep, declaring, that they expected to be raiſed out of it as certainly as they roſe from ſleep; and in alluſion to this metaphor, Chriſt here ſaith, I go to awake him out of ſleep, or, to raiſe him from the dead.

Ver. 33.—He groaned in the ſpirit.] Or, ἐνεϐριμήσατο τῷ πνεύματι, i. e. he groaned with his ſpirit, or was moved in his ſpirit. Whence we learn that human actions, affections and commotions, are not to be condemned as ſinful, if they do not incline us to do any thing repugnant to piety or reaſon, but only ſerve to expreſs our affection to a friend or our compaſſion towards mankind.

Ver. 39.——He had been dead four days.] In which time, the viſage of the dead began to change in thoſe countries, and all hopes of any return to life ceaſed; ſee Dr. Lightfoot on the place.

Ver. 41.——Father, I thank thee, that thou haſt heard me.] Here Chriſt ſpeaketh like a Prophet, who had requeſted, that this man's ſpirit might return to him: For the following words, I know that thou doſt hear me always, ſeem plainly to imply a requeſt; not indeed that he might receive power to raiſe Lazarus from the dead, for that he teſtifies he had already, ch. v. 22—26. But that the miraculous return of this man's ſpirit might be efficacious to confirm the faith of his Apoſtles, and to convince the multitude that he was a Prophet ſent from God, and did all things to promote his glory.

Ver. 44.——Looſe him, and let him go.] i. e. To his own home at Bethany. Neither did Chriſt permit him to go or follow after himſelf, leſt it might ſeem as if he carried him about in triumph.

Thus you have read the hiſtorical account of this great miracle: Yet though it be recorded with the greateſt exactneſs, ſimplicity and veracity, it has ſuffered the fate of Chriſt's other miracles, to be evil ſpoken of, and derided: Therefore it can't be amiſs to ſubjoin the following Diſſertation, wherein I doubt not but that I ſhall be able to anſwer all the objections commonly brought againſt this Scripture.

The method I ſhall obſerve will be firſt to conſider the circumſtances, or to give you a particular view of this miracle. And ſecondly, to anſwer the objections brought againſt its reality, &c.

Firſt, it is ſaid, That now a certain man was ſick, named Lazarus of Bethany, the town of Mary and Martha —Therefore his ſiſters ſent unto him, ſaying, Lord, behold he, whom thou loveſt, is ſick. Hereby we learn, that Lazarus did not die ſuddenly; that he was not taken off by a fit, but by a ſickneſs which made gradual advances. His ſiſters ſent to Jeſus, ſaying, he, whom thou loveſt is ſick, ſuppoſing that out of his affection for Lazarus he would come to Bethany; and hoping alſo that he might poſſibly get thither before he was dead. That Lazarus was dangerouſly ill, is evident, not only from the ſubſtance of the meſſage, but from their ſending a meſſenger ſo far, and alſo from their not coming, either of them, to Chriſt in perſon. It is alſo apparent from hence, that there could be no fraud and contrivance. The matter is not ſecretly acted between Lazarus, his ſiſters and Jeſus; for here is a meſſenger employed. Beſides, had there been any thoughts of contriving ſuch a thing, the raiſing up Lazarus, though not dead, it would have been more natural for one of theſe ſiſters to have come in perſon; for nothing but real ſickneſs can be ſuppoſed a ſufficient reaſon to have kept the ſiſters at home, and from coming to Jeſus. The thought of making a pretence of ſo great a miracle, as the raiſing of a dead man to life, to live again upon the earth, would certainly have obliged one of the neareſt relations to come in perſon to him, who was to do ſo mighty a work.

Jeſus ſtaid ſome time in the place where he was, after the receiving a meſſage of Lazarus's ſickneſs. He receives no more meſſages; a ſign there was no longer any need of his coming, either becauſe it might be preſumed by thoſe that were with Jeſus, that Lazarus was recovered; or elſe that he was fallen into ſuch a ſtate, that his preſent friends having no longer hopes of any help from Jeſus, thought it needleſs to ſend any more to trouble him. But

At length, Jeſus reſolves to go into Judea, and accordingly, notwithſtanding the Jews had lately ſought his life, ſets out with his diſciples to go to Bethany, though it was nigh to Jeruſalem: Which is a ſure ſign of the conſciouſneſs of his innocence and integrity. For, had it been thought neceſſary to concert a pretended miracle between Jeſus, and theſe perſons, Lazarus might have come to the country beyond Jordan, where a death and a reſurrection might have been contrived both with more ſecrecy, and ſafety to the contrivers. None would have pitched upon Bethany for the ſcene of a pretended miracle, eſpecially at this time; ſeeing the place was ſo near the fierceſt enemies of Jeſus, which were the great council of the Jews, who reſided at Jeruſalem. Or, if a miracle had been intended to be contrived at Bethany, it would not have been prudent to try it upon an inhabitant of the place, a well-known perſon; but we ſhould have read it done upon ſome ſtranger purpoſely arrived there by accident, and upon one who ſhould have no occaſion to come thither again. What reward! What ſum of money could be ſufficient to induce a well-known perſon, an inhabitant of Bethany, ſo near Jeruſalem, to enter into a combination with Jeſus, to be the perſon, on whom an impoſture of this kind ſhould be acted; and for which he was ſure to incur not only the ignominious character of a deceiver, if found out, but alſo to be excommunicated or ſhut out of the ſynagogue?

Then when Jeſus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already——And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary to comfort them concerning their brother. Then Martha as ſoon as ſhe heard that Jeſus was coming, went and met him: but Mary ſat ſtill in the houſe. Hence it is evident, that Lazarus's death and burial were not done in a corner privately, but were publick things. Moreover, Martha does not go to Jeſus till ſhe is told that he was near the houſe; and Mary ſtays ſtill at home; which are arguments of true ſorrow, and that there was no contrivance among them.

Then ſaid Martha unto Jeſus, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died. Were there ever, or can there be greater, or more natural expreſſions of ſorrow and concern? Can any rational man lay his hand to his heart and ſay, that he thinks that the perſon, who ſpake theſe words knew her brother was ſtill alive, and only feigned to be dead, which muſt have been the caſe, had this miracle been no more than a fallacy? Surely ſuch ſtratagem is impoſſible. God will never ſuffer his name and power to be the ſkreen of falſhood and impiety: Therefore this was a true miracle, or Martha muſt have fell under the heavy diſpleaſure of God's wrath, and their deſign, if wicked, muſt have been fruſtrated when ſhe added, But I know, that even now whatſoever thou wilt aſk of God, God will give it thee.

After ſome diſcourſe between this ſiſter and Jeſus, "ſhe returned, and called Mary her ſiſter ſecretly, ſaying, the maſter is come and calleth for thee. As ſoon as ſhe heard that, ſhe aroſe quickly, and came unto him. Now Jeſus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him. The Jews then which were with her, when they ſaw Mary, that ſhe roſe up haſtily, and went out, followed her, ſaying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there." So that we are to obſerve, how Mary's grief appeared to be real in the opinion of thoſe that were preſent with her; who might, one would think, have diſcovered ſome tokens of counterfeit, if it was ſo.

"Then when Mary was come where Jeſus was, and ſaw him, ſhe fell down at his feet, ſaying unto him, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died." Thus you ſee that Mary had no more thought of ſeeing her brother raiſed preſently from the dead by Jeſus, than her ſiſter Martha had. "Therefore when Jeſus ſaw her weeping, and the Jews alſo weeping which came with her, he groaned in the ſpirit, and was troubled." In which joint weeping of Mary and of her friends, we ought to obſerve the tokens of a deep ſorrow, ariſing from the death of Lazarus, and a deſpair of ever ſeeing him again before the reſurrection at the laſt day. Moreover, their grief ſo far exceeded the bounds it ought to have done in the preſence of Jeſus, who had already given the world ſuch demonſtrations of his power, that he groaned in ſpirit and was troubled.

Then ſays Jeſus, Where have ye laid him? They ſay unto him, Lord, come and ſee. Where you read that Jeſus himſelf firſt makes the propoſal of going towards the ſepulchre, by aſking the queſtion, Where they had laid him? And their ſimple anſwer clears them all of any ſort of colluſion. For, had there been any contrivance, or any fallacy in this miracle, inſtead of ſaying, Come and ſee where we have laid him; they would have at once cried out, Lord, come and raiſe him by thy power from the dead. But on the contrary, there does not ſo much as appear the leaſt intimation that they had any hopes of ever ſeeing their brother alive again upon the earth. And this is ſtill more ſtrongly confirmed by the declaration which Martha made at the grave before the ſtone was removed, for ſhe ſaid unto him, Lord, by this time he ſtinketh: for he has been dead four days. To which Jeſus replied by way of reproof for her unbelief, ſaying, Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldſt believe, thou ſhouldſt ſee the glory of God. And then engages the attention of all the company, that they might the more carefully obſerve the reality of this great work he was about to do; ſee ver. 41, 42, 43. And at his command, he who had been dead, was reſtored to life; came out with his burial-clothes upon him, with all the tokens of a corpſe buried by his friends; ſo bound, that in a natural courſe he was not able to move; and he was ordered to be unlooſed by others, not being able to help himſelf; that all might ſee the tokens of life; ſtrength and vigour, by the actions of walking.

Now let us reaſon together: Can any one doubt after ſuch a view of this relation, whether this was a real miracle? Can any one pretend to ſay that Lazarus was not dead, when it appears he had lain at leaſt part of four days in the bowels of the earth? Neither can it be poſſible by any other power than that of God, to raiſe a dead man to life. And there is no reaſon to doubt but that the by-ſtanders believed in this miracle, and reported it in the ſame manner as John has done in this Goſpel. For many of the Jews, which came to Mary, and had ſeen the things which Jeſus did, believed on him, or believed him to be the Meſſiah. Though it is alſo recorded that ſome of them (being wicked and malicious men) went to the Phariſees, and told them what things Jeſus had done. Then the Phariſees conſidering the greatneſs of this work, and that ſuch things as theſe would tend to bring all men, i. e. great numbers of people to believe on him, from that day forth took counſel together to put him to death.

Finally, that this thing was no impoſture, but a real miracle, appears from hence; that not long after this, yet ſo long as gave the envidious Phariſees time to enquire into the matter, and to have got evidence of the impoſture, if any ſuch could have been found, Jeſus came publickly to Jeruſalem; entered into the temple; taught there boldly from day to day; ſpent ſeveral days at Jeruſalem, and in the neighbourhood, even at Bethany itſelf, the place of this action: In all which time he lived in the moſt publick open manner, at the near approach of one of the Jewiſh principal feſtivals, when there was a general reſort thither from all parts. He moreover celebrates this great feaſt with his diſciples in Jeruſalem. And ſupper being ended, he went into a garden, the uſual place of retirement with his diſciples, where the officers of the high-prieſt came to apprehend him, to whom he voluntarily ſurrendered himſelf: And yet upon his examination before the council, and Herod and Pilate, the malicious Jews could not prove nor charge one impoſture upon him.

In this hiſtory of Lazarus there are theſe things very obſervable, viz. the modeſty, goodneſs, and wiſdom of Jeſus. For,

His modeſty appears moſt amiable, when he declared to his diſciples a deſign of going to Bethany. Before he ſets out from the place where he then was, he ſays to them: Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of ſleep; uſing theſe low ſoft terms concerning death, and raiſing to life; ſee the note on ver. 11. But the diſciples underſtood him not; therefore Jeſus ſaid unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead——Let us go. Where obſerve, when Jeſus ſpoke in the low and ambiguous term of ſleep, he added: But I go that I may awake him out of ſleep: But having now ſaid plainly, that Lazarus was dead, he does not ſay: But I go to raiſe him to life; only intimates in general, that there would be ſome new proof given them to confirm their faith; ſtudiouſly avoiding every thing that had any appearance of boaſting.

His goodneſs and condeſcenſion are eaſily traced in this action: For, he who could have healed ſick Lazarus, or raiſed him when dead, without opening his lips, or riſing from his ſeat, went from the place of his retirement beyond Jordan into Judea, where they had lately ſought his life, and where his very name durſt ſcarce be mentioned for fear of falling into the diſpleaſure of the Phariſees and rulers. But the good Lord Jeſus deſpiſed all their menaces, becauſe his raiſing up Lazarus at Bethany, the place where he had died, and was well known, in all thoſe circumſtances, and before ſo many perſons, as he afterwards did, would be a means of convincing men of the truth of his miſſion, and of drawing men of that, and future ages, to the belief of his doctrine, which is ſo ſuited to prepare them for eternal life.

Nor was the wiſdom of our Redeemer ever more conſpicuous than in the manner by which he choſe to perform this miracle. The great works, which he did at all-times were in themſelves together, or ſeparately a proof that he was eſpouſed by God. He accordingly made frequent and publick appeals to his works, as certain proofs and evidences, that God was with him. But he did not ordinarily, at the time of doing theſe works, formally and expreſly addreſs himſelf to God. But now being about to perform in the ſight of mortal men, ſo extraordinary and affecting a thing, as the raiſing up from the grave a man that had been buried four days, he lifts up his eyes to Heaven, and adores the Father in an act of praiſe and thankſgiving, acknowledging the power of doing the works he had already done, and of that he was then going to perform to have been given by the Father; "Then took they away the ſtone from the place, where the dead was laid. And Jeſus lift up his eyes, and ſaid, Father, I thank thee that thou haſt heard me. And I know that thou heareſt me always; but becauſe of the people which ſtand by, I ſaid it, that they may believe that thou haſt ſent me." In which way (of an immediate appeal to God) the fulleſt proof poſſible was given; that his authority was from the Father.

We have many more things worth our notice in this hiſtory; but I ſhall only obſerve one particular more included in theſe words; and when he thus had ſpoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus come forth. Certainly the majeſty of the voice well became the work; and herein is ſome reſemblance of that loud command, at the ſound of which ſhall be broken all the bars of hell and the grave, and their doors fly open, and the dead of all orders and of all times ſhall awake and come forth; ſome to honour, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt. Moreover, there is a peculiar propriety and decence in this loud and majeſtick voice, as it had been immediately preceded by an humble and thankful acknowledgment of the Father, who is over all. But,

It is objected againſt all that has been ſaid, That the reſurrection of Lazarus was all fraud, or the Jews would have reverenced and adorned the power of him that did it. (See Woolſton's 5th diſc. p. 48. & paſſim.) This objection is ſuppoſed to be made by a ſincere Jew, to whom I reply with ſome examples from the Old Teſtament.——We read of the great miracle wrought by Elijah upon the widow's ſon, whom he raiſed to life; ſee 1 Kings xvii.

And in the next chapter, we find it recorded, that by a great miracle he convicted the prieſts of Baal of fraud and irreligion, who deceived the people, and ſeduced them to the worſhip of falſe gods ; and then we read how by his prayers he obtained rain. Nevertheleſs, the Prophet could not eſcape perſecution, for Jezebel ſent a meſſenger to Elijah, and ſolemnly ſwears ſhe would deſtroy him, "ſaying, ſo let the gods do to me, and more alſo, if I make not thy life, as the life of one of them to morrow about this time." Whereupon Elijah abſconds, and in a prayer to God, ſays, They ſeek my life to take it away. In the 22d chapter there is mention of another Prophet of the Lord, by name Micajah, of whom Ahab ſays to Jehoſaphat in plain terms ; I hate him. Eliſha alſo, the ſucceſſor of Elijah, raiſed a perſon to life, and wrought divers other miracles ; ſee 2 Kings iv. Yet Jehoram, another king of Iſrael ſays, ch. vi. 31. God do ſo and more alſo to me, if the head of Eliſha —— ſhall ſtand on him this day. So that it is falſe reaſoning to argue that a thing is falſe, becauſe it did not convict the unbelievers ; ſince we ſee by theſe examples that miracles do not always fill wicked men with ſuch awe and reverence, but that they can ſtill hate, and perſecute, and break forth into rage againſt the authors of them.

Certainly when the pretended Jew ſays, that the Jews of our Saviour's time would have reverenced and adored the power of him that did ſuch a miracle, was very little verſed in the Scriptures, which all along deſcribe them to be a ſtubborn and ſtiff-necked people. It might as well be replied, that the miracles wrought by Moſes and the Prophets were all fraud, for they did not conſtantly reverence and adore their power. Did they not rebel in ſuch a manner againſt the power of Moſes, whoſe miracles had brought them out of the land of Egypt, and the houſe of bondage, that, tho' he was the greateſt Prophet, and meekeſt man, they ever had among them, except Jeſus, he cried unto the Lord, ſaying, what ſhall I do unto this people? They be almoſt ready to ſtone me, Exod. xvii. 4. When they ſhould have gone to take poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, all the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes and againſt Aaron —— and all the congregation bade ſtone them with ſtones, Numb. xiv. 2—10. Nor did any of all this congregation, except Caleb and Joſhua, believe God, as Moſes tells them expreſly, Deut. ix. 23, 24. Wherefore they are called by the Pſalmiſt, a ſtubborn and rebellious generation, —— who believed not for all his wondrous works, Pſ. lxxviii. 8, 32. Not that they disbelieved the works themſelves ; for they knew them, owned them, and boaſted in them, yet they were not obedient.
